Vers. 2. Pharaoh was angrie against his two officers, &c. These two were principall officers in Pharaohs court; yet suddenly cast out of their Princes favour: wherein wee see the slipperie state and condition of Courtiers, who are to day in favour, to morrow in disgrace, as Haman was with Ahasuerus, Hest. Little doe men consider, that ambitiously desire to be great in Court, how soone their faire weather may be overcast with clouds.

2. Observ. Compassion toward the afflicted.

Vers. 7. Wherefore looke ye so sadly to day? Iosephs humanitie appeareth, that first offereth himselfe to these men in miserie, to comfort and cheare them up: as our Saviour asked the two disciples walking by the way, why they were so sad, Luk. 24. 17. and to Marie Magdalene he said, why weepest thou? Iohn 20. 15. such ready compassion should we shew to them that are in heavines, Marlorat.

3. Observ. No man to presume beyond his strength and gifts.

Vers. 8. Tell me them now, &c. Daniel having received a greater gift of interpretation, was able both to tell the King what he had dreamed, which was gone from him, and the interpretation of it, Dan. 2. 28. Ioseph presumeth not beyond his gift, but first desireth these dreames to be rehearsed unto him: whereby we learne, that every man consider his strength and gift from God, and put not himselfe forward ward beyond that, Calvin. this is that which the Apoſtle ſaith, that everie man underſtandeth according to ſobrietie, as God hath deals the meaſure of faith, Rom 12.3.

4. Obſerv. Carnall men heare the word for worldly profit.

Verſ. 16. When the chiefe Baker ſaw that the interpretation was good, &c. Hee deſired an interpretation of his dreame, not becauſe hee had a minde to bee inſtructed thereby, but for that he expected ſome good alſo: So many men make ſemblance of ſome love toward the preaching of the word, not of any conſcience, but onely ſeeking thereby their pleaſure and proſperitie: which miſſing, then they depart heavie and ſad, as the rich young man did goe from Chriſt, Mark. 10. Calvin.

5. Obſerv. Miniſters muſt not be afraid to denounce Gods judgements.

Verſ. 19. Within three daies ſhall Pharaoh take thine head. Ioſeph ſheweth himſelfe a faithfull meſſenger, that would not conceale the interpretation from the Baker, though he knew it ſhould not bee welcome: ſo it is the dutie of faithfull Miniſters, not to feare to denounce the judgements of God to his people, though they have ſmall thankes for their labour, Calvin. As the Prophet Micheas did frankly and freely deliver his meſſage to wicked Ahab. 1 King. 22.

6. Obſerv. Courtiers all for themſelves.

Verſ. 23. The chiefe Butler did not remember Ioſeph. Here wee have a right patterne of a temporizing Courtier, who partly for feare to move the King, partly being addicted to his profit, to ſerve his owne turne, would make no mention of Ioſeph, Muſcul. The like minde was at the firſt in Eſther, who fearing the Kings diſpleaſure, refuſed to make ſute for her people, but Mordechai rouſed her from that court-like ſleepe, and awaked her, Eſther 4.

CHAP. XLI.

1. The Method or Argument.

IN this chapter wee have ſet forth, 1. The dreames of Pharaoh, both tending to one and the ſame end, verſ. 1. to verſ. 8.

2. The interpretation of the dreames. 1. The occaſion of ſending for Ioſeph by the narration made by the Butler, of that which had happened in priſon, Verſ. 9. to Verſ. 16. 2. The repetition and rehearſall of Pharaohs dreames to Ioſeph, Verſ. 17. to Verſ. 25. 3. The interpretation it ſelfe, together with the counſell and advice of Ioſeph, Verſ. 28. to Verſ. 37.

3. The exaltation and proſperitie of Ioſeph: whereunto belongeth, 1. The authoritie committed unto him by Pharaoh, Verſ. 38. to Verſ. 42. 2. The great honour given unto him, Verſ. 43. 3. The changing of his name, 46. 4. His marriage and children, Verſ. 50. 4. The accompliſhment of the dreames. 1. In the ſeven plentifull yeares, Verſ. 49. to 54. 2. Then in the yeares of famine, beginning, &c. to the end.

3. The Theologicall Explanation of doubtfull queſtions.

Quest. I. How long Ioſeph was in priſon, and where wee muſt begin the computation of theſe two yeares.

Verſ. 1. After two yeares Pharaoh dreamed, &c. 1. I neither thinke with Ioſephus and Mercerus that theſe two yeares muſt bee accounted from the beginning of Ioſephs impriſonment, and that it was but two yeares in the whole in priſon: for the beginning of this chapter beſt agreeth with the end of the former, where mention is made of the Butlers reſtitution to his place: ſo then two yeares after that Pharaoh dreamed, Iun. 2. Yet doe I not thinke, that theſe officers were an whole yeare in priſon, as ſome conjecture, and that Ioſeph and they were impriſoned much about one time: for the keeper of the priſon, would not at the firſt give Ioſeph charge of ſuch priſoners, till hee had experience of his fidelitie: neither thinke, that Ioſeph was in priſon ſome time before, and that hee was there a whole yeare before the chiefe Butlers deliverance, and two yeare more after, three in all.

Quest. II. Why Pharaoh dreamed, and where.

Verſ. 1. Pharaoh dreamed, &c. 1. The Hebrewes note, that it is not here added, Pharaoh King of Egypt, till afterward, when Ioſeph was advanced, by whoſe prudence and wiſdome hee governed, that then hee was worthie the name of a King, and not before: but this is ſomewhat curious. 2. This dreame is ſhewed to Pharaoh, becauſe it belongeth to the office and dutie of a king to provide for his people. 3. This river was not a ſtreame iſſuing out of Nilus, as Iun. But Nilus it ſelfe, which is uſually called by the name of the river, Exod. 2. 3. and becauſe Nilus doth water the plaine of Egypt, where they have no raine, and ſo maketh it fruitfull, it ſerveth fitly to decipher the ſeven yeares of plentie, Mercer.

Quest. III. The difference betweene the dreames of Pharaoh and Nebuchadnezzar.

Verſ. 8. Pharaoh told them his dreames, but none could interpret, &c. 1. Nebuchadnezzars dreame which hee dreamed, Dan. 2. was unlike to this of Pharaoh: for hee had forgotten his dreame, not ſome thinke, becauſe hee ſlept with full ſtomacke, but God ſo diſpoſing: but Pharaoh very well remembreth his dreame: there Nebuchadnezzar commanded to ſlay the wiſe men, but Pharaoh of a more milde nature ſpareth them. 2. Neither did any of them attempt to give an interpretation of Pharaohs dreame, as that hee ſhould beget ſeven daughters, and burie ſeven ſonnes: or that he ſhould ſubdue ſeven Kingdomes, and ſeven other ſhould rebell: as ſome of the Hebrews conjecture: but they were all blinde, and could ſay nothing: God had blinded them: for otherwiſe it had beene an eaſie matter, by the yeares to underſtand plentie, Mercer. 3. It ſeemeth that Pharaoh was no proper name, but common to the Kings, as Cæſar is to the Emperours: for the Butler uſeth it in the third perſon, verſ. 10. as if wee ſhould ſay, the Kings majeſtie, Iun. and it had beene an uncivill thing to call the King by his proper name, Mercer.

The ſoothſayers blinded.

Pharaoh a common name to the Kings of Egypt.

Quest. IIII. Whether Pharaoh in his dreame had an interpretation of it.

Verſ. 15. I Have heard ſay of thee, that when thou heareſt a dreame, &c. 1. Ioſephus further addeth, that Pharaoh did gently intreat Ioſeph, tooke him by the hand, and bade him not to be afraid, but truely relate unto him his dreame, whatſoever it ſignified, good or evill. 2. This is likely and probable, but that conceit of Ioſephus hath no probabilitie, that Pharaoh together with his dreame had the interpretation thereof ſhewed him in his ſleepe: for it is like, that Pharaoh then would have ſpoken of it to Ioſeph. Pharaoh ſeemeth to have none other opinion of Ioſeph, but as of a cunning ſoothſaier and conjecturer of dreames: and ſuch was the opinion received of Ioſeph afterward, as Trogus Pompejus, whom Juſtino alſo writeth of him, that he did learne in Egypt art-magike, and other points of their learning: therefore therefore Ioseph of purpose maketh mention of God, who without any art or skill in Ioseph, should by his mouth give the interpretation of the dreame. 4. And whereas he saith, God shall answer for the wel of Pharaoh, Ioseph thus saith, not as knowing the dreame alreadie by revelation from God, as Pererius thinketh: but he ignorant as yet of the dreame doth not propheſie, but wiſh proſperitie to Pharaoh, and insinuateth himselfe by this dutifull comprecation, Mercer. Iun. Muſcul.

QUEST. V. Of the thrice repeating of these dreames, and the reason thereof.

Verſ. 20. AND when they had eaten them up, &c. 1. This is reported somewhat diverſly by Pharaoh than it was before expreſſed: not to this end, as some Hebrewes imagine, that Pharaoh would trie by these meanes Iosephs cunning, whether hee could rehearse the dreame aright: But where these dreames are thrice repeated, by Moses, Pharaoh, Ioseph, the same words are not every where but the sense: as we see the like, Gen. 24. where Abrahams servant somewhat diverſly in words reports the historie of Rebeckahs comming forth and behaviour towards him. 2. But some Hebrewes are more absurd, that whereas these dreames, of seven kine, and seven eares, betokening 14. yeares, of plenty, and seven of famine, are thrice repeated in this chapter, they make thrice 14. yeares: where these dreames though often rehearsed, are but one prophecie and tend to the same end, Mercer.

QUEST. VI. Why Pharaohs dreames were doubled.

Verſ. 25. PHARAOHS dreames are one. 1. They are one in signification, but divers in respect of the Iun. 2. The Hebrewes thinke, that Ioseph by this speech would excuse the Egyptian sayers, why they could not expound the dreames, because it was hard to find out the interpretation, ing these dreames being divers did portend but one thing: and beside, they take these to be dreames, whereas Ioseph sheweth they were of God. But Ioseph doth not insinuate himselfe into the and affection of these Magicians, whom hee knew to be professors of Idolatrie and superstition, doth faithfully discharge this dutie committed unto him. 3. Now although the dreames had one ning, yet they were doubled, not for any such cause as Lyranus & Toſtatus imagine, to shew the two offertilitie, good seed signified by the eares, and good tillage by the oxen: but Ioseph himselfe reci two reasons thereof, verſ. 33. the certaintie of this thing, and the speedie accomplishment thereof.

QUEST. VII. Ioseph, not Pharaoh, the Prophet.

Verſ. 25. GOD hath shewed Pharaoh what he is about to doe. 1. Though these visions were shewed Pharaoh, yet because he understood them not, Ioseph is rather to be counted a prophet that interpreted them, than Pharaoh that understood them not: for it is one thing to have a represen of things objected to the phantasie, another to have the mind lightned to understand them. 2. A whereas God is said to doe this, it was not an ordinarie plentie, or famine, procured by naturall means but extraordinarie sent of God: although I denie not, but that there might be a concurse some naturall meanes: for Nilus overflowing, if it be moderate, causeth plentie in Egypt; if it be bringeth sterilitie and barrennesse. Plinie sheweth, that the full increasing of Nilus is sixteene cubits in duodecem cubitis famem sentit, &c. if it overflow under 12. cubits, famine followeth, and in 13. there is scarcitie: 14. cubita hilaritatem afferunt, 15. securitatem, 16. delicias. 14. cubits in the over bring chearefulnesse, 15. securitie, 16. plentie: he further sheweth, that the greatest increase was of 18 under Claudius, the smallest of five cubits in the Pharsalean warre: lib. 5. c. 9. It might be that Nilus seven plentifull yeares overflowed 16. cubits or above, and so made the ground fruitfull; and in seven deare yeares exceeded not 12. cubits, or was much under, and so caused drinesse and barrenn ex Perer.

This plentie and famine not procured by naturall causes.

The increasing of Nilus in the yeares of plentie, how many cubits.

QUEST. VIII. Iosephs wisdome in counselling to have a chiefe officer appointed for corne.

Verſ. 33. LET Pharaoh provide for a man of understanding, &c. 1. Ioseph doth not onely foreel calamitie to come, but provideth a remedie for it; so could not the vaine Astrologers, Apolloes oracles, if sometime they ghessed at things to come, they could not tell how to helpe it, Mer 2. Ioseph doth not give this counsell ambitiously, as seeking his owne honour, as the Hebrewes thi for as yet he was ignorant of his advancement: but God directed him by his spirit, to give this adv that it might be a way to his exaltation. 3. This office here invented by Ioseph, to have a care to prov food for the people, grew afterwards to be very honourable: and from the Egyptians, it is like the R mans tooke this invention: the first officer among them, who was called præfectus annonæ, the ch steward for provision, was L. Minutius, what time there was such a famine in Rome, that many people themselves with their heads covered into Tyberis: Pompey the great, after many honourable triu was chosen to this office; who having made great provision in Affrica, being ready to take ship, staid though a great tempest arose, thus saying, navigandi necessitas est, vivendi non est necessitas: There is g necessitie to saile, (for the Citie was at that time in great want) but there is no necessitie to live: ex Per QUEST. IX. Why Ioseph advised to have the fift part taken.

Verſ. 34. TAKE up the fift part of the land, &c. 1. Hee meaneth the fift part of the fruits of the land, wi was done at the Kings charge: for it is not like that he tooke away the fift part from owners, though afterward it was made a law, but it was bought with the Kings money, Mercer. 2. Rasi following Onkelos, readeth, let them defend the land of Egypt against the famine, by setting people a worke to gather the corne: be ause the word is so taken, Exod. 13. 18. where it is said Israelites came up armed, girt under the fift rib: but this reading is improper; and that the fift part is derstood, appeareth by the law of the fift part reserved to Pharaoh, Gen. 47. 24. 3. The fift part was thou sufficient, for it is like beside that other rich men, following the Kings president, laid up somewha store also, and in the yeare of famine somewhat might grow, though not much, and they made gre ſpare in the time of ſcarcitie, Perer. Mercer. 4. Ioſephs prudence appeareth, in preſerving the corne ſo long for ſeven yeares: which was not done by uſing ſand and quickſilver, as Rambam ſuppoſeth: but as Philo well conjectureth, by laying up the corne in the ſtraw: for by this meanes it would keepe long ſweet, and the poore might be imployed in threſhing of it out, as alſo they had ſtraw for their cattell, Perer. ex Philon. How the corn was preſerved.

QUEST. X. Of the ring, fine linnen, and other enſignes of Ioſephs honour.

Verſ. 42. PHaraoh tooke off his ring, &c. 1. Plinie is here in an errour, that the uſe of rings came not up before the Trojane warre, whereas Ioſeph was honoured of Pharaoh with a ring, who was ſix hundred yeare before the ruine of Troy. Likewiſe the ſame author ſaith, that the Egyptians uſed no rings to ſeale with, lib. 33. c. 1. Whereas it is moſt like, that Pharaoh gave this ring to Ioſeph for that uſe: as Aſſuerus gave Haman his ring to ſeale letters in the Kings name, Eſther 3. 9. 2. It is like that Ioſeph went apart, till Pharaoh had conſulted with his Nobles, who all by their ſilence gave conſent, that Ioſeph was the fitteſt man. 3. Theſe then were the enſignes of Ioſephs honour: the King giveth him a ring, then he is araied with fine linen, or white ſilke, whereof there was great ſtore in Egypt, which was made of certaine cotten or bombaſine that came of the Goſipon tree, called Xilinon, Iun. Perer. The third ſigne of honour was a golden chaine, which was in great requeſt afterward among the Romans: the fourth was Ioſephs riding in the ſecond chariot, appointed for him, that was the Viceroy next in authoritie to the King. Aſſuerus cauſed Mordechai in token of honour & of the Kings favour, to ride upon his horſe, Eſther 6. And in the ſame place Mordechai is adorned with the like ornaments, as with royall apparell, and a princely diadem, and proclamation to be made before him, as was here before Ioſeph. So King Balthazar promiſeth the like reward to him that could interpret the writing, that he ſhould be clothed with purple, and ſhould have a chaine of gold about his necke, and be the third ruler in the kingdome, Dan. 5. 7.

QUEST. X. The great authoritie committed to Ioſeph.

Verſ. 44. I Am Pharaoh &c. 1. This is not an oath, as ſome think, that Pharaoh ſweareth by his honour: but he onely reſerveth unto himſelfe the Kingly name and majeſtie, as before, verſ. 40. onely in the throne will I be above thee. 2. In that he ſaith, none ſhall lift up his hand without thee, it is to be underſtood, not of private, but of the publike affaires of the kingdome, Mercer. 3. The Hebrewes here note, that as Ioſeph before humbled himſelfe and ſaid, without me ſhall God make anſwer to Pharaoh, ſo now he exalted: and Pharaoh ſaith, without thee ſhall no man lift up his hand, &c.

QUEST. XI. Of the change of Ioſephs name, and the ſignification of it.

Verſ. 45. PHaraoh called Ioſephs name, Zaphnath paaneah, &c. 1. Theſe are neither Hebrew words, as Rambam thinketh: for although the firſt may be derived from tſaphan, which ſignifieth hide, yet the originall of the other in the Hebrew tongue cannot be found, Mercer. Hierome thinketh it ſignifieth, Saviour of the world, in the Egyptian tongue, whom Eugubinus followeth: but it is likelier that it ſignifieth the revealer of ſecrets, as Ioſephus Oukelos, the Septuag. Some thinke he was a Prieſt rather, as the Chalde tranſlateth, than Prieſt of On: becauſe the prieſts of all other were moſt ſuperſtitious, Iun. This On was not the Citie (No) mentioned Ezech. 30. 16. which is Alexandria, but rather Heliopolis, as Hierome: the chiefe Citie of the regiment of Heliopolis, Ptolemie calleth Onium. Of the citie On.

Aſenah cannot be the daughter of Dina Iacobs daughter, as the Hebrewes dreame, being an Egyptian woman: Ioſeph marieth the daughter of an Idolater, becauſe he could not take a wife of his fathers kindred, being in a ſtrange countrey: ſo alſo did Iacob marrie Labans daughter that was an Idolater, and Moſes a Madianitiſh woman, whom afterward they converted to the true worſhip of God, as Ioſeph did his wife: and this might well be a type and figure of the calling of the Idolatrous Gentiles, Mercer. Why Ioſeph marieth the daughter of an Idolater.

QUEST. XII. Potiphars, Whether two of that name.

The daughter of Potipherah. 1. We refuſe here the opinion of Hierome, that thinketh this Potiphar to have beene the ſame whom Ioſeph before ſerved: and we hold that to be one of the fables of the Hebrewes, that this Potiphar, Ioſephs maſter, having a purpoſe to uſe Ioſeph to incontinencie, was ſtricken with drineſſe and withering in his ſecret parts, and afterward became a Prieſt. 2. I rather preferre Auſtines judgement, who upon theſe reaſons rather thinketh, that this was a divers Potiphar from the firſt: 1. Becauſe it had beene much for Ioſephs honour, that his maſter, whoſe ſervant he was, did now marrie upon him his daughter, and therefore Moſes would not have concealed it. 2. The other Potiphar was Captaine of Pharaohs ſouldiers, this Prieſt of On two offices much unlike. 3. This On or Heliopolis, was about twentie miles diſtant from Memphis the Kings Citie, but the other Potiphar was a continuall ſeruant in Pharaohs houſe: thus Auguſtine qu. 136. in Gen. 3. Chryſoſtome thinketh, that they were two brethren, but of one name, hom. 63. in Gen. But it is evident, that their names alſo differ: for the firſt is called Potiphar, the ſecond with the letter ain, in the end Potipherang; beſides, it is not like that Ioſeph would marrie the daughter of that adultereſſe and wanton woman, whoſe evill manners hee had ſeene of, Mercer. Muſcul.

QUEST. XIII. To what end mention was made of Ioſephs age.

Verſ. 46. IOſeph was thirty yeares old, &c. Mention is made of the age of Ioſeph for divers reaſons. 1. By this it may be gathered how long Ioſeph was a ſervant in Egypt, from 17. to 30. yeares, the 13. yeares, whereof 3. he ſpent in priſon, the reſt in ſervice, Mercer. 2. But Ioſeph for his thirteene yeares ſervice, was recompenced with 80. yeares of libertie, proſperitie and honour, for he lived till he was 110. yeares old: which may alſo be a figure of the everlaſting reward of the Saints, which they ſhal have for their ſhort and momentanie afflictions here, Perer. 3. This obſerving of Ioſephs age helpeth towards towards the Chronologie of Iacob and Iosephs age; for hence it is gathered, that Ioseph nine yeares after Iacob and Iosephs yeares compared together.

when the seven plentifull yeares were past, and two of famine, was thirty nine yeares old, and Iacob that time, an hundred and thirty yeares old: then it will follow that Ioseph was begotten in the 91. yeare of Iacobs age, foureteene yeares after his comming into Mesopotamia: for Ioseph was borne in the end the second seventh yeare of Iacobs service: so that Iacob was 77. yeares old when hee went first into Mesopotamia, Perer. 4. Iosephs age is expressed, that it might appeare what wonderfull graces hee had received of God at those yeares: of chastitie, of patience, of pietie, of wisdome, of knowledge, of secrets, of policie, and government. It is said that Iulius Cæsar, beholding the picture of Alexander in Hercules temple at Gades, lamented that hee had done no worthy exploit at those yeares, wherein Alexander had conquered the whole world. But Ioseph here at the same age of thirty, had shewed more true wisdome and vertue, than either of them both, Perer. 5. Likewise by this president of Ioseph, made a governour thirty, wee see that at this age a man is fit for publike imployment: David at that age began to reign, Ezechiel then prophesied, Ezech. 1.1. Christ began to preach, and Iohn Baptist, Mercer. 6. Luke. Iosephs age is expressed, to shew how mightily the Lord wrought with him, that the grave counsellors and Elders of Egypt were content to give place to his youth, and be advised and ruled by him, Cabus.

QUEST. XIIII. What food Ioseph laid up, where and how.

Vers. 48. Laid up food in the Cities. 1. It is not like that Ioseph gathered of all other fruits and provision, as Ramban thinketh, but onely of corne: for other food could not have beene so well kept, and the next verse sheweth that food (ochell,) was gathered, namely, (bar,) wheat, Mercer. 2. In this wisdome appeareth, that provideth barnes for every Citie, that they should not need to travaile for food, but have it provided at home. 3. Where it is said till he left numbring: it is like that Ioseph observed order, in laying up of the corne, and kept a talie of it: he numbred it, not of curiositie as David numbred the multitudes of his people, but in a provident forecast, to see what quantitie would suffice every place, Muscul.

QUEST. XV. Whether indeed Ioseph had forgotten his fathers houses, as it seemeth by the name of Manasseh formed of the word Nashah, to forget.

Vers. 51. God hath made me forget all my labour and my fathers house: 1. I doe not thinke with Cajetan that this is to be imputed to Ioseph as a fault, that would commit to oblivion his father and house being entangled with this great honour and prosperitie: for how could hee forget his father, his fathers house, unlesse he should together abandon his faith and religion, and forget Gods covenant made to his father and his seed? 2. Neither doth it helpe the matter to say with some, that he did not forget his father, but his brethren, who are understood by his fathers house. 3. Nor yet is this spoken by way of comparison, that in respect of this great honour, his fathers house, his kindred, and education was neglected, as Mercer. 4. But the words doe expound themselves: he speaketh of the labour, and affliction, and great indignitie which he received at his brethrens hand, in his fathers house, the remembrance and grief whereof, his great preferment and honour in Egypt allayed and mitigated, Iun. 5. But whereas it may be demanded, if Ioseph had not forgotten his father, how came it to passe, that he remembred him not all this while, nor sent unto him, seeing Memphis the kings Citie, was not above 40. mile distant from

How it was wrought that Iacob had notice all this while of Iosephs being in Egypt.

bron, where Iacob dwelt: It may be answered, that whether by reason of Iosephs long affliction he in which time he might thinke his father to be dead, or in respect of his most busie and troublesome imployment in the 7. yeares of plentie, or because he would yet conceale his kinred, he might forbeare to enquire after them, it was the speciall worke of Gods providence so disposing, that his brethren should first seeke unto him, and bow before him, that his dreames might take effect, Mercer.

Augustine further thinketh, that God so disposed, that Ioseph all this while sent not to Iacob being not above 300. mile from him, that Iacob by this meanes might be exercised with sorrow: Volait Deus ista modo parva peccata Iacob in hoc seculo igne tribulationis consumere: God would by this meanes with the fire of tribulation purge Iacobs sinnes in this world: ser. 82. de tempor. But Augustine is deceived in the distance of Mephis from Hebron, which was rather 50. than 300. miles: for the Patriarkes could carrie their corne so farre upon their beasts.

Thom. Anglicus and Peresius thinke that Ioseph had a revelation, how his brethren should come downe to Egypt to buy corn: But if this were so, it is not like, that Moses would have omitted it.

Theodoret thinketh that God so disposed, that Iacob knew not of Iosephs being in Egypt, lest he might have redeemed him from thence, and so the occasion of the Israelites going downe into Egypt should have beene prevented: this opinion and the first I preferre before the rest.

QUEST. XVI. When Egypt began to be affamished, and what other countries beside.

Vers. 55. And the length all the land of Egypt was affamished, &c. 1. For the first two yeares of famine, a dearth was not felt in Egypt, because private men might have laied up in store at home themselves: therefore the Latine text is here very corrupt, that in the former verse, where the true reading is, in all the land of Egypt was bread, readeth, in all the land of Egypt was famine. 2. Where the famine is said to be in all lands, we must not understand all the countries in the world, but these countries next adjoyning which came thither for corne, vers. 57. and so the Hebrewes especially apply it to be spoken of countries, Phenice, Palestina, Arabia, which doe border upon Egypt. 3. Some Hebrewes affirme, that Ioseph before he would sell the Egyptians corne, moved to have them circumcised, and that there was much altercation about it: It is like that he circumcised his owne two sonnes, and instructed the Egyptians in the true worship of God; but that he urged them generally to circumcision, being not of the seed of Abraham, to whom that ceremonie appertained, is not like, Mercer. 4. Ioseph is

v. 56. to breake to the Egyptians, that is, to sell them food: for so the word shabar signifieth: either because it breaketh famine, or because it is broken and ground to make bread of: or rather because they made their bread in thin cakes, and so used to breake, not to cut it, Mercer. The phrase to breake bread whence taken.

4 Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. God only the disposer and foreteller of things to come.

Vers. 25. GOd hath shewed Pharaoh, what he is about to doe. God therefore is not an idle beholder or foreteller of things to come, but a doer and disposer of them: which overthroweth the opinion of the heathen, that ascribe the actions of men, some to fatall necessity, as the Stoikes, some to fortune or chance, as the Epicures: but the Scripture telleth us, that whatsoever pleaseth God, he doth in heaven and earth, Psal. 135. 6. Further, we see that onely God, that worketh in the world, can foretell the things that are done in the world, as the Prophet joyneth them both together: Shew the things that are to come hereafter, &c. doe good or evill, &c. 41. 21. therefore neither spirits nor any other creatures, that are not able to dispose things done in the world, have the foresight or knowledge of things to come.

2. Doct. Repetitions of the same thing in Scripture not vaine.

Vers. 32. THe dreame was doubled, because the thing is established with God, &c. Hence then it is evident, that repetitions in the Scripture, are not vaine tautologies and superfluous battologies, though they are set downe for more certaintie; for which cause this dreame was doubled to Pharaoh, as Saint Paul saith, Philip. 3. 1. It grieveth me not to write the same things unto you, and for you it is sure thing.

3. Doct. The holy Ghost proved to be God.

Vers. 38. CAn we finde such a man as this, in whom the spirit of God is? Augustine noteth this to be the third place in Genesis, where mention is made of the spirit of God: the first is, Gen. 1, 2. The spirit of God moved upon the waters: the second, Genes. 6. 3. My spirit shall not alwaies strive with man, the third in this place, quæst. 134. in Gen.

4. Doct. The mutability and change of time.

Vers. 54. THen began the seven yeares of famine to come, &c. After the yeares of plenty follow the yeares of famine: so after peace commeth warre, after health sickenesse, nothing is permanent or of long continuance here, Muscul. as the wise man saith, There is a time for every purpose under heaven, &c. a time to weepe, a time to laugh, a time to mourne, a time to dance, Eccles. 3. 14.

5. Doct. Of the lawfulnesse of rich apparell and other ornaments in men of honourable place and calling.

Vers. 42. PHaraoh tooke off his ring. Ioseph commeth forth adorned with these complements of honour, a ring, gold chaine, fine linnen, riding in the second charriot. So that such ornaments are not to be condemned in men of honourable place and condition, if these two rules be observed: that neither such things be ambitiously sought and desired; as here this great honour was offered to Ioseph by Pharaoh, of him not begged: and that they be not used to ostentation and vaine glory. And for the lawfulnesse of rich apparell, and ornaments of gold in men of high place, to shew their authority, and the more to keepe the people in feare and obedience, the testimonie of our Saviour may suffice, Mat. 6. Solomon in all his glory was not arayed like one of these.

5 Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. Against superstitious shaving

Vers. 14. ANd he shaved him, &c. Ioseph was shaved, not only to cleanse himselfe from the filthinesse and smell of the prison, but because it was not the fashion of that country to come before the king with long and disordered haire, Mercer. This was a civill use of shaving: they placed no religion in it, as the Popelings of Rome doe.

2. Confut. The vulgar Latine not wholly Hieromes translation.

Vers. 43. THey cryed before him, Abrech. This Hierome taketh to signifie a tender or young father of Abh, father, and resh, tender, delicate, traditions in Gen. yet the Latine translation unworthily to Hieromes name, readeth otherwise: They cried before him, that all should bow their knees: whence it is evident, that the vulgar Latin was not wholly of Hieromes doing, beside it is very corrupt in divers places as here: for in all the land of Egypt was bread, the Latine hath, in all the land of Egypt was famine. The Latine corrupt.

3. Confut. Against the popish prohibition of the marriage of Ministers.

Vers. 50. HE gave him to wife Asenah, daughter of Potipherah, prince or priest of On. The word cohen signifieth both a priest and a prince: the Chalde readeth, prince, others the priest. H. S. because the priests were in great authority in Egypt, and as from the Philosophers they chose Priests, so of the priests they made princes, Mercer. I thinke he was both priest and prince, that is, the chiefe or principall priest. This sheweth that among the Egyptians, their priests were married and had children: so also was it lawfull in the old testament for the priests, and in the new for the Apostles to be married: and never forbidden in the Church of God, till Antichrist began to set in his foot, and his adherents, to teach the doctrine of devils, &c. forbidding to marry, and commanding to abstaine from meats, as the Apostle saith, 1 Tim. 4. 1, 3.

4. Confut. Against the superstitious restraint of marriage among Hebrews and Romanists.

Vers. 50. NOw unto Ioseph were borne two sonnes, before the yeares of famine came. The Hebrews infer from hence, that all the time of famine Ioseph abstained from the company of his wife, because his children were borne before the famine came: and that it is unlawfull for the man and wife to come together in the time of famine, or any other common calamitie: as they would gather out of Ioel 2.16. Let the Bride-groome goe forth of his chamber, and the Bride out of her bride-chamber, &c. Contra. 1. It followeth not because Ioseph had no children borne in the time of the famine, that therefore he came not to his wife all that time: as though it is to be imagined, that the Patriarkes, when they had no children borne, abstained from their wives. 2. True it is, that the man and wife, according to the counsell of the Apostle, should sometime sequester themselves for fasting and prayer: but it must bee onely for a time and with consent, lest Satan tempt them for their incontinency, 1 Cor. 7.5. they must not defraud one another for many moneths, or many yeares. Not much unlike to this Jewish conceit is the Popish restraint of marriage in the time of Lent, for the holinesse of the time, as they imagine, though marriage were a pollution, either of time, place, or person.

6. Places of exhortation and morall use.

1. Morall. To cleanse our selves when we come before God.

Vers. 14. HE changed his raiments, and came to Pharaoh. As Ioseph changed his outward raiment and put off his filthy clothes when he came into the Kings presence; so ought we to cleanse our hearts and sanctifie our soules when we appeare before the Lord, Muscul. as the Preacher saith, Take heed to thy foot when thou entrest into the house of God, Eccles. 4.17.

2. Morall. Not to glory in our gifts, but to referre all to the praise of God.

Vers. 16. WIthout me God shall answer. Ioseph doth extenuate his owne gifts, detracteth from himselfe, and giveth the glory to God: so wee should not rejoyce in any thing that is in us, but acknowledge every good gift to be from God; for (as the Apostle saith) Neither he that planteth nor he that watereth is any thing, but God that giveth increase, 1 Cor. 3.7.

3. Morall. Gods speciall care in providing for his Church.

Vers. 16. GOd shall answer for the wealth of Pharaoh. Though God had great mercy upon Pharaoh and all Egypt, in forewarning them of the great famine to come, that they might afterward make provision for it: yet Gods speciall care and providence watched over his Church in Iacobs house that they might be preserved, as Ioseph himselfe acknowledgeth, God sent me before you to preserve you a posterity in this land, Gen. 45.7.

4. Morall. Wisdome not to be despised though cloathed in rags.

Vers. 15. I Have heard say of thee thou canst interpret, &c. Though the Butler before making mention of Ioseph, for feare rather than of love, lest by others it might have beene made knowne to Pharaoh, how Ioseph had expounded his dreame in prison, did in tearmes disgrace him, saying he was a young man, a childe in a manner, an Hebrew, who were an abomination to the Egyptians, and a servant or bondslave, vers. 12. yet Pharaoh disdaineth not to take counsell of him: we should not then despise wisdome though cloathed with rags, nor contemne the graces of Gods spirit in poore and base men in the world, Mercer. Muscul. Thus saith the Prophet, There was found a poore and wise man, and he delivered the City by his wisdome, Eccles. 9.15.

5. Morall. Famine is unsatiable.

Vers. 10. THe leane kine did eat up the seven fat kine, &c. and it could not be knowne that they had eaten them. When God sendeth the judgement of famine, there is not onely an outward want, but there is also a greedy appetite within, that cannot be satisfied, and that which is eaten is not seene in the body: as these seven leane kine were never the fuller nor fatter, though they had swallowed up the seven fat and well liking kine: so the Prophet saith, He shall snatch at the right hand and be hungry, and eat at the left hand and not be satisfied, Isay 9.20. This judgement God sendeth upon men for abusing of plentie: and he which eateth and drinketh of wantonnesse more than sufficeth, is justly punished with a greedie and doggish appetite, that never can have enough.

6. Morall. Men of gifts must be called to publike office.

Vers. 38. CAn we finde such a man as this, in whom is the spirit of God? Pharaoh thinketh Ioseph a meet man for government, because he was indued with the graces of the Spirit: So none should bee called to place of rule and oversight in Church or Common-wealth, but such as are thereunto elected and furnished with convenient and sufficient gifts: as Numb. 11.17. those Elders which were chosen to beare part of the burden with Moses, received also part of his spirit.

7. Morall. The Kings office to provide for the want of his people.

Vers. 55. THe people cried to Pharaoh, and he said, goe to Ioseph. Although the people knew that the King had deputed Ioseph the chiefe officer for corne, yet they make their complaint to the King: for it then belongeth to the King to provide for the necessities of the people, and to see that his officers doe their duty: so the woman in time of famine cried to the King, Helpe my Lord, O King, 1 King. 6.27.

CHAP. XLII.

1. The Method or Argument of the Chapter.

IN this chapter, first is set downe the comming of Israels sonnes into Egypt, wherefore they came, to buy food, vers. 1, 2. which of them came, all but Benjamin, and why? lest he should die by the way, vers. 4.

Secondly, the manner of their entertainment in Egypt, is described, from vers. 7. to v. 26. 1. Ioseph dealeth roughly with them in charging them to be spies, vers. 7. to 16. then in detaining Simeon, and binding him before their eies, till such time as they brought Benjamin, vers. 20. to 24. other interlocutory speeches are inserted, of the Patriarkes among themselves, in confessing their sinne toward their brother, vers. 21. 2. Ioseph sheweth this kindnesse to his brethren, in causing their money to bee put in their sacks mouth, vers. 25.

Thirdly, their returne home is expressed. 1. What happened in the way as they went, that in opening of their sacks they found their money. 2. The report and narration to Iacob of their manner of handling and entertainement in Egypt. 3. The refusall of Iacob to send his sonne Benjamin with them, although Ruben earnestly perswaded him.

3. The explanation of doubtfull questions.

QUEST. I. How they are said one to gaze on another.

WHy gaze ye? 1. Not as though they set a good face upon the matter, and would not be knowne to want, because of the Canaanites among them. 2. Neither doth this phrase signify contention or strife among them: as straining curtesie, who should seeke out first. 3. Nor yet that they one gaze and stare upon another, musing to see how they were altered and changed with famine. But the simple meaning is, that they stood as men amazed, not knowing what to doe: to the same purpose the Septuagint translate, why are yee idle? &c. Mercer.

QUEST. II. How the Patriarkes descend into Egypt.

GEt ye downe. 1. The Hebrews note is curious, who out of the word redu, goe downe, the letters whereof, make 210. doe gather the time of the abode of the Israelites in Egypt. 2. Not like that they went downe into Egypt of purpose to seeke out Ioseph whom they had thither by repenting of their fact. 3. But God so directed Iacob, that he sendeth them thither, that Iosephs dreame might take due effect: for now they all humbling themselves to Ioseph for food, doe reverence to his sheafe, as Ioseph formerly had dreamed, Mercer.

QUEST. III. How Ioseph could know his brethren, and not be knowne of them.

Vers. 7. WHen Ioseph saw his brethren, he knew them, &c. 1. He knew them at the very first sight of them, not as the Hebrews imagine, because all strangers, that came for corne, gave up their names before they came into the citie, who they were, and from whence they came. 2. Neither needed Ioseph of purpose disguise himselfe in his habite as some of them again think, not to be discerned of his brethren: for they pressed upon him unawares among others, that came for corne. 3. Therefore it was an easie matter for Ioseph to know his brethren, because they were at mans estate when they sold him. Mercer. and Ioseph might take specially view of them, when they did so afflict him: as men beset of purpose take speciall notice of them, Muscul. and by one, Ioseph might know another, whereas if hee had seene them asunder, it had not beene so easie; their speech also was the same, nothing altered, Perer. 4. But Ioseph was not knowne of them: he was altered in stature, countenance, and voice, being but a child of 17. yeares when they sold him: his imprisonment and afflictions might much alter him. Likewise his princely state and pompe tooke away all suspition and surmise from his brethren, that he was Ioseph: also he spake not unto them in hebrew, but by an interpreter.

Vers. 7. HE spake to them roughly. Ioseph thus dealeth with his brethren for divers reasons. 1. That by this meanes they might be brought to the knowledge of their sinne committed against him: for men by afflictions learne to know themselves: as these also did, vers. 21. Mercer. 2. The more roughly they were handled at the first, the more acceptable was the favour shewed afterward, and the benefit appeared so much the greater, Augustin. qu. 46. in Genes. 3. By this meanes Ioseph came to the knowledge of his fathers state and Benjamins, for he might feare, seeing onely Benjamin wanting, lest they had of malice against Ioseph, wrought some evill against him, being his only brother by his mother. Chrysost. hom. 64. and Calvin.

QUEST. V. What Ioseph meaneth by the weakenesse of the land.

Vers. 9. YE are spies, and are come to see the weakenesse of the land. 1. By the weakenesse of the land, neither understand with some, the idlenesse and slothfulnesse of the people: although the Egyptians, by reason of the overflowing of Nilus which made the grounds fruitfull, were much given to sloth. 2. Nor yet with Aben Ezra doe we expound, the nakednesse, to be the secrets of the land, because the naked parts are secret. 3. Nor with the Septuagint, vestigia, the waies or passages into the country. 4. But the weake places, were the unwalled and undefenced townes, as the Latine, which Munster followeth, readeth, immunita loca, places without defence. And that this specially belongeth to spies, Moses sheweth, who giveth this charge to those which were set to spie out the land of Canaan: Consider the land, what it is, and the people that dwell therein, whether they be strong or weake, many or few, whether the land be good or bad, whether they dwell in tents or walled townes, Numbers 13. 19, 20.

QUEST. VI. Why they alledge, that they were allone mans sonnes.

Vers. 11. WE are all one mans sonnes, &c. 1. It is not like, as the Hebrewes conjecture, that the ten brethren did disperse themselves, at their entring into Egypt, and every man took a sundry way to seeke Ioseph, and that they confessed so much unto him, whereupon hee tooke occasion to say they were spies: for concerning Ioseph, they supposed that he was dead, vers. 13. But Ioseph doth thus charge them rather, because they came in that company as conspirators: and therefore they goe about to excuse the matter, for their comming so together. 2. Wherefore their meaning is this, 1. The cause of their so comming in one company was, for that they were brethren, and so much the more not to be spies because they came together, whereas spies use to disperse themselves, Mercer. 2. And that they are brethren, it is like that their father would have imployed his servants rather than some such a businesse, Muscul. 3. And seeing it was a capitall crime and danger to be a spie, it is unlike that one man would hazzard all his children at once, Iun.

QUEST. VII. Whether Ioseph made a lie, and so offended, in charging his brethren to be spies.

BUt now whereas Ioseph against his owne knowledge chargeth his brethren to bee spies, because they came for corne, how was not this a fault in Ioseph, so to dissemble? 1. I neither will yeeld that this have beene an infirmity in Ioseph with Calvin. 2. Neither with some, excuse this fact, and say it was, cosum mendacium, a pleasant lie, or in sport. 3. Much lesse was it a purposed lie, as though Ioseph had sworne to it, by the life of Pharaoh: for by that oath hee affirmeth not that they are spies, but binds them to bring their brother Benjamin. 4. Wherefore I thinke rather that Ioseph used here no lie at all. 1. But not in that sense, as R. Salomon taketh it, as though Ioseph had called them spies one way, because they searched the next way into the land of Egypt out of Canaan, and that they understood it another way: for Ioseph expoundeth himselfe that he meaneth spies properly, that they came to see the weakenesse of the land. 2. Neither doth he speake in the opinion of others, that they are counted so, but this thrice urging of that word, sheweth that he spake as from his owne judgement. 3. Neither doth he speake figuratively, turning his finger to himselfe, and that they spied out his weakenesse, and so his youth and simplicity, when they sold him to the Ismaelites, as Rupertus. 4. But I rather thinke that Ioseph thrice spake, not assertive, by way of assertion, or affirmation, but probative and tentative, by way of question to trie them, which was no lie nor dissimulation at all: as neither was that in our Saviour, who to make triall of his disciples humanity, made shew as though he would have gone further, Luke 24.

Qu

QUEST. VIII. Whether Ioseph had before forgotten his dreames.

Vers. 9. AND Ioseph remembred the dreames, which he dreamed of them. 1. Not that Ioseph had either made small account before of his dreames, seeing the contrary event in his imprisonment and other afflictions. 2. Or that prosperity had made him to forget his former visions. 3. But now, when he saw his dreames to take effect, he doth more lively remember them, & better understandeth them than before, as it is said of the disciples, that they understood not those things, which were said of Christ at the first, but after hee was glorified, then they remembred that they were written of him, Iohn 12. 16. Calvin.

QUEST. IX. Whether Ioseph sweareth by the life of Pharaoh, or therein did wel.

Vers. 15. BY the life of Pharaoh you shall not goe hence. First some excuse Ioseph here, admitting this to be an oath. 1. Because in effect he did sweare by God, who was the author of Pharaohs health and life. 2. Some againe doe extenuate his oath, that he sware in effect by nothing, as Socrates used to sweare by a goose, or dog, Zeno by the Caper tree, to shew the vanity of the heathen that used to sweare by their Gods: but it is not like, that Ioseph set so light by the health of Pharaoh, as Augustine well noteth: Bono & fideli servo vilis fuerit salus Pharaonis? 3. Some would excuse it, because Ioseph was not in good earnest, but did all this in a friendly kind of dissimulation: but as it is not lawfull to lie in jest, so neither is it to sweare in jest.

Secondly they that denie this to have beene an oath, 1. Some say it was but a vehement kind of obtestation, as Moses calleth heaven and earth to witnesse, Deut. 30. 19, and as a man may protest, by his faith, by his head, and such like, Calvin. But yet this will not helpe, for our Saviour condemneth, whatsoever in our speech is used beside yea, or nay, Math. 5. that out of Deut. is a patheticall compellation of the creatures to be witnesses against the people of their ingratitude and disobedience, which is much unlike this case here. 2. Some hold this speech of Ioseph to be an execration: as if he should say, he wished Pharaoh otherwise to live, than he would doe as he said, Thom. Aquinas. But Ioseph was more reverent and religious of Pharaohs health and life. 3. Iunius saith it is a constant kinde of affirmation used both among Christians, and others: and will have it like to those asseverations, 1 Sam. 2. 26. O my Lord (Anna saith to Eli) as thy soule liveth, and Abner saith to Saul, as thy soule liveth (O king) I cannot tell, 1 Sam. 17. 55. and his use was to sweare by the soule of the Emperour, as he alleageth out of Vlpianus: But herein I cannot consent unto that learned man: for in those phrases, they alwayes either protested by themselves, or such person, as 2 King. 6. 31. God do so to mee, and more also: or by those to whom they speake, in the second person, as in the examples given in instance: and therefore the case is not all one with this: And concerning that use, to protest by the Emperous soule, though it continued under Christian Emperors, yet I remember that it was taken up before in the time of Idolatry, when they ascribed divine honours to their Emperors. 4. Wherefore I rather incline to thinke, that this kind of speech, to say, by the life of Pharaoh, was used commonly in Egypt as an oath, partly of flattery, partly of superstition, in ascribing as much to their Kings: which use they seeme to have derived from the Hebrewes, that as they used to say, as the Lord liveth, so they, Pharaoh liveth: and the Hebrewes write, that to this day it is a law among the Egyptians, that he which falsly sweareth by the kings head in a pecuniarie matter, shall be put to death, Perer. yea and the imperiall law is, that he which did commit perjury, swearing by the genius imperatoris, by the soule or spirit of the Emperour, should be beaten with clubs, and it should be lawfull over his head κατὰ τῆς ἀρχῆς μὴ ὄμνυε, sweare not rashly, Iun. ex Vlpian. But yet Ioseph in this place of purpose sweareth not, but by the common use and custome spake as the rest did, as it appeareth by his repeating of the same words together: like as in our English tongue, many suddenly will say (Mary) before they meane to sweare: which notwithstanding at the first (I thinke) was taken up as an oath by the custome of men: And beside Ioseph doth conforme himselfe of purpose to the Egyptian phrase, that his brethren should not suspect him to be an Hebrew, which they might easily have done, if he had said, as the Lord liveth: Therefore although Ioseph may be somewhat herein excused, yet can he not be cleared of all fault, but that living among a superstitious people, he was somewhat polluted also by their manners. Genevens. annot. in the great Bible: and so Iosephs brethren did take it, that he charged them with an oath.

QUEST. X. Whether Ioseph did forsweare himselfe.

Vers. 16. BY the life of Pharaoh you are but spies. It might seeme that Ioseph here did forsweare himselfe, because they were indeed no spies. 1. It doth not satisfie to say, he did not forsweare, because there is no mention made directly of God: for though we ought onely to sweare by the name of God, yet he that sweareth falsly by any other thing, forsweareth himselfe: It seemeth it was the Pharisees error, that a man might sweare by other things as well as God, so they did not forsweare: but our Saviour, not misliking their caution against forswearing, sheweth further, that it is not lawfull so much as to sweare at all, by the heaven or earth, by the head, &c. Math. 5. 34. 2. Neither sufficeth it to say that he did sweare in jest, not in good earnest, and therefore forsweareth not: for an oath is not to be used at all, but we must sweare in judgement, Ierem. 4. 2. that is, advisedly. 3. Wherefore to exempt Ioseph from perjurie, first he saith, by the life of Pharaoh, ye shall not goe hence, except your youngest brother come hither: which was performed, for they did not all goe, but left one bound to be a pledge for the rest: Although secondly if they failed in bringing their brother, by the life of Pharaoh they were spies: that is, their words should not prove true for the one, so they might very well bee suspected for the other, and worthily held to be spies: so Augustine well expounded, Exploratores deputabimini mera- merito mendacii vestri; You shall deserve by your lie to be counted spies, quæst. 139. in Genes. And againe they did in a manner take it upon them, to be counted spies, if it were not true which they said, Mercer.

QUEST. XI. Why Simeon was taken and bound rather than any other.

Vers. 24. HE tooke Simeon from among them, and bound him. 1. They did not choose Simeon, to be pledge for the rest, but Ioseph tooke him. 2. Either because Ioseph had experience of his bloudy minde against the Sichemites, and so might hold him a principall agent in his affliction; and so hold that Iudas Iscariot, that betrayed our blessed Saviour, came of this Simeon. 3. Or because he would not assist Ruben, in delivering of Ioseph, being the next in yeares, and so they both joyning together might have swayed the rest, sic Theodoret, quæst. 102. in Genes. 4. Or rather, because he was the author of the conspiracie to kill Ioseph, and the first that let him downe into the pit, as Philo thinketh. 5. Abenezra, whom Iunius followeth, saith, Ioseph tooke Simeon for the rest, because he was the eldest, not Ruben, whom he spared for his kindnesse and brotherly affection toward him, though he committed him to prison with the rest at the first, lest he should have bewrayed himselfe. 6. And Ioseph knew Simeon to be of an unquiet and turbulent spirit, and therefore detained him, lest he might have hindered the motion for the bringing of Benjamin, Muscul.

QUEST. XII. Who it was that opened his sacke in the Inne, and what sacke.

Vers. 27. ASome of them opened his sacke to give his asse provender, &c. 1. Some say this was Levi; some opened his sacke, some thinke it was Ruben, but it cannot be certainely gathered who it was. 2. One of them opened his sacke, not that great one wherein they carried their corne, as Rambam for it is not like that they gave their asses wheat, neither yet was it the purse wherein they put their money, as Mercer. for he thereout tooke provender for his horse, but it was another lesser sacke, wherein they carried provision for their asses, Iun. and therefore another word is here used (amthacath, which signifieth a bag that is stretched out) than before, where that, wherein they carried their wheat, is called (saccim) sacke, the same in English and Hebrew. 3. And though they were in an Inne, it might be that there was no provender to be had, but such as they had brought; the word is malon, a lodging place, not like our Innes, where provision is made both for man and beast, Muscul.

QUEST. XIII. Whether one or all opened their sacks in the Inne.

BUt whereas one of them is here said to open his sacke, and finde his money, and the rest to have done the presence of their father, vers. 35. and yet Gen. 43. 21. they are all said to have opened their sacks in the Inne: for the solution hereof. 1. Some thinke, that indeed one of them did open his sacke in the Inne, and the rest at home: but they in reporting of it make but mention of the Inne, to be more compendious, Iun. or by a synechdoche, all are said to doe it, because one did, Muscul. or they joyne together, which was done in the Inne, and the house. But none of these answers doe satisfie, for still the contradiction remaineth: for they thus say to Iosephs steward, As we came to an Inne, and opened our sacks, behold, every mans money was in our sacks mouth, Gen. 43. 21. then it must needes be that every man opened his. 1. For it is not like, that after one had opened his sacke, and found his money, but that the rest wondering at it, would trie whether they had theirs also. 2. To say that the rest of their money was in the sacks mouth, but in the midst as some Hebrewes, and that therefore they opened their sacks at home, is against the text before alleaged, every man found his money in his sacks mouth. 3. Before one opened his sacke to give his asse provender, so it is like the other did so also: for that one cast out provender for all the rest, as Mercerus conjectureth, was neither likely nor possible. 4. Wherefore I rather, that they all opened their sacks, and found their money in the Inne, and knit up their sacks again, and they came at home, and then in the presence of their father emptied their sacks, that he might see where the money was put.

Reconciliation of places.

QUEST. XIV. Of Rubens inconsiderate speech.

Vers. 37. Slay my two sonnes, if I bring him not to thee. 1. This was but a foolish offer of Ruben: for what satisfaction had it been to Iacob, if Benjamin had miscarried, to kill two of his sonnes? and indeed it seemeth that Ruben, though the eldest, was not the wisest, as it is evident by his folly, in lying with his fathers concubine, for the which fact he lost his birthright, and it was given to Ioseph, 1 Chron. 5. 1. 2. Yet because Iacob had them in jealousie, for making away of Ioseph, Ruben's speech would take all suspition from his father, of any hard measure to be offered to Benjamin. Ruben speaketh here but of two sons, whereas he had foure in all, Gen. 46. 9. either because the other were but little ones, and the other therefore more deare unto him, Mercer. or because these were now in sight and present, when Ruben uttered this inconsiderate speech, Iunius.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. How the Iewes should be intreated at the hands of Christian Princes.

Vers. 17. SO he put them in ward, three dayes. Rupertus would have this proceeding of Iosephs brethren, to be a pattern for Christian Princes, how they should intreat the Iewes: but Ioseph doth only imprison them, and handle them roughly, to bring them to knowledge and confession of their treachery against him: so Christian governors should not put the Iewes to death, but deale hardly, by laying taxes and impositions upon them, that at the length they may be brought to vance for their blasphemies against Christ: as it is in the Psalme, Slay them not lest my people forget it, but scatter them abroad by thy power, Psal. 59. 12. Rupert. lib. 7. comment. in Gen. cap. 4.

2. Doct. Where the feare of God is not, there can be no true vertue.

Vers. 18. This doe and live, for I feare God, &c. Ioseph biddeth them bee secure of his sincere and true dealing with him, because he feared God: so that true religion is the fountaine of vertue and honest dealing: they therefore that feare not God may for a while make a semblance and shew of honestie, but it cannot be in truth, where the ground of true religion is wanting: where therfore the feare of God is not, we cannot expect any vertuous action, as Abraham reasoned with himselfe when he sojourned in Gerar, The feare of God is not in this place, and they will slay me for my wives sake, Gen. 20. 11.

3. Doct. The guilt of sinne remaineth when the act is past.

Vers. 21. They said one to another, we have verily sinned against our brother. By this wee learne, that although the act of sinne be done and past, yet the guilt and conscience of sinne may continue, as here the sinne which they had committed against Ioseph 22. yeares before, is revived, Muscul. As the Lord said to Cain, If thou doest not well, sinne lieth at the doore, Gen. 4. 7. It lieth lurking in the doore of the conscience, ready upon every occasion to assault us.

4. Doct. The author of affliction, it commeth not by chance.

Vers. 28. What is this that God hath done unto us? These men having a guilty conscience, thinke that God meeteth with them in every corner: yet this good perswasion they have, that nothing happed to them by chance, as this, the finding of their money in their sacks mouth, but they ascribe it to Gods providence, they make him the authour of their crosses and affliction, Calvin. As David in the like manner saith, that the Lord bid Shemei curse him, 2 Sam. 16. 11.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. Saint Pauls prophecie of some that should give eare to the doctrine of devils, fulfilled in the Synagogue of Rome.

Vers. 6. They bowed their face to the ground before him. Here Josephs brethren unwittingly doe fulfill Josephs prophecie, that they should fall downe unto him and doe him reverence: like as the Romanists unwittingly accomplish many things in the passion of Christ, which were foretold by the Prophets: they which in these dayes give eare to the doctrines of devils in the Romish and Antichristian Church, doe fulfill the prophecie of the Apostle, 1 Tim. 4. 1. some of them of ignorance and simplicitie, but their blinde guides of malice and obstinacie against the truth, Muscul.

2. Confut. Against Purgatory.

Vers. 8. They knew his brethren, but they knew not him. Augustine propounding this question, how it can be true that all this time of Josephs prosperitie he sent no word to Iacob, but he continued mourning for his sonne, giveth this reason, Quoniam sine fletu sic mentis peccatis Iacob esse non potuit, volens peccata in hac seculo igne tribulationis consumere, &c. Because Iacob could not be without teares, God would by the same meanes purge them with the fire of tribulation in this world, serm. 82. de verbis Domini. If small sinnes then (which they call venial) bee purged in this world, then there is nothing to be cleansed in purgatory fire afterward, which they say serveth to the purging, not of mortall sinnes: and indeed Iob well sheweth that our purgatory fire is in the affliction and sorrow which he saith, Exibo ut aurum, I shall come forth like gold, Iob 23. 10. And the Prophet saith, The Lord hath a fire in Sion, and his furnace at Jerusalem, Isa. 31. 9. it is not then in hell or Purgatory. I perceive not wherein the sentence of Augustine, could not perceive how strongly it maketh against Purgatory.

3. Confut. Against the swearing by Saints.

Vers. 15. By the life of Pharaoh ye shall not goe hence, &c. Thomas Aquinas justifieth this fact of Ioseph, in swearing by the life of Pharaoh, and would warrant thereby the lawfulnesse of swearing by Saints: for an oath, saith he, is made two wayes, by execration, when some creature is named in whom the truth should be manifested: so we sweare by the life of Pharaoh, when some creature is expressed by Saints, that believed in the truth: so Ioseph sware by Pharaoh, as a minister of Gods truth and justice, Thom. 2. 2. qu. 89. ar. 8.

This Sophistical distinction doth justifie that kinde of oath, which is directly forbidden by our Saviour, to sweare by the head, Matth. 5. 36. Neither shalt thou sweare by thine head: wee may not sweare by the creature, whether the first be sware controll the holy doctrine of the Gospell. 2. Men may not sweare by the Gospell, but upon it, when they lay their hands upon the book: for so we reade, that they have used some visible ceremonie and rite in taking an oath: as Abrahams servant layed his hand upon his masters thigh, Gen. 24. 3. Iacob did sweare unto Laban upon an heape of stones, but neither did sweare by his masters thigh, nor the other by the stones, but by the name of God, Gen. 31. 53. Iacob sware by the feare of his father Isaac: after the same manner is a booke used as an object for further evidence, in the ministring of an oath: but Saints are neither visible, nor present, therefore the case is not alike. 3. It is also directly forbidden to sweare by any but by the Lord, Deut. 6. 13. Thou shalt feare the Lord thy God, and serve him, and sweare by his name: and though [onely] be be not here found, yet our Saviour so interpreteth, *Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve, Matth.*4.10. and so consequently, by him onely shalt thou sweare. 4. Concerning Ioseph oth. I have shewed before, *quest.*9. that although it may be somewhat qualified and extenuated, yet it cannot be justified: but it savoureth somewhat of the Egyptian manners, and seemeth to be against that plain *Zephan.*1.5. where the Prophet reproveth those that sweare by the Lord, and sweare by Malcham, that is, their King: whether they made the idoll, or a mortall man their King; both abuses are here reproved.

6. Places of Exhortation.

1. Observ. The righteous not exempted from publike calamity.

Vers. 1. IAcob saw that there was food in Egypt, &c. Iacob among the rest of the Canaanites tasted the famine: whereby we see that the righteous are not exempted from publike calamities: Abraham was pinched in like manner with famine, and constrained to goe into Egypt, *Gen.*12. for his kingdome which the righteous looke for is not of this world, Muscul.

2. Observ. God at the first seemeth to deale hardly with his children, as Ioseph did with his brethren.

Vers. 7. HE spake to them roughly. Like as Ioseph at the first seemed to handle his brethren hardly, but inwardly he yearned in compassion toward them, and in the end shewed them great kindnesse: so the Lord dealeth with his children. When he humbleth them by affliction he seemeth unto them as an enemie, as Iob complaineth, that God counteth him as one of his enemies, *cap.*19.11. but in the end he sheweth his gracious favour, and fatherly affection, Mercer.

3. Observ. Against the customs of swearing.

Vers. 19. OR else by the life of Pharaoh, &c. Ioseph sweareth twice together: such a thing it is to be an evill custome: many that use to sweare are so accustomed to it that they cannot speake otherwise but sweare, Calvin. therefore we must take heed that sinne be not confirmed by custome: but as the Apostle saith, *Be not overcome of evill, but overcome evill with goodnesse, Rom.*12.21.

4. Observ. As men measure to others it shall be mete to them againe.

Vers. 21. WE would not heare him, therefore this trouble is come upon us. As they hardned their hearts against the pitifull complaint of their brother Ioseph, so they confesse it to bee just with God that now their suit is not heard. Thus it is just with God to pay men home in their owne measure: therefore let men take heed how they use their poore brethren hardly; the time may come that they may finde as hard measure at other mens hands: therefore let every man remember that saying of our Saviour, *Whatsoever yee would that men should doe to you, doe you unto them: this is the Law and the Prophets, Matth.*7.12.

5. Observ. Affliction bringeth a man to repentance.

Vers. 21. AND they said one to another, we have verily sinned, &c. We see the wonderfull and admirable effect of affliction, which bringeth a man to the knowledge of his sinne: it is the Lords plow wherewith we are made fruitfull: like to the helve which Elizeus cast into the water, which fetched up the iron in the bottome: so affliction raiseth up a sinner that lay drowned and mudded in his sinne.

Three notable fruits of affliction.

Affliction hath three notable effects: it maketh us to know God, our selves, and the world: it stirreth us up to thinke of God whom wee have offended, and to turne us to him by true repentance: the Scripture testifieth of Manasses, that after the Lord had humbled him by affliction, then he knew that the Lord was God, 2 *Chron.*33.13. We are called to the knowledge of God three wayes: 1. By affliction and inward motion wrought in us by God himselfe. 2. By the ministery of man, as either by examples, or admonitions and instructions. 3. We are forced by the necessity of affliction, Perkinsian. And as the profiting by affliction is a signe of spirituall health: so the hardning of the heart under the crosse is a signe of desperate state, as the Prophet Ieremie saith, *Thou hast smitten them, but they have not sorrowed, Ierem.*5.3.

Affliction maketh us to know God.

Affliction bringeth us to know our selves.

Secondly, affliction causeth us to know our selves: 1. Our mortall and corruptible state, our weake and fraile nature, that weareth and wasteth away with trouble, anguish, and sicknesse: as the Prophet David saith, *When thou with rebukes doest chastice man for iniquity, thou as a moth makest his beauty to consume, Psal.*39.7. 2. Beside, man by his affliction seeth his faults as in a glasse, and calleth to minde his former errours: as David saith, *Before I was afflicted I went wrong, Psal.*119.67.

Affliction teacheth us to know the world what it is.

Thirdly, affliction learneth us to know the world: 1. How vaine it is, as the Preacher saith, *All is vanities, all is but vanity, Eccles.*1.2. 2. It sheweth the instability and mutability of the world, how suddenly men fall from riches to poverty, from health to sicknesse, from honour to misery: as the Apostle saith, *The world passeth away and the lust thereof, 1 Ioh.*2.17. 3. Affliction layeth open the miserable that is in the world: for man is borne to sorrow, as the sparks flie upward, Iob 5.7. that is, as we say of the world and the pleasures thereof, with Moses in his song, *Their wine is the wine of Sodom, and the vines of Gomorrha, their grapes are as the grapes of gall, their clusters be bitter, their wine is the gall of Dragons, Deut.*32.32. 4. The deceitfulnesse of the world appeareth by affliction: how it deceiveth the hope of those that trust to it: like as Lot made choise of the pleasant, fruitfull vale of Sodom, which was soone turned into a filthy lake and poole of brimstone. 5. Lastly, By affliction and trouble we know the world to be evill, wretched, and wicked, that there is no goodnesse in it: as the Apostle saith, *The whole world lieth in wickednesse, 1 Ioh.*5.19. ex Perer.

CHAP. XLIII.

1. The Method or Argument.

FIrst in this Chapter is declared the manner of Iacobs condiscending to send Benjamin into Egypt with his brethren: where we have, 1. Iudahs absolute deniall to goe without him, *vers.*3,4,5. 2. Iacobs expostulating with his sonnes for confessing they had another brother, and their answer, vers. 6, 7. 3. Iudahs undertaking for Benjamin, *vers.*8,9,10. 4. Iacobs condescending, with his advice to take a present with them, and double mony, and his blessing of them, *vers.*11. to 15.

Secondly, this Chapter sheweth how they were entertained at Iosephs hand, 1. The preparation to their entertainment is set downe: to the which belongeth, 1. Their inviting to dinner, *vers.*16,17. 2. Their conference with Iosephs Steward concerning their money, and his satisfying of them, *vers.*18. to 23. 3. The delivering of Simeon, *vers.*23. 4. They addresse themselves, and their present, *vers.*24.25.

2. The entertainment it selfe is declared in Iosephs friendly communication with them, *vers.*27. to 30. his tender affection, *vers.*30. bountifull feast, with the manner of it, *vers.*32. to the end.

3. The explanation of doubtfull questions.

QUEST. I. Whether all Iacobs family lived of the provision out of Egypt.

Verse 2. Goe againe and buy us a little food, &c. 1. Iacob stayeth not till all the bread was eaten up, for whereof should they then have lived till they went and came, but the provision was very little, Mercer. 2. Neither is it to be thought that Iacobs whole family, which had some 200. or 300. (for there were 70. males which came out of Iacobs loynes, beside their wives, nieces, and servants) lived together of the wheat brought out of Egypt, but that in such great necessity there was a supply with herbs, roots, acornes, and such like, Calvin. 3. Iacob speaketh of buying a little food, not that he thought the famine to be at an end, but because in time of famine great parsimony is used, and little to goe a great way, Muscul.

QUEST. II. Why Iudah prevaileth more with Iacob than all the rest.

Verse 9. Then Iacob said, if it must be so now, &c. Iudah perswadeth more than the rest to have Benjamin goe with them, not in respect of the punishment which hee undertaketh, as though it were, to beare the blame for ever, which some make a type of everlasting punishment, whereas

Ruben

Ruben offered the preſent death of his two children, which was but temporary: but Iacob rather rejected that ſpeech of Ruben as fooliſh and inconſiderate. 2. Neither doth Iudah perſwade in reſpect of his age, becauſe Ruben being not heard, and Simeon abſent, and Levi in diſgrace becauſe of the maſſacre the Sichemites, Iudah was the next borne, Muſcul. 3. But Ruben was refuſed becauſe Iacob conceivevill of him for his inceſt with his fathers concubine: Iudah was reſpected for his wiſdome and gravi-of whom Iacob did foreſee that the Meſſiah ſhould be borne, Mercer. 4. As alſo Iudah watcheth his when the proviſion was ſpent: ſo that Iacob was forced in reſpect of that preſent neceſſity to yeeld them, Perer.

QUEST. III. Of Iacobs preſent.

Verſ. 11. TAke of the beſt fruits of the land, &c. 1. For three cauſes Iacob doth counſell them to a preſent with them: 1. To finde grace with the Lord of the Countrey. 2. To redeem their brother Simeon. 3. To cleare themſelves of the ſuſpition of being taken for ſpies, Philo. 2. Though theſe gifts were not of any great price, yet Iacob hopeth that the good will of the giver ſhould be accepted, Calvin. 3. But the Hebrewes here are very ridiculous in their ſuperſtitious toyes, who preſcribe verſe thrice to be ſaid in the City gates where any peſtilence or other deadly danger rageth, when one treth, and ſo he ſhall be preſerved, Mercer. as though Gods wrath were appeaſed with balme, rurpenalmonds, ſuch as Iacob ſent for a preſent.

Hebrewes fond collections.

QUEST. IV. Of the double money which they are bidden to carry with them.

Verſ. 12. TAke double money in your hand. 1. Some thinke that they carried double money with them to buy corne with; for Iacob might conjecture that the price of corne by reaſon of the ceeding dearth was enhaunced: and that beſide this double money they carried the other money was found in their ſacks mouth, Raſi, Bahai, whom Iunius and Muſculus follow. 2. But I rather with Mercerus, that the money which they were to reſtore, was part of this double money, and the halfe was to buy corne: for ſo verſ. 15. it is ſaid they tooke twice ſo much money with Benjamin:
is mention made onely of double money.

QUEST. V. Of Iacobs prayer.

Verſ. 14. GOd almighty give you mercy, &c. 1. The word is rachamim, which ſignifieth bowels, conſequently compaſſion: and ſo indeed God heard Iacobs prayer, for afterward, when Ioſephs bowels yearned, and his affection was moved at the ſight of Benjamin, Muſcul. 2. When ſaith, that he may deliver your other brother, he meaneth not Ioſeph, as ſome thinke, but Simeon that kept in bonds. 3. Some of the Hebrewes by theſe two, the captivity of Simeon, and the ſending away Benjamin, doe myſtically underſtand the two captivities of the ten tribes, and of the two tribes, after which there ſhould be no other: but they are deceived, for the Jewes are in captivity to this day.

Hebrews vaine confidence.

QUEST. VI. The meaning of Iacobs words, if I am robbed, I am robbed.

Verſ. 14. IF I be robbed of my children, I am robbed. 1. Not as though hee counted himſelfe robbed in manner of all, when he loſt Ioſeph, as ſome Hebrewes expound. 2. Neither yet is this ſpo-in reſpect of all his ſons in generall, whom he now ſent away, as Calvin. 3. Nor yet doth Iacob thus plaine, either as deſpairing, or to make his ſonnes more ſollicitous and carefull, Muſcul. 4. Nor yet is his meaning that I ſhall be deprived of Benjamin, as I am already of Ioſeph and Simeon, and that did propheſie of Benjamins trouble about the cup, Mercer. 5. But this is the ſpeech of a reſolute that doth caſt the worſt: as if he ſhould have ſaid, well Benjamin ſhall goe, and if I be robbed, I am bed, Gods will be done: as Eſther ſaith in the like manner, If I periſh, I periſh, Eſther 4. 16. Iunius.

QUEST. VII. Who Ioſephs ſteward was, and of the divining time.

Verſ. 16. WHen he ſaw Benjamin, he ſaid to his ſteward. 1. Ioſeph knew not Benjamin (who now 24. or 25. yeares old) otherwiſe than by ſeeing him with the reſt of his brethren Mercer. 2. This ſteward could not be Manaſſes Ioſephs eldeſt ſonne, as ſome Hebrewes imagine, for he not above ſix or ſeuen yeare old, and he could not at that age underſtand languages, as this man did; ther was he fit to manage the houſhold affaires. 3. The men ſhall eat with me at noone: it ſeemeth that ſpent the morning in the weighty affaires, and at noone tooke their dinner: both for that the morning the fitteſt time to diſpatch ſerious buſineſſe, and for that in thoſe hot Countreyes they uſed in the the day to keepe their houſes, Mercer. Muſcul.

QUEST. VIII. Of the manner of the feaſt which Ioſeph prepared for his brethren.

Verſ. 32. AFter they prepared for him by himſelfe, &c. 1. Ioſeph made his brethren a feaſt, to ſhew good will toward them, and to inſinuate, that the former proceedings with them were of hatred: the Romans uſed ſuch kinde of feaſts, which they call chariſtia, to the which were none but kinſfolke, to continue love among them, and ſeeke reconciliation, if there had beene any of friendſhip, Valer. Maxim. lib. 2. cap. 1. 2. It ſeemeth that there were three tables provided, the Ioſeph, who ſate alone according to his ſtate, another for the Egyptians, the third for Ioſephs Muſcul. 3. The Egyptians refuſed to eat with the Hebrewes, not onely becauſe they were a ple, and deſpiſed all other nations beſide themſelves; but there was a more ſpeciall reaſon, be-Hebrewes were keepers of ſheep, Gen. 46. 34. and ſo did eat of ſheepe and other cattell which ans worſhipped: and therefore Moſes ſaith to Pharaoh, that they could not offer in the land of which was an abomination to the Egyptians: that is, to kill and ſacrifice ſuch cattell as they and to eat part thereof: thus the Chalde paraphraſt alſo expoundeth. 4. In that it is ſaid, they ſate him, we ſee how ancient an uſe it is to ſit downe at the table, as before it is ſaid of Ioſephs brethren, that they ſate downe to eat bread. 5. Likewiſe, where it is added, they tooke meſſes from before

Why the Egyptians refuſed to eat with the Hebrewes.

The ancient uſe of ſitting at the table.

seemeth it was a custome for great persons to send messes of meat from their table to such as they favoured: as Xenophon writeth of Cyrus, lib. 8. that he never used to eat his meat alone, but imparted it to those which were present, sometime sent part to his friends absent. 6. Where it is said, they drunke, and inebriati sunt, and were drunken, as the vulgar Latine and Septuagint reade: we must not thinke that they were indeed drunken, but here the word Shacar is taken for more liberall or plentifull drinking, as Augustine well noteth; inebriandi vocabulum sæpe pro satietate solere poni, &c. this word is often taken in Scripture for satiety, fulnesse, as Hagg. 1. 6. Ye drinke but are not filled; where the same word Shacar is used, and in the same sense it is taken here.

Readings of the word Shacar, to be drunken.

Vers. 33. THey sate before him, the eldest according to his age, &c. 1. The Hebrewes are deceived that thinke Iudah as the chiefe to have sate downe in the first place, and that the sonnes of Leah had their places before the sonnes of Iacobs concubines, and Benjamin they say was placed next to Ioseph: but the text is plaine, that they sate according to their age, Ruben first, and Benjamin last, Muscul. Mercer. 2. Neither did they thus place themselves according to their wonted use, as thinketh Mercer. but Ioseph appointed them; for so the text is, They sate before him, or in his presence, as it were by his direction, Iun. 3. But we refuse that fable of the Hebrewes, as though Ioseph by his divining cup should know every ones age, and so call him by his name to sit down: Ioseph was far from using any such superstition. 4. The cause then why Iosephs brethren marvelled, was not because Benjamin had five parts to their messe, as Cajetane, or because they had such great entertainment, Mercer. but they mused how Ioseph, being as they supposed an Egyptian, did know how to place them in order, Iun. Muscul.

QUEST. X. How Benjamins messe was five times more than his brethrens.

Vers. 34. BEnjamins messe was five times so much as any of theirs. 1. It is not like as some imagine, that the rest of the brethren, who were ten, were two to a messe, and Benjamin had five messes, so he should have as much as all the other ten, which is not like. 2. Some conjecture that the other brethren might have three messes a peece, and Ioseph five more than any, that is, eight in all, Perer. but then Ioseph messe was not five times greater than the rest, as the text is. 3. Tostatus thinketh that every one had two messes, and that Benjamin had five messes, but as big againe as theirs: but this cannot be, for Benjamins messes exceed rather in number than in quantity: the word is rabah, he multiplied. 4. Iosephus also differeth from the Scripture, in making Benjamins part but twice so much. 5. Wherefore it is more probable that Benjamins messe was five times so much to any of his brethrens, not comparing them all together, but sunderly and apart, that for every one of their messes Benjamin had five. But that beside Benjamins common part among his brethren, Ioseph should send him one, Asenath his wife another, Manasses and Ephraim each of them one to make up five, is but a curious observation of the Hebrewes, Mercer.

QUEST. XI. Why Ioseph gave to Benjamin a greater portion than the rest.

HOw Ioseph thus preferred Benjamin before his brethren, though he were in the last place. 1. Not to make the portions of Rachels children (in giving five parts to Benjamin, and keeping two to himself) equall to the portions of Leahs seven children, six sons and a daughter, as Alexander Polyhistor. ex Iosh. for Dinah Leahs daughter was not present to have a share among them. 2. Neither as Lyranus, was to feele the minde of the brethren how they were affected toward Benjamin: for after they had testified their love sufficiently in the next chapter, to Benjamin, when hee should have stayed for Iosephs cup, yet Joseph keepeth the same proportion in giving to Benjamin five suits of raiment, Gen. 45. 22. 3. Neither (with Augustine) need we make this a type and figure of Pauls excellencie in gifts, (who was of the tribe of Benjamin) before the rest of the Apostles. 4. But Ioseph did this to shew his love to Benjamin, being his onely brother by the mothers side, as Elkanah gave unto Anna his best beloved wife, a more worthy portion, Iun. Mercer.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. God the disposer of mens hearts.

Vers. 14. GOd give you mercie in the sight of the man. Iacob acknowledgeth that God is the disposer of mens hearts and affections: as the Wise man saith, The Kings heart is in the hand of the Lord, he turneth it whithersoever it pleaseth him, Prov. 21. 1.

2. Doct. We must rest in Gods providence, and carefully use the meanes.

Vers. 11. TAke of the best fruits, &c. Iacob, though his trust were in God, that he would incline the rulers heart toward his sonnes: yet he refuseth not to use all meanes whereby they might ease themselves: as he adviseth them to take double money with them, and to carry a present. Wee therefore so to depend upon Gods providence, as that we use all meanes which God hath appointed, as. Like as though the Lord gave to Paul all the soules in the ship, yet by swimming and using the help and broken peeces of the ship they came to land, Act. 27. 24. 44.

3. Doct. Restitution is to be made where any error or oversight is committed.

LEst it were some oversight. Iacob would have the money restored which they found in their sacks mouthes, thinking that the seller might forget himselfe: Iacobs justice herein shewed in buying and selling where any oversight is committed, restitution and satisfaction should be made, not like as now a dayes, the buyer and seller thinke it well gained when they can one deceive the other: which abuse the Wise man reproveth, It is naught, it is naught (saith the buyer, but when he is gone his way) he boasteth, Prov. 20. 14.

4. Doct.

4. Doct. The creatures of God may be used not onely for necessity but delight.

Vers. 34. They were made merry, or drunke their fill with him. That is, they did eat and drinke liberally and plentifully: so that it is not onely lawfull to use the creatures of God for necessitie onely, but we may goe further, to receive them with delight and chearefullnesse, so that we take heed of surfetting and drunkennesse. As we reade of Abraham, that made a great feast when Isaack was weaned, Gen. 21.8. that is, a plentifull and liberall banket. As God hath made bread to strengthen man, so he hath given wine to cheare his heart, Psal. 104.15. But men must take heed lest in exceeding they fall to riot, and distemper themselves with superfluous abundance. Philo well observeth, that of ancient time they used after their sacrifices to make their feasts, and in the Temples, that the place and action might put them in minde of sobriety: whereupon some derive the word שכר, to bee drunke, of שר זבח, sacrificing. So wee reade that the Elders of Israel did eat bread with Moses father in law before God, Exod. 18.12. in that place where they had sacrificed. Wee should therefore thinke of God in the middest of our feasts, and not be like to those of whom Saint Iude speaketh of, Without all feare feeding themselves, Iud. 12.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. Monkes despised of the Iewes.

Vers. 30. His afflictions were inflamed. The word is camar, whereof the Idoll Priests were called כמרים marim, of their blacke garments, as of a burnt colour. The Iewes give that name unto blacke Monkes, Mercer. who by their superstitious apparell make themselves ridiculous to the blind Iewes, and by such fooliſh toyes hinder their conversion to the faith.

2. Confut. Against the pride of superstitious Papists.

Vers. 32. That was an abomination to the Egyptians. The Egyptians being a superstitious people despised the true Church of God, and counted them prophane in respect of themselves: which the Prophet noteth to be the guise of hypocrites, Stand apart, come not neare me, I am holier than thou, Isay 65.5. Even so the Pseudocatholike Papists despise the professors of the Gospell of Christ, counting them heretikes, refusing to come into their holy assemblies, Calvin.

6. Places of morall use.

1. Morall. To commit our counsell to God.

Vers. 7. Could we know certainly that he would say so? Iacobs sons in making mention of their lake of youngest brother, thought to have excused themselves, but thereby they came into greater danger: whereby we see that God doth many times frustrate our counsels, and maketh them to fall out otherwise than we imagined, Mercer. as Peter also intrapped Ananias by the words of his own mouth, Act. 5. therefore we must commit our counsels to God, that he would both direct the thoughts of our heart, and words of our mouth.

2. Morall. A bad conscience full of suspition.

Vers. 18. Because of the money in our sacks mouth are we brought. Thus a guilty conscience is alwayes suspitious, and disquieted upon every occasion, as appeareth in these men, that are fearfull without cause, and interpret every thing against themselves. Thus Moses describeth the fearefulnesse of men that are punished for their sinnes, The sound of a leafe shaken shall chase them, Levit. 27.36.

3. Morall. We must be carefull to instruct our families.

Vers. 23. Your God, and the God of your fathers. This steward of Iosephs house would never have spoken so reverently of the God of the Hebrewes, but that he was so taught of Ioseph, who had a great care to instruct his family in the right faith, in the middest of that idolatrous nation: this was Abrahams commendation, Gen. 18.18. and Iacobs practice, Gen. 35.4.

4. Morall. Iustice to be tempered with mercy.

Vers. 29. God be mercifull to thee my sonne. Ioseph which hitherto had shewed himselfe severe and rigorous towards his brethren, beginneth now to use them kindly: whose example teacheth that prudent governours should qualifie and temper justice with mercy, and severity with clemency, Mercer. as Saint Paul did towards the incestuous young man, 2 Corinth. 2.

CHAP. XLIV.

1. The Method or Argument.

First in this chapter is declared the practice of Ioseph in laying theft to Benjamins charge. 1. The device by Ioseph vers. 1, 2. 2. The execution by his servant in accusing them, vers. 4 to 6. 3. Their defence and agreement for the punishment, vers 9, 10. 4. The apprehension of the pretended theft with Benjamin, vers. 11. to vers. 14.

Secondly, the conventing of them before Ioseph, with their submission, and Ioseph mitigation of the punishment, vers. 15. to vers. 18.

Thirdly, Iudah interposeth himselfe, and maketh intercession for Benjamin, where is set down, 1.

narration both of their first speech had with Ioseph, vers. 18. to 24. then of their conference with their father, vers. 24. to 30. 2. Iudahs perswasion, 1. from the griefe that his father should be brought unto if Benjamin returned not, vers. 30, 31. 3. From his owne perswasion, who became surety for him. 4. By the oblation and tender of himselfe to remaine a servant in Benjamins place, vers. 33, 34.

2. The divers readings.

v. 5. hath which he useth to divine. H.S.G. the which he useth to consult with the Propheciers. B. which he carefully sought for. C. by the which he trieth. P. or by experience certainly learneth what manner of men ye are. T. heb. nachash, signifieth to divine, or play the Augre, and to trie by experience. H.G.r.

v. 15. know ye not that there is not a man like unto me in the skill of divining? H. doe yee not know that a man, such as I am, will divine? S. that such a man as I doe consult with Propheciers? B. that such a man as I can divine? G. that such a man as I will search it out? Carrie it out? P. or learne it out by experience: sit & heb. nachesh, the same word that was used before. H.G.r.

v. 18. Thou art my Lord next after Pharaoh. H.S. you are as Pharaoh. cat. H.S.c.

v. 21. And I will have eare on him. S. that I may set mine eyes upon him. cat.

v. 28. And you said, a beast hath devoured him. H.S. and I said, he is surely torne in peeces. cat. H.S.c.

v. 30. His soule is deare unto him, as his owne soule. C. his life hangeth upon his life. B.G.S.H. his soule is tied & bound to his soule. T. heb. T.r.

v. 31. Bring the old age of their father with sorrow to hell. S. his gray haires with sorrow to hell. C.H. his gray head with sorrow to the grave. B.G.T.P. heb. sheol, the grave. B.G.T.r.

3. The explanation of doubtfull questions.

Quest. 1. Of Iosephs divining in the cup, how it is to be taken.

Vers. 5. IN the which he doth divine and prophecie, vers. 15. Know you not that such a man as I am can divine and prophecie? First, some doe expound these words, as that Ioseph should be cleared from all blame. 1. Theodoret. qu. 104. in Genes. saith, that Ioseph doth not arrogate the skill of divining to himselfe, but saith, that such a man as he is could divine, as the Septuag. read: for it was no rare thing in Egypt for great men to use divination: but Iosephs steward, vers. 5. speaketh of his masters skill and use in divining. 2. Augustine excuseth this fact of Ioseph, Quia magnum aliquid isto ludo significatur, because there was some mystery in it, qu. 145. in Gen. but if this thing had beene evill in it selfe, a mysticall signification cannot make it good. 3. Others say, that the word divining is here taken generally for any kinde of prediction, and so Ioseph indeed had a gift of divining and knowing secrets, Thom. Aquin. Perer. But it is evident in the fifth verse, where Iosephs steward attributeth to his master the skill of divining in his cup, that he speaketh of such a kinde of divining as was used among the Egyptians: for it is like that the servant added not that of his owne, as Pererius thinketh, but that he spake as he was instructed. 4. Others answer, that Ioseph here affirmeth nothing of himselfe, but onely asketh a question by way of interrogation, Know ye not? But vers. 5. the steward doth directly so affirme of his master. 5. Some make this to be the meaning, that Ioseph by the losse of the cup wherein he did drinke, did conjecture that some evill was toward himselfe, ex Vatablo: but the contrary is evident by Iosephs speech, vers. 15. What act is this that yee have done? that he by divining found out their fault, and was not a Prophet against himselfe. 6. Some Hebrewes whom Iunius followeth, doe thus reade, by the which cup, hee now findeth by experience what manner of men ye are: and so the word nachash is taken for an experimentall knowledge, Gen. 30. 27. where Laban saith, I have perceived or found by experience, that God hath blessed me for thy sake. But this interpretation I cannot wholly approve for these reasons: 1. Because divers words must be supplied not in the text to make the sense perfect, as quales sitis, what manner of men yee are. 2. Because as yet having not found the cup, hee had no such experience of them. 3. The steward giveth two reasons whereby he doth aggravate their offence in taking away the cup, because his master did drinke in it, and did divine by it: and so the whole verse hangeth together, but in the other sense there is no coherence with the 4. Although this word be so taken some where else, it followeth not it should be so here.

Divers opinions of them which justifie this fact of Iosephs examined.

Secondly, as these former doe altogether discharge Ioseph, so some doe charge him too farre. 1. The Hebrewes thinke that Ioseph indeed by this cup did know every mans age and nativity: but it was farre unworthy Ioseph to pollute himselfe with those grosse superstitions of Egypt. 2. Some read thus, Know ye not that such an one as I am doe consult with Propheciers or Augers? Paul Burgens. But as it is a fault to use such divining, so is it also no lesse fault to consult with such. 3. Some think that Ioseph did in hac simulatione graviter peccare, grievously sinne in this dissimulation, and did impiously profane the gift of the Lord, in professing himselfe a Magitian in stead of Gods Prophet, Calvin. But in mine opinion this is too hard a censure: for whatsoever Ioseph here spake or professed, he did it not seriously, or as he would be taken or counted, but in respect of the vulgar opinion erroniously conceived of him.

Ioseph fault how it may bee extenuated though not justified.

Thirdly, therefore I thinke the meane way betweene both to be safest, that as I exempt Ioseph from grievous sinne, so I free him not from some infirmity and oversight in this action. 1. Yet with Testa- I thinke not, that Ioseph, voluit se vere augurem haberi à fratribus, would have his brethren indeed take him to be a diviner: for seeing he presently purposed to discover himselfe, hee would not his brethren should have such a prejudicate opinion of him. 2. Neither sufficeth it to say with Augustine, Quod non serio, sed joco dictum est; that this was alleaged in jest, not in earnest: for this is no excuse for him that doth evill, to say, Am I not in sport? Prov. 29.19. 3. Therefore this is the best excuse for Ioseph, that he did all this, not with a purpose to hurt his brethren, but onely to sift them, and know their affection toward Benjamin, and to take occasion to detaine him longer: as also he useth this allegation of his skill in divining neither as out of his owne judgement, who abhorred such vanities; neither because he would be so counted, but according to that opinion which the Egyptians had of him, who tooke him to be a Magician after the manner of Egypt, Mercer.

QUEST. II. Why the searcher taketh no exception to the money found in their sacks mouth, but onely to the cup.

Vers. 12. AND he searched, and the cup was found in Benjamins sacke, &c. 1. He cunningly searcheth all their sacks, though he knew well enough where to finde the cup, that it might bee done without suspition, Muscul. 2. Whereas the money was in every one of their sacks mouth, which hee that searched found no fault with, but onely for the cup, it was not for that (as Rambam thinketh) the money was put there with their privity, for the cup was conveyed into Benjamins sacke, together with the money. 3. But he passeth over the money with silence, because he had told them before, Genes. 43.23. that God gave them their treasure: and so he might say now againe, Muscul. and if he had taken exception to the money, they should all have beene stayed, whereas Iosephs purpose onely was to have Benjamin apprehended, for the triall of his brethrens affection toward him, Mercer.

QUEST. III. Why Iudah speaketh for the rest.

Vers. 16. THEN said Iudah, &c. the Lord hath found out the iniquity, &c. 1. Iudah speaketh first and for the rest, not because he had now the principality above his brethren, as Calvin, for that yet was not declared: but because he was surety to Iacob for Benjamins returne, and so this matter concerned him most, Mercer. 2. And this iniquity which God found out, is not to be referred with Vatablus to the present accusation of theft, whereof they were not guiltie, but to their former trespasse committed toward Ioseph, as they before confessed that trouble was befallen them for that cause, Genes. 42.21. Iniquitas, Mercer.

What iniquity they meane that God had found out.

QUEST. IV. Why Iudah saith to Ioseph, thou art as Pharaoh.

Vers. 18. THOU art even as Pharaoh. 1. Iudah maketh mention of his great authority, both to shew the reason of his former speech, Let not thy wrath be kindled against thy servant: he had reason to feare his displeasure being so great a person, Iunius: as also to shew that he was not ignorant of his greatnesse, and therefore pressed to speake unto him, not of any rude boldnesse, but of necessity, Calvin. Likewise he doth by this meanes insinuate himselfe: for great persons love to heare of their honour and authority, Mercer. 2. And now beginneth more lively to take effect that propheticall dreame of Ioseph, that his brethren should bow downe to him as their King: for so they objected to Ioseph, Shalt thou reigne, or be a King over us? Gen. 37.8. Muscul.

QUEST. V. How some things are omitted by Moses, afterward expressed.

Vers. 19. HAVE ye a father, or a brother? 1. This question asked by Ioseph, is not set downe by Moses before in the story, Gen. 42. in their first examination: yet there is no doubt but that Ioseph inquired of them, for Iudah would not tell an untruth in his presence, but Moses supplieth that here which was omitted before. 2. Benjamin is called a little lad or youth, jeled cathan, in respect of the rest: for otherwise he was now supposed to be thirtie yeares of age, having ten children which went down with him into Egypt, Gen. 47. some thinke he was but 24. or 25. yeares old: but that number of children will give him to be elder, Mercer.

Benjamin why called a little lad at thirty yeares.

QUEST. VI. Why Benjamin could not depart farre from his father.

Vers. 22. THE childe cannot depart from his father. 1. This is neither a doubtfull speech whether to be referred to Iacob or Benjamin, as Aben Ezra: as hee noteth that to bee of the same kinde Ruth 4.8. He drew off his shooe: whether it be understood of the buyer or seller. 2. Neither is it meant of Benjamin, that he could not depart from his father without danger to himselfe, as Rambam, 3. But it is spoken in respect of Iacob, whose love was such to Benjamin, that he could not endure that he should go from him: and therefore Iudah saith, that Iacobs life depended of his life, vers. 30.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. Nothing is hid from Gods sight.

Vers. 16. THE Lord hath found out our wickednesse, &c. God then seeth all things; he knoweth what is done in secret: neither the darknesse of the night, neither the secrecie of the place can hide from his sight and knowledge: so the Apostle saith, All things are naked and open in his eyes, with whom we have to doe, Heb. 4.13.

2. Doct. Servitude and want of liberty the punishment of theft.

Vers.16. BEhold we are servants to my Lord, both we, and he with whom the cup is found. They judge themselves worthy of servitude and bondage, because of this supposed theft of the cup: It is therefore a just punishment that they which doe steale away the goods of others, should lose the liberty and free use of their owne, Muscul. Answerable hereunto is that law which was afterward made by Moses; that if the theefe had not wherewithall to make restitution, hee should be sold for his theft, Exod.22.4.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. Against the vulgar Latine translation.

Vers.28. AND I said, of a surety he is torne in peeces. But the vulgar Latine translation readeth, and yee said: whereas the truth is, that Iosephs brethren did not so say to their father, but onely shewed him Iacobs coat embrued with bloud: but Iacob upon the sight thereof so gathered and said, Iosephs surely is torne in peeces, Gen.37.33.

2. Confut. Against Bellarmine that taketh faith for a vow.

Vers.32. THe Latine translation readeth, Ego hunc in fidem meam recepi, I gave my faith, or became surety for him: from this place Bellarmine would justifie his exposition of that place, 1 Tim. 5.12. Having damnation, because they have broken the first faith: which he would have understood of the vow of continencie: as in this place Iudah by his faith meaneth the solemne promise made to his father: But Bellarmine faileth in this collection, for in the originall there is no word that signifieth faith: the word here used is gnarabh, which is to be surety, or undertake for another. Bellar. lib.2. de Monach. cap.24.

6. Places of Morall use.

1. Morall. To use honour and wealth moderately,

Vers.2. PVt my silver cup, &c. Ioseph might have used cups of gold and precious stone if hee would; his honour, riches, and abundance was so great: but he contenteth himselfe to drinke in silver, and carrieth himselfe moderately in his great honour, Calvin. whereby men are taught in the middest of their prosperity to be humble, and not to be proud of their riches: as it is in the Psalme, If riches increase, set not your heart upon them, Psal.62.10.

2. Morall. That we should looke unto God in all our affliction.

Vers.16. GOd hath found out the wickednesse, &c. These men doe wisely acknowledge God to be the author of their trouble and affliction, and their sinne to have justly procured it, Vatablus. So should we in all our tribulation looke unto God, and turne to him that smiteth us, as David said concerning Shemei that railed upon him, The Lord hath bidden him to doe it, 2 Sam.16.11.

3. Morall. Of the childrens duty and reverent regard of their parents.

Vers.33. LEt me thy servant bide for the childe. Iudah chuseth rather to become a bond-servant in Benjamins place, than to returne home to see his fathers griefe and miserie; wherein appeareth his dutifull love toward his father, who preferreth his safety before his owne liberty, Mercer. wherein he did indeed honour his father according to Gods commandement.

CHAP. XLV.

1. The Method and parts of the Chapter.

FIrst Ioseph discovereth himselfe to his brethren, wherein appeareth, 1. His wisdome, in causing all to depart beside his brethren, *vers.*1. 2. His love and affection in weeping over his brethren, and remitting their trespasse toward him, *vers.*2. to *vers.*6. 3. His pietie in ascribing all to Gods providence, *vers.*6. to *vers.*9.

Secondly, Ioseph sendeth for Iacob his father. 1. Ioseph maketh the first motion to his brethren to bring their father downe with them, and beside giveth them instructions what further to say unto him, *vers.*9. to 14. 2. Pharaoh ratifieth and confirmeth Iosephs motion, and giveth him authority to send for his father, *ver.*16. to *v.*20. 3. Then the manner is set downe how Ioseph did furnish them for their journey, with chariots, raiment, victuall, *vers.*21. to *vers.*24. and adviseth them not to fall out by the way, *vers.*24.

Thirdly, they deliver the message to their father, who at the first is somewhat doubtfull, *vers.*26. but when he saw the chariots he resolved to goe with them and see Ioseph, *vers.*27, 28.

3. The Theologicall explication.

QUEST. I. Why Ioseph biddeth all the company to goe forth.

Vers. 1. Have forth every man from me, &c. Ioseph biddeth them to goe forth, that is, all which were present beside his brethren: not because he was ashamed of his brethren, and of his poore kindred, for he did afterward acknowledge them: neither as being wearied with the sutes of the rest of the company for his brethren, whom he bid goe forth, as the Hebrewes thinke: but he did it partly because he thought it not seemely for a man of his place to weepe before them, partly in respect of his brethren, whose unkinde and cruell affection toward himselfe, hee would not bewray in the hearing of others, Iun. 2. And it is probable that Ioseph declared not his brethrens offence to any, no not to Iacob: for that message which they sent to Ioseph in Iacobs name, Gen. 50.17. Ramban well noteth, is not expressed in the Scripture: and it is like that Iacob, if he had knowne it, would have set some note upon his sons for their cruelty against Ioseph, as he did upon Simeon and Levi for the murther of the Sichemites, Mercer.

Whether Ioseph ever revealed to Iacob the practice of his brethren against him.

QUEST. II. Why Iosephs brethren could not answer.

Vers. 3. His brethren could not answer him, &c. 1. This silence of Iosephs brethren proceeded not from any joy, as Luther: but from their feare, as the words following doe shew: for they were astonished at his presence. 2. This their feare did arise partly from their conscience of sinne, partly from the opinion of Iosephs great authority, who was able now to revenge his former wrong. 3. This then is the difference betweene feare and griefe: they which are in griefe doe crie out, because the spirits ascend upward and breake forth, and so the voice goeth out withall; but when feare invadeth men, the spirits are gathered inward, and so the voice is restrained: like as when a City is besieged, and in danger of the enemie, the Citizens withdraw themselves to the more inward parts, Perer.

QUEST. III. Why Ioseph bid his brethren come neare.

Vers. 4. Ioseph said, come neare. 1. Not to shew them his circumcision, as the Hebrewes imagine, that they might see he was Ioseph: for the mentioning of his selling into Egypt, which no man knew but themselves, was a more evident argument. 2. But Ioseph did call them nearer, (sitting in his chiefe estate) to speake comfortably unto them, that they should not be oppressed of griefe, and that he might speake unto them in secret, that his voice be not heard abroad. 3. The Egyptians heard his weeping and crying, being not farre off: and Pharaohs house heard the same by report onely, vers. 16. but it was not fit that any should heare what Ioseph said to his brethren in secret, Mercer.

QUEST. IV. How Ioseph is said to be a father to Pharaoh.

Vers. 8. Who hath made me a father with Pharaoh. 1. Not that Pharaoh is to be supposed to have been a young man, and Ioseph in respect of his years as a father to him, as some thinke: for Ioseph was but 30. yeares old when he stood before Pharaoh: and it appeareth by Pharaohs proceeding against his chiefe Butler and chiefe Baker before that, and by his prudent behaviour in seeking the interpretation of his dreame, and approving of Iosephs counsell, that he was a sage Prince, and of good years. 2. Neither doth Ioseph meane that he was a father in respect of Pharaoh himselfe, for that had been to challenge as it were superiority over him: whereas Iudah before thought it the greatest honour to say to Ioseph, that he was even as Pharaoh, Gen. 44.18. 3. But I rather approve Iunius reading, that he was a father, apud Pharaonem, with Pharaoh; as a grave and prudent Counsellor of state.

QUEST. V. In what part of Egypt the land of Goshen was situate.

Vers. 10. Thou shalt dwell in the land of Goshen. 1. Which was not in Arabia, as the Septuagint in some copies reade, Goshen in Arabia: for then Iacob should have beene further off than in Canaan. 2. Neither was this the Countrey called Thebais, bordering upon Ethiopia, as Hierom thinketh: for that had beene too long a journey for Iacob. 3. But this Goshen was situate betweene Nilus and the red sea, bordering upon Canaan, not far from On, where Iosephs chiefe habitation was or this country was both fruitfull, and therefore fit for cattell; it was confined upon Canaan, and lay best for Iacobs journey: it was not far from Ioseph, so that he might see to his fathers wants: it was a country separate from the rest of Egypt, and fittest for Iacob, because the keepers of sheepe were an abomination to the Egyptians, Iun. Mercer.

QUEST. VI. In what sense Ioseph saith my mouth speaketh.

Vers. 12. Your eyes doe see, that my mouth speaketh, &c. 1. Not that he shewed them his circumcision, as Rasi. 2. Or because by his mouth, that is, his word and authority, all things were done, as R. Levi, for these had beene no certaine demonstrations that he was Ioseph. 3. But either because he spake unto them in the Hebrew tongue, without an interpreter, and after their owne pronuntiation: as Ramban, Vatablus, Iunius: as also for that he with his owne mouth had declared such things unto them, as were not knowne to any other beside themselves, Mercer.

QUEST. VII. When Pharaoh promised the best of the land, why, and in what sense.

Vers. 18. I will give thee the best of the land of Egypt. 1. Pharaoh was glad, when he heard of Iosephs brethren, and his servants, and maketh this liberall offer, not so much because, as the Hebrewes imagine, whereas Ioseph was thought to be a man of a base and servile birth, he is now knowne to come of a good stock and parentage: but Pharaoh sheweth hereby his great love to Ioseph, in this rewarding his kindred. 2. Neither need we to say with Calvin, that this offer was made by Pharaoh, before Ioseph promised the land of Goshen to his brethren, though it be set downe after: for Ioseph doubted not, but that Pharaoh of his princely love and liberality would confirme his grant. 3. Lyranus noteth this speech of Pharaoh to be prophetical, because afterwards it came so to passe, that the Israelites had the best things of Egypt, when they departed thence: but Tostatus misliketh that collection, because the Israelites had not the best things of all the land of Egypt, but only of those Egyptians that dwelt among them: and beside, the vulgar Latine thus reading, I will give thee all the goods of the land of Egypt, doth depart from the Hebrew text, where no mention is made of [all] but only, I will give thee the best of the land of Egypt, &c.

QUEST. VIII. The meaning of these words: let not your eie spare your stuffe.

Vers. 20. Let not your eye spare your stuffe. 1. The meaning of which words is not, either as the Latine vulgar text hath, leave nothing of your stuffe. 2. or as some Hebrewes, let not your eye have pittie of your stuffe, because you should leave it behinde: but bring all with you, and load your carts with it: for this sense agreeth not with the reason which is added; For the best of all the land of Egypt is yours. 3. Neither is the meaning, as Mercerus giveth the sense, carry what you will carry, and leave the rest: for thus a contrary sense should be gathered of the same words. 4. But he saith thus much in effect: let it not grieve you because of your stuffe, that you shall leave behinde, for you shall finde enough in Egypt, Iun. and therefore our English Bibles reade well in this place; regard not your stuffe.

QUEST. IX. Of the change of rayment and silver, which Ioseph gave to his brethren.

Vers. 22. He gave to them all change of raiment. 1. Not double garments, as Hierome and the Septuagint reade: for then Benjamin should have had not five, but ten suits of raiment, that had five times so much as the rest: but they had better garments given them, to change their old apparell with, which before they had rent for griefe, Gen. 44. and so change of garments is taken for single vestures, Iud. 14. 19. where Sampson slew thirty Philistims, and gave so many change of raiment to his thirty companions, Vatabl. 2. Whereas Ioseph giveth to Benjamin 300. sicles of silver, the Hebrewes note, that whereas Ioseph was sold for thirty sicles, he therefore giveth to Benjamin as much as all the other ten had for their shares, when Ioseph was sold, ex Mercer. But neither was Ioseph sold for thirty, but twenty sicles: neither yet had every one for his share twenty sicles, much lesse thirty, but the sum of twenty sicles, the price which was set upon Ioseph, was divided among them all: they therefore in this curious collection, are much deceived. 3. Ioseph gave these great gifts to his brethren, but especially to Benjamin; not so much to testifie his love unto them, as that hereby, they might perswade their wives and others, of the truth of their message, to make them more willing to leave Canaan, and goe downe to Egypt, Calvin.

Hebrewes curious collections.

QUEST. X. How Ioseph is said likewise to send to Iacob.

Vers. 23. Vnto his father likewise he sent, &c. 1. This is neither to be referred simply to that which followeth, that Ioseph sent after the same manner to Iacob, that is, ten hee asses, &c. as Rasi, Onkelos: for that was not after the same manner. 2. Neither (as Ramban) hath it relation to the victuall which Ioseph gave his brethren for their money, vers. 21. that so he sent to Iacob also the like victuall for his money. 3. But it hath reference to that which immediatly went before, that as he gave money and raiment to Benjamin, so he sent in the same proportion to Iacob, and moreover he sent ten hee asses, &c. Vatabl. Iunius, and so the Latine translator well expoundeth, addens ei, &c. he added moreover ten asses, &c.

QUEST. XI. Why Ioseph chargeth his brethren not to fall out by the way.

Vers. 24. Fall not out by the way. The word is ragaz, which signifieth to be afraid, to be moved, or troubled: 1. Ramban expoundeth it, that they should not beare any trouble by the way; because they were laden with so much riches, for Iosephs name and authority should be their protection. Some thinke that Ioseph biddeth them agree, because brethren are apt to fall out. 3. Some because travell, by reason that their bodies were distempered with their journey, and are often provoked by their evill talke, and communication, doe many times fall out, Thom. Anglic. 4. But Ioseph knew how they would wrangle in the way about himselfe, and his selling into Egypt, one laying the fault upon another (for Ruben consented not at all, Iudah gave counsell to sell him, being unwilling he should perish, the rest conspired his death) therefore he giveth them this charge, Chrysost. Mercer. Vatab. Iun.

QUEST. XII. How Iacobs heart is said to faile or faint, and for what cause.

Vers. 29. Iacobs heart failed, &c. 1. Iacob was astonished at the report of his sonnes, that Ioseph yet lived: hee had not heard it then before, as the Hebrewes fable, how Serah Asers daughter had told Iacob that Ioseph was alive, and therefore she was translated alive into Paradise, ex Munster. 2. The meaning is not, that Iacob withdrew his heart and attention from them, and greatly regarded them not, as R. Sel. or as the Latine translator, he was as raised out of an heavy sleepe, that is, Attonitus & stupidus ad intelligendum; heavie and hard to understand, as a man newly awaked, as Rupertus expoundeth. 3. Nor yet as Rambam and R. Abraham, whom Oleaster followeth, is the meaning, that his heart left beating and panting, and so they would have the word phag, to signifie to cease. 4. But Iacob for the time did faint and swound, not for any sudden joy conceived, as Peter. for as yet he beleeved them not: nor of an affection mixt together of joy and feare, as Calvin. Mercer. for then the one would have qualified the other, that Iacob should not have fainted: but the very naming of Ioseph did renue and revive his former griefe, and so perplexed him, Iun.

Hebrewes fables.

QUEST. XIII. How Iacobs spirit is said to revive.

Vers. 27. The spirit of Iacob revived, and he said, it is enough, &c. 1. The Chalde paraphrast readeth, The holy spirit rested upon Iacob: as though the spirit of prophecie had departed from Iacob all the time of his griefe and heavinesse: whereupon the Hebrewes further note, that the spirit of God commeth upon those that are chearfull: for which cause they say most of the Prophets were young men, who are more given to chearfulnesse than they which are old: but this is spoken of Iacobs spirit, not of the spirit of God, who now came to himselfe againe, more 'giving credit to the sight of his eyes when they shewed him the charriots, than to their words, Muscul. Mercer. 2. He saith it is enough, not either in respect of Iosephs great honour, or the rich gifts which were sent, but because he heard he was alive: Iosephs life was more worth unto him than all the rest, Iun.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. The righteous are not void of affections.

Vers. 2. He wept and cryed. In that Ioseph sheweth himselfe to be a man of affection, which draweth from him plenty of teares: we doe learne, that the righteous are not as stones and blocks that cannot be moved, as the Stoicks defined their wise men; but they also are subject to the affections of love, joy, sorrow, compassion, Calvin. Our Saviour in the day of his flesh did weepe, loved Iohn more than the rest, sometime he was angry: but in all these he sinned not, as it is hard for us to keepe a measure.

2. Doct. God turneth evill to good.

Vers. 8. You sent me not hither, but God, &c. who hath made me a father, &c. As God turned the malice of Iosephs brethren to the great good of his Church, the advancement of Ioseph, preservation of the whole land of Egypt: so is the Lord able still out of evill to draw goodnesse, as he commanded light to shine out of darknesse, 2 Cor. 4. 6. Luther. as Sampson found honey in the mouth of the dead and stinking Lion; as the Apostle saith, All things shall worke together for the best, to those that love God, Rom. 8. 28.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. The selling of Ioseph into Egypt not done onely by Gods provision.

Vers. 8. You sent me not hither, but God. Not that God was the author of that wicked conspiracy against Ioseph, which was inspired by the suggestion of Satan, nor by the instinct of Gods spirit: neither did God onely permit or suffer the same to be done, as Bellarmine would have it, lib. 2. de amiss. grat. cap. 11. For if God withdraw his power nothing can be done in the world: and therefore the Psalmist saith, Whatsoever pleased the Lord, did he in heaven and in earth, Psal. 135. 6. Wherefore the Lord as he did foresee what Iosephs brethren should doe in this action, and disposed and directed the same after it was done, to an happy end: so also he decreed that this thing should be done by no other meanes: and although in the particular the evilnesse of the action proceeded not from the malicious minde stirred by Satan; yet the generall overruling power and disposing providence of God so concurred, as that Ioseph should by this meanes and no other be sold into Egypt. So that Iosephs brethren were instruments herein of Gods decree and purpose: yet not thereby are they excusable, because they did that of a wicked minde, which God in his wise providence converted to good: as Iudas sinne was no whit the lesse in betraying Christ, though as Peter saith he were delivered up by the determinate counsell of God, Act. 2. Calvin. Muscul.

2. Confut. Against the vulgar Latine translation.

Vers. 20. Regard not your stuffe. The Latine translator maketh a contrary sense, Leave nothing of your stuffe: see before qu. 8. whereas the meaning is, that they should not care to leave their stuffe behinde them: thus that translation which the Romanists so much extoll and magnifie, is found to be faulty and erronious in many places.

6. Places of Morall vse.

1. Mor. Not to suffer men to be swallowed up of griefe.

Vers. 3. THen Ioseph said, I am Ioseph. He seeing his brethren almost oppressed with griefe, doth speake comfortably unto them, lest they might have beene overcome with too much heavinesse: which teacheth governours not to cast downe altogether with griefe, those which are sufficiently humbled, Calvin, as S. Paul shewed himselfe toward the incestuous party, lest he be swallowed up of overmuch heavinesse, 2 Cor. 2. 7.

2. Mor. To preserve from spirituall famine the greatest deliverance.

Vers. 7. TO save you alive by a great deliverance. If it bee a great deliverance to preserve men from the famine of corporall food, as Ioseph did, much more ought wee to be thankfull to God for such governours, as provide food for the soules of their people, and deliver them from spirituall famine, Muscul. for much more grievous is the famine of hearing the word, than of bread, or water, Amos 8. 11.

3. Mor. Gods providence in turning all things to the best, should move us to forgive.

Vers. 8. YOu sent me not hither, but God. Ioseph looking into Gods providence, who turned his brethrens evill meaning toward him to good, in that consideration, is more easily brought to forgive them: for when we see how God disposeth to our good of those wrongs that are done to us in the world, wee should in that respect be more ready to forget them. Thus S. Peter speaketh comfortably to the people, that gave consent to the killing of Christ: ye have killed the Lord of life, &c. but those things that God had shewed before, by the mouth of the Prophets, that Christ should suffer, he hath thus fulfilled, Act. 3. 15, 18.

4. Mor. To seeke to maintaine peace.

Vers. 24. FAll not out by the way. Ioseph as he was ready to make peace with his brethren, and to be at one with them, so he laboureth to maintaine peace among themselves: thus teaching us by his example, not only to be lovers of peace our selves, but to procure it in others: according to the doctrine of Christ: Blessed are the peace-makers, for they shall be called the children of God, Matth. 5. 9.

5. Mor. Lyers shall not be beleeved, when they speake the truth.

Vers. 26. FOr he beleeved them not. This is a just reward of lyers, that when they speake the truth, they shall not be beleeved: Iacobs sonnes had told him a tale before, when they shewed him *Ioseph*s coat, as though some wilde beast had devoured him, Genes. 37. and now when they tell the truth, that Ioseph was alive, no credit is given unto them, Muscul. Thus S. Paul would not endure, that the maid which had the spirit of divination, and deceived the people with lies, should testifie the truth of the Apostles, that they were the servants of God and taught the way to salvation, Act. 16. 18.

CHAP. XLVI.

1. The Method and Argument of the Chapter.

FIrst, we have here set downe Iacobs preparation to his journey. 1. He offereth sacrifice to God. 2. The Lord answereth him by vision, appearing unto him, and encouraging him to goe downe into Egypt, promising him both a prosperous journey, a peaceable end, and the returne of his posterity, vers. 2. to 5.

Secondly, the journey it selfe is described, vers. 5. to vers. 8. with an enumeration of the persons that went downe with Iacob. 1. In particular, the of-spring of Leah and her maid Zilpah, the of-spring likewise of Rachel and her maide Bilhah; of every one by themselves, from v. 8. to 26. they are all summed in grosse: v. 26. 27.

Thirdly, Iacobs arrivall in Egypt is declared. 1. How he sent for Ioseph, and of their meeting, greeting and salutation in Goshen, vers. 27. to 31. 2. The counsell and advice given by Ioseph to his brethren, how they should answer Pharaoh, that they might obtaine the land of Goshen, vers. 31. to the end.

3. The theologicall explication.

QUEST. I. Why Iacob offered ſacrifice in Berſheba.

Verſ. 1. ISrael came to Berſheba, &c. 1. This place is interpreted the well of the oath, or of ſeven: for ſhabang ſignifieth both: ſo called firſt by Abraham, where he made a covenant with Abimelech, and gave him ſeven lambs, Gen. 21. and afterward the name was revived by Iſaack, Gen. 26. 2. To this place came Iacob, being both in his way as he went to Egypt, for it is in the utmoſt bounds of Canaan, toward the South: as alſo becauſe there Abraham and Iſaack had long dwelled, built altars there, and conſecrated it as a peculiar place for Gods worſhip. 3. He offereth ſacrifice, both to give thanks to God, for the life of Ioſeph, and to deſire the Lord to make his journey proſperous, Iun.

QUEST. II. Of the Lords calling of Iacob.

Verſ. 2. IAcob, Iacob, who anſwered, I am here, &c. 1. He is called Iacob, not Iſrael, not becauſe, as the Hebrewes imagine, he ſhould not prevaile againſt men in Egypt, for he is alſo called Iſrael in Egypt, Gen. 48. 29. but when as the Lord vouchſafeth to ſpeake familiarly unto him, he calleth him by his name Iacob, Mercer. 2. The name is doubled, to ſtirre him up to greater attention, Calvin; and to ſhew the certainty of that which God ſpake, Perer. 3. Iacob anſwereth readily, here am I, and therefore Ioſephus miſreporteth this ſtory, that Iacob ſhould ſay quiſnam eſſet, who it was that ſpake unto him, as though he had not beene acquainted with Gods voice, lib. 1. antiquit.

QUEST. III. Who it was that ſpake to Iacob.

Verſ. 3. I Am God, the God of thy father. 1. This then was not an Angel, that ſpake in the perſon of God, but it was the Lord himſelfe, to whom Iacob offered ſacrifice, verſ. 1. 2. who is called the God of his father, rather than of Abraham, becauſe Iacob ſo uſed to call the Lord, the feare of his father Iſaack, Geneſ. 31. 53. and for that he had better experience of the mercies ſhewed to his father Iſaack, who alſo was not many yeares before departed, about the 30 yeare of Iſephs age, when Iacob was 130. Mercer. 3. Where God is ſaid to goe downe with Iacob into Egypt, it is to be underſtood by the effect, becauſe God was preſent with him, in protecting and defending him: for otherwiſe the God-head neither aſcendeth nor deſcendeth, filling heaven and earth, Mercer.

How the Lord is ſaid to goe downe.

QUEST. IV. The divers cauſes why Iacob feared to goe downe into Egypt removed.

Verſ. 3. FEare not to goe downe into Egypt, &c. There were divers cauſes why Iacob feared to goe downe to Egypt: which cauſes of his feare are here removed by the Lord. 1. He might ſomewhat doubtfull, becauſe ſometime in the like neceſſity of famine Iſaack was forbidden to goe downe to Egypt, Geneſ. 26. 2. Mercer. therefore to helpe this, the ſame God that charged his father not to goe downe, biddeth Iacob not to feare to goe downe. 2. He might feare leſt his children might be corrupted by the ſuperſtition of the idolaters: and about this time, as Auguſtine thinketh, began that groſſe idolatry of the Ægyptians in worſhiping Apis, a king of the Argives, that died in Egypt, calling him by the name of Serapis, which is compounded of the name Apis and Suros, the coffin wherein Apis was entombed: in memoriall of this Apis, they worſhipped a pide Bull, which they named Apis: by which occaſion the Iſraelites learned to worſhip a calfe, Auguſt. lib. 18. de civit. Dei c. 4. This feare Iacob is diſcharged of when the Lord ſaith, I will goe downe with thee, &c. the Lord promiſeth to be a guide to him and his, to keepe them in his feare. 3. Iacob was not ignorant of the prophecie given to Abraham, that his ſeed ſhould be afflicted and kept under in a ſtrange land; therefore the Lord to take away that ſcruple, telleth him, that his poſterity ſhall increaſe there, and he will make him a great nation. 4. He might thinke, that his poſterity being overtaken with the pleaſures of Egypt, would hardly returne from thence, and ſo ſhould loſe the hope of the inheritance of Canaan: to meet with this doubt, the Lord ſaith, verſ. 4. I will alſo bring thee up againe. 5. He alſo might feare, leſt being a weake old man he ſhould die by the way before he came to Ioſeph: therefore the Lord to make him ſecure in this, telleth him, that Ioſeph ſhall cloſe his eyes when he dyed, verſ. 4.

QUEST. V. Of the ancient uſe of cloſing the eies of the dead.

Verſ. 4. I will bring thee up againe, and Ioſeph, &c. 1. The Lord brought Iacob up out of Egypt, when his body was carried to be buried in Canaan: but moſt of all was it performed in his ſeed, whom the Lord brought out of Egypt, under the hand of Moſes & Aaron. 2. It was the uſe to cloſe the eyes of the dead, which commonly are opened, when men dying doe lift up their eyes to heaven, Muſcul. and therefore they that ſtand by doe ſhut them before the body is ſtiffe. Plinie maketh mention of this ſolemne uſe among the Romans, who uſed to ſhut the eies of the dead at the time of their death, and to open them againe, when they brought them to the fire, vt neque ab homine ſupremum eos ſpectari fas ſit, & cœlo non oſtendi, nefas: that neither ( ſaith he ) is it lawfull for men to ſee them laſt of all, and it were impious not to ſhew upon them toward heaven. And this duty of cloſing the eyes was performed by thoſe which were deareſt, and beſt beloved of the dead: as Ioſeph was to Iacob: whoſe eyes Ioſeph did ſhut up, when he had given up the ghoſt, although no ſpeciall mention be made of it afterward, Perer.

QUEST. VI. What goods and ſubſtance Iacob and his ſonnes carryed into Egypt.

Verſ. 6. They tooke their cattell, and their goods, which they had gotten in Canaan, &c. 1. Though no mention be here made of their ſervants, yet it is like that Iacob carried them alſo with him, and would not leave them behinde in that hard time of famine, Calvin. 2. Though Pharaoh ſent them word, that they ſhould not regard their ſtuffe, yet they tooke their ſubſtance with them, that they might be as little chargeable as they could unto others: as Abraham comming forth out of his country at the Lords commandement into Canaan, brought his ſubſtance with him, Gen. 12. 5. Luther. Mulcul. 2. Mention is not made of Iacobs goods gotten in Meſopotamia, but onely in Canaan, not becauſe Iacob had given thoſe goods to Eſau, which is not like; but becauſe they were not to be compared to his ſubſtance, which he got in Canaan, and Moſes ſpeaketh alſo of the goods and ſubſtance of his ſonnes, that got all they had in Canaan, being not of yeares in Meſopotamia, to provide for themſelves, Mercer.

QUEST. VII. Of Iacobs daughters and the order obſerved by Moſes in ſetting downe their names.

Verſ. 8. His daughters, and his ſonnes daughters, &c. 1. Iacob had but one daughter here named, Dinah of Leah, and but one daughter of his ſonnes, Serah of Aſher, verſ. 17. yet they are put in the plurall number, according to the phraſe of the Hebrew, as verſ. 23. it is ſaid, the ſonnes of Dan, Huſhai, he had but one, Muſcul. 2. The whole ſum of Iacobs poſterity borne at this time, is ſeventy, verſ. 27. of which number Iacob himſelfe is one, as the head of the reſt, Mercer. 3. Moſes ſetteth not downe their names, according to the order of their birth, as in other places, c. 29. 30. 35. but firſt he reciteth ſuch as came of Leah and her maid, then thoſe that came of Rachel and her maid, Mercer.

QUEST. VIII. Of the divers names of the ſonnes of the twelue Patriarkes.

Verſ. 10. The ſons of Simeon, Iemuel. Many hard and difficult queſtions are moved out of this chapter, which ſhall briefly be diſcuſſed. Firſt, there is great difference in the names here rehearſed, and in other places of Scripture: the ſonnes of Simeon, Iemuel, and Iamin, are called Nemuel and Iamin, 1 Chron. 4. 24. Zohar is there named Zerah, verſ. 13. Iob the ſonne of Iſſachar, is called Iaſhub, Numb. 26. 24. verſ. 16. Ziphion, Ezbon Arodi, are called Zephon, Ozni, Arod, Numb. 26. 15. 16. 17. verſ. 11. the ſonnes of Benjamin, Aſhbel, Becher, Ehi, Roſh, Muppim, Chuppim, Ard: are otherwiſe named, Iediael, Acharah, Nochah, Rapha, Shephuam, Churam, Addai, 1 Chron. 8. 1, 2, 3. It is then no ſtrange thing in Scripture, for the ſame men to be called by divers names, ſometimes with the alteration of ſome letters, ſometimes with a change of the whole name.

QUEST. VIII. Of other differences in the genealogie compared with the 26. Numer. and 1 Chron. 7. 8. chap.

Verſ. 10. The ſonnes of Simeon, Iemuel, Iamin, Ohad. 1, It is to be conſidered, that divers of theſe here named, are elſe-where omitted: as Ohad, is not reckoned among the ſonnes of Simeon, Numb. 26. 12, 1 Chron. 4. 24. it ſhould ſeeme that he died without iſſue, Muſcul. ſo likewiſe three of Benjamins ſonnes, Echi, Gera, Roſh, are omitted by Moſes, Numb. 26. 40. of whom there came no families. Likewiſe that is there named Achiram and Acharah, 1 Chron. 8. 1. was not Echi, as Iunius thinketh upon the place, and Muſcul. in Gen. 46. verſ. 26. but Becher, who was one of the three chiefe fathers of Benjamin, 1 Chron. 7. 6. and therefore it is not like, that Moſes ſetting downe the chiefe families of Benjamin, would make no mention of him, Numb. 26. 3. whereas here are rehearſed ten ſons of Benjamin, which were not all properly his ſons, but two of them, Ard and Naaman were the ſons of Bela, and Benjamins nephewes, Numb. 26. 40. It was not then Gerah, as the Septuagint reade, but Bela that begat Ard. 4 Whereas Bela is made to have ſix ſonnes, 1 Chron. 8. 3, 4. and here he hath but two, the reaſon becauſe theſe two were only borne, when Iacob went downe to Egypt, the reſt were borne afterward. 5. And whereas 1 Chron. 7. 7. five ſonnes of Bela are named altogether, divers from thoſe ſix recited, 1 Chron. 8. 3. in the firſt place, not the immediate ſonnes of Bela are mentioned, but ſuch as were chiefe Princes of that family in the time of David, when Ioab numbred the people: in the other place, which were the next ſonnes of Bela are rehearſed. 6. Moſes in this place doth confuſedly ſet them together, not according to their order of birth, Bela, Becher, Aſhbel, &c. whereas Aſhbel was the ſecond, Gera or Aharah the third, Nocah or Echi the fourth, Rapha or Raſh the fift: as may appeare, Gen. 8, 1.

Reconciliation of ſome difference in the genealogie of the Belahites in the Chronicles.

QUEST. IX. How Pharez is ſaid to have two ſonnes at Iacobs comming into Egypt.

Verſ. 12. The ſonnes of Phares, Ezron and Hamul, &c. Whereas it may ſeeme ſtrange, that Pharez the ſon of Iudah by Thamar, ſhould have two children, that are ſaid to come downe with Iacob into Egypt. 1. The right ſolution is not to ſay with Auguſtine, that theſe two children are ſaid to come downe, becauſe they were in Pharez loynes; and not yet borne, in this ſenſe, all thoſe children which were were afterward borne in Egypt, might be ſaid to goe downe, and ſo we ſhould have not ſeventy, but 700. perſons. 2. Neither is Pererius anſwer ſufficient for the ſame reaſon, who underſtandeth by Iacobs comming into Egypt, the whole time of his and Ioſephs life: for ſo we might account 7000. ſoules to have deſcended with Iacob. 3. Therefore according to Moſes narration, we ſay, that theſe two ſonnes of Pharez were then borne, but very young: who himſelfe being begotten of Thamar at Iudahs 30. yeare, might take a wife at 14. or 15. yeares: for Pererius conjecture is untrue, that Pharez was borne but the yeare before Iacobs deſcending into Egypt. 4. The like may be ſaid of Bela Benjamins ſonne, that had two ſonnes, Ard and Naaman, borne at Iacobs going downe: Benjamin was now at 30. yeares a grandfather, and Bela his eldeſt ſonne at 15. a father, Mercer. there is no other way to give ſatisfaction to thoſe doubts. And it is moſt like that Iacobs ſonnes married very ſoone, and their ſonnes alſo: for how elſe could they in the ſpace of 215. yeares, which was the time of their aboad in Egypt, from 70. increaſe to 600. thouſand, when as in 215. yeares before, from the 75. yeare of Abraham, till Iacobs going downe, they increaſed but to 70. ſoules in all. 5. Whereas Selah and Zerah alſo had iſſue as well as Pharez, as appeareth, Numb. 26. 20. it is not as Pererius thinketh, for the prerogative of Pharez of whom the Meſſias ſhould come, that Pharez poſterity is remembred, the others omitted, but becauſe Pharez ſonnes were now borne, the others afterward in Egypt.

Benjamin a grandfather as Iacobs going downe to Egypt.

QUEST. X. Of Dinah Iacobs daughter, and whether Iacob had any more daughters.

Verſ. 15. These be the ſonnes of Leah, &c. which ſhe bare to Iacob in Padan Aram, with his daughter Dinah. 1. All theſe before named, were not borne in Meſopotamia, but only the ſix ſonnes of Leah, for ſhe onely bare them and Dinah: the reſt were borne in Canaan, Mercer. Iun. 2. This Dinah ſome Hebrewes ſay, was married to Iob, but that is uncertaine: ſome thinke that Simeon tooke her to wife, having pitty upon her, after Sichem the Canaanite had defloured her, and that therefore ſhe is called a Canaanite, the mother of Saul before named: but it is abſurd to thinke, that Simeon would marry his owne ſiſter, or that Iacob would have ſuffered it. 3. Likewiſe whereas Dinah of Leah, and Serah of Aſher are all the women here rehearſed, that came of Iacob, that appeareth to be but a fable of the Hebrewes that Iacob with every ſonne had a twin daughter borne, which were his ſonnes wives: for there is no queſtion but that Moſes would have made ſome mention of them, either in this place, or ſome other.

Hebrewes conceits.

QUEST. XI. How the number of 33. that came of Leah is to be counted.

Verſ. 15. All the ſoules of his ſonnes and daughters were thirty three. But the whole number, with Er and Onan, maketh thirty foure: to make this account to agree; 1. We neither think with Lyranus that Dinah, becauſe ſhe is a woman, ſhould be excluded, ſeeing afterward Serah the daughter of Aſher is numbred among the reſt, verſ. 17. 2. Nor yet is Saul to be excluded, verſ. 10. although he were not Simeons ſonne, but the ſonne of the Canaanitiſh woman, by a former husband, as ſome thinke: for then to what purpoſe would mention be made of him here, being none of Iacobs poſterity? 3. Neither with ſome Hebrewes doe we here underſtand Iochebed, Moſes mother, ſeeing ſhe is not expreſſed, and ſhe was borne in Egypt, Numb. 26. 59. &c. 4. Therefore this is the juſt account; Er and Onan, becauſe they were dead, are not to be reckoned: there remaine then thirty two, and Iacob being added to the number maketh thirtie three: and that Iacob is one of this account, it is evident out of the 8. verſ. and his ſonnes.

QUEST. XII. The erronious computation of the Septuagint neither agreeing with themſelves nor the Hebrew.

Verſ. 22. Fourteene ſoules in all: The Septuagint doth reade, eighteene, wherein a three-fold error may be obſerved. 1. They beſide Manaſſes and Ephraim doe reckon five more, Machir and Gilead his ſonne of Manaſſeh, Sutalam, and Tuhan, and Edem the ſonne of Sutalam of Ephraim: that could not be borne at Iacobs comming downe to Egypt: for Manaſſeh was not then above nine yeare old: for Ioſeph tooke a wife in the beginning of the ſeven plentifull yeares, which were expired, and two of the deare yeares: to ſay that theſe are rehearſed for Iacobs honour, though they were borne afterward in Ioſephs life time, doth not ſatisfie: for onely Moſes accounteth thoſe which were then borne at Iacobs comming downe, which in all make ſeventy. 2. The Septuagint doe manifeſtly corrupt the Hebrew text, reading here for fourteene, 18. and verſ. 27. for two, they reade nine. 3. They agree not with themſelves: for the five, which are by them added, put to 14. make 19. not 18. and Ioſeph with his two ſons, and the other five, make not nine, but onely eight. Auguſtine and Encherius thinke this knot to be inſoluble, and would picke a myſtery out of it, Auguſt. quæſt. 152. in Geneſ. But we need not much trouble our ſelves to free the Septuagint here from error, ſeeing they ſo manifeſtly decline from the Hebrew verity.

QUEST. XIII. The two numbers of 66. and 70. agree together.

Verſ. 26. Threeſcore and ſix. In this number Iacob is not comprehended, for only they are ſummed that came out of Iacobs loines, though Iacob be one of the firſt number of 33. let all theſe numbers be joyned togethet, 33. of Leah, 16. of Zilpah, 22. of Rachel, Ioſeph and his two ſonnes being deducted, 7. of Bilha, and the ſum will be 66. Iacob beeing taken out: unto which number of 66. Iacob together with Ioſeph, and his two ſonnes being added, wee ſhall have in all 70. ſoules: and here in this laſt number Moſes ſaith not, as before, verſ. 26. all the ſoules which came out of Iacobs loines, but all the ſoules of the houſe of Iacob are 70. ſo that in this ſpeech Iacob himſelfe may bee very well included.

QUEST. XIV. The number of seventy in Moses, and of seventy five in the Acts, reconciled.

Verse 27. BUt whereas Moses nameth only seventy, and yet Stephen according to the Septuagint, saith, that they were seventy five, Act. 7. 14. the question is, how these may be reconciled.

The Septuagint, whether here in an error.

1. We neither answer with Augustine (to whom Pererius subscribeth) that the Septuagint are here in no error, nor yet Stephen following them: for they reckon five more, by way of anticipation, which were borne afterward in Egypt, while Ioseph lived: who because he was the cause of Iacobs comming downe into Egypt, introitus ejus accipiendus est, quam diu vixit Ioseph; his entrance into Egypt is to be taken all the while Ioseph lived, quæst. ultim. in Genes. but by this account there should not only be 70. but 7000. and more. For all they should be numbred that were borne while Ioseph lived, which was seventy yeare and five: for comming into Egypt: for Ioseph was then 39. yeare old, and he lived 110. yeares: beside, it is not likely, that in the Hebrew, onely seventy soules are accounted, and Deut. 10. 22. the Septuagint reade just seventy, though in this place, and Exod. 1. they translate seventy five.

2. Neither is it like that the translation of the Septuagint was herein corrupted by the ignorance of the writers or pen-men, and so that place in the Acts accordingly depraved: as Eugubinus: for the Septuagint doe of purpose adde five more of Iosephs posterity, to make up the number of 75.

3. Neither yet doth Iunius exposition fully satisfie: who thinketh that Stephen meaneth the whole number that are named in this chapter, as Iacobs two wives, and his two concubines, and Iudahs two sonnes, Er and Onan, who beside Iacob make the number 75. for Moses himselfe excludeth Er and Onan: neither are Iacobs wives accounted in the particular sums: and seeing Iacob is included in the number of 70. why should he be excluded in this other number of 75. Further, Steven meaneth those of Iacobs kindred that Ioseph sent for, and caused to be brought into Egypt: but Iudahs sons were dead, and so it is thought were Iacobs wives also.

4. Neither can I thinke, that Saint Luke, either as ignorant of the Hebrew, as Hierome reporteth from the opinion of others: or yeelding unto those times, because the translation of the Septuagint was of great authority among the Gentiles, did herein follow them: especially it being but a matter of story: which Eugubinus, Mercerus: for it is like that Saint Stephen speaking to the Hebrewes, did follow the Hebrew Scriptures: and Saint Luke did not otherwise report or write, than Stephen spake: this onely doth withhold me from approving this answer and solution.

5. Wherefore in this so great difficulty, nothing remaineth to answer, but that Luke did write, and Stephen spake according to the originall story, that 70. soules came into Egypt. And afterward by some mistaking, pente, which signifieth five, might creepe into the text, for pantes, as Master Beza conjecturing: or some might take upon them to correct S. Lukes report, according to the Septuagint, which was of greater authority and credit then in the world, Calvin. And yet against this answer it may be objected, that the Syriacke translation, which is most ancient, readeth in like manner 75. therefore, if S. Lukes text were altered or changed, such change was made, before it was translated into the Syriacke language. One of these two last answers I prefer before the rest, and the latter rather: let the reader make his choice. Howsoever, the Hebrew verity must be received, that onely 70. soules descended into Egypt of the twelve Patriarkes: in remembrance whereof, the Israelites pitched in Elim, where were twelve fountaines, and seventy palme trees: this number answereth the seventy fathers of the world that came of Noah, Gen. 10. according to this proportion were the seventy Elders chosen to be Moses assistants, Numb. 11. Our Saviour Christ also did choose unto him 12. Apostles, and 70. Disciples, to be spirituall fathers of the Church, Muscul. Mercer.

Why 70. persons descended into Egypt

QUEST. XV. Of the sending of Iudah before to Ioseph.

Vers. 28. HE sent Iudah before him unto Ioseph, &c. 1. It seemeth that Iudah was of authority among his brethren, as a man of more excellent parts, and therefore Iacob thinketh him the fittest to be imployed in this message. 2. He sendeth to Ioseph to meet him in Goshen, that countrie which Ioseph had made choice of before for his father, and it was neereſt to Canaan: it is like that some certaine place was appointed, where they should meet: the Septuagint read, in the citie of the nobles, but what that was it is unknowne. 3. The Hebrewes write that Ioseph when he came neere his father, did cast off his bonnet, and other ornaments of honour, that his father might the better discerne him, which is likelike. 4. Where it is said, he fell upon his necke: Rasi referreth it to Ioseph, to whom subscribeth Aben Ezra: Ramban to Iacob, whom Iunius followeth: though the construction favour the first opinion, that Ioseph is named in the verse, and not Iacob at all: yet the circumstance and usage of those times favour the other: for it is more beseeming the parents to fall upon their sonnes neck, who doe humble bow themselves to their father: as the father fell upon the prodigall childs necke, and kissed him, Luke 15. 20.

Whether Iacob or Ioseph fell one upon the others necke.

QUEST. XVI. The causes why Ioseph desired that Iacob should dwell in Goshen.

Vers. 29. THat ye may dwell in the land of Goshen. Divers reasons moved Ioseph to procure his brethren their dwelling in Goshen: 1. Because it was a most fruitfull place, and fit for their keeping, Calvin. 2. That they might dwell apart from the Egyptians, and so not be corrupted with idolatry and superstition, Mercer. Muscul. 3. Least that being dispersed among the Egyptians, they might be beene distracted, and so one divided from another, Iosephus. 4. Because the Egyptians abhorred all keepers of sheep, it would have beene an occasion of envy and hatred, if they had lived among the Egyptians. 5. lastly, the land of Goshen stood more commodious for the Israelites returne and passage out of Egypt,

Egypt, being ſituate in the utmoſt bounds toward Canaan: whereas if the Iſraelites had beene ſeated in the inward or remote parts of the Countrey, they could not afterward ſo conveniently have eſcaped. Pererius.

QUEST. XVII. Why keepers of ſheepe were an abomination to the Egyptians.

Verſ. 34. For every ſheepe-keeper is an abomination to the Egyptians, &c. Theſe are the words of Moſes rather than of Ioſeph, as the like reaſon is inſerted by Moſes, Gen. 43. 34. why the Hebrewes and Egyptians might not eat together: the Egyptians then abhorred ſhepherds and keepers of ſheepe 1. Not onely becauſe they were a proud people, and deſpiſed ſhepherds as baſe and ſervile men, as Pererius: for they were an abomination unto them, which is more than to contemne and deſpiſe them. 2. Neither did they abhorre ſhepherds as though there were none of that condition among the Egyptians, for they had their flocks of ſheepe, Geneſ. 47. 17. 3. Neither yet is it like that the Egyptians did altogether abſtaine from all eating of fleſh, (Aben Ezra reporteth of the Indians that they kill no fleſh, neither doe ſo much as eat of the milke that commeth of cattell) and that for this cauſe the Egyptians abhorred the Hebrewes. 4. Therefore I thinke rather that the Egyptians eſpecially deteſted keepers of ſheepe rather than of other cattell, becauſe they ſuperſtitiouſly adored that kinde, and ſo abſtained altogether from ſlaying of ſheepe, and eating the fleſh thereof, keeping them for their milke and wooll: whereas the Hebrew ſhepherds did without any ſcruple eat of their flocks: other kinds of cattell they like they did eat of, as Mercerus reporteth the opinion of ſome writers, that it was lawfull for the Egyptians to kill and eat foure kinds of creatures, Oxen, Calves, Swine, and Geeſe.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. Not to depend upon meanes, or put any confidence in Princes.

Verſ. 4. I will goe downe with thee into Egypt. Although Ioſeph were Lord of Egypt, and a man of great power, able to provide for Iacob, and protect him from danger, yet the Lord would not have Iacob to depend upon the meanes, but to truſt to his providence, Muſcul. Whereby alſo wee are taught not to put our confidence in men, but to wait upon God: as it is in the Pſalme, It is better to truſt in the Lord, than to put any confidence in man: it is better to truſt in the Lord, than to put any confidence in Princes, Pſal. 118. 9.

2. Doct. The Lord will never forſake his elect.

Verſ. 4. I will alſo bring thee up againe, &c. The Lord promiſeth his preſence and gracious aſſiſtance to Iacob, both going downe into Egypt, and returning: the Lord then will never forſake his elect; Whom he once loveth, he loveth to the end, Ioh. 13. 1. and as he ſaid to Ioſua, I will not leave thee nor forſake thee, Ioſu. 1. 5. ſo the ſame promiſe belongeth unto all the faithfull ſervants of God, as the Apoſtle applieth it, Heb. 13. 5.

3. Doct. A man is not bound to reveale all his counſell, ſo he ſpeake the truth and lieve.

Verſ. 34. Then ye ſhall ſay, thy ſervants are men occupied about cattell. This alſo was true which Ioſeph taught his brethren to anſwer, that they might dwell in the land of Goſhen, but there was another reaſon which Ioſeph would have them to conceale: becauſe it was the moſt fruitfull and beſt ſoyle of all Egypt. We ſee then that a man is not bound to utter all his minde, but ſpeaking the truth of the reſt, he may conceale that which he thinketh will bee prejudiciall to his ſuit and buſineſſe, Chriſt and in ſuch affaires that precept of our Saviour taketh place, To be wiſe as ſerpents, but innocent as doves, Matth. 10. 16.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. No Sacraments without the ſpirit and life of the word.

Verſ. 2. God ſpake unto Iacob in a viſion. The Lord doth not onely appeare and ſhew a viſion unto Iacob, but hee alſo ſpeaketh unto him, to the viſion he adjoyneth a voyce: of this kinde are all Gods ſignes and ceremonies, they are not dead or dumbe, but the word of God preached unto them. Wherefore it is preſumption in the Church of Rome to impoſe ſignes and Sacraments on the Church, which receive not their life from the Word, Calvin. as our Saviour ſaith, It is the ſpirit that quickneth, the fleſh profiteth nothing, Ioh. 6. 63. ſo the fleſhie and terrene part in ſignes and ſacraments profiteth not without the ſpirit and life, which they receive from the Word.

2. Confut. Antiquity no good argument of the truth.

Verſ. 3. I am the God of thy father. He ſaith not of thy fathers, as of thy great Grandfather, ſith he was an idolater, Ioſu. 24. 4. Iacob could not goe beyond Abraham, for divers hundred yeares to fetch his faith: though the moſt ancient Patriarks, Noe, Sem, Heber, were of the ſame faith and religion. Wee ſee then that antiquity is no good argument to prove true religion by, unleſſe wee run up to the firſt beginning: for ſo truth is more ancient than errour. In like manner wee deny not but that in late yeares wee cannot derive the profeſſion of the Goſpell from our fathers and anceſtors paſt the third degree, becauſe all the world was blinded with ſuperſtition and ignorance for divers red yeares but leaving the meane generations, which were corrupted, we are able to fetch and de-we our faith from the Apostles of Christ: but the Romanists doe call in derision, a probation of our faith, by leaping. But Iacob could prove his faith no otherwise; he must leape from Abraham, to Isaac, he could not prove his faith from the immediate descent of his father; for of ye have always resisted the holy Ghost, as your fathers did, so do you. Act. 7. he ascendeth and Moses, and the prophets times: and in such manner we prove and iustifie our with him. Esrom and Manasses came not downe with Iacob, and therefore they are the first number of 66. but they were borne before Iacob descended, not afterward, and therefore fitly comprehended in the other account of 70. Wherefore seeing the Septuagint reade 75. & numbreth but seventy in all, eyther Moses must be in an errour, or they: for both cannot agree with truth.

6. Places of morall use.

1. Mor. Nothing to be enterprised without prayer.

Iacob offered sacrifice to God. Iacob would not take this long and perilous journey in hand, but first he calleth upon God, to consult with him, and prayeth that his journey bee prosperous:
example teacheth us, not to enterprise any journey or to take in hand any businesse of waight without prayer, Muscul. so did Abrahams servant. Gen. 24. so did Iacob, Gen. 28.

2. Mor. To provide as much as in us lieth not to be chargeable to others.

Remember their cattell and their goods. Though Pharaoh sent them word to take no care for any thing, yet they provided, hoping of their owne to be as little chargeable as they might like to lame, that are careless for themselves and rely altogether upon the helpe of others.
S. Paul to labour with his owne hands, that he should not be chargeous to others. 2 Thes. 3. 7. 8.
duty to maintaine him. 1 Cor. 11. 8.

3. Mor. The hatred of the world maketh us cleave faster to God.

Egyptians teachers an abomination to the Egyptians. God turned the hatred of the Egyptians to their great good: for by this meanes they had a place provided by themselves, where orderly serve God. Calvin. so when the righteous are hated of the world, it causeth them to withdraw themselves from the vaine delights thereof, and cleave more nearely to God, as the prophet Da- vid his enemies hated him, but I gave my selfe to prayer. Psal. 109. 4.

CHAP. XLVII.

The Method and Argument.

In this chapter is set forth the manner of entertainment of Iacob and his sonnes at Pharaohs hands and Iosephs suit, concerning Iacobs sonnes. Ioseph presenteth fiue of them before the king: who demaundeth of them their calling. They make their request, and Pharaoh granteth it, appointing them to dwell in Gosen, and if any of them were of ability, to make Ioseph placeth his father and brethren in the land of Rameses, and nourisheth them.
Ioseph buyeth all the cattell and goods for land,
They sell all their cattell and goods for land,
They sell themselves and their children for bondmen. In this last sale Ioseph shewed himself a faithfull steward, by reserving of the people of the priests only. The number and multiplying of the people of Iacob, and the time of his death.

3. The explanation of doubtfull queſtions.

QUEST. I. Which five of his brethren Ioſeph preſented to Pharaoh.

Verſ. 2. Ioſeph tooke part of his brethren. 1. Becauſe the word here uſed chetzah, ſignifieth a part or extreame part: ſome thinke that Ioſeph tooke five of the uppermoſt or chiefeſt of his brethren in perſon and willome, ſic Lyran. Toſtat. ſo is the word uſed, Exod. 14. 7. where the children of Iſrael put five of their ſtrongeſt men. 2. Some thinke he tooke five of the loweſt, or meaneſt, that he ſhould conceive no liking to make them courtiers, ſic Oleaſter. but the word here ſignifieth not a part or extremitie, but only a part, as ſhall be ſhewed. 3. Some ſay that beſide Iudah, Ioſeph and every of Iacobs wiues ſonnes that he ſhould not be partiall. Caietan. but that is uncertaine. 4. Some brothes got yet further, and ſhew which five they were, namely Ruben, Simeon, Leui, Iſſachar five of the weaker ſort: and therefore their names are not recorded of repentance in Moſes bleſſing, Gen. 49. But this is too curious. 5. Some would have Ioſeph to take of both ends, the eldeſt and the youngeſt. Caietan. 6. But the meaning is, that Ioſeph tooke five indifferently out of the company (as the Septuagint reade) ſuch as were deareſt unto him, of which company Beniamin might be one, Hebron. The word here uſed, michzah, is not compounded of the preposition, and the word chetzah, as Pagninus doth, de extremitate, out of the end, or extremitie: but is the whole word, which ſignifieth a part or portion, as it is uſed, Dan. 1. 2. The Lord gaue Ioiakim into his hand, with part of the veſſels of the houſe of God: ſo that men is not here a preposition, but a part of the word, Vatab.

QUEST. II. The chronologie explained by the yeares of Iacobs life.

Verſ. 9. THe whole time of my pilgrimage is 130. yeares: from this age of Iacob here mentioned ariſe diverſe points concerning the Chronologie may be concluded. 1. Ioſeph being one and thirtie yeares old when Iacob was 130. it followeth that Ioſeph was borne in the 99. yeare of Iacob. 2. Ioſeph being borne 99. yeares after Iacob came into Meſopotamia, Iacob muſt be of the age of 14. yeares when he came into Meſopotamia. 3. Further, Ioſeph being in the fifteene yeare of his age with Iacob, was nine thirty nine yeare old, when Iacob came into Egypt, and therefore about 40. yeares before, muſt be ſold. 4. Simeon forty nine, Leui forty foure, Iudah fifty three, and about 40. yeares before ſold. Hence it is gathered, that from the firſt promiſe made to Abraham, in the 75. yeare of his age, to the coming into Egypt, are two hundred and fifteene yeares. 5. Iſaak was threeſcore yeare after the promiſe made to Abraham, who in the ſixty yeare of Iacob begat Iacob, and Iacob was an hundred yeare old when he came into Egypt, and therefore 160. yeares after the promiſe made to Abraham, and ſo many yeares Iacob ſojourned in the land of Canaan. 6. Abraham was borne in the 292. yeare after the flood, and Iacob in the 452. yeare after the flood, ſo that from the birth of Abraham to the birth of Iacob are 160. yeares. 7. Iſaak was ſixty of Iſaack, and Iacob ſhall be borne in the 512. yeare after the flood. 8. Laſtly, Terah begat Abraham in the 130. yeare of his age, and therefore Terah was in the 205. yeare of his age when he died in that place.

Peter. error in the chronologie.

QUEST. III. Why Iacob counteth himselfe a pilgrim.

Vers. 9. The whole time of my pilgrimage. 1. Iacob counteth himselfe a pilgrim or stranger in two respects. 1. In respect of his dwelling in the world, where he had no certaine habitation: for he removed from his fathers house to Mesopotamia, where he sojourned with Laban twenty yeares: then he came to Succoth, after that to Sichem, Gen. 33. thence to Bethel, and so to Ephratah, and then to Hebron, where his father dwelt, Gen. 35. from whence he went downe to Egypt, Perer. 2. Iacob and the rest of the Patriarkes counted themselves pilgrims and strangers in the world, in respect of their celestiall inheritance in heaven, Heb. 11. 12. Calvin.

QUEST. IV. Of the divers troubles which Iacob had endured in his life.

Vers. 9. Few and evill, &c. 1. Iacob, though he had not attained to the yeares of his fathers, and yet seemed very old, and therefore was asked of Pharaoh of his age, giveth this as a reason; because he had gone through many troubles: in respect whereof he calleth his daies evill, that is, full of griefe and sorrow, Mercer. 2. The Hebrewes reckon seven calamities that befell Iacob: Pererius ten: others more: 1. His forsaking of his fathers house for feare of Esau. 2. His hard service in Laban's house. 3. The suborning of Leah for Rachel. 4. The feare of Esau after his returne. 5. The deflouring of Dinah. 6. The death of Rachel. 7. The incest of Ruben. 8. The fornication of Iudah with Thamar. 9. The slaughter of the Sichemites by Simeon and Levi. 10. The losse of Ioseph. 11. The detaining of Simeon in prison in Egypt. 12. The taking away of Benjamin. 3. Whereas Iacob saith, he had not attained to the yeares of his fathers, Iacob considering the manifold troubles which he had gone through, and feeling his present weakenesse and decay of nature, did easily conjecture, that he was not like to reach to his father, or grandfathers age, Mercer. Neither indeed did he: he living but an hundred forty seven yeares, wanted twenty eight of Abrahams age, which was an hundred seventy five, and 33. yeares of Isaacks age, which was 180.

How Iacob did know that he should not attaine to the yeares of his father.

QUEST. V. Of the land of Rameses, what country it was.

Vers. 11. In the land of Rameses, as Pharaoh had commanded, &c. 1. This land of Rameses was neither all one with Goshen, as Augustine seemeth to thinke, quæst. 157. Genes. 2. Neither was it a diverse citie from that which was builded by the Israelites, Exod. 1. 11. although there be a little difference in the name, this is Rameses, with schevah under am: that Rameses with patach, as thinketh Arias Mont. and Iunius, who would have this to be Heliopolis, the other Pelusum. 3. Neither yet is this the same citie which afterward the Israelites built, and that it is here named by way of anticipation, as Tyrus. Perer. Genevens. 4. But this land of Rameses was a region rather than a citie situate in the most fruitfull part thereof, where the citie Rameses was afterward built, bearing the name of the country, sic Cajetan. Mercer. for it is called, not the citie, but the land of Rameses. 5. Some take it for Memphis, some Heliopolis, the Septuagint call it the citie of the Nobles: but I take it rather to be the name of the whole territory and country. 6. The Israelites dwelt here apart and divided from the rest of Egypt, but yet there were some Egytians inhabiting among them, of whom they borrowed jewels of gold and silver at their departure from Rameses, Exod. 12. 35, 37. Perer.

QUEST. VI. How Ioseph gave bread to the mouth of the children.

Vers. 12. To the mouth of the little ones. 1. Some refer this to the number of the families, that Ioseph provided for every one of them, from the elder sort to the infants; sic Chald. Hieron. B. G. but that was said before, he nourished all his fathers household. 2. Some understand it of the great ones, that even the children, which use to play the wantons and cast away their bread, had enough: sic Abenezra Hebræus. 3. Some apply it to the manner, that Ioseph did provide for them all, as for young children, that is, without their labour or taking of care: which I take to be the right meaning, Iun. Mercer.

QUEST. VII. When their money began to faile in Egypt, and how.

Vers. 18. They came unto him the second yeare, &c. since our money is spent, &c. 1. This was neither the second yeare from the beginning of the famine, as the Hebrews imagine, that after Iacobs comming into Egypt, at his prayer Nilus came to his ordinary course, and God for his sake remitted five yeares of famine, at that time, which came afterward: for this is contrary to the story, Gen. 45. 6. Ioseph saith, there were five yeares of famine yet behind: neither was this in the third yeare: but when money was spent in the first yeare, they had corne the first yeare for their cattell, and in the seventh yeare they had given them seed to sow their grounds, because the 7. yeares of famine were expired; during which they could not sow: sic Mercer. Iun. Luther. Calvin. 2. Isaack Cyrus maketh this a doubtfull speech, thus reading, if our money be spent; supposing that they gave all their money in the beginning to Ioseph, and he gave them corne for it, as long as their money did last, according to his discretion: but this is false, for the text is, v. 15. when money failed in the land of Egypt: they had no more money to bring. Likewise it is uncertaine, as some doe note, that corne continued all at one price all the yeares of famine, like that Ioseph did set reasonable prices, but whether at the same continuall rate, it cannot be told, Mercer.

QUEST. VIII. Whether Ioseph dealt hardly or unjustly in taking the Egyptians money, cattell and land, for corne.

Vers. 20. So Ioseph bought all the land of Egypt for Pharaoh. It may seeme very hard, that Ioseph, when he had received all the Egyptians money for corne, doth take also their cattell, and last of all their land: wherefore Iosephs fact may be thus justified. 1. The corne, which was layd up in Pharaohs garners, was proper to the King: for in the seven plentifull yeares Pharaoh had taken up the fifth part for his owne use of the people, and now he selleth it againe, Muscul. therefore here was nothing but just.

2. Beside the equitie, we must consider Iosephs fidelity, it became him to deale faithfully with Pharaohs goods, being put in trust withall: and it is like that he did nothing without the privity and direction of the King. Calvin. 3. Iosephs charity appeared, who when as the people had sold themselves to be Pharaohs servants, and their lands; Ioseph remitteth their service, and taketh only their lands. Perverse liberality also is seene in this, that whereas he might have taken foure parts for Pharaoh, and left the fift for them: he only reserveth the fift part for Pharaoh: whereas in fruitfull grounds, such as the land of Egypt was, husbandmen doe willingly occupie land, for the halfe of the increase, Mercer. Pererius. Iosephs justice appeareth, in that he doth not force them to any thing, but al is done by the peoples offer, and willing consent, Calvin. 6. Iosephs prudencie and policie may be considered, who tooke this course both for the maintenance of the crowne and common-wealth, the King and his people: he sold not corne, and gave it not, ne gratis accipiendo cultum terrarum relinqueret, quoniam qui aliena accipit, negligit; lest if they had received it freely, they might have lived idly, and neglected tillage: for he that may live of anothers, will be careless of his owne. Ambros. officior. 2. 16. who further saith, that Ioseph did this, ut constitueret tributum, quo sua tutius habere possent, to raise a tribute, that every man for your might more safely hold his owne. 7. The people were so far from complaining of Iosephs injustice or hard dealing, that they thankfully acknowledge that he had saved their lives, vers. 25. 8. God by this famine doth punish the Egyptians riotous and licentious life in the yeares of plenty, by their extreme penurie and scarcity now, Mercer.

QUEST. IX. Wherefore Ioseph removed the inhabitants of Egypt to new dwellings.

Vers. 21. HE moved the people to the cities, from one side of Egypt, &c. 1. They were not removed from the principall cities to smaller townes, as some expound, but the contrary, they were removed from their fields and grounds to the cities. 2. They were not carried from one side of Egypt to the other, that had been too great a toyle: but throughout Egypt, this course was taken, that the owners and former possessours should change their grounds. 3. Which was done to this end, to acknowledge Pharaoh to bee Lord of their grounds and that it should not grieve them to pay this new tribute and imposition out of those possessions assigned them, which might have seemed gainfull unto in their old inheritance, Iun. Mercer.

QUEST. X. Of the privilege and immunitie of the Priests in Egypt.

Vers. 22. FOr the Priests had an ordinarie. 1. All the interpreters doe so reade, but Iunius, who thinketh that those were chiefe officers rather to the King, that had this immunitie, than the Priests, because Iosephs family was nourished at the Kings charge, and his fathers household also maintained of that family, which otherwise the Egyptians would have repined at. Cont. 1. Iacobs family was nourished of the Kings extraordinary favour, as likewise his dwelling was given him in the best of the land, therefore there was no repining at it. 2. The officers also might be nourished at the Kings charge, but they are not spoken of because they belonged to Pharaohs household, whereof Moses speaketh not here, but of other subjects. 3. The consent of interpreters, the Chalde and Septuagint, which here translate Priests with Calvin, Muscul. Mercerus, Tostatus, Pererius, and others, the testimony of forreine writers, Herodot. in Euterpe. Diodorus lib. 2. that Priests had their ordinary from the King: the great honour and dignity of the Priests in Egypt, who were honoured for their continent and contemplative life, Horus Cheremon. lib. 1. adverſ. Iovinian. were held the Masters and chiefe professours of the Mathematicks and other liberall sciences, Aristot. princip. Metaphys. were conversant and of counsell with the King of Egypt, Strab. lib. 17. all these reasons doe shew, that it is most probable, that this favour was not shewed to the order of Priests, than of any other. 2. Neither was this ordinary allowed to the Priests in this time of famine, as Mercerus thinketh: but it was a perpetuall custome for the Priests to be so maintained; singulis eorum continuo cibi sacri præsto sunt, &c. meat is prepared daily for every one of them, Herodot. in Euterpe.

QUEST. XI. Whether Ioseph offended in giving allowance of food to the Priests of Egypt.

NOw in that Ioseph as Pharaohs chiefe officer alloweth this ordinary to the idolatrous priests, it is not therein to be reprehended for his connivence, because he did no more resist their superstition. Calvin. for it is not unlike, but that he did what he could, and was grieved that he could not redresse as he desired. 2. But seeing the law and custome, and princes pleasure was so, that they should be maintained, and he was but the kings officer and minister, to see every one served according to their allowance: Ioseph could not have gainsayed without very great tumult and sedition, seeing those superstitious priests were greatly honoured with the king and people. Mercer.

QUEST. XII. Why Iacob desireth to be buried in Canaan.

Vers. 30. BUrie me in their buriall. Iacob desireth to be buryed with his fathers in the land of Canaan. 1. Not thereby shewing his hope of remission of sinnes in Christ: as Augustine interpreteth, sepultura mortuorum, remissionem significat peccatorum: the buriall of the dead signifieth the remission of sinnes. quæst. 161. in Genes. for although Iacob had this hope of remission of sinnes, yet it is not the proper and literall meaning of these words. 2. Neither yet was it the love of his country that moved him, as many men desire to live and die, Oleast. there was a greater matter that moved Iacob. 3. Neither yet as Lyranus, because he hoped to be one of those which should rise out of his grave at the resurrection of Christ: for this is too curious: and it is not like, that any buried so long before, or so far off, as this Iacob was thought to be 30. miles from Ierusalem, did rise out of their graves, but some about Ierusalem, such as had beene lately dead, and were knowne in the citie: for the text saith, they went into the holy citie, and appeared to many, Matth. 27. 53. and it is like, that they returned to their graves again. Therefore Iacob desireth to be buried with his fathers, partly to testifie his faith, that he doubted not but his soule should presently be joyned to his fathers, Calvin. and his body rise againe in the generall resurrection, Mercer. partly to admonish his children, not to be too much addicted to the pleasures of Egypt, but to wait for their returne into the land of Canaan, as Ioseph also dying, declared his hope, Gen. 50. 25.

Quest. XIII. Why Iacob causeth Ioseph to sweare.

Then he said, sweare unto me. Iacob requireth an oath of Ioseph, not because he did mistrust his obedience: but 1. that Iacob might be better satisfied and confirmed in the thing which he desired. 2. Lest that Ioseph might have beene otherwise perswaded, or overruled by Pharaoh, to cause his father buried in Egypt: and therefore Ioseph, when he obtained leave of Pharaoh to burie his father, urgeth the oath which he made to his father, Gen. 50. 6. Mercer. Rupert. 3. Hee rather desired Ioseph to performe this, than any of his other sonnes, because of his authority and favour with Pharaoh.

Quest. XIV. How and whom Iacob worshipped toward the beds head.

He worshipped toward the beds head. 1. Some doe read, he worshipped toward the top of his rod, for mittah signifieth a bed, matteh a rod: so the Septuagint and they which follow them. 1. Some interpret that he worshipped toward Ioseph rod or scepter, as giving reverence to him, Chrysost. 2. Some that he leaned upon his owne staffe doing reverence to Ioseph, Theod. 3. Some that he worshipped Ioseph scepter, as a figure of the kingdome of Christ, Procop. But they are deceived by the translation of the Septuagint who themselves, in the 48. chap. vers. 2. doe read, not rod but bed, as Hierome well noteth, tradit. in Genes. 2. Some doe read, the beds head: and they that follow this reading. 1. Some say, that he worshipped that way because it was eastward toward Jerusalem, Lyran. as though Iacob had beene so superstitious as to set his bed east and west. Some because God is present at the beds head: so the superstitious Hebrews. 3. But he did nothing but leane himselfe upon his pillow at his beds head, leaning also upon his staffe, and so gave thankes to God: and that he bowed upon his staffe, may be supplied out of the Apostle to the Hebrewes, Heb. 11. 1. Iun. Pisc.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. Corne and food more worth than money.

And Ioseph gathered all the money: the Egyptians that were borders up of gold and silver, yet were contented to exchange their money for corne: we see then, that money, if it be compared of, is a baser thing, than that which belongeth either to the belly or backe, Muscul. Such consideration should reach men not to covet money: but if they have foode for the belly, and rayment for to be there with content, as the Apostle saith, 1 Timoth. 6. 8.

2. Doct. They which preach the Gospell, must live of the Gospell.

Only the land of the Priests bought he not, for the Priests had an ordinary of Pharaoh; the law of nature then teacheth, that they which attend the service of God, and the instruction of the people, should have their publike maintenance: seeing Pharaoh an heathen prince, was so liberall unto his idolatrous Priests: much more should Christian Princes take care to provide for the Ministers of the Gospel: for as the Apostle saith, As they, which did wait at the altar, were partakers with the altar, even so the Lord ordained, that they which preach the Gospel, should live of the Gospell, 1 Cor. 9. 13, 14. Calvin. Lauter.

3. Doct. They are fit to teach others, that first can teach themselves.

Loe, I have bought your land for Pharaoh, loe here is seed for you, &c. Gregorie hereupon collecteth, that as the Egyptians received no seed, till first they had yeelded their land, and themselves to be servants to Pharaoh: so they are fit to have the seed of Gods word committed unto them, which first have reformed their owne life, and consecrated themselves to the service of God: Restat, ut loquatur quisque doceat vitam alios, quam ipse moribus servat; It remaineth, that he teach others to live well, which hath reformed his owne, lib. 6. Moral. So the Apostle reproveth the Iewes, thou which teachest another, teachest thou not thy selfe? Rom. 2. 21.

Doct. Though sumptuous funerals are not to be desired yet the bodies of Saints must be reverently buried.

When I shall sleepe with my fathers, thou shalt carry me out of Egypt, &c. Although pompous funerals, and sumptuous burials doe not profit the dead: which are as Augustine saith, viventium solatia, than subsidia mortuorum; comforts for the living, than helps for the dead: Augustine sheweth by the example of the rich man and Lazarus, that as the one was not helped by precious and solemne exequies, so neither was the other hindred by his vile and base sepulture; as the heathen man could say, tolle tegitur, qui non habet urnam, he hath heaven for a cover that wanteth a tombe. Aug. lib. 1. de civit. c. 12, 13. Neither did Iacob desire to be buried in Canaan, either for the holinesse of the place, or that he had any pompous solemnities, but to testifie his faith, as before is shewed, quest. 12. yet by this charge of Ioseph, we doe learne, that the bodies of the Saints ought in comely and reverent sort to be laid in the grave: as the brethren, that feared God, carried Steven to be buried with great lamentation, Act. 8. 2.

5. Doct. Of the lawfulnesse of an oath.

And he sware unto him: It was lawfull for Iacob in some serious and weighty matter to enquire an oath: and for Ioseph to performe it: for men are mutable and therefore may be bound bound with an oath: and though Ioseph might otherwise have fulfilled his fathers will, yet it was not amisse, that he should be more straitly bound: we see then the lawfull use of an oath, against the error of the Anabaptists, which allow not Christians to take an oath: for the Apostle saith, An oath for confirmation among men, is an end of strife, Heb. 6, 16.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. Against the corrupt Latine translation of this place.

Vers. 31. Israel worshipped toward the beds head: not as the vulgar Latine readeth, he adored the top of his rod, Heb. 11, 21. which translation differeth both from the Latine in this place, which interpreteth, he worshipped turning toward the beds head: and from the Septuagint, which readeth, he worshipped or bowed himselfe, επι το ακρον, upon the top of his rod: or staffe: the Latine text corruptly leaveth out the preposition επι upon: but it differeth most of all from the Hebrew, which standeth thus, he worshipped toward the beds head: from which reading the Septuagint doe vary in these two points: first in adding the word, suae, his, which is not in the Hebrew: secondly, in mistaking the word, mittah, bed, reading, matteh, a rod: both which words are derived of natah, which signifieth to extend or stretch forth: because a man doth stretch himselfe upon his bed, and on his staffe.

Heb. 11. 21.

Wherefore we see what a simple ground the Rhemists have, to prove by this corrupt Latine text, that creatures may be adored: contr. Hebr. 10. 21. there being no such thing in the Hebrew, Greeke, or Latine text in this place, that Iacob adored his rod. Further, the like ground had Hadrianus the Pope, as hee is cited in that erronious Councell, the second Nicene, who by this text would prove the adoration of Images, with relation to their prototypa, that is, the presidents, patterns, or patrons of those Images: because say they, the adoration which Iacob gave to this rod, he intended it to Ioseph, whose rod or scepter it was: not that Iacob worshipped neither his owne staffe or Iosephs scepter: but toward the bed head, worshipped God.

2. Confut. That the Latine text is not authenticall.

FUrther, whereas the Apostle seemeth to follow the translation of the Septuagint, rather than the Hebrew text: the Rhemists doe infer thereupon, that after the same manner the vulgar Latine text may be received as authenticall, though it doe varie from the Hebrew, ibid.

How and when the Apostles doe follow the Septuagint.

Contra. 1. The Apostles indeed doe sometime follow the Septuagint, because it was a common translation, and of great authority: but they therein neither approve their errors, nor yet make that of equall authority to the originall: citing only such testimonies, wherein the Greeke translation hath the same sense, though not the words: as in this place, whether we say Iacob leaning upon his staffe, or bowing to the beds head, worshipped: the principall sense is kept, that Iacob worshipped God, especially seeing the same word, with very little alteration in the points, signifieth both a bed, and a rod, or staffe. 2. Howsoever this observation then is good, though Perezius without cause misliketh it, Diligenter observandum etc. It is to be diligently observed, that where the Apostles and Evangelists doe cite testimonies out of the Old testament, they follow not the words, but the sense: and where the Septuagint differ from the Hebrew, they expresse the Hebrew sense: for the Apostle in this place keepeth the Hebrew sense, that Iacob worshipped God, leaning upon his bed and staffe: for it is true, that Iacob did both, that he reared himselfe upon his staffe towards the beds head. 3. The Apostle then rather expoundeth, than alleageth that text: for he nameth Iacob, whereas Moses saith Israel: he speaketh of Iacobs worshipping, when he had blessed his children, but here Iacob worshippeth, before he blessed them. 4. This then is no good argument, that we must follow the Septuagint, where they keepe the Hebrew sense, though not the words, Ergo the Latine text must be received, where it differeth both in sense and words from the originall.

6. Places of morall use.

1 Mor. That none should live idly without some honest trade or vocation.

Vers. 3. WHat is your trade, or what is your worke? Pharaoh as a prudent Prince, examineth his brethren of their manner of living and occupation: by the which question it appeareth that he condemned all idle persons, that lived without any trade: and it is the part of good Magistrates straitly to sift and examine all such as spend their time unthriftily, not in any profitable labour: according to the Apostles doctrine, that they which doe not worke, should not eat, 2 Thes. 3. 10. Musculus.

2. Mor. A poore life in the Church of God, is to be preferred before the pleasures of the world.

Vers. 3. THy servants are shepherds. Ioseph taught his brethren thus to say, that they might dwell part by themselves, and not be imployed in Pharaohs court, or in the affaires of the kingdome: they did choose rather to live as poore shepheards, in the service of God, than to be in the Kings Palace, as strangers from the Church and household of faith: though Ioseph had a speciall grace given him of God, not to be corrupted with that place of honour, yet he saw it not to bee meet nor convenient for his brethren, Calvin; so the Prophet David saith, A day in thy courts is better than a thousand elsewhere, Psal. 84. 10. Moses likewise did choose rather to suffer adversity with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sinne for a season, Heb. 11. 25.

3. Morall. Men called to honour should not despise their parents.

Vers. 7. Ioseph also brought Iacob, and set him before Pharaoh. Ioseph though of honourable place in Egypt, yet was not ashamed of his poore aged father, but presented him to the King: to this Ioseph many are unlike in these dayes, that thinke it a disgrace unto them to acknowledge their poore parents, &c. So did not David, who brought his father and mother to the King of Moab to keepe and provide for them, 1 Sam. 22. 4. as Ioseph here fetcheth his father before Pharaoh.

4. Morall. Our life here is but a pilgrimage. This not only Iacob, but the rest of the fathers counted themselves but as strangers and pilgrims in the earth, and there by declared that they sought a countrey, Heb. 11. 13, 14. So the Apostle saith, We have not here a continuing citie, but seeke for one to come, Heb. 13. 14. and therefore we should not set our affections upon such things, but passe the dayes of the yeares of our pilgrimage. Thus not only Iacob, but the rest of the fathers counted themselves but as strangers and pilgrims in the earth, and there by declared that they sought a countrey, Heb. 11. 13, 14. So the Apostle saith, We have not here a continuing citie, but seeke for one to come, Heb. 13. 14. and therefore we should not set our affections upon such things, but passe our desire toward our heavenly Countrey.

5. Morall. Good officers should not seeke to inrich themselves. Ioseph laid up the money in Pharaohs house. Ioseph was a faithfull officer to Pharaoh, he did not seeke to inrich himselfe by his office, but sought the Kings profit, and increased his treasure, so no one was Iosua, who in the division of the land of Canaan to the tribes, did not share any thing to himselfe, but the children of Israel gave him an inheritance among them, when they had made an end of dividing the land, Ios. 19. 49. Such should officers and Iudges be toward the King and people, faithfully with the one, and justly with the other, not to turne all to their owne profit and gaine, as many now adayes.

CHAP. XLVIII.

1. The Method and Argument of the Chapter.

IN this Chapter is declared how Ioseph came to visit Iacob when he was sicke.

Secondly, Iacobs testament is set downe, first, concerning Iosephs sonnes, then his gift and legacie toward Ioseph himselfe, vers. 22. with a generall prophecie of the returne of all his children, vers. 21.

Concerning Iosephs sonnes: The ground and occasion of Iacobs blessing of them is expressed, which is first the promise of God, vers. 4. then the right & property that Iacob had vers. 5. Thirdly, because Rachel was taken away, leaving not much issue behinde her, vers. 7. was the eldest of her, who was his principall wife. 2. Iacobs blessing followeth: first, the preparation to the blessing: where we have set forth, 1. Iacobs kissing and embracing of Manasses and Ephraim, vers. 9, 10. 2. Iosephs reverence to his father, vers. 12. 3. The presenting of his two sonnes, and manner of disposing them, Manasses to Iacobs right hand, and Ephraim to his left, vers. 13. Secondly, in the blessing: 1 There is the ceremonie, the laying on of Iacobs hands contrary to Iosephs intention, the right hand upon the youngest, the left upon the eldest, vers. 14. 2. The pronouncing of the blessing, which sheweth the author or efficient cause, God who had fed him and delivered him, vers. 15, 16. and the effects, the naming of them among the tribes, and their great increase and multiplying, vers. 16. 3. The ratification of the blessing: where we have first Iosephs exception, vers. 17, 18. then Iacobs answer, containing a satisfaction to Ioseph, vers. 8, 9. a confirmation of the blessing, vers. 20.

3. The explanation of doubtfull questions.

QUEST. I. Of the adopting of Manasseh and Ephraim into the degree of Iacobs sonnes.

Vers. 5. Manasseh and Ephraim shall be mine, as Reuben and Simeon are mine. 1. Iacob upon [illegible] promise, that he should increase into many people by the spirit of prophecie, adopteth Manasseh and Ephraim into the number of his sonnes, that seeing Rachel was taken away, before he had many children by her, he should by these be increased. 2. He adopteth them in the place of Reuben and Simeon, the two elder brethren, and so the birth-right is conveyed from Ruben to Iosephs sonnes, because he had defiled his fathers bed, 1. Chron. 5. 1. 3. Here we have the practice of that law afterward established, Deut. 21. 17. of allotting a double part to the eldest, Iun. for Ioseph had a double part, in that two tribes came of him, whereas the rest of his brethren had but each one his tribe: Manasseh and Ephraim had not each of them his double part to the rest, as some Hebrewes thinke: but they two being the [illegible] thers of the two tribes, doe make their fathers part double to the rest, Mercer.

QUEST. II. Whether Ioseph had any other sonnes besides Manasseh and Ephraim.

Vers. 6. The issue which thou hast gotten after them, &c. 1. This is to be understood, [illegible] permissely, which thou maiest get afterward: for the Scripture maketh no mention of [illegible] sonnes, beside these two, that Ioseph had at this present. Iun. Mercer. as also it might be uncertaine, whether Iosephs wife, were at this time with childe, Mercer. 2. The other sonnes should be more properly Iosephs, yet so as that they should make no tribe of themselves, but be accounted with Manasseh and Ephraim, Iun. 3. They are deceived, which thinke that Machir and Galaad of Manasseh, and other of Ephraim, were those other sonnes of Ioseph, for they are his nephewes, and Manasseh and Ephraim were their fathers, not their brethren: also some thinke, that if Ioseph had begotten any other sonnes, they should have had no inheritance in Canaan: but this is not like, seeing they came of Iacob, whose [illegible] seed was chosen: likewise whether Ioseph had afterward any other sonnes, it is uncertaine: it is likely he had not, because no mention is made of them in Scripture: neither doth it much skill, seeing they were to be annexed and incorporate into these two tribes of their brethren, Mercer.

QUEST. III. Why Iacob maketh mention of the death and buriall of Rachel.

Vers. 7. I Buried in the way to Ephrath. 1. Iacob maketh mention of the death and buriall of [illegible] 1. Not to answer a secret objection, why he buried not Rachel in the double cave with his fathers, as he himselfe desired to be buried, and thereupon tooke an oath of Ioseph: because she died suddenly in the way, and he had no time to carry her thither, being in his journey: Iacob had no need to make any such excuse to Ioseph, ex Mercer. 2. But these reasons may be yeelded, why Iacob bringeth mention hereof. 1. To call to Iosephs remembrance, that Rachel forsooke her fathers house, and [illegible] ned with Iacob in Canaan: that Ioseph might hereby be stirred up to be willing much more to leave Egypt which was not his country, Calvin. 2. As also that hee might have a greater desire to the place of his mothers sepulture. 3. Further, in that Iacob buryed her in the way, being so neare to the city, because he would not bury her among Idolaters: by the way he admonisheth Ioseph to detest the Idolatry of Egypt. 4. But the cheifest reasons of the mentioning of this matter are; one, that seeing Rachel died, leaving no great issue behinde her, Iacob hopeth that Gods promise for the multiplying of his seed should be fulfilled in these two, Mercer. The other, that seeing Ioseph was the eldest by his principall wife, Iacob might shew how justly the birth-right was translated from Ruben to Iosephs sonnes, Iun.

QUEST. IV. Why Iacob knew not Ephraim and Manasseh at the first, and why Ioseph removeth them.

Vers. 12. AND Ioseph tooke them away from his knees. 1. Whereas Iacob before vers. 8. asked who they were, namely Manasseh and Ephraim; it was not for that, Iacob foreseeing, that [illegible] ked Ieroboam should come of Ephraim, and Iehu of Manasseh, did therefore at the first take no knowledge of them, but deferred his blessing, as some Hebrewes imagine; but the cause is shewed, [illegible] because Iacobs eies were dim, and he could not well see. 2. Iacob caused them to be brought neere him that he might imbrace them: they were not set upon the bed, for they were some 22. or 23. yeares old, being borne in the yeares of plenty, some 4. or 5. yeares before Iacob came downe into Egypt, who had beene there now 17. yeares. 3. Ioseph tooke them not from his owne knees, but from his fathers, as the [illegible] tine text readeth, though in the originall it be from his knees, not his fathers knees: that he might place them in order, to receive their fathers blessing, Mercer. for Ioseph might perceive, either by the [illegible] of Ephraim before Manasseh. or by Iacobs imbracing them, that he more inclined to Ephraim before Manasseh: and therefore with Iacobs leave removeth a little, and presenteth them againe according to [illegible] age, Iun.

QUEST. V. Of the translating of the birth-right from Manasseh to Ephraim what it signifieth.

Vers. 14. ISrael stretched out his right hand, and laid it upon Ephraims head. 1. Iacob seeling with [illegible] hands, which was the elder and bigger (for the words are he crossed his hands) [illegible] of purpose laid his right hand upon Ephraim, in signe of preheminence, Iun. for although among the Persians the left hand was the more honourable place, as Xenophon reporteth of Cyrus, that those [illegible] honoured most, he placed at his left hand, because it was most subject to danger: yet the phrase of Scripture is otherwise: as Salomon caused his mother to sit upon his right hand, 1 King. 2. And this is agreeable to nature, to give the preheminence to the right hand, which is quicker & nimbler, and readier [illegible]

2. Iacob here transferreth the birthright from Manasseh to Ephraim, as it was before conveyed from Esau to Iacob: as the priesthood was translated from Abiathar to Zadock; the regall dignitie from Saul to David; so here there is a translation of the birthright. 3. Which as it sheweth, that God useth his gifts without respect of persons: so it might prefigure the calling of the Gentiles in stead of the Iewes, who were as the eldest brother, as the parable of the prodigall childe sheweth, Luke 15.

QUEST. VI. The Angell that protected Iacob, whether hee were Christ.

Vers. 16. The Angell. 1. Although it bee somewhat too curious out of this place to prove the Trinitie, because God is twice mentioned, and the Angell in the third place: 2. Yet I thinke rather with Calvin and Iunius, that the Angell was Christ, than with Mercerus, that it was an Angell, to whom Iacob ascribeth his deliverance, as to Gods ministers: and that for these reasons: 1. Because it is usuall in scripture to call Christ an Angell, Malach. 3.1. 2. The Angell which conducted the Israelites is called Iehovah, Exod. 14.19, 24. Saint Paul saith he was Christ, 1 Cor. 10.4, 9. 3. Because Christ is the Mediatour from the beginning of reconciliation, and of all those covenants made betweene God and man, Calvin. 4. In this place this Angell is joyned in equall power of blessing with God, and therefore cannot be any of the created Angels, Iun. 5. Though Christ appeared in the forme and shape of an Angell, yet hee tooke not upon him the nature of Angels, but of man: as the Angels appeared in the forme of men, yet tooke not their nature, Calvin.

QUEST. VII. The great increase of Ephraim and Manasseh.

Vers. 16. In thee Israel shall blesse, &c. 1. Here Israel is taken not for the proper name of Iacob, but for the name of the whole nation that came of him: which hee saw by the spirit of prophecie would be given to his posteritie. 2. In thee, is not here taken casually, as the Lord said to Abraham, in thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed: for Christ of Abraham was the cause and author of this blessing. But it is only a forme of blessing, which should be taken up in Israel: the Lord blesse thee as Ephraim and Manasseh: as the like is used, Ruth 4.11. The Lord make the wife that commeth into thy house like Rachel and Leah. And indeed Ephraim and Manasseh increased abundantly in Egypt, even as the fish, as Iacob foretold: for at the going forth of Israel out of Egypt, there were of Manasseh, 42700. of Ephraim, 40500. and all these perishing in the wildernesse, there were at their entring into Canaan, of Ephraim, 42500. of Manasseh, 32200. Munsterus. so that in the space of 215. yeares there sprang out of Ioseph 75200.

QUEST. VIII. What portion of ground it was that Iacob giveth to Ioseph.

Vers. 22. I have given unto thee one portion above thy brethren. 1. This portion was Sechem, which neither is to bee understood spiritually, that as Iacob gave Ioseph that place, where hee buried the gods, Gen. 35.4. So Christ should possesse the Gentiles, that worshipped Idols, so Augustine. qu. in Genes. 2. Neither was it the citie only of Sechem, which Iacob here giveth, as Chrysost. hom. 67. in Ioan. For Iacobs sons kept their sheep in Sechem, Gen. 37.12. and so also possessed the grounds and fields belonging to the citie. 3. Neither did hee only give that plat of ground, which hee bought for 100. pieces of money, Gen. 33.19. as Hierom. traditions. Hebraic. For that seemed to be no great circuit bought for so little, Calvin. 4. Neither was this portion a severall lot to Ioseph, beside the portion that afterwards fell unto Ephraim and Manasseh in the division of the land: for they had it in their lot, Iosu. 24.32. Theodoret. 5. Wherefore this portion given to Ioseph, was both the citie Sechem, and territorie adjoyning, whereof mention is made, Iohn 4.5. For though Sechem bee not here a proper name, as the Septuag. read, because of the word, achad, one, that is joyned with it, (for there was but one Sechem) yet in this word, which signifieth a part or portion, there is a fit allusion also to the place it selfe, which Iacob meaneth.

QUEST. IX. How Iacob is said to have gotten Sechem by his sword and bow.

Vers. 22. Which I got out of the hand of the Amorite by my sword and bow. 1. Neither is this understood of the violent taking of the citie by the sword of Simeon and Levi, which Iacob disliked in his act, because his familie assisted them, and for his cause God spared them, Euseb. Chron. Nor Iacob afterward accursed them for this cruell act; and professed that hee no waies consented unto it: into their secret let not my soule come, Gen. 49.6. 2. Nor yet by the sword and bow Iacobs inuocation is understood, whereby hee was delivered, Hierom. or his Praiers, as the Chaldee: for we must not flie unto metaphors and figures, where the historicall and literall sense may serve. 4. It is a vaine and forced interpretation, that Iacob got it by his sword, that is, by his money, which he by his labour gathered, Hierom. 5. And to applie it by the figure prolepsis to the time following, when the Israelites expelled the Canaanites by force, as Iunius doth, is not to fit: for this had beene no gift at all: and beside Iacob had already possession of Sechem in Canaan, and so might dispose of it, either because it fell to the lot and share of Ephraim and Manasses, is it said to be given to Ioseph: for Ioseph had a peculiar right in it, and therefore was suffered there. 7. Some by the sword and bow expound the favour and grace which Iacob found with Hamor, to buy the ground for so little money; for grace and favour are two contrarie things. 8. Some thinke that Iacob used some ceremonie by the use of arrow, and holding out a sword, as Ioas did in the presence of Elisha, 2 King. 9. so giving possession of that countrie: But Iacob speaketh of the time past, which I have gotten, not any thing then presently. 9. Some thinke that Iacob did indeed some such exploit by force of armes against the foe, as Abraham did against the foure kings, Genes. 14. though it be not expressed, Cajetane, Andre. But where the scripture sufficeth, we need not devise unwritten stories. 10. Wherefore I expound this this place by that, Gen. 35. vers. 5. where after that the Sichemites were destroyed, and Iacob at God's appointment removed to Bethel, God sent a feare upon the cities round about, that they durst not encounter with Iacob and his familie: who as is most like, stood upon their guard, and armed themselves, ready to have resisted their enemies, if they had assaulted them: And by this meanes, because Iacob held possession of Sechem, as it were, by warlike policie, the Lord causing the Canaanites to feare his force and valour, he is said to have gotten it by his sword and bow, Lyran. following R. Salomon, Mercer. which I take to be the most proper exposition.

QUEST. X. How Iacob is said to have gotten Sechem out of the hand of the Amorite.

Vers. 22. WHich I gat out of the hand of the Amorite: whereas Hemor the Lord of Sichem was an Hivite, Genes. 34. 2. the question is, how Iacob is said to have gotten Sechem out of the hand of the Amorite: for the satisfaction whereof; 1. Neither was Sechem the sonne of Hemor an Amorite of his father, for Hemor beginneth with the Hebrew letter cheth: Amorite with ain. 2. Neither need we suppose, that Iacob after he had bought a peece of ground of Hemor, did afterward inlarge it by expelling the Amorites, as Masius, there being no such expressed in the story. 3. Neither yet with Pererius are we forced to say, that all the Canaanites were called Amorites. 4. But it is most like, that the Hivites and Amorites were mixed together, and that the denomination is taken from the Amorite, as the more valiant people, Mercer. this also confirmeth our former exposition, that Iacob in saying, which I gat by my sword and bow, out of the hand of the Amorite, meaneth not the surprising of the Sichemites by Simeon and Levi, for they were Hivites, not Amorites, but rather the keeping of that possession afterwards from the Amorites, which inhabited other cities adjoyning, who would have invaded Iacob, but that the feare of God came upon them, that they durst attempt nothing against Iacob and his, whom they held to be men of valour.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. Ministers have no power in themselves to blesse, but onely in Gods name.

Vers. 16. THe Angel blessed the children: Iacob taketh not upon him to blesse in his owne name, but as a Minister onely and pronouncer of the blessing, desireth God to blesse the children: Ministers then have no power actually in themselves to blesse or curse, but onely as instruments and messengers, they pronounce the sentence of blessing or cursing in the name of God: so that as the Apostle saith, he that planteth is nothing, nor he that watereth, but God that giveth the increase, 1 Cor. 3. 7. Calvin.

2. Doct. God bestoweth his gifts freely, without respect to our worthinesse.

Vers. 19. HIs younger brother shall be greater than he: Ephraim is preferred before his elder brother Manasseh, and therefore his tribe beareth the name of his father Ioseph. Apocalyp. 7. 8. whereas Manasses tribe is rehearsed under his owne name: so was Abel preferred before Cain; Isaac before Ismael, Iacob before Esau: this was not for any worthinesse in Ephraim, more than in Manasseh: for wicked Ieroboam, that caused Israel to sinne, came of Ephraim: but that we should know that all is of God's grace, without any respect unto mens worke: as the Scripture saith, I will have mercy on him, to whom I will shew mercy, Rom. 9. 15.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. Against the vulgar Latine translation.

Vers. 12. IOseph did reverence downe to the ground. If Ioseph did shew such great reverence to his father in bowing himselfe downe to the ground: it is not like that Iacob adored or worshipped the rod and scepter of Ioseph, thereby giving honour to his sonne, as the blinde Latine translation readeth Hebr. 11. 21. see before, Chap. 47. confut. 1.

2. Confut. Against the superstitious use of the signe of the crosse.

Vers. 14. DIvelling his hands of purpose, &c. Hence Perer. noteth, that Iacob of purpose layed his hands acrosse, to prefigure the mystery of the crosse, whereby the Gentiles, as the younger brothers, were preferred before their elder brothers the Iewes, in Genes. 48. Numer. 7.

Contra. 1. Iacob had no such intendment to prefigure the signe of the crosse, but as the present occasion was offered, because Ioseph had so placed his sonnes, he could not otherwise, but by crossing his armes, lay his right hand upon Ephraims head: so that Ephraim was not preferred to the right hand, because Iacob would lay his hands acrosse, but Iacob did lay his hands acrosse, because Ephraim was to be preferred. 2. Although the fathers did beleeve in the Messiah to come; yet we finde not that they had so particular a knowledge, as to describe the very fashion of the crosse, on which Christ suffered.

3. Confut. Against the invocation of Saints.

Vers. 16. LEt my name be named upon them: This maketh nothing for the popish invocation of Saints. Iacob meaneth not, that they should call upon his name, but should in the world be called by his name; as the like phrase is used before, vers. 6. they shall be called after the names of their brethren, as the women are said to be called by their husbands name, Isay 4. 2. Neither doe we reade, that ever the Israelites made their prayers to Abraham, Isaack, and Iacob, Mercer.

6. Places of morall observation.

1. Mor. God granteth beyond our hope.

Gen. 48. 11. I had not thought to have seene thy face: yet lo God hath shewed me thy seed: thus God dealeth most liberally with his children, granting them many things, beyond and above their hope, as the prophet David confesseth: thou diddest prevent him with blessings: he asked life of thee, and thou gavest him a long life for ever, and ever, Psalm. 12. 3, 4.

2. Mor. To submit our naturall affections to the will of God.

Gen. 48. 19. His younger brother. Although Iacobs naturall affection, might be inclined, as well as Iosephs, to the elder, yet he submitteth his affection to the will of God, who had given Ephraim the preheminence: so Abraham cast out Hagar and her sonne, because God so commanded, although it was grievous unto him, Genes. 21. 12, 14. so we must learne to conforme our wills and affections to the will of God.

3. Mor. Gods promise dieth not with his servants.

Gen. 48. 21. Behold I die, and God shall be with you: though Iacob died, yet the promise of God died not: the death of Gods saints though it be grievous to the Church, yet it cannot hinder Gods worke, Calvin. but as it is in the Psal. instead of thy fathers, thou shalt have children, whom thou maiest make princes, &c. Psal. 45. 16. God can raise up others instead of his faithfull servants deceased.

6. Places of more all obiect Pastors.

1. Mor. God provideth beyond our hope.

I Hadest thou hope to have seene thy face: yet lo God hath shewed mercy to me: thus God dealeth most liberally with his children, granting them many things, beyond and above their hope, as the prophet David confesseth: thou hadst preserve him with blessings: he asked life of thee, and thou gauest him a long life for ever, and ever, Psalm. 21. 3, 4.

2. Mor. To submit our naturall affections to the will of God.

Hypocrite brother. Although Jacob naturall affection, might be inclined as well as Esau to the elder, yet he submitteth his affection to the will of God, who had given the Birthright: so Abraham cast out Hagar and her sonne, because God so commanded: although she was previous unto him, Gen. 21. 13, 14. so we must learne to conforme our will and affections to the will of God.

3. Mor. God promise doth not rob by warrant.

Behold I die, and God shall be with you: though Jacob die, yet the promise of God shall not die: the death of Gods saints though it be grievous to the Church, yet is cannot hinder Gods purpose. Calvin. but as it is in the Psal. the head of thy fathers, thou shalt have children, whom thou maiest appoint, &c. Psal. 45. 16. God can raise up others instead of his faithfull servants deceased.

To the right reverend Fathers in God, TOBIE, L. Bishop of Duresme, and MARTIN, L. Bishop of Elie.

RIght Reverend Fathers, among other honorable Friends, whom I have remembred in this worke, I thought it not fit in silence to passe by your Lordships: of whose humanity, humilitie, and love, especially toward Ministers and Preachers of the word, as of the one I have had a liberall proofe, so of the other, I have found a comfortable experience: that unto you both fitly agreeth S. Pauls description of a Bishop, that he should be gentle, and Chap. XLIX.

1. The Method and Argument of the Chapter.

This chapter containeth the last will and testament of Iacob: whereof there are two parts: the first concerneth his sonnes, to vers. 29. the second, himselfe and his buriall, vers. 29. to the end.

In the first part, Iacobs sonnes are partly censured and accursed. Ruben is deprived of the birth-right and dignitie, because of his incest, vers. 3, 4. Simeon and Levi are divided in Israel, because of their cruelty against the Sichemites, to vers. 8.

Partly, they are blessed, more principally, Iudah, with preheminence over his bre- [illegible] 8. strength against his enemies, vers. 9. stabilitie and continuance of his regiment, vers. 10. [illegible] ptie, vers. 11. Ioseph, who is blessed with strength and valour against his enemies, vers. 23, 24. [illegible] the Author is God; vers. 25. and with a fruitfull countrie, vers. 26.

[illegible] principally are blessed all the other sonnes of Iacob, which are in number seven, Zebulun, vers. 13. [illegible] 15. Dan, vers. 16, 17. Gad, vers. 19. Asher, vers. 20. Nephtali, vers. 20. Benjamin, vers. 27.

In the second part, Iacob 1. Chargeth his sonnes to burie him with his fathers, vers. 29. 2. The place is [illegible] by the situation, vers. 30. by the persons there buried, vers. 31. by the parties of whom it was [illegible], vers. 32. 3. Then Iacob dieth quietly and in peace.

1. The diuers readings.

[illegible] the beginning of my sorrow. H. the beginning of my sonnes. S. the beginning of my strength. cat. non, signi- [illegible] strength and sorrow. H.S.c.

lots. S. Isachar rich in substance, and his possession betweene the bounds. C. Isachar a strong asse, couching betweene two burthens. B. G. T. mishphath, a bound, a lot, a burthen.

C.cor. S.cor. v.15. Hee saw his rest, that it was good, &c. and he shall make the provinces of the people subject. C. he saw that rest is good, and that the land is pleasant: cat.

Hee became an husband-man. S. he shalbe subject to tribute: cat. mas, signifieth tribute and making, and it maketh men to waste and drink.

Ch.c. v.16. The Chalde thus maketh a paraphrase upon this verse: from the house of Dan shall be chosen a man, in his time shall the people be delivered: the rest agree in the common translation.

C.c. v.17. The Chalde also thus readeth: There shall a man arise of Dan, whose feare shall fall upon the people, he shall strike the Philistims, &c.

C.c. v.18. Is thus interpreted: I looke not for the salvation of Gedeon, the sonne of Ioas, which is a temporall salvation, nor the salvation of Sampson, but I looke for the redemption of Christ, the sonne of David, &c. C.

C.H.S.cor. v.19. The campe of armed men shall come out of the house of Gad, and passe over Iordan to battell before their brethren, and with much substance shall they returne. C. Gad, a tentation shall tempt him, but he shall overcome him neare the foet. S. Gad being girded, shall fight before him, and he shall be girded backward. H. Gad, an hoast of men shall overcome him, but he shall overcome at the last: cat.

C.cor. v.20. The land of Aser is excellent, and he shall be nourished with the delights of Kings. C. Aser, his bread shall be fat, and he shall yeeld pleasures for a King: cat.

C.c. v.21. Nepthali, his lot shall fall in a good ground, &c. they shall praise and blesse over them. C. Nepthali, a trunke, or post, (remissus) sent backe, sending forth beautie in the branch. S. Nepthali, as an hinde let loose, sent forth, giving goodly words: cat. ajal, signifieth an hart, and a post: vomer, a word amis, an hinde.

S. which was a Nazarite, or separate among his brethren: cat. nazar to separate.

S.mut.pers. H.det. v.27. In the land of Benjamin shall dwell the majestie of the temple, and in the possession thereof, the sanctuary. evening and morning shall the Priests offer sacrifices, and in the evening they shall divide the rest, &c. the rest agree in the vulgar reading.

v.31. There they buried Leah: S. there Leah lyeth buried. H. there I buried Leah: cat.

v.32. The possession of the field and cave therein, of the sonnes of Heth. S.T. the purchase of the field, &c. of the sonnes of Heth. B.G.C.P. chanah, sig. both to possesse, & purchase: this verse is omitted in the vulgar Latine.

3. The Explanation of doubtfull questions.

Quest. 1. Of the prophetie all testament or Iacobs in generall.

Vers. 1. THen Iacob called his sonnes, &c. 1. Iacob not by any naturall instinct (as some hold as opinion that the soule is more divine, and apter to foretell things to come, when death approcheth, as Xenophon reporteth of Cyrus, lib. 8. Plato of Socrates, in apolog.) but by a divine inspiration doth prophesie what shall befall his children: as Isaack did blesse his two sonnes, Gen. 27. Moses the tribes of Israel, Deut. 33. David blessed Salomon, 1 Chron. 29. our blessed Saviour praied for his disciples immediately before his death, Ioan. 17. Peter.

2. Iacob doth not blesse all his children, three of them he censureth for their sinne: Ruben, Simeon, Levi: but Moses blesseth all the tribes, Deuter. 33. the cause is not, as R. Salomon imagineth, that Iacob purposed to blesse all, but being forsaken of Gods spirit, and beside himselfe, he falleth into a fit of prophesie: which were impious to thinke, Peter.

3. Some make question, whether Iacob spake these words, or Moses rather so penned them, as his owne. But it is more like, that Iacob being moved by the spirit, spake after this concise manner as a prophet, though not altogether in the same forme of words.

4. S

4. Some doe wonder how Moſes ſhould come by the knowledge of theſe words, which Iacob ſpake 400. yeares before to his ſonnes in a corner: they may as well muſe how Moſes ſhould deſcribe the particular places of the land of Canaan, which hee never ſaw, and ſet downe the hiſtorie of the creation: which things Moſes might have by godly tradition, but moſt of all by the revelation of the ſpirit, Calvin.

How Moſes came to the knowledge of Iacobs will.

5. Ioſephus is too ſlender in the reporting of this propheticall ſpeech of Iacob, making onely mention thereof in generall, that he prophefied how his children ſhould inherit the land of Canaan, lib. 2. anti-quit. Some other have beene too bold, to forge other fables upon this occaſion: as Origen maketh mention of a booke entituled, The narration of Ioſeph the ſonne of Iacob, tom. 2. in Ioann. out of the which he cites certaine teſtimonies to prove the incarnation of Angels; and the prognoſtication of things done in the world by the ſtarres: but Athanaſius, in Synopſ. holdeth this to be a forged booke: ſo is that other, called, Teſtament of the twelve Patriarkes, mentioned by Origen, hom. 15. in Ioſua. ex Perer. Some alſo of our own have beene too bold, in allegorizing Iacobs words, whereas the literall and hiſtoricall ſenſe is full enough, and containeth excellent matter, Calvin.

Iacobs teſtament depraved and abuſed.

QUEST. II. What laſt times Iacob ſpeaketh of.

Gather your ſelves, &c. I will tell you what ſhall come in the laſt daies. 2. He calleth all his children to the preſent, who were not all before aſſembled, when Iacob bleſſed Ephraim and Manaſſeh: and he draweth them up alſo to attention, to conſider diligently what he ſaith, Mercer. 2. We need not with Iunius, by Iacobs ſonnes to underſtand his ſpirituall ſeed, the Churchof Chriſt: ſeeing this prophecie was literally accompliſhed in his carnall ofspring. 3. By the laſt daies wee underſtand not onely the times of the Meſſiah, as David Kimhi, Hierome and Lyranus will have it alwaies taken in the prophets: for ſometime it betokeneth the age next enſuing: as Dan. 2. 28. God ſheweth the King what ſhall be in the latter daies: that is, verſ. 29. what ſhall come to paſſe afterward: ſome part of his dreame fell out in the latter times and age after Nabuchadnezzar: Like as then in this place Iacob ſpeaketh of the comming of the Meſſiah, verſ. 10. ſo alſo he propeſieth of the diviſion of the land of Canaan among his ſonnes, that came to paſſe 215. yeares after, Perer. Iun. and therefore Iunius interpreteth the word acharith, in the times following, that is, afterwards. 4. But Iſidorus Peluſiota is much deceived, who writeth, lib. 1. epiſt. 365. that whereas Iacob intended to declare to his ſonnes the myſterie of the incarnation of Chriſt, becauſe they were unworthy to heare it, God turned his minde, that he forgot what he purpoſed to ſay, and told them of things paſt, in ſtead of things to come: to this purpoſe to prove the alteration and change of Iacobs intention, he wreſteth that ſaying of Eſay 40. 27. why ſayeſt thou O Iacob my way is hid from the Lord, my judgement is paſſed over of my God. Contra. 1. The Prophet ſpeaketh this not of the perſon, but of the people and poſteritie of Iacob. 2. Iacob here doth reveale to his ſonnes the myſterie of the Meſſiah. 3. And all of Iacobs ſpeech is propheticall of the times to come: he onely in foure of them remembreth things paſt and paſt, in Ruben, Simeon, Levi, and ſomewhat of Ioſeph, ex Perer.

The laſt times, how taken in Scripture.

QUEST. III. Of Rubens prerogatives.

Ruben the beginning of my ſtrength, &c. 1. This is the firſt effect of his ſtrength, Iun. whom he begot in the ſtrength of his yeares, Perer. as the Septuag. expound, the beginning of my ſonnes: The Latine tranſlator is deceived, that readeth the beginning of my ſorrow: which ſome underſtand, of the ſorrow of travell in the firſt borne: ſome, of the Parents care, when he beginneth to have children: ſome, of his fathers grieſe, becauſe of his inceſt: but this varietie of expoſition ariſeth of the miſtaking of the word, aon, which here ſignifieth ſtrength, not ſorrow, as it is taken, Deut. 21. 21. 3. The excellencie of dignitie, the excellencie of power: ſome underſtand theſe words generally of Rubens dignitie, Mercer. The Caldee intimateth three privileges due to the firſt borne, the kingdome, the birth-right, the prieſthood. Hierom by dignitie underſtandeth his double part, or gifts; by power, his command over his brethren: or by dignitie rather, he meaneth, his preeminence over his brethren, which is conueied to Iudah: by power, his double part, which belonged to the eldeſtſhip, beſtowed upon Ioſeph, Iun.

Of Ruben.

QUEST. IIII. How Ruben is ſaid to be light like water.

Light as water, thou ſhalt not be excellent. 1. Some underſtand this lightneſſe as water, of Rubens intemperancie, that his luſt carried him away as water, Hierom. Mercer. 2. But it is better referred to the loſſe of his dignitie: that as water runneth to the lower parts, Toſtat. and being powred out leaveth nothing behind in the veſſell, as oile and wine doth, Lyran. ſo he was fallen from his dignitie and birth-right, Iun. 3. As the next word giveth this ſenſe: thou ſhalt not be excellent, or increaſe: the tribe of Ruben did performe no excellent or worthy exploit: Deborah reproveth them for their ſlowardneſſe, Iud. 5. 15. and Ruben was but ſmall in number, in reſpect of other tribes, Deuteron. 33. 6.

QUEST. V. How Ruben is ſaid to aſcend or goe up to his fathers bed, and the divers expoſitions thereof.

How diddeſt defile my bed, &c. We need not to enforce here a myſticall ſenſe, either with Ambroſe, to applie it to the Jewes, who inſulted againſt Chriſts humanitie, which was as the bed of the Godhead, or defiled Gods bed: or with Ruffinus, that they profaned the law by the which God as it were dwelled with them; by corrupting it with their gloſſes, by preferring the carnall rites thereof before the grace of Chriſt: or with the ordinarie gloſſe by Ruben to underſtand the Angels, which waxed inſolent againſt God, and ſo were caſt out of heaven as water: or with Rupertus to expound it of heretikes, who with corrupt doctrine defile the Church the habitation of God. 2. And concerning the literall ſenſe of theſe words: 1. Neither doe we read, thou haſt defiled my bed by going up: for gnulah, is not the infinitive, but the preter tenſe, Mercer. 2. Neither is the meaning thy dignitie is gone: for the word ieiſugni hath a ſervile accent, that joyneth it with the word following, Mercer. 3. Nor yet, in ſaying, my bed is gone up or aſcended; is the meaning that Iacob forſooke his bed, and never lay with Bilha more, as Kimhi: or that the dignitie and honour of his bed was gone, Mercer. For the word gnalah is perſonally uſed before of Ruben, not really of the bed. 4. Therefore as before hee ſaid in the ſecond perſon, Thou wenteſt up to thy fathers bed; ſo here in the third perſon he ſpeaketh to his ſonnes in deteſtation of this fact, He aſcended, or went up to my bed, Iun.

QUEST. VI. Simeon and Levi how ſaid to be brethren.

Verſ. 5. Simeon and Levi brethren. 1. Not ſo much brethren by nature, as in this their evill purpoſe: theſe two were thought to be the principall contrivers of Ioſephs death, if the reſt would have conſented: ſome thinke that theſe two tribes put Chriſt to death, Iudas of Simeon, the Prieſts of Levi. Mercer. Though the reſt of Iacobs ſonnes conſented to this action, yet Simeon and Levi are named as chiefe. 2. They are ſaid to be cruell inſtruments in their compacts, for ſo the word mechereth is beſt interpreted of carah to buy or bargaine, than for their habitations, as Mercer. or ſwords, (as Hieron. as before is ſhewed) becauſe they made a ſubtill agreement with the Sichemites, Iun. And this ſeemeth to bee the meaning of the Septuagint, who thus read, They have finiſhed the iniquitie of their purpoſe invention.

Of Simeon and Levi.

3. Their cruell and unjuſt enterpriſe herein appeareth: 1. That the ſlaughter of the Sichemites was made againſt the peace and covenant concluded. 2. They made a fraudulent league, having no purpoſe to keepe it. 3. They diſhonoured their owne profeſſion, killing thoſe which were contented to be circumciſed. 4. And at that time, when they were ſore of cutting, and to be pitied. 5. They put not Sichem alone to the ſword, who had offended, but all the reſt of the Citie that were innocent. 6. They were not content with the ſlaughter of men, but made a ſpoile and havocke of the Citie, Perer.

The greatneſſe of the ſinne of Simeon and Levi.

QUEST. VII. What Iacob meaneth by his glorie.

Verſ. 6 My glorie, bee not thou joyned with their aſſembly. 1. Some by glorie underſtand good name and fame; ſome the ſoule, the glorie of the body, Mercer. But it rather here betokeneth the tongue, which is the inſtrument of praiſe and glorie, as it is taken Pſal. 30. 16. there the word translated tongue, is in the originall chebodh, glorie: ſo that the meaning is, that as hee gave no conſent unto them in his heart, ſo neither would he afford that action any approbation with his tongue, Muſcul. Iun. 2. R. Salomon expoundeth the firſt clauſe, into their ſecret let not my ſoule come, of Zimri his uncleane act who was of Simeon, that in ſecret companied with Cozbi, Numb. 2. and the other of Core his rebellious aſſemblies, Numb. 16. who was of Levi: but it is more properly referred to the time paſt, concerning the cruell exploit of Simeon and Levi, Perer.

QUEST. VIII. Whether Simeon and Levi digged downe a wall, killed, or haughed the ox.

Verſ. 6. In their ſelfe-will they digged downe a wall. 1. Some read, they haughed a bull, Septuag. or carried away their oxen, Iun. They which follow this reading, ſome referre it to Sichem, who was the principall man whom they ſlue: ſome underſtand it of Ioſeph, who is compared to a bullock Deut. 33. 17. the ſame word ſhor is there uſed, Tharg. Hieroſ. becauſe Simeon and Levi are held to be ring-leaders in that conſpiracie againſt Ioſeph: for they were of the elder ſort, not the younger brethren that would have had Ioſeph killed: now Ruben and Iudah, the firſt and the fourth ſonnes, conſented to kill him: therefore it is moſt like, that Simeon and Levi were the authors; for which cauſe ſome thinke, that Ioſeph afterward cauſed Simeon to be bound in Egypt: but this expoſition agreeth not with the former clauſe, in their wrath they ſlue a man: for Ioſeph was not killed. Iunius ſeemeth to underſtand it of the ſpoile of the Citie, and carrying away of their cattell; but that ſeemeth to have been ſpoken rather of Iacobs ſonnes, than of Simeon and Levi, Gen. 34. 28. 2. Mercer, Muſculus, Calvin thinke it to bee the better reading, they digged thorow a wall: Of which reading theſe reaſons may bee given. 1. Becauſe this was a more peculiar and proper act of their rage, than to carrie away their oxen, which proceeded of a covetous, rather than irefull minde. 2. Though this be not directly expreſſed, yet the words inſinuate as much, they went into the citie boldly, Gen. 34. 25. that is, breaking into the citie violently, and over throwing the wals before them, Perer. 3. Though ſhor, the word here uſed, ſignifie an oxe, ſhur, a wall; yet ſchurech may bee put for cholem, as the Chalde Interpreter readeth, ſhur, & the word ghaear, to root or pull up, properly underſtood of plants, Eccleſ. 3. 2. is more fitly by a metaphor applyed to the rooting up of cities, Zephan. 2. 4. than unto cattell and living things.

3. But theſe reaſons notwithſtanding I rather preferre the reading of the Septuagint: they houghed an oxe or bull: for ſhor, the word here uſed, ſignifieth an oxe, c. 32. 5. Deut. 33. 17. the word ſhur is a wall: neither needed they to have undermined the wals, the citie being ſecure, and the gates open unto them: the word ghakar is gnakar, ſignifieth to hough or cut ſinewes, as Ioſh. 11. 6. Ioſhua is bidden of the Lord to hough the Canaanites horſe: it ſeemeth in their furie, that they abuſed the dumb beaſts, as Balaam in his rage threatned, if he had had a ſword, to have killed his Aſſe, Numb. 22. 29. now in that act not mentioned before in the ſtorie, it need not ſeeme ſtrange in all matters and circumſtances of fact the Scripture uſeth not to expreſſe, as that of Iacobs concerning the Amorites, with the ſword & bow.

QUEST. IX. How Simeon and Levi were divided in Iſrael.

Verſ. 7. I will divide them in Iacob. 1. Iacob appointeth a puniſhment anſwerable to the offence: for before they conſpired together to doe miſchiefe, ſo now they ſhall be ſeparated and divided. Iun. 2. Which accordingly came to paſſe; for Simeon had no poſſeſſion or inheritance by himſelfe, but intermingled with Iudah, Ioſ. 19. and were conſtrained afterward by force of armes to inlarge their bounds, 1 Chron. 4. 41. Iun. Some thinke that the poore Scribes which were diſperſed in Iſrael came of Simeon, Tharg. Hieroſ. But certaine it is, that it was a baſe and contemptible tribe in reſpect of the reſt for which cauſe Moſes omitteth it in his bleſſing, Deut. 33. Mercer. rather than for that Simeon was cruell againſt the Sichemites, for then Levi ſhould have beene omitted alſo: or becauſe Simeon was the chiefe in the conſpiracie againſt Ioſeph, or becauſe Iudas Iſcariot came of Simeon, for both theſe are uncertaine: or for that Zimri of Simeon lately had committed ſuch an uncleane act, as Perer. 3. Levi alſo was divided in Iſrael: they had no certaine inheritance, but only certaine cities allotted unto them among the reſt of the tribes, to the number of 48. Ioſ. 21. they alſo went wandring up and downe the tribes, to gather the tithes of their maintenance, Mercer. 4. Yet God, who could bring light out of darkneſſe, turned this, which at the firſt was ordained for a puniſhment, to a bleſſing; for the calling of the Levites was honourable to themſelves, and everie one was glad to entertaine them: it was alſo profitable to others for their inſtruction, Calvin. 5. This prophecie againſt Simeon and Levi is not unfitly by Ambroſe, Raſh. Reperi. applyed againſt the Scribes & Prieſts that put Chriſt to death; for by this means the wals of Ieruſalem were digged down & overthrown, & the Jewes are diſperſed in the world to this day, Perer.

QUEST. X. Of the preeminence of Iudah.

Verſ. 8. Thy brethren ſhall praiſe thee, &c. 1. Though Iudah alſo was faultie concerning Thamar, yet Iacob paſſeth over his offences, and of the reſt of his ſons touching onely the moſt notorious crimes among the reſt, as of Ruben, Simeon, Levi, Muſcul. 2. In ſaying, Thy brethren ſhall praiſe thee, he alludeth to the name of Iudah, ſo called by Leah, of jadah, to praiſe, becauſe ſhee had occaſion thereby to praiſe the Lord: and now his brethren ſhall magnifie and praiſe him, Iun. The Chalde readeth, Thou haſt confeſſed, and waſt not aſhamed: which ſome underſtand of Iudah his delivering of Ioſeph, or of his acquiring of Thamar: but the other reading is more proper. 3. Iacob propheſieth foure things of Iudah: 1. His principalitie over his brethren, verſ. 8. 2. His victorie over his enemies, verſ. 9. 3. The ſtabilitie and continuance of his kingdome under the Meſſiah, verſ. 10. 4. His outward plentie and proſperitie, verſ. 11. 4. Thy fathers ſonnes ſhall bow downe, &c. Though Ioſeph for the time preſent had the temporall honour, yet the perpetuall preeminence is given to Iudah: ſo that hence it appeareth why the Lord was angrie with the people for deſiring a King, becauſe the time was not yet come when God purpoſed to exalt Iudah: and for the ſame cauſe the Kingdome of Saul, of Benjamin, not of Iudah, proſpered not, Calvin. 5. This authoritie of Iudah over his brethren tooke beginning, Iudg. 1. when the tribe of Iudah was appointed to be as the Captaine to the reſt after Ioſua his departure, but it was more fully accompliſhed in David and Salomon; and moſt of all in Chriſt, of David, of whoſe kingdome ſhall be none end, Iun. 6. Although the ten tribes did revolt from Iudah, yet the right of the kingdome remained with Iudah ſtill: which continued, notwithſtanding it was often by Iſrael impugned, when the other was diſſolved, Calvin.

QUEST. XI. Of the explication of the tenth verſe.

Verſ. 10. The ſcepter ſhall not depart. 1. The word is ſhebet, which is ſometime taken for a tribe, Pſal. 78.68. and ſo Iunius readeth here, it ſignifieth alſo a ſcepter, Hierom, Mercer, Pagnin, agreeable whereunto, the Septuagint and Chalde read, the Prince ſhall not faile, &c. and the next word giveth it, becauſe it belongeth to the Prince to make lawes. 2. The word mechochech doth not here properly ſignifie a Captaine, as H. S. tranſlate, nor a Scribe, C. but a Law-giver, as it is taken, Pſal. 60.7. Iudah is my Law-giver, Iun. Mercer. 3. From betweene his feet: not becauſe Kings or Judges uſe to have Scribes ſitting at their feet, as the phraſe is taken, Deut. 33. 3. Vatablus, Calvin; but the meaning is, that Iudah ſhould alwaies have a Law-giver borne of his poſterity, (ſo is the phraſe uſed, Deut. 28.50.) and brought up as upon his knees, (Gen. 50.23.) Iun. The Latine and Greeke Tranſlator, keeping the ſame ſenſe, read, a Captaine out of his thigh: the Chalde, from among his ſonnes: which in effect is the ſame, Mercer. Shiloh, ſome derive of ſhalah, which is to be peaceable, Mercer. Some of ſhalach, to ſend, reading cheth for he, Hieron. Some read ſhiloh, making it two words, which ſignifieth, which to him, ſupplying are due, or laidup, which is the meaning of the Septuagint, Oleaſter. But it is moſt like to come of ſhil, which is a ſon, and he is put for vau; ſhiloh then is, his ſon, and it ſeemeth to be derived of ſhiliah, which ſignifieth the burthen, or after-birth, and is taken for the childe contained therein, Deut. 28. 57. but is more ſpecially underſtood of Chriſt, who proceeded from the womb of a virgin. 5. The people ſhall be obedient unto him, rather than ſhall be gathered: or he ſhall be the expectation of the Gentiles, as Hierome; as is ſhewed before in the divers readings: and therefore we need not buſie our ſelves with Pererius, to ſearch how Chriſt ſhould be ſaid to be the expectation of the Gentiles: either with Auguſtine, to underſtand it of the expectation of his ſecond comming; or that the Gentiles ſtood in need of Chriſt, and therefore ought to expect him, or to underſtand it of the converted Gentiles that looked for Chriſt, Iun. for the true reading of theſe words will eaſe us of this labour, though I deny not but that Chriſt is alſo the expectation of the Gentiles: as he is called the deſire of the nations, Hagg. 2.8. ſo called of effect, that conſidering the great ſalvation which Chriſt brought to the Gentiles, he ought to be deſired of all, and was deſired after the light began to appeare unto them.

How Chriſt is the expectation and deſire of the Gentiles.

QUEST. XII. Againſt the Iewes who deny the prophecie of the comming of the Meſſiah to be fulfilled.

Verſ. 10. The ſcepter ſhall not depart. 1. The Hebrewes doe but cavill, that by ſhebeth which ſignifieth a ſcepter or rod, doe underſtand affliction: for neither is it true, that affliction departed not from Iudah, till Meſſiah came: and the next words, nor a Law-giver from betweene his feet, doe ſhew that ſhebeth is here taken for a ſcepter, rather than a rod or ſcourge: and Iacob propheſieth all happie and proſperous things to Iudah.

2. Neither is this the ſenſe, that after Meſſiah is come, who ſhould reſtore the kingdome of Iudah, the ſcepter ſhould never depart: for beſide that, Iacob ſpeaketh not of the ſpirituall, but temporall regiment of Iudah, the words will not beare that ſenſe, which are gnad che, untill, not after Meſſiah is come.

3. Rab.

3. Rab. Salomons conceit is without ſhew of reaſon, who holdeth that the ſcepter is not yet departed from Iudah, and therefore concludeth that the Meſſiah is not yet come: for it is notoriouſly evident to all the world, that the Jewes have no common-wealth at this day, or regiment, but are tributaries and ſubjects to other Kings, as to the Perſian, the great Turke, and others.

4. Some Hebrewes take Shiloh for the proper name of that Citie where the Arke of God continued a long time: as though the meaning ſhould be this, that Iudah ſhould not loſe his dominion, till a King came that ſhould be annointed in Shiloh, which they tooke to be Saul. Contra. 1. Saul was not elected King in Shiloh, but in Mizpeh, 1 Sam. 10. 17. Shiloh was then forſaken and became deſolate: the coming of Shiloh is then improperly taken for the deſolation and ruine thereof. 3. After this Iudah began to have the ſcepter in David, and therefore it is an impudent and ſhameleſſe gloſſe, to make the regiment of Iudah then to have an end, when it tooke beginning.

5. And it is abſurd, to make this Shiloh Nabuchadnezzer, who ſhould be the man ſent of God to puniſh Iſrael, and by whom the ſcepter was taken from Iudah, which is the opinion of ſome Hebrewes: for after the captivitie Zerubbabel the ſonne of Salathiel, was the Prince of Iudah, and a Captaine and lawgiver to the people, Ezra 2. 2. Hagg. 1. 1.

The prophecies touching the Meſſiah, abſolute, not conditionall.

6. Some ſay that this promiſe for the continuance of the regall authoritie in Iudah, untill the Meſſiah came, was only conditional, if their ſinnes did not deſerve otherwiſe. Contra. 1. No ſuch condition in Scripture is expreſſed, not here inſerted by Iacob. 2. It is to be obſerved, that the promiſes concerning the Meſſiah are abſolute, and not conditionall: as that he ſhould come of the ſeed of Abraham, and of the root or ſtock of David, and that he ſhould be born of a virgin, and that in Bethlehem: as theſe prophecies had no condition annexed, no more hath this, ex Perer.

QUEST. XIII. How this propheeie of Iudah was accompliſhed.

WHerefore the Jews doe but cavill, and in vaine ſeeke to obſcure this prophecie of Iacob, concerning the Meſſiah. But a greater queſtion ariſeth among our ſelves, how and when this prophecie tooke place: for ſeeing the Iſraelites had foure kinde of governments; 1. They were governed by Captaines, Moſes and Ioſua: 2. By Judges: 3. By Kings till the captivitie: 4. By the high prieſts, who were as Kings untill Herod: in all theſe changes, unleſſe onely under the Kings, the government was but of all exerciſed by the tribe of Iudah: for Moſes was of Levi, Ioſuah of Ephraim, two onely of the Judges Othoniel and Ibzah were of Iudah: and from the returne out of the Captivitie, the high Prieſts were the chiefe commanders, and many of them crowned Kings: how then can it be juſtified that the ſcepter did not depart from Iudah, till the Meſſiah came?

1. Some thinke that the ſcepter and kingdome is not ſtrictly tyed unto Iudah, but onely a principalitie, in reſpect of other tribes, which might be, though other tribes had the regall authoritie, Euſeb. de prapar.

Contra. 1. But Iacob directly ſaith, the ſcepter ſhall not depart from Iudah, the S. and Creade, the ſame ſhall not faile from Iudah. 2. How could Iudah have the principalitie, when another tribe had the imperiall authoritie? there is no queſtion, but that after the Captivitie, the tribe of Levi, having the crowne had alſo the preeminence and principalitie over other tribes.

2. Some thinke that Zerubbabel of Iudah, and his poſteritie hsd the princely authoritie till Herod. Cyrill. lib. 8. cont. Iulian. Contra. 1. The hiſtories of that nation, as is extant in Ioſephus, doe teſtifie contrarie, that the chiefe government was in the Machabees, and their line, which were of Levi, Ariſtobulus ſonne of Hircanus the ſonne of Simeon, was the firſt Levite that bare a crowne: and it continued his race untill Herod. 2. We want not ſufficient evidence; for this is in the Scripture: for the prophet ſpeaketh concerning Ieconiah, that none of his ſeed ſhould ſit upon the throne of David, Ierem. 22. 30. in him the regall line of Iudah ended. 3. A third opinion is, that the high prieſts after the captivitie were of Iudah by the mother ſide, as Iehoiada the prieſt married Iehoſhabeath ſiſter to Ahaziah the King, 2 Chron. 22. 11. Toſtatus. ſome ſay further that they were alſo of the tribe of Iudah by the fathers ſide: and by this meanes the ſcepter did not depart from Iudah.

No King of the tribe of Iudah, after Ieconiah.

Contra. 1. It is uncertaine, whether the high prieſts did alwaies take their wives out of the tribe of Iudah, though ſome did, nay it is more probable they did not. 2. Though they did, yet could they not be ſaid to be of the tribe of Iudah: for the tribes were counted by the fathers ſide, not the mothers. And by this meanes, it ſhould be rather true of Levi, that the ſcepter ſhould not depart from him, than Iudah. 4. Neither will it ſatisfie to ſay, the high prieſts were of Iudah by the fathers ſide, for then the Machabees might have challenged the kingdome by inheritance, whereas it came to them by election, as Ionathan was choſen by conſent of the people, in the place of Iudas, 1. Mach. 9. 31. and beſide the Apoſtle witneſſeth, that never any of the tribe of Iudah had the office of the prieſthood, Heb. 7. 14. Mattathias was a prieſt, 1 Mach. 2. 1. and therefore not of Iudah.

4. Cajetanus anſwereth, that the ſcepter was taken away quoad actum, in act, but not quoad ſpem, hope: but ſtill they were in expectation, that the kingdome ſhould be reſtored in the Meſſiah.

Contra. This anſwer is not ſufficient. 1. Becauſe Iacob ſpeaketh of the viſible and terrene kingdome annexed to Iudah, whereof there was no hope to have it reſtored, as the prophet Ieremie ſaith of Ieconias, that none of his ſeed ſhould ſit upon the throne of David, Ierem. 22. and yet the Meſſiah came of Ieconiah: his kingdome was therefore ſpirituall. 2. By this interpretation, this place, which we urge againſt the Jewes, to prove that the Meſſiah is come, ſhould want his force: ſeeing they will alſo anſwer, that the kingdome of Iudah is onely ceaſed and intermitted in act, but not in hope to be reſtored.

§. C

Cornelius lib. 2. de loc. theolog. hath found out this answer, that the tribe of Iudah had not lost the scepter, quoad jus, in respect of their right, though, quoad usum, in regard of the use, it might bee addressed by other tribes: and to this purpose hee alleageth that place, 1 Machab. 14. 42. How the Iewes and priests consented that Simeon should bee their prince and high priest perpetually, till the Lord raised up the true Prophet: where the men of Iudah surrender their right to Simeon.

Contra. 1. True it is, that the right of the kingdome appertained to Iudah: and neither could the tribe of Iudah give it to any other tribe, nor they take it: and therefore it is well observed, that the Machabees and their posteritie were justly punished of God, as usurpers: first in being perverted with the wicked sect of Sadducees: for Ioannes Hircanus the sonne of Simon, was a Saducee, and put many of the Pharisees to death: so did his sonne Alexander, who slew 50000. Pharisees; secondly, they were dispossessed of their owne and dignitie by Antipater, their servant, and his sonne Herod. 2. Yet this cannot bee the meaning of this prophecie, for then wee could not conclude out of this place against the Iewes, that the Messiah is come, seeing they may also answer, that the scepter is not gone from Iudah yet, quoad jus, in respect of the right, and therefore they may yet expect the Messiah: Iacob therefore must be understood to speake of a reall and visible principalitie in Iudah, which should not cease, till Messiah was to come, and the ceasing thereof should be taken as a manifest argument of the approaching of the Messiah. Therefore, seeing it is manifest, that the scepter and princely government did not really remaine in the tribe of Iudah, till the comming of the Messiah: for Ezechiel thus prophesieth of the kingdome of Iudah, Thus saith the Lord, I will take away the diademe, and take off the crowne, it shall be no more the same, I will overturne, overturne, overturne it, till hee come, whose right it is, and I will give it him, Ezech. 21. 26, 27. And so indeed, the government after the captivitie was thrice turned, and changed, first they had captaines, as Zerubbabel, for their chiefe governours, then the high Priests, last of all, Kings. Now I say that the reall and actuall principalitie and regiment of Iudah ceased, not long after the returne of captivitie: as the Prophet Amos saith, In that day will I raise up the tabernacle of David, that is fallen, chap. 9. 11. And seeing further that it sufficeth not, that the princely regiment remained in the tribe of Iudah, in hope, or in right: for the Iewes might answer us, that it so remaineth still: therefore this prophecie can receive no other sense or interpretation, than one of these foure waies: which I will set downe, with the approbation of the best.

How the scepter should not depart from Iudah, till Shiloh come.

1. Some by Iudah understand, not the tribe of Iudah only, but the whole nation of the Iewes, both tribes, although there were of the tribes of Levi and Benjamin among them, yet the whole Common-wealth had the name of Iudah: and the Kingdome was in the tribe, lot, and territorie, that appertained to Iudah: and therefore it may fitly bee called the scepter of Iudah, though it might bee usurped by some, not of the tribe of Iudah: and in this sense it is true, that the Iewes had alwaies a King and governour of their owne nation, untill Herod an Idumæan invaded the regall dignitie, in the 30. yeare of whose reigne, Shiloh the Messiah was borne, Peterius, who alleageth Eusebius, hister. lib. 1. cap. 6. August. lib. de civit. Dei, c. 45. Rupertus lib. 9. in Gen. c. 29. as authors and fautors of this opinion.

This interpretation might well bee received, but that it seemeth, by Iacobs severall prophecies of his sonnes, that hee meaneth particularly the tribe of Iudah, and such as should be borne of that tribe: for the meaning of that phrase, from betweene his feet: and seeing Iacob had said before, thy brethren shall praise thee, thy fathers sonnes shall bow unto thee, meaning by Iudah, that particular tribe, and not the whole nation of the Iewes, it should seeme that Iudah also in this place should be taken in the same sense.

2. These words also of Iacobs prophecie, untill Shiloh come, may bee understood of that time, when a certaine time and number of years should be revealed of Shilohs comming, which was shewed unto Daniel in the first yeare of King Darius, Daniel 9. 1. To whom Cyrus permitted the regiment of Babylon, and the Iewes together with him: from which time there are reckoned 70. weekes, that is, 490. yeares: which weekes begin in the first yeare of Cyrus, when the Edict went forth for the returne of the Iewes, and end in the passion of Christ, at this time, &c. At this time Zerubbabel prince of Iudah was captaine of the people, Ezra 2. 2. and unto this time, after the scepter was given to Iudah in David, it was not removed, but onely during the captivitie of Iudah, when it is like also that the heads of Iudah bare the chiefe sway over their brethren: I leave this interpretation to the judgment of the learned, neither doe I much insist upon it: seeing the prophecie of Iacob rather aymeth at the historicall comming of the Messiah, than the prediction of his comming.

Some doe take the word shebet here not for a Scepter, but for the tribe, as Iunius and Oleaster translate: it shall not depart from Iudah: this opinion may seeme probable for these reasons: 1. the word is so taken in this chapter for a tribe, vers. 28. these are the tribes, shibteem and it is very rare, or not at all used Iunius for the scepter. 2. Thus this prophecie was evidently fulfilled, for till our Saviour Christs time the line of Iudah, especially from David, was exactly kept, as may appeare by the genealogie set downe by Matthew and S. Luke: but after Shiloh was come, the policie and government of the Iewes was in one generation dissolved, and the line and stocke of Iudah not regarded, but shuffled and confounded with the rest: neither can the Iewes tell at this day, of what tribe they are descended: I therefore herein follow Calvins judgement, who understandeth this prophecie of the policie and common-wealth of the Iewes: which presently after the Messiahs comming was overthrowne. 3. But it will bee objected, that the tribe of Levi continued till Christs time, as well as Iudah, Peter. I answer, that Levi was none of the twelve tribes, neither had his peculiar lot, as the rest had, but according to the prophecie of Iacob, hee was dispersed in Israel: againe, though some of the Levites kept their pedigree, yet most of them could not prove their descent, as it appeareth, Ezra 2. 62. these sought their writing of the genealogies, but they were not found, therefore were they put from their Priest-hood: and further mention is made, [illegible] names of the chiefe fathers of the Levites were written unto the dayes of Iohanan, and some of [illegible] to the reigne of Darius the last King of Persia, Nehem. 12. 22, 23. it seemeth then, that after that [illegible] genealogies were not kept.

4. Some understand this prophecie of the 70. Elders, called Sanedrim, which were elected out [illegible] Iudah, to whom the cognizance of the weightiest causes, and establishing of lawes appertained [illegible] were of such supreme authoritie, that they convicted Herod, who hardly escaped the sentence of [illegible] for his contumacie: these Sanedrim continued untill Herod, who not long before Christ's birth, [illegible] them all out: and then Herod himselfe was absolute King: so Mercer.

This interpretation joyned with the former, I preferre before the rest: for in this sense Iudah [illegible] taken for the particular tribe: and the word shebet, signifieth sometime the authoritie of the [illegible] magistrate, as Iudg. 5. 14. Amos 1. 6. The meaning then of this prophecie is, that Iudah [illegible] possessed of the regall, or at the least the chiefe authoritie, untill Messiah come.

QUEST. XIV. Of the abundance of vines and wine promised to Iudah.

Vers. 11. He shall binde his asse foale to the vine, &c. 1. Wee doe not with Onkelos, by the [illegible] foale, understand the parents and children, that should cleave unto the law, [illegible] the vine: and by the washing of their garments in wine, that the Princes should bee cleansed [illegible] ple: by the eyes, the hills which should bee full of vines; and by the teeth, the fields white with [illegible] 2. Neither need wee here run to allegories, as to make the binding of the asse to the vine to [illegible] the calling of the Gentiles to Christ: and by the blood of the grape to understand the blood of Christ [illegible] the which wee are washed from our sinnes: by the eyes, the Prophets and Apostles: by the teeth, [illegible] Doctors and Pastors of the Church, whose office it is to prepare the spirituall food for the [illegible] 3. Nor yet is that mysticall sense proper to this place, to signifie the abundance of spirituall knowledge [illegible] the Church under Christ. 4. And with Hierome literally to understand the colt which the Apostles [illegible] tyed, which they loosed and brought to Christ, seemeth to be forced. 5. Wherefore the meaning [illegible] no more but this: to shew, that in Iudahs lot, there should bee vines of that greatnesse as they might [illegible] serve to binde their asses unto, Perer. and they should be as common, as shrubbes, and bushes, [illegible] which they use to tye their Cattell, Iun. Calvin. And that they should bring their asses to their vines [illegible] to load them with grapes, Mercer. Yea and such plenty of wine they should have, that they might [illegible] in stead of water to wash their garments, Mercer. and it should bee excellent wine, such as might [illegible] eyes of them that drinke it red: and such store of good pastures should bee in Iudahs portion, that [illegible] they might eat milke in great abundance, Iun.

QUEST. XV. Of the situation of Zabulun.

Vers. 13. Zabulun shall dwell by the sea side. 1. Iacob rehearsed not his sonnes according to the order [illegible] of their birth, for Zabulun was the tenth sonne: first, he nameth the sonnes of Leah, then the sonnes of the concubines; Zabulun is set before Issachar, who was the elder in regard of [illegible] the situation of the countrey, for Issachar had his lot betweene Zabulun and Dan, Mercer. Zabulun [illegible] der did not extend to Zidon, for it is like mention would have beene made thereof, Iosh. 19. [illegible] dwelling of Zabulun is bounded, Perer. Neither is the meaning that they should only traffike with [illegible] Sidonians, as Andr. Masius: but that their side and coasts should bee over against Sidon, [illegible] the sea, and full of havens, Iun. 3. This tribe of Zabulun was famous, because of the mount Tabor, [illegible] Christ was transfigured, and the citie Nazareth, where Christ was conceived, Luke 1. 26. and brought [illegible] up, Math. 2. 23. there also Christ began to preach, Matth. 4. 15. to the people that sat in darkenesse [illegible] began there, where was greatest need: for they that dwell by the sea are most given to corruption [illegible] 1. Because of their wealth, which maketh them proud. 2. Their situation, which ministreth occa- [illegible] sion of robberies, and pyracies upon the seas. 3. Because of their trading with other countries: [illegible] therefore Plato in his common-wealth would not have the Metropolis, or chiefe citie, neere unto the [illegible] Sea, by ten miles, as Eusebius sheweth, that Ierusalem was situate, Libr. 12. de praparat. c. 27. [illegible] 4. I omit here Ambrose allegorie, that compareth the Church to Zabulun, which is situate upon the [illegible] sea of this world, subject to much trouble, seeth the wracke of Heretikes, Pagans, Iewes: is occupied [illegible] in spirituall merchandise, in transporting and bringing men to the kingdome of God: Iacob had no such [illegible] meaning here, but only sheweth how well Zabulun should bee situated for trafficke, as Moses afterward [illegible] said, Rejoyce Zebulun in thy going out, that is, in thy prosperous voyages, Deut. 33. 18.

QUEST. XVI. Of Issachars sloth and love of ease.

Vers. 14. Issachar shalbe a strong asse, &c. 1. The Chalde paraphrast giveth a contrary sense, that he [illegible] shall subdue provinces, and dispeople the inhabitants: whereas Iacob sheweth, that by reason [illegible] of their sloth, they shall become tributarie. 2. Some Hebrews understand this couching like [illegible] of their great labour and studie in the law, as out of this tribe came men that had understanding [illegible] to know what Israel ought to doe: 1 Chron. 12. 32. but this is but an inforced interpretation. 3. Issachar [illegible] compared to a strong asse, (not lying betweene two bounds, that is, the sea of Galilee on the one [illegible] and Thabor on the other, as Mercer. but) couching betweene two burthens, as the word signifieth [illegible] better translated: because an asse yeeldeth his backe to the burthen, and willingly beareth it, [illegible] his provender, notwithstanding his burthen; so Issachar should labour as an asse in tilling [illegible] ground, and give himselfe to sloth at home, and doe no exploit abroad, as Moses saith, and thou [illegible] thy tents, Deut. 33. That is, hee would not willingly be drawne from home, but rather choose to live [illegible] his ease and quietnesse with any tribute, imposition, or other burthen, that should be laid upon him,

Qui

QUEST. XVII. How Dan should judge his people.

Dan shall judge his people, &c. It is in that Dan is placed first, who was the sonne of Bilha Rachels maid, and Nephtali was the other, but Gad and Asher come between, the reason of which is left to fall out together in the lande: or it is like that Jacob did mocke himselfe to the setting downe of his children, Merom. 2. This prophecie is unfitly applied to Antichrist, that he should be as a serpent biting the horse heeles, as Perer. for that Antichrist shall not come of the tribe of Dan, as shall be shewed afterwards among the places of confutation: neither is it understood of the Israelites generall, that they should be counted as one of the tribes; Calvin; nor yet of Sampson onely, who caused the rider to fall backwarde, when he pulled downe the house upon the Philistines: but it is both understood of the Israelites in generall, for so by fubtilty they should inlarge their kingdome, Iudg. 18. with especiall reference to Sampson, who of Dan judged Israel by subtilty: as wee did shewe in the Philistines: and therefore is compared to a Lion leaping for his pray, Deut. 33. 22. So that this is for the honour to the tribe of Dan, above other tribes, foure onely excepted, Ruben, Simeon, Gad, Iudah, so out of Dan should arise a judge his people, Chaldie Barleph. Ioan. but yet in no such manner as Iudah did, before they would be subdued.

QUEST. XVIII. What salvation Iacob looked for.

I have waited for thy salvation, &c. The meaning of which words is not that he desireth to be preserved from the craft of Dan, as before he said of Simeon and Levi, into the family whereof, verse. 6. Oleaster. Now yet doth Iacob correct himselfe, as though he looked for the Messiah, for seeing by the Spirit of Prophecie what great deliverance he should have, therefore now he prayeth that he expecteth another Saviour, Rupert. Ferrarius: for to him the Messiah should come of Iudah, and not of Dan. 2. Neither yet let us here take occasion of errour, which in time to come should take Antichrist for the Messiah: teaching us to expect the true Messiah, Perer. for there is no such feare that the Jewes should take Antichrist, the Pope, with his idolatrous corporation for their Messiah. 3. Therefore Iacob foreseeing the miseries which the tribe of Dan should be subject unto, both civill and in being oppressed of them that were of the Ammonites, Judges 11. and in being corrupted with idolatry, he prayeth for Gods gracious assistance and deliverance, and looking also to the Messiah, the inheritance and redemption of his Church to be accomplished.

QUEST. XIX. Of the blessing of Gad.

Gad, a troope shall overcome him, &c. In his blessing pleaseth Iacob to his sonnes names, as before he said, Dan shall judge his people, whom Rachel so called, because the Lord judged on her side, Gen. 30. which indeed was of him to judge: so here also in another sense reference is had of the name of Gad, which signifieth a troop or soldier.

This is understood also prophetically of Iephte of his good successe against the Ammonites Iudg. 11. and also of the benefit of the tribe of Gad: because he was of valour, and did valiantly in the warres of the Ammonites. Contra. Iephte is rather to be thought to have beene of the tribe of Manasses, not of Gilead the sonne of Machir, the sonne of Manasses, but of Gilead the father of Iephte, and the children of Manasses had the halfe of Gilead in their lot, as other parts, Iosh. 13. and this people of the Gadites which helped to take the possession of the two tribes against the Ammonites, were not Gadites properly, but the sonnes of Manasses, which dwelt in Gilead over Jordan, as Iosephus and the Paraphrast: but this was not peculiar to the Gadites, for the tribe of Ruben, and the halfe tribe of Manasses before their inheritance as well as Gad neither in their exploits were they overcome, but successe against the Ammonites, whom the Gadites had with the rest of the tribes, as before is mentioned. 4. Of which prophecie then is rather to be referred to the divers conflicts which the Gadites had with the Ammonites, Nahash and Nadab, whom at length they overcame, when together with the rest of the tribes, and a great army of Israel besides, they destroyed Moses. This also is agreeable to the comparing him to a Lion, Deut. 33. 20. Of whom the same is spoken, which was the head and hope of that tribe, as the Chalde. Oleaster. nor yet the Moses prophecie of God compared with this of Iacob. Moses buriall in the land of Moab, whereof God himself had made mention, and gave them a promise by him that they should enter into the land of Canaan. Deut. 34. 6. Moses was buried, laid up in their port or lot: which Perer. understandeth of Moses buriall in Nebo, where he died and was buried of God: but the place of Moses buriall was not yet revealed: which was to keep up before Israel's eyes the Canaanites.

QUEST. XX. Of the blessing of Asher.

Asher his bread shall be fat, and he shall yeeld pleasures for a King. In some readings he is joined with the pleasures of a King, Chald. but the other reading is more agreeable to the originall. 2. These pleasures fit for a King, are not understood of his fat ground, or power, or rich spices, or such like, wherewith this Country abounded: as Moses saith, Deut. 33. 24. which is acceptable to Kings, and whereof are commodities for Princes. Oleaster. Moses setteth downe other blessings of Asher beside the fatnesse of his ground: His shoes should be iron and brasse: he should abound with these metalls: and further, his strength should continue all his dayes:

Asher

After should bring forth strong wine? Hieronym. saith, as the dayes of thy youth, so shall be thine old age, rather in a contrary sense, than translating Iamim for strength, readeth, speech, making this to be the sense, shall be speech of thee as long as thou livest: but the word dabar, signifieth strength, and also speech, as the sequel doth expresse the same by the word, virtus, fortitudo, strength. 4. This scripture may fitly be applied to Christ, who is the bread of life, that nourisheth our soules. Iohn 6. Mystically.

Quest. XXI. Of the blessing of Nephtali.

Vers. 21. NEphtali is an hinde let go, giving goodly words. 1. The Hebrewes understand this blessing given to Nephtali of the fruitfulnesse of the ground, which by reason of the fruitfulnesse therof in speedy bringing forth of fruit, is compared to an Hinde: from thence the first fruits were brought to the Temple, over the which the Priest praised God: so this text doth Chaldee Paraphrast seem to incline, as is to be seene before in the divers readings. 2. Some doe apply it to Barak, of whose victory against Sisara is described, Iud. 4. and the goodly or faire words here spoken of, to be of Barak and Deborah, Iud. 5. Cornelius. 3. But as this prophecie very well comprehendeth that, so it generally describeth the state and condition of the whole tribe, who should be as forward to fight as an Hinde let goe of the hunters is swift: but yet they should by friendly and peaceable means seek peace, before they would rashly attempt warre, Iunius: they should be of gentle and friendly behaviour, and therfore beloved, Pererius. Herewith agreeth the prophecie of Moses: Nephtali satisfied with favour, and filled with the blessing of the Lord, Deut. 33. 23. 4. And whereas it followeth in that place, possesse thou the West and the South: the meaning is one, that he should possesse the Sea, as Hieronymus translateth, either the Mediterranean Sea, or the Sea of Tyberias, as the Chaldee: or that he should by traffique with others have the benefit of the Sea; but because the Sea was Westward, it is usually taken for the West, as Genesis 28. 14. is said to be on the Sea side, that is, Westward. 5. This prophecie also may bee extended to the time of Christ, who began to preach and to utter his pleasant and comfortable words in the tribe of Nephtali, Matth. 4. Hieronym.

Quest. XXII. Ioseph by compared to a fruitfull bough.

Vers. 22. Ioseph shall be a fruitfull bough. 1. Which is a better reading then to say, a sonne increasing, because of the words following, a fruitfull bough by the Well side, where the metaphore is plaine, that Ioseph is compared to a fruitfull bough planted by the fountaine, Iunius. 2. His braunches run over the wall, that is, out of him branched the two tribes, Ephraim and Manasseh, Chald. Iun. Some read, daughters ran upon the wall, which Rabbi Aben Ezra expoundeth of the daughters of Egypt, that did strive to behold Ioseph riding in his chariot: some of Ioseph his issue that stand upon his bounds: but the first sense is to be preferred, Iun. Mercer.

Quest. XXIII. How Ioseph his bow abode strong, &c.

Vers. 23. THe archers grieved him, &c. his bow abode strong, &c. Some referre this to the time of Christ, signifying the great troubles and afflictions which Ioseph pallestey should have, which were conflicts with the Syrians and other enemies: but it most aptly describeth the divers practises of Ioseph brethren, of his mistresse and mother against him, Iunius, Mercer. 2. It typically also signifieth the practises of the Scribes and Phariseis against our Saviour, Calvin. The Septuagint read, they have sorely provoked him, and the Latine interpreter, They have sharply shot at him, referring the words and fetters wherewith Ioseph was tied: whereas in a contrary sense the text is, his arme and hands were not adorned with bracelets and gold, as the Chaldee saith: but Ioseph subjected to a strong and mighty power, the other his enemies as archers shot at him, so his bow was stedfast, and his armes strong: that is, the wonderfull fortitude and strength of his minde is expressed, Mercerus.

Quest. XXIV. How Ioseph is called the feeder and stone of Israel.

Vers. 24. FRom whom the feeder, &c. 1. Of whom, that is, of the mighty God of Iacob, as it followeth: for he is meant by the feeder: for from whence came the feeder, that is, out of Ioseph was either? but the meaning is, that the mighty God of Iacob appointed Ioseph to be a feeder: neither by the feeder doe we understand the Captaines and Kings that came of Ephraim and Manasseh, neither yet doe we approve that saying, Of whom was the first feeder of Israel, which was the head and stocke of that familie, as the Chalde, Mercer, Pagnin. nor yet by the mighty God understand Christ, as the Greeke Interpreter, Iunius: the meaning is, that of Ioseph should come the feeder, that is, the father of his fathers house, and as a stone that ioyneth the corners together, that is, the mighty God of Iacob should make Ioseph to be a feeder and stone of Israel, Iun.

Quest. XXV. Of Ioseph blessings.

Vers. 25. WHo helpeth thee by the God of thy father, and he shall blesse thee with blessings of heaven above, blessings of the deepe that lieth under, blessings of the breasts and of the wombe. 1. This blessing is understood not only of the fruitfulnesse of the earth, and raine, &c. but also of the wholesomenesse of the ayre, and the sweetnesse of the water, as Moses further expounds it, Deut. 33. 13. Blessed of the Lord is his land for the precious things of heaven, for the dew, &c. for the sweetnesse of the deepe that lieth under, &c. 2. Blessings of the breasts and of the wombe, that is, not only the fruit of the wombe, but also the wholesome and prosperous education of the children, Mercer. 3. By the helpe of the God of thy father, Iun. but this blessing upon Ioseph, Genesis 48. 16. was pronounced upon Ephraim, Genesis 48. 16. and Manasseh, Genesis 48. 20. and so the application of this text unto Christ, who was sent of God from heaven, &c.

who was blessed in the wombe, being conceived without sinne, and blessed at his mothers brests, Perer. Though all this be true of our blessed Saviour, yet it is not the meaning of this place.

QUEST. XXVI. How Iacobs blessing is said to be stronger than the blessing of his elders.

Ver. 26. The blessings of thy father, &c. Some read, shall be stronger than the blessings of mine elders. B. G. P. and do understand it some of the blessings of his elders passiuely, wherewith they were blessed of their father Iacob bestoweth a greater blessing upon Ioseph than his fathers received, Mer. Some, actiuely of the blessing wherewith his elders blessed him, Burgens. But Isaacks blessing upon Iacob, whereby hee bestowed the birthright upon him, seemeth not to have beene inferiour to this given to Ioseph: some understand the blessings which he received of God, & the promises, which were greater than any which his fathers received, Lyran. True it is, he had more visions, than any of his fathers, Abraham or Isaack and that he excelled in the gift of prophecie, that he saw greator increase of his seed: yet Iacob would not preferre himselfe before Abraham, who by his faith was justified with God, & is called the father of the faithfull: some say Iacobs blessing upon Ioseph was greater, but was neerer to take effect, Calvin. 2. But the other reading is to be preferred: that, the blessings of thy father, with the blessings of mine Elders: not above them, or strengthened by them, as though Iacobs blessing received force and vertue from his fathers blessing, as Rupertus: but that being added together, and united with the former blessings of Abraham and Isaack, they are the stronger: so that all those blessings together, of Abraham, Isaack, and Iacob, doe light upon the head of Ioseph, Innius. The Hebrew preposition gnal, signifieth as well as with; as supra above.

QUEST. XXVII. What is meant by the end of the hils of the world.

Ver. 26. Vnto the end of the hils of the world. 1. Some read, to the desire of the hils. H. P. and understand it of the Messiah, who was appointed to come, from the beginning of the world, before the hils were. Some by the hils interpret the Princes of the world, that desired to be partakers of Iosephs blessings, Cal. But the better reading is, the end of the hils: and so the word here used, taavah, shall be derived rather from taah, which signifieth to limit, than from avah, to desire: Mercer. which words wee rather with Kimhi, whom Iunius followeth, referre to the duration and continuance of time, that this blessing shall continue, as long as the hils: than Rab. Salomon referre it to the place: as that this blessing should not containe it selfe within the countrey of Canaan, but be extended to the utmost hils of the world, Iun. Mercer. 3. This blessing promised to be perpetuall, as were all things temporall, was conditionall, and Iosephs posterity lost it by their sinnes: but the spirituall verity whereof is eternall in Christ, Mercer. 4. This blessing pronounced upon Ioseph, may also bee extended to the fruitfull hils and mountaines, which fell to the lot of Iosephs sonnes, as Moses in Iosephs blessing, maketh mention of the ancient mountaines and old hils, Deutr. 33. 15. Tostat.

QUEST. XXVIII. Why Ioseph is said to be separate from his brethren.

Ver. 26. Vpon the head of him that was separate from his brethren, &c. 1. Some reade, the Prince of his brethren. and so would derive it of nazar, a crowne. 2. Hierome a Nazarite, as though Ioseph should be so called for holinesse and chastity: but as yet the profession of the Nazarites was not instituted. 3. Ioseph then is said to be separate from his brethren, for so nazar signifieth, to divide or separate: not for that he did separate himselfe from the manners and conditions of his brethren, whom he complained of to his father, or because his brethren did separate him from themselves, when they sold him into Ægypt, but because the Lord separated, and set him apart from them, and advanced him to honour, Iun. Vatab.

QUEST. XXIX. Why Benjamin is compared unto a Wolfe.

Ver. 27. Benjamin shall ravin as a Wolfe. 1. R. Salomon applyeth it to that exploit of the Benjamites, that took by force a prey the daughters of Silo, as they came forth to daunce, to bee their wives. 2. Some other understand it of Saul that prayed upon the Amalekites, in the morning, and of Esther and Mordecai, that in the evening, that is a good while after, made a prey of Haman. 3. Some of the fathers, as Ambros. Chrysostome, Theoderet, referre this prophecie to Saint Paul, who was of Benjamin, and as a wolfe at the first made havocke of the Church, afterward being converted, divided the spoyle among the Gentiles, in preaching of the Gospell. 4. Some doe take this spoken of Benjamin, because the Temple was situate at Jerusalem, in the tribe of Benjamin: where the sacrifices were brought to the alter, which devoured them as a wolfe: but this was more proper to Levi, for the Priests did eat that which remained of the sacrifice,) than to Benjamin: as Moses touched this prerogative of Benjamin in his blessing, saying, that God dwelled between his shoulders, Deut. 33. 12. that is, upon the hils in his chiefe city, where the temple stood: but this is not the meaning here. Therefore this prophecie sheweth the warlike disposition of the whole tribe of Benjamin, as may appeare by their fierce battell which they fought with the other tribes, wherein they twice overcame them, being fewer in number, Iud. 20. and by the wars, which the house of Saul had with David, and the tribe of Iudah for the kingdome.

QUEST. XXX. How Iacob is said to have given every one of his sonnes a blessing.

Ver. 28. Every one of them he blessed with a severall blessing. Because Iacob did not blesse all his sons, but accursed three of them, Ruben, Levi, and Simeon. 1. We neither say with Ambrose that they are rather to be prophecies, than blessings, lib. de Benedic. Patriarc. c. 2. 2. Neither with Pererius, that they were so called in part: for it is said, that he blessed every one. 3. Neither by the word blessing, is cursing understood by irony, that is, a contrary kind of speech, as some thinke: but Iacob blessed them verily and indeed. 4. But the saying of R. Salomon is not farre from blasphemy, that Iacob did indeed purpose to blesse his sonnes, but falling into the spirit, he cursed them in stead of blessing: for this were to make the motions of Gods spirit, mad fits. 5. Neither will it follow that Iacob gave his sonnes other blessings here not expressed. 6. But hee indeed blessed them all, though for the temporall chastisement laid upon Ruben, Simeon, Levi, was but a fatherly correction for their sinne, Calvin, they also are blessed, because they are counted among the tribes, & had their inheritance among them them, Mercer. whereupon afterward, Moses in particular blessed both Ruben and Levi, Deut. 33. Iacob also conclude these three within the number of his sonnes, and so comprehendeth them within the covenant, &c.

QUEST. XXXI. Of the double cave where Iacob desired to be buried.

Hebrewes fables. Vers. 30. IN the cave that is beside Machpelah, &c. 1. Iacob maketh a particular and perfect description of cave, where he would be buried, from whence he had beene absent 17. yeares, Ioseph 39. yeares, they should not doubt of the place. 2. But that is a fable devised by the Jewes, that Tsepho the sonne of did strive with Iacobs sonnes about this burying place, and that he fought a great battell with them, but came him and brought him downe to Ægypt, and when Ioseph was dead, he fled out of Ægypt into Italy.
intreated his sonne Ioseph to bury him with his fathers, but he chargeth and commandeth his sonnes; Ioseph was the principall, who should obtaine leave of Pharaoh, and at whose costs Iacobs funerall lemnized: the rest were but to accompany him, Mercer. beside his other sons did still depend upon him as a part of his family, whereas Ioseph was a man of great command and authority in Ægypt, Perer. 4.
eth who were buried there, and maketh speciall mention of Abraham; that his sonnes should be more there to bury him also, seeing Abraham had of purpose bought that ground to bee a place of buriall for his, Luther. and seeing that his mother was there buried, and Leah his wife, it might seeme more reason he should be buried there also. 5. These three couples here mentioned were buried together there, Abraham Isaack, Rebeckah: Iacob, Leah: the hebrewes thinke also that Adam and Eve had their sepulture there, is not like: as it is also uncertaine, whether any other of the twelve Patriarkes were there interred, Mercer.

QUEST. XXXII. Why Iacob maketh mention againe of the purchase of the cave.

Vers. 32. THe purchase of the field, &c. 1. This repetition is not inserted by Moses, as Marlorat; but the the words of Iacob. 2. This verse therefore without cause is wholly omitted and left out by tine Translater. 3. Yet did not Iacob here shew unto his sonnes the very instrument of conveyance, whereby ham did purchase the cave and field, as the Hebrewes: for that rite & custome was not then in use. But Iacob sheweth the undoubted right which he had to that ground, whereof his fathers had possession both alive

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. How the Patriarkes and Prophets used imprecations.

Vers. 7. CVrsed be their wrath, &c. The righteous did many times use imprecations and denounce David, Psal. 35. 4. Let them be confounded and put to shame that seeke after my soule: and places, and Iacob here: but they did it not in wrath, or in their heat, but with these considerations
1. They spake as Prophets, and as Ministers and Pronouncers of Gods sentence and decree: so that they so much maledictions, as predictions, Perer. 2. For the most part, they accursed such only in tempor their amendment: as Iacob here doth his sonnes: as David also saith, Fill their faces with shame, seeke thy name, O Lord, Psal. 83. 18. Perer. 3. If they denounced any spirituall curse, it was upon such corrigible: as Psal. 68. 21. God will wound the hairy pate of him, that goeth on in his sinnes. 4. They did by revenge their owne particular cause, but did censure them as enemies to the whole Church: as Psal. 35.
imagine deceitfull words against the quiet of the land. But these examples are no warrant for us to use precations, because we have not the like spirit of prophecie: as our Saviour answered to Iames and Iohn, ked him if they should command fire to come downe from heaven upon the Samaritans, as Elias did; Ye of what spirit ye are of, Luk. 9. 55.

2. Doct. Iacob propheseth of his sonnes, as the spirit of God directed him.

FUrther, in that Iacob spareth not to pronounce the curse of God against his owne sonnes: it is evident spake not of any partiall affection, or ambitiously seeking to make his posterity great, as the prophane of Lucian the Atheists use to object against the doctrine and history of Moses, Calvin. but that he spake thereunto moved by the spirit of God: both in that against his naturall and fatherly disposition, hee pro hard and heavy things against his sonnes; as also because the event afterward answered to these his predic

3. Doct. All our helpe and strength is from God.

Vers. 24. THe armes of his hands were strengthened by the hand of the mighty God, &c. Although in battell, weapons of warre, and other meanes are carefully to be used; yet the help power must come from God: as Ioseph was strengthened by the hand of God against his enemies: as David Make haste to deliver me, make haste to helpe me, O God, Psal. 70. 1. Luther.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. That the punishment of sinne remaineth not after the remission of the fault.

Vers. 6. INto their secret let not my soule come. This punishment, which was inflicted upon Simeon was not a satisfaction for their sinne past, which was already upon their repentance remitted as the Popish doctrine is, that the punishment of sinne often remaineth, the fault being pardoned: but the keth good to chastise those which have offended, though their sin be forgiven them, for these causes: 1.
may thorowly be humbled, and take heed, that thy commit not the like againe: as David therefore good for me that I have beene afflicted, Calv. 2. For the example of other, that they also may be warned, offend not in the like: as this correction imposed upon Simeon and Levi, was for the admonition of and posterity. 3. That men feeling the justice of God in their due corrections, may flee unto Gods mercy promises of God in Christ: as Adam, when he received the sentence of death for his transgression, promise of the Messiah given him, Mercer.

2. Confut. Against popish purgatory paines.

Seeing then, that corrections remaining after the forgivenesse of sin, are to make our selves and others carefull: this is no ground for the Popish purgatory paines, which are not visible, and so serve not for the example of others: neither are they availeable unto godly repentance, for the which there is no place after this life, Mercer.

3. Confut. Peter not the chiefest of the Apostles because first named.

Vers. 3. Ruben mine eldest sonne. This is to be observed, that the twelve Patriarks are not rehearsed in the same order here, as before, Gen. 30. and Genes. 27. and afterward, Numb. 1. Deut. 33. yet in these places Ruben is named first: but not alwayes, sometime Iudah is named before him, as Numb. 2. 2. As then this were but a simple argument for the preheminence of Ruben before his brethren, because he is here named first, being the eldest: so as simply doe the Papists conclude for Peters supremacie before the other Apostles, because he is commonly named first: which was rather because of his Elder-ship, then any priority before the rest: neither is he alwayes named in the first place, for Galat. 2. 9. Iames is named before him.

4. Confut. The bookes of Iudith and Tobie not canonicall.

Vers. 5. Simeon and Levi brethren in evill. Hence it may appeare, that the booke of Iudith is not Canonicall, because there this fact of Simeon is commended, cap. 9. 2. which here Iacob condemneth and curseth. It satisfieth not to say with Dyonis. Carthusian. that the fact of Simeon and Levi in respect of the Sichemites was just, but unjust in respect of them who brake their faith and covenant: for Iudith commendeth their zeale; which were moved with thy zeale, v. 4. Neither is Lyranus and Pererius answer sufficient: 1. For Iudith in that place commendeth also the manner of the fact, and saith, that God did put the sword of vengeance into their hand, vers. 2. and Iacob here curseth their very affection and zeale wherewith they were first moved: Cursed be their wrath, for it was cruell: and further, whereas Iudith ascribeth it downe as a reward of their zeale, Thou gavest their Princes to the slaughter: Iacob even there-upon doth recurse: For in their wrath they slew a man. It is evident then that the booke of Iudith was not written by the spirit of God, because it commendeth that which is here condemned. Seeing also Iacob remembreth Sampson in Dan; Mordecai and Esther in Benjamin; Barak in Nepthali: it is like that Tobie the elder Nepthali, and Iudith in Simeon, should not have beene forgotten, if their stories were of like credit.

5. Confut. The Pope succeedeth not Christ in this Kingdome.

Vers. 10. The scepter shall not depart from Iudah. Pererius applieth this to the kingdome of Christ, that is, his Church, which shall endure for ever, and so shall the Pope Christs vicar (saith he who succeedeth Christ as the sonne doth the father) in his authority and dignity, in Gen. 49. numer. 58. Contra. 1. If it is that of Christs dominion there shall be none end, and that he will alwayes have a Church upon earth. But the Pope, which is the Antichrist, is no successor to Christ, but an usurper of his kingdome: no Christs son, as the Jewes boasted they were Abrahams sonnes: but Christ telleth them plainly, They are of their father the Devill: if ye were Abrahams children (saith our Saviour) ye would doe the workes of Abraham. Iohn 8. 39. 44. So the Pope is his sonne, whose doctrine he followeth: but to forbid to marry, to teach to abstaine from meats (as the Pope doth) are the doctrines of Devils, 1 Tim. 4. 1, 2.

6. Confut. Antichrist shall not come of Dan.

Vers. 17. Dan shall be a serpent by the way, &c. Divers of the ancient Writers upon this place did ground their opinion, that Antichrist should come of Dan, and therefore they say that tribe is omitted Apocal. 7. and this Pererius holdeth a probable opinion, and worthy of credit. Contr. 1. By this meanes the blessing which Iacob pronounceth as a blessing upon Dan, they turne to a curse: and whereas Iacob speaketh of one that should be a deliverer of his people, which some doe fitly apply to Sampson, they would have him to be an enemy and adversary to the Church of God. 2. The tribe of Dan was dispersed a thousand yeares before Antichrist appeared in the world. 3. Dan is omitted in the Apocalypse, because of the idolatry which began in that tribe, wherein Antichrist doth imitate him, though hee come not of his race: so likewise is Simeon omitted in Moses benediction, Deuter. 33. yet they will not inferre, that Antichrist should come of that tribe: as Simeon is omitted by Moses for his evill example, so Dan is by Iohn for his idolatry.

7. Confut. Against Limbus patrum.

Vers. 25. Who shall blesse thee with the blessings of the deepe that lieth beneath. Pererius maketh Ioseph here a type of Christ: whom the Patriarks blessed and praised in the lake or Limbus, in the deepe beneath, whom he delivered from thence, numer. 165. Contra. 1. These are but weake arguments in so weighty matters, that are taken from types and figures. 2. Iacob speaketh here of temporall blessings, the wholesome aire, pleasant dewes, fruitfull ground, and nourishing springs in the deepe below; and therefore unproperly applied to spirituall. 3. Neither shall he ever be able to prove, that the Patriarks were shut up in the deepe below: seeing that the rich man in hell looked up, and lift up his eyes and saw being in Abrahams bosome, Luk. 16. it was then a place above, not in the deepe beneath.

8. Confut. What it is to be gathered to his people.

Vers. 29. I am gathered to his people. 1. Burgensis will have this people to be the fathers in Limbus, to whom Iacob went, so also Lyranus: Contra. 1. Henoch was of this people, to whom he went after death, but hee was not in Limbus, hee was taken up to heaven and walked with God. Abraham went to his fathers in peace, Gen. 15. 15. that is, with joy and comfort: but what comfort in Limbus, a lake, and dungeon of darkenesse? 3. Wherefore to be gathered to his people, is not not to be joyned to the Angels, as gloss. interlinear. for Abraham is said to goe also to his fathers, but the Angels were not his fathers: neither is this phrase all one, as to say, he slept with his fathers, or went the way of all flesh, or changed his life, as Perer. Mercer. for Ismael is said also to goe to his people, Gen. 25. Now Abraham and Ismael had not the same people to goe unto: the faithfull cannot be said to be Ismaels people, nor the prophane sort to be Abrahams. But if the meaning of the phrase were no more than that they were gathered and joyned to the state of the dead, the faithfull and prophane sort shall all goe to one people: wherefore this phrase betokeneth a speciall disposition of the soules of the faithfull after this life, in being associated to the company of the just: and a laying up of their bodies in hope of the resurrection, Calvin. Muscul. Luther. The Apostle also sheweth what it is for the righteous to be gathered to their people: Wee are come to the celestiall Ierusalem, to the innumerable company of Angels, to the congregation of the first borne, &c. to the spirits of just and perfect men, Hebr. 12.22.23. and these are we joyned by faith while we live, and really, when we are dead: now quoad spem, in hope, quoad rem, in deed.

6. Places of morall use.

1. Mor. Fathers must rebuke and chastise their children.

Vers. 4. Thou shalt not be excellent. Fathers may learne by Iacobs example to chastise their children for their sinnes, as here Ruben is censured for defiling his fathers bed: for this cause Heli and his posterity were punished, because hee did not reprove his sonnes according to the quality of their offence, Perer.

2. Mor. Gods vengeance though it be deferred will certainly come.

FUrther, in that Rubens punishment had beene a long time suspended and deferred, almost [illegible] after he had committed this uncleane sinne, yet at the last it commeth: let no sinner flatter himself in his impunity: for if the long suffering of God draw him not to repentance, it shall but increase his punishment: as the Apostle sheweth, Rom. 2.4,5.

3. Mor. The short pleasures of sinne deprive men of many blessings.

AGaine, as Ruben for a little short pleasure, lost his birthright and dignity: so many for the vaine and momentany pleasures of this life, are deprived of many and great blessings: like to Esau, that for a messe of pottage, did part with his birthright.

4. Mor. Contumely against parents never goeth unpunished.

WE see also, what an high offence before God it is, to offer any wrong or contumely to our parents: such was Cham toward Noah; Absalon toward David; and here Ruben, in that he defiled his father Iacobs bed.

5. Mor. Against unjust and immoderate revenge.

Vers. 7. Cursed be their wrath. The Lord condemneth all kinde of revenge that proceedeth of malice, especially such as here was committed by Simeon and Levi. 1. It was done by craft and subtilty, under pretence of friendship. 2. Against men unawares, suspecting nothing. 3. When they were in grieffe of body. 4. With a pretext and shew of religion. 5. The revenge farre exceeded in greatnesse the quality of the offence: Such a kinde of revenge is unjust and cruell: Wherefore in this case, we must follow the Wise-mans counsell: Say not, I will recompence evill, but wait upon the Lord, and he shall save thee, Prov. 20.22. Perer.

6. Mor. Every mans portion in the earth assigned of God.

Vers. 13. AS Zabulun shall dwell by the sea side. Hence we learne that the lot of men, for their habitation and dwelling in the earth, falleth not out unto them by chance, but by Gods providence and appointment: for as it is in the Psalme, The earth is the Lords, and the fulnesse thereof, therefore every one should be contented with his lot and portion, as assigned unto him of God, Perer.

7. Mor. The Church shall overcome at last.

Vers. 19. AND an host of men shall overcome him, but he shall overcome at the last, &c. So the Church of God, though it shall indure much trouble and sorrow in the world, yet it shall in the end have the victory in the end: as our Saviour saith to his Apostles, In the world yee shall have trouble, but be of good comfort, I have overcome the world, Iohn 16.33.

8. Mor. The quiet and peaceable end of the righteous.

Vers. 33. HE plucked up his feet into the bed. Before Iacob had raised up himselfe as well as he could, not having his legs hanging out of the bed, as Perer. that had beene no fit lying for a man ready to dye: but he had stretched out himselfe before, as well as he could, for reverence unto the blessing of God, which he delivered: but now feeling the houre of his death to be instant, hee doth gather his legs, after a seemely and quiet manner, not strugling or striving against death, as many doe, but as death were in his power, he doth meekely and gently yeeld himselfe unto it: such a peaceable kinde of departure God often granteth to his children, Muscul. Howbeit, this is not always so, for sometime a wicked man may dye like a lambe, still and quiet, as the Psalme saith, There are no bands in their death, Psal. 73.4. and a righteous man may have a strong death, by reason of the extremity of his disease and the manner of the disease: but yet inwardly he hath a peaceable and quiet soule and therefore Balaam had good reason to pray as he did: Let me dye the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his, Num. 23.10.

Chap. L.

1. The Method and Argument.

IN this Chapter is set forth, 1. Iosephs piety toward his father Iacob, in causing him to be embawmed, vers. 2, 3. in his buriall. 1. He procured leave of Pharaoh, vers. 4, 5, 6. 2. He did honourably accompany him, vers. 7, 8, 9. 3. They mourned for him by the way, vers. 10, 11. 4. Then they buried him, as he had commanded.

3. The explanation of doubtfull questions and places.

Quest. I. Of the divers fashions of buriall.

Vers. 2. And Moses commanded his servants the Physitians, &c. 1. At the first it seemeth that Physitians were not much regarded, seeing the servants were Physitians: so also it was among the Romans, but afterwards they grew in credit, and were much honoured, Plini. libr. 29. initi. 2. It seemeth that some among the Egyptians were especially deputed for this service to embawme the dead. Diodorus writeth, that they used to come to the house of the dead, to know in what manner they would have their buriall solemnized: for there were three degrees of buriall, some after a costly manner, some in a meane, some poorely had their funerals kept: and of these embawmers some did only cut the body, and take out the excrements, who were hated of all; some did embawme them with spices, and these were highly honoured, Diodor. lib. 2. cap. 5. 3. Divers countries had divers fashions of buriall: The Hircani devoure dead bodies with dogs: the Iberi expose them to the vultures: the Nasamones bury them in the sand: the Celtæ drinke in dead mens bones: the Scythians hang them up upon trees to wast and consume: the Indians hang them up in their houses: the Romans from the dayes of Numa till the time of the Emperours Antonini used to burne them, the Egyptians to embawme them. The Persians burne not the dead, because they hold fire to be a God, and therefore not fit to feed of dead carkasses: the Egyptians burne not, because they hold fire to have life and to devoure, and when it hath devoured, it dieth it selfe, Perer. ex Herod. lib. 2.

Quest. II. Of the time and continuance of the Egyptians mourning.

Vers. 3. And 40. dayes were accomplished. 1. These 40. dayes of embawming are part of the 70. dayes of mourning, that is, they embawmed him 40. dayes, and mourned 30. dayes more, Mercer, not Diodorus, that they embawmed 30. dayes, or as Herodot. that after the embawming, they salted the body 70. dayes, or as Comestor, the Egyptians did mourne forty dayes, the Hebrewes thirty; for the Egyptians are said to have mourned seventy dayes. 2. Before the times of the Gospell when the hope of the resurrection was not so common, the Hebrewes used more ceremonies in buriall, and the Egyptians and other nations, that had not that hope, more than they: so that this use and custome of the Hebrewes and of the Egyptians, which they retained in burials of great persons, as Asa was laid into a bed, 2 Chron. 12. 3. Ioseph did not observe this custome of embawming for feare to offend the Egyptians, but partly to honour his father with this solemnity without superstition, and partly of necessity because they were to carry the corps a long journey, Mercerus. 4. The Egyptians are said to have mourned, because it was no wonder, that he was bewailed of his owne children and family: neither did they mourne, because by Iacobs comming into Egypt they escaped two yeeres of famine, as some Hebrewes imagine; for there were seven yeeres of famine compleat: but they mourned to shew their love unto Iacob, and their reverence to Ioseph. 5. Here the Egyptians mourne seventy dayes: the Israelites for Moses mourned thirty dayes, following the Egyptian use: Numa Pompilius also ordained a mourning of some ten moneths: the mourning for Constantine the great at Nicomedia continued twenty Herodot. lib. 2. Diodor. lib. 2. Histor. scholast. c. 114. in Genes.

Why the Egyptians are noted to have mourned.

twenty dayes: the custome was divers for the time: but the usuall stint was seven dayes, Ecclesiast. 22.12. so long mourned Ioseph for his father Iacob, v. 10. so many dayes did the Romans bewaile the Emperour Severus, Herodian. lib. 4. Iun.

QUEST. III. Why Ioseph moved Pharaoh by others, not by himselfe.

Vers. 4. IOseph spake to the house of Pharaoh. 1. Ioseph used other intercessors to Pharaoh, because he had need of a great company to goe with them, which could not be done without Pharaohs leave, Muscul. 2. Ioseph also mourned, and therefore was not fit to present himselfe before the King: for such used not to come in the Princes presence, Esther 4.2. Iun. 3. Beside it, was least suspicious that the matter to be moved by others: lest if Ioseph had spoken himselfe, hee might have beene thought to have despised the land of Egypt, and therefore he maketh mention of his fathers purpose before for his oath and the oath wherewith he bound him. Calvin. 4. Pharaoh also might have thought, that Ioseph intended to leave Egypt, and therefore promiseth to returne againe. Mercer. 5. Beside, seeing the King moved for him, it was better accepted, because he had the consent of the whole court. Mercer. 6. Some brewes thinke, that Ioseph did in policie set others a worke, to decline the suit of the countries, who would have beene instant with Ioseph to bury his father in Egypt.

QUEST. IV. Why Iacob is said to have digged or made a grave for himselfe.

Vers. 5. BVry me in my grave which I have made or digged for me. 1. This is not understood of the purchase of the place of sepulture made by Iacob; as the word carah to dig, sometime signifieth, as Deut. 2.6. Thou shalt dig (that is, buy) water for money: for Iacob did not buy this double cave, but Abraham. 2. And Iacob cannot be said to buy it, because Abraham bought it, as Lyranus: for Abraham in every where, is said to have bought it, and not Iacob, Gen. 49.30.50.13. 3. That also is but a fable of the brewes, that Iacob is said to have digged, or gotten it, because he bought out Esaus right with a summe of gold. 4. And it signifieth more, than that Iacob appointed himselfe a certaine place of buriall there. 5. Therefore it is most like, that in deed Iacob did cause a place of sepulture to be digged, and made ready for himselfe against he died, though this be not else where mentioned, August. qu. 170. in Genes. Neither was it the use, for men in their life time to make their sepulchers, as Asa did, 2 Chron. 16.14. and Ioseph of Arimathea, Matth. 27.60. Iun.

QUEST. V. Why Christ refused to give leave to his disciple to bury his father: yet Pharaoh granteth it to Ioseph.

Vers. 6. AND Pharaoh said, Goe up and bury thy father. It need not seeme strange that Pharaoh a heathen King giveth leave to Ioseph to bury his father, and yet our Saviour would not grant so much to one of his disciples: for the case was not alike. 1. This disciple was called to preach the Gospel, and he could not attend that businesse, unlesse he neglected his calling. 2. His meaning was, not to goe bury his father, and come straight againe, but to stay with him till he died. 3. Beside his sons were none of the faithfull or beleevers, but he was of their number that were spiritually dead, and therefore had beene dangerous for the disciple to converse with such. 4. Neither was he bound by an oath to performe that duty, as Ioseph was here, Muscul.

Vers. 8. ONly their children, and their sheepe, &c. left they behind, &c. 1. The Egyptians did not kill their cattell, as now beginning to oppresse them, as the Hebrewes: for they were not so to be used. 2. But they left these things, which might be cumbersome unto them, because they purposed to turne againe, both for that Ioseph so promised, upon whom they depended, who was not to forsake his calling: and for that their time of returne was not yet come, and therefore the sonnes of Ephraim had but hard successe, because they prevented the time, 1 Chron. 7.21. Mercer. 3. Although no mention be made of their women and servants, yet it is like, that they stayed behind likewise, the one to attend their children, the other their cattell, Muscul. 4. The charets and horsemen were for their defense.

QUEST. VII. The corne flower of Atad, why so called, and whether on this side, or beyond Iordan.

Vers. 10. THey came to Goren Atad. 1. Atad signifieth a thorne or bramble bush, of the great which brancheth out, and is of the bigenesse of a laurell tree: so it is taken, Psal. 58. before your thornes are felt as great brambles, that is, before your power increase, the Lord shall destroy. Iun. This place then was beset with such brambles: so that Goren Atad is here rather a name appellative than proper, Iun. 2. This place was not beyond Jordan, as the most translate, H. B. G. P. S. and some thinke, that Ioseph brought them about by the desarts of Idumæa, and so to Jordan, the same way which afterward Iosua did conduct the people by into Canaan, for feare of the Canaanites, lest they should have troubled them in the way. But Ioseph being so well accompanied, needed not to feare the Canaanites, and the Egyptians at that time were feared of other nations: and seeing they going the streight way might be as soone and sooner at Mamre than at Jordan, which lay Eastward out of the way, Ioseph had no reason to fetch a circuit about. Augustine thinketh they came first to Mamre, and from thence over Jordan to this place, where they mourned, which was 50. miles off from the place of buriall, and returned againe the same way over Jordan to Mamre, quest. 171. in Gen. But there is small reason to thinke they should goe 50. miles beyond the place of buriall, which was the utmost period of their journey, to goe backe againe. Wherefore Mercerus thinketh, it is to be read rather on this side of Jordan: citra Iordanem, ad vadum Iordanis, at the passage of Jordan, for so the word begneber signifieth, that is, on this side from Jordan: for as Mercerus well noteth, and Luther, beth signifieth ein, on this side, jenseit, or on the other side. Hierome also giveth witnesse hereunto, that this field of thistles was so called of stones cast from Jerico, two miles from Jordan, called Betagla, that is, the maze or circle, because the Egyptians went about circle wise, when they mourned for Iacob. Now Jerico is on the West side of Jordan, not beyond. Hierome saith, it was trans Iordanem, beyond Jordan in respect of some other place, as France, which the Romans call Transalpina, beyond the Alpes, is to them in France, Cisalpina on this side the Alpes, Mercer.

QUEST. VIII. Why they mourned in Atad, before the place of burial.

Vers. 10. There he mourned for his father seven dayes. 1. This mourning then of Ioseph and the Egyptians in this place, was not for the great slaughter of the Israelites, which afterward fell out in this place, when the Lord sent a fire amongst them for their murmuring, as Histor. scholast. noteth: for neither was that fire sent forth in this place, which is mentioned, Numb. 11. or Numb. 16. and the text saith plainly, that they mourned for Iacob. 2. Whereupon of their mourning it was called Abel, which signifieth mourning, not a plaine which is so called, because it mourneth for barrennesse, as Ramban and Mercerus following him. 3. They mourned before they came to the place of buriall, Mercer. as some thinke, and not for feare lest they should have beene interrupted by the Canaanites, if they had deferred this solemnity, till they came to Mambre, as Pererius: but this being a fit place for them to rest their weary cattell, that had gone a long way thorow the solitary and sandy desart, in the same time they used this solemnity, Muscul.

QUEST. IX. How Iacobs sonnes carried him, and in what order.

Vers. 13. His sonnes carried him into the land of Canaan. The Hebrewes here have certaine curious observations: 1. That Iacob gave charge that his sonnes only, not his nephewes should carry him, because most of them were borne of Canaanitish women. 2. That Levi should not beare him, whose posterity was afterward to beare the Arke; nor Ioseph, because he was a governour; but Ephraim and Manasses should be in their stead. 3. That Iacob appointed them their places, three on the East side of the coffin, three on the West, three toward the North, three toward the South: it is like they carried the coffin after a seemely and orderly manner, but whether in this forme, it is uncertaine, ex Mercer.

Hebrewes curious observations.

QUEST. X. By whom the message was sent to Ioseph, and whether indeed Iacob dying, gave any such charge.

Vers. 16. They sent unto Ioseph, saying, &c. 1. This message was not sent by any of the Egyptians, to whom they would not impart that secret; neither is it like that Dan and Nephtali, the sonnes of Bilha carried it, because Ioseph did keepe sheepe with them, Genes. 37. 2. as the Hebrewes thinke: but it is rather like, that some of their domesticall and trusty servants went with this message in the name of all their brethren, Mercer. 2. Neither did they come in, watching their time, while the message was in delivering, as some thinke, but they stayed till they knew Iosephs minde by the messenger, Calvin. 3. They use perswasions to move Ioseph, vers. 17. because they were brethren, servants of the same God, it was their fathers will, Iun. 4. Yet all this seemeth to be fained: for it is like, that Iacob would have spoken to Ioseph himselfe, if there had beene any such matter: and Ramban thinketh, that Iacob never knew of his sonnes offence against Ioseph: for he himselfe did forbeare to tell his father, because he had remitted it, and his sonnes would not accuse themselves, Calvin. Mercer. 5. The cause of their suspition, was not (as the Hebrewes imagine,) because Ioseph being in the land of Canaan went to see the pit, into the which he was let downe, and there gave thankes, whereby they thought his mind was altered toward them; but their owne timorous heart misgiveth them, and they measured Ioseph by themselves, thinking that he had but dissembled his malice toward them hitherto for feare of their father, as Esau purposed to doe toward Iacob while Isaack lived, Mercer. 6. Ioseph wept for griefe, that without cause they so hardly conceived of him. 7. Iosephus is here deceived, that Iosephs brethren refused to returne into Egypt with him, but that they gently intreated them: for all this was done after that they were returned.

When and upon what occasion this message was sent to Ioseph.

Ioseph. lib. 2. antiquit.

QUEST. XI. In what sense Ioseph saith, am I God.

Vers. 19. Am I in Gods stead? &c. 1. Some doe read, Am not I under God? and make this sense: if God be ready to forgive, much more I. 2. Some, I dot feare God, or I am Gods, S. C. therefore will not seeke to revenge. 3. But the best reading is, Am I in Gods stead? with an interrogation, not without, as Cajetane readeth, I am in Gods stead, that is, I follow Gods will and sentence, I looke not to any evill intent: the word thachath, signifieth both pro, for, and sometime it is a note of subjection, but it is taken in the first sense. 4. The meaning then of these words, Am I God, is not, 1. either, that I should aske God forgiveneſſe, and not him: 2. or that he committed his revenge to God, for hee thought of no revenge: 3. or that he would not have them to worship him as God, for he had divers times received that reverence at their hands: 4. neither doth he by this meanes excuse their fault, because he referreth all to Gods will. 5. But the meaning is, that seeing God had turned their evill counsell in him, to his good, and theirs, and of many beside, he would not for his part be the man that should take revenge, Calvin. Mercer. and so the Latine Interpreter doth hit the sense, though not the words. Is it for Gods will? Iacob after the same manner said to Rachel, (that said, give me children,) am I in stead of God, Gen. 30. 2. that is, it is not in my power to give thee children: so here Ioseph saith, am I God? it is not in my power to hurt you, whom the Lord intendeth by this meanes to blesse, Iun.

QUEST. XII. The computation of Iosephs age.

Vers. 22. Ioseph lived an hundred and ten yeeres. 1. Thus God recompenced Iosephs short affliction, which endured 13. yeeres from the 17. yeere (not from the 16. as Pererius saith, following the Latine text) of his age, to the 30. when he stood before Pharaoh, with a long time of prosperity, space of 80. yeeres, that is, from the 30. yeere, to the 110. yeares, for so long he lived. 2. Yet attribute Ioseph to the yeeres of his father, which were 147. and some of his brethren overlived him, him as Levi, who lived 137. yeares, Exod. 6. 16. whether Ioseph dyed first of all his brethren, as Perer. thinketh, it is uncertaine: the great affliction and hard imprisonment in his youth, the cares and [illegible] of the government and administration of the kingdome, might be some reason of the shortning of [illegible] dayes, Perer. 3. This then was the age of Ioseph, hee was 17. yeares old when he was sold into [illegible] Gen. 37. 2. at 30. yeares he stood before Pharaoh, Gen. 41. 46. he was 49. yeares old when Iacob came into Egypt, for the seven yeares of plenty were then past, and two of famine, Gen. 45. 6. at Iacobs death, who lived 17. yeares in Egypt, Gen. 47. 28. he was 56. yeares old; and 54. yeares he lived after, which make 110. in all. 4. By this age of Ioseph it may appeare, how long hee dyed before Moses was borne, namely 64. yeares, and 144. yeares before the departure of Israel out of Egypt: as may be thus gathered: from the promise made to Abraham, to the going out of Israel, are 430. yeares, Exod. 12. 40. Gal. 3. 17. of this time 215. yeares were run, when Iacob came downe to Egypt: for Abraham was 75. yeares old, when the promise was first made, Gen. 12. 4. Isaack was borne when Abraham was 100. yeares old, Gen. 17. 17. Isaack at 60. had Esau and Iacob borne, Gen. 25. 26. Iacob at 130. came downe to Egypt, Gen. 48. 9. these yeares put together, 25. of Abrahams age, 60. of Isaacks, 130. of Iacobs, make up exactly: there remaineth then the other halfe of 215. of the which time Ioseph lived 71. yeares, when he was 49. when Iacob came downe to Egypt, and lived 110. yeares, there remaineth then, 144. yeares: from this 80. yeares, for so old was Moses, when Israel went out of Egypt, and the remnant is 64. years Iosephs death to Moses birth. 5. Here appeareth Tostatus errour, that would have 66. years from the death of Ioseph till Moses: and 146. from thence to Israels departure, wherein he failes 2. yeares. But Iustinus the historiographer is in a greater error, who would have Moses to be Ioseph. lib. 36. and in the same place, he hath other untruths; as that Ioseph was his fathers youngest sonne, his brethren sold him for the excellency of his wit, whereas they did it of malice; that he got [illegible] interpreting dreames by art magicke: whereas the Magitians and wise-men of Egypt could not do it, he by the spirit of God was enabled thereunto, ex Perer.

How long Ioseph died before Moses was borne,

Iustinus the historiographer, detected of sundrie untruths.

QUEST. XIIII. How many generations Ioseph saw of Ephraim.

Vers. 23. IOseph saw Ephraims children to the third generation. 1. Thus most doe read, that Ioseph saw Ephraims childrens childrens children, in the third descent from Ephraim, [illegible] grand-nephewes: which were abnepotes to Ioseph, nephewes in the fourth degree: but of Manasseh saw onely his childrens children: so that Manasseh was only a grand-father, Ephraim a great grand-[illegible] while Ioseph lived: so that Ephraim was forwarder in his posterity, than Manasseh by one descent. I rather thinke that Ioseph saw Ephraims children in the fourth generation from Ephraim, in the [illegible] himselfe. 1. Because they are called, in the originall, the sonnes of the third, namely from Ephraim: [illegible] of the third are in the fourth generation: and so Iunius translateth well abnepotes, that is, nephewes in the fourth descent. 2. Because we finde that Ephraim though younger than Manasseh, exceeded him two descents: for Iosuah was the seventh from Ephraim, who was the sonne of Nun, the son of [illegible] ma, of Ammihud, of Hodan, of Shutelah, of Ephraim, 1 Chron. 7. 26, 27. But Zelophehad, who with Iosua, and dyed in the wildernesse, of Hepher, of Gilead, of Machir, of Manasseh, was but the [illegible] from Manasseh, Numb. 29. 1. Therefore when Ioseph saw the sonnes of Machir, of Manasseh in the second degree from Manasseh, he might see Elishama in the fourth descent from Ephraim: and that Iacobs prophecie more fully tooke effect even in Iacobs time, that Ephraim should be greater in [illegible] than Manasseh.

QUEST. XIV. The meaning of this phrase to be brought up upon the knee.

Vers. 23. WEre brought up on Iosephs knees. The Scripture useth three phrases of this kinde: [illegible] come from betweene the feet, which is taken for education and bringing up, Gen. [illegible] though sometime it be specially applied to the birth of women, Deuter. 28. 57. 2. They are said, to [illegible] upon his knees, that is, to receive the children newly borne, and to lay hand on them, which properly [illegible] geth to women; as Rachel saith, when she gave Bilha her maid to Iacob, She shall beare upon my knees, [illegible] 30. 3. 3. The children are said to be brought up upon the fathers knees, because they with joy [illegible] their babes, and dandle them on their knees, Mercer. Iunius.

QUEST. XV. Why Ioseph would not presently be buried in Canaan.

Vers. 25. IOseph tooke an oath of the children of Israel. 1. The Latine readeth only, he tooke an oath of them: but the Hebrewes well note, that it is said, of the children of Israel, because not only the Patriarkes in person, but all their posterity afterwards did take themselves bound to this oath, and afterwards performed it. 2. Ioseph did not presently charge them to bury him in Canaan, but at their departure, for these reasons: 1. Because he would not prevent the time which God appointed, for he knew that God would visit them and deliver them, Mercer. 2. He did it to shew his faith, as the Apostle [illegible] eth, that this motion proceeded of faith, Hebr. 11. 22. and that seeing they were to indure great affliction, which Ioseph did foresee, and therefore he saith, God would visit them, hee by this meanes would have them confirmed in the hope and expectation of their deliverance. 3. Hee knew that the Egyptians would not suffer his body to be removed, Perer. 4. And this would bee an occasion, that the Israelites should have Ioseph in remembrance, leaving his monument among them, and deale the better with them in [illegible] tion, Mercer.

QUEST. XVI. Why Ioseph was buried in Sechem.

Vers. 25. YE shall carry my bones hence. 1. This was accordingly performed by Moses, when the Israelites came out of Egypt, Exod. 13. 19. 2. Besides, it is evident also out of the Scripture, that Ioseph was buried in Sechem, not because Ioseph was there sold into Egypt, as some Hebrewes thinke, for done in Dothan, not in Sechem, Genes. 37. 17. neither as Rab. Salomon thinketh, because Iacob gave Sechem to Ioseph, to that end to be a place of buriall, or for that Ioseph gave charge to his brethren, there to bury him, Mercer. for no such thing is mentioned in the story. But I rather thinke that the Israelites by Gods direction did there bury him, because that place was given him in speciall words by Iacob, and be-came his out to be in the inheritance of his sonnes: for which cause also they buried Iosua in his inheritance in mount Ephraim, Iosua 24. 30. 32.

QUEST. XVII. Whether the rest of the Patriarkes were buried in Sechem.

NOw whereas a question may be moved whether the Israelites removed the bones of the rest of the Patriarkes, when they came out of Egypt. 1. It is not like, that the Patriarkes as they died in Egypt were carried to Hebron, where Iacob was buried, as Iosephus thinketh, lib. 2. antiquitat. cap. 4. for this were a great trouble to make so many severall journeyes: and seeing Iosephs bones were kept in Sechem, there was no reason to remove the rest. 2. Much more unlike it is (as some thinke,) that they were carried to Sechem as they died: for Ioseph was the first that was there buried. 3. And that they were removed from Sechem by the sonnes of Hemor, as some expound that place, Act. 7. 16. it is not probable: for the Israelites after their returne would not have suffered any other to meddle with their fathers sepulchers before they returned, they would rather have buried them in Hebron, than in Sechem. Therefore it is most likely, that the Patriarkes bones were carried out of Egypt together with Iosephs and there all buried together, as Stephen sheweth, Act. 7. 16. Perer. Consent.

Now whereas mention is made of that place, Act. 7. 16. where it is said, That Iacob and the fathers were carried into Sichem, and put in the sepulcher, which Abraham bought of the sonnes of Hemor of Sichem: this hath moved much question: I will adde somewhat here of this matter, to that which is before collected, qu. 13. in Gen. 23.

QUEST. XVIII. How Abraham is said, Act. 7. 19. to have bought the sepulcher of the sonnes of Hemor, whereas he indeed bought it of Ephron.

Here I refused their opinion, that thinke Stephen might faile in memory, and name Abraham for Iacob. 2. Theirs also I rejected, which thinke that Zophar Ephraims father, of whom Abra-ham bought the ground, was also called Hemor: whereunto Pererius subscribeth. 3. Neither doe I con-sent to Beroald, which thinketh that the Patriarkes were removed from Sichem, to the sepulcher which Iacob bought, by the sonnes of Hemor, and so referre the last words, of the sonnes of Hemor, not to the place bought, but to the word, ètethésan, put: but this is not likely, that the Sichemites had any thing to doe with their bones. 4. Nor yet can I altogether approve Beza his conjecture, that thinketh, by the negligence of the scribes, Abraham to be put into the text for Iacob: the reasons why I refused these conjectures I have set downe in that place, whither I referre the Reader.

The Syrian Translater readeth in the singular metetithe, he was translated, and etéthe, was put, and so understandeth it only of Iacob, that he was removed to Sichem, and from thence by the Sichemites carried to Hebron. But the Scripture overthroweth this conjecture, which testifieth, that his sonnes buried him in Abrahams place of sepulture, which he bought of Ephron, Gen. 50. 13. beside, the originall copy in the place readeth in the plurall, not in the singular.

I resolved in that place upon the exposition of histor. scholastic. from the which Iunius seemeth not much to differ: histor. scholastic. transporteth the words thus: And were translated to Sichem, bought of the sonnes of Hemor, and from thence put in the sepulcher, which Abraham bought for money: but this trans-posing may seeme very hard: therefore Iunius transposeth not the words, but thinketh the article τὸ, to be supplied: that where it is said, τοῦ τῶν υἱῶν, of the sonnes, he would have it, τοῦ πρὸ τούτου, &c. beside that which the sonnes of Hemor, that is, bought of them: and would have this to be the meaning, that Iacob and the rest were buried part of them in Abrahams sepulcher, part in Sechem, which Iacob bought. To this exposition, that Stephen here abridgeth two historics, of Abrahams and Iacobs purchase, I gave liking as the best of all the rest propounded.

But since I have considered of another way to reconcile this place, which doth satisfie my selfe best: and this it is, that by Abraham here is not understood the posterity of Abraham, as Genevens. upon that place, for that were an unproper kinde of speaking: but I rather thinke, according to the manner of the Hebrew tongue, wherein Stephen then spake, that there is here an eclipsis of a word of cognation, as of brother, or such like: for it is usuall in the Scriptures to eclipse such termes and names of kindred: as 1 Chron. 8. He tooke the five sonnes of Michal, that is, of the sister of Michal: for Michal had no children as you may see of that chapter: Elhanah slew Goliah the Gittite, that is, the brother of Goliah Lahmi, 1 Chron. 20. where the word brother is eclipsed: so also in this place Hemor of Sichem, where, not the word sonne, as the common English translations reade it, but father, as Beza, or prince, as Iunius must be supplied: so also we reade Marie of Iames, that is, the mother of Iames, Mark. 15. 40. So here in this place, the sonne of Abraham, may as well be admitted, as to supply sister, or brother in the place before Gen. 21. 8, 9. I leave now the Reader to take his choice.

The meaning of Stephen is plaine, that the Patriarkes were all buried in Sichem: and so Hierome saith, that in his time their monuments and sepulchers were there to bee seene, epitaph. Paul. and Iosephus lib. 2. antiquit. c. 4. saith, they were buried in Hebron: both may be true, that they were carried to Sichem, then to Hebron: but not by the Sichemites, nor yet immediately removed thi-ther out of Egypt: But I rather with Beza for this matter, admit Hieromes report than Iosephus.

QUEST.

QUEST. XIX. Whether Iacob made his purchase with money, or with lambes.

BUt whereas it may be objected against this interpretation, which understandeth this place of I… purchase: that he bought it not for money, but for an hundred lambes, Genes. 33. 19. I… thinke with Eugubinus, that Hierome, reading lambes, was deceived by the Septuagints translation, … at the first as he thinketh, did read, μνᾶν, money, not ἀμνῶν, lambes: for the Chalde Interpreter also … deth, lambes. 2. Neither with R. Achibas, whom Oleaster followeth, doe I thinke the word chesita, … borrowed of the Arabians, who so call their money. 3. Nor yet, was the money, so called chesita, … as the Basilian penie is called corvus, a raven, as Lippoman. 4. But I rather approve Iunius conjecture … it was a peece of money stamped with the print of a lambe: and so it is taken for a peece of coine … 11. where it is said, that every one of Iobs friends gave him a peece of money, and an earing of gold: … beene no great gift, to bestow upon him a lambe, and the other gift which is joyned with it being … doth rather shew, that it was money: wherefore Stephen in this place doth interpret the other, that … purchase was made with that kinde of money, rather than with lambes.

QUEST. XX. Of the puting of Iosephs bones in a chest.

Hebrewes fables.

Vers. 26. They put him in a chest. 1. I omit here the Hebrewes fables, how that when they could … finde Iosephs tombe, to bring it out of Egypt, a sheepe spake unto them, and shewed … it was: whereupon they led the sheepe with them in the wilderness, and therefore say they, it is … the Psalme, Thou didst lead thy people like sheepe, by the hand of Moses and Aaron. 2. The like … ported by the Author of histor. scholastic. that when Nilus had overflowne the place where Ioseph … was, Moses cast a certaine thin plate of gold into the water, wherein hee writ the name Iehouah, … floting upon the waters, stood still where Iosephs chest was, which they tooke up, and carried … out of Egypt: and he fableth further, that Iosephs bones did prophesie of their difficult and … ney. This fable is worthy no better credit than the other: though Perer. give not the like … 3. Whereas in Ecclesiasticus, cap. 49. 19. it is said, as the vulgar Latine translateth, Iosephs bones … after his death: which Pererius understandeth, of the accomplishment of Iosephs prophecie … that God would visit his people: the words in the originall are, the bones of Ioseph כפקדי … of God, and so the Interlinearie translation readeth. 4. Cajetanus thinketh, that Iosephs bones … in a marble coffin: but it is more like to have beene made of wood, as fittest for carriage. The … also thinke, that the Israelites carried but two Arkes in the wildernesse: the Arke of the … Iosephs arke or chest. But besides that, this is great presumption and boldnesse in them, to … Arke and Iosephs coffin together: it is probable, that the rest of the Patriarks bones were … Egypt, at the returne of the Israelites, and that they were buried in Sechem together with … when else should they have beene conveyed thither? not before they came out of Egypt, … would have laid them in Hebron, where Iacob was buried, rather than in Sechem: and after … not, when they were departed out of Egypt: And though mention be made only by Moses, of the … of Ioseph in Sechem, because he was the more honourable person, and to shew how carefully they … ged the oath made to Ioseph, yet we doubt not, but that according to Stephens report, the rest of … triarks were translated thither: which thing Stephen might know, either by undoubted tradition, … authentike bookes now perished; as Paul learned, that the names of the Magicians in Egypt, … Moses, were called Iannes and Iambres, 2 Tim. 3. 8.

How Stephen might know that the rest of the Patriarkes were buried in Sechem.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. Righteous men apt to shed teares.

Vers. 1. Ioseph wept. This is now the fixt time that Ioseph is said to weepe, Genes. 42. 24. Gen. … Gen. 45. 2. Gen. 46. 29. and twice in this chapter, vers. 15. 18. By this the Stoikes are … who would have a wise man without compassion or affection, Muscul. Also wee see that good … Scripture were apt to shed teares, as Ioseph, and David, who often in the Psalmes maketh mention … teares: such were the holy Apostles S. Paul, Act. 20. 19 and S. Peter, Matth. 27. 57.

2. Doct. God turneth evill actions into good.

Vers. 2. When yee thought evill against me, God disposed it to good. Herein appeareth the … power of God, who is able to turne evill unto good: not that he either … evill actions, and letteth them alone, Calv. neither is he the author, approver, worker, or … Mercer. but he overruleth, even the actions of wicked men, and ordereth and disposeth them … end it pleaseth him: as Iudas conspiracie against Christ, did serve to execute and bring to … minate counsell of God, Act. 2. 23. yet are not the workers of evill thereby any thing excusable, … Gods will taketh place: the good that commeth of an evill action, as here the preservation of … by Iosephs captivity, proceedeth from the goodnesse of God, not from any such intendment in … ment, Pererius. Therefore Boetius saith well, Sola divina vis est, cui mala quæq; bona sint, &c. … can turne evill into good, by using evill to bring forth a good effect.

3. Doct. To love our enemies.

Vers. 21. Feare not, I will nourish you. Thus we are taught by Ioseph to love our enemies, to do … them that hate us: according to the doctrine of our Saviour, Matth. 5. 44. For so … a foster-father unto them, that would have starved him in the pit, Muscul.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. Againſt Maſſes and Trentals for the dead.

Verſ. 3. THe Egyptians bewailed him 70. dayes. Petrus Comeſtor divideth this number into 40. dayes, and 30. dayes: the firſt was the time of the Egyptians mourning, the other of the Hebrewes: whereupon he groundeth the ſuperſtitious uſe of the Chriſtians in mourning, and ſaying Maſſes 30. dayes for the dead, cap. 114. hiſtor. ſcholaſtic. in Geneſ. Contra. 1. The text ſaith, that the Egyptians, not the Hebrewes, mourned theſe 70. dayes: and that uſe taken up afterward by the Hebrewes, was borrowed from the Egyptians: for the ſtint of mourning uſed among the faithfull was but for ſeven dayes: ſo long mourned Ioſeph, ver. 10. 2. Though the Hebrewes mourne 30. dayes, yet did they not pray for their ſoules, offer any ſacrifice for them, nor yet doe any penance for the dead: which ſeemeth to be directly forbidden, Leuit. 19. 28. that they ſhould not cut their haire, or their beard, or make any print in their fleſh for the dead; as though the dead were profited by any ſuch afflicting of themſelves.

2. Confut. Againſt the ſuperſtitious choice of the place of buriall.

Verſ. 13. THey buried him in the cave of the field, &c. Thus was it the uſe among the Hebrewes to bury their dead without the Cities, as we may read, Luk. 7. 12. where our Saviour did meet the people at the gate of the City, carrying a young man to be buried: This cuſtome of a long time was retained among the Gentiles: as among the Athenians, who would by no meanes grant to Servius Sulpitius a place of buriall within the City, Cicer. epiſt. famil. lib. 4. Plato alſo perſcribeth, that the dead ſhould be buried in the fields, and ſuch as were barren and good for nothing elſe, lib. 2. de legib. It was alſo forbidden by the Romane Jewes: Hominem mortuum in urbe ne ſepelito; Bury not a dead man in the Citie. The Chriſtians were the firſt, which buried the dead in their Churches; not as Toſtatus, which firſt buried them within their Cities or houſes, as Pererius therein confuting him, ſheweth out of Diodorus, that it was the manner of the Egyptians, to keepe their dead in coffins at home, placing them upright, and to leave their bodies as pledges to their creditors, Diodor. lib. 2. cap. 11. and out of Herodotus, how the Egyptians doe incloſe their dead in veſſels of glaſſe, in their houſes, and make pictures of them, Herod. lib. 3. But to bury the dead in Churches and neare unto them, for more holineſſe of the place, was firſt taken up by ſuperſtitious Chriſtians: which reſpect of the place, if it be onely civilly uſed, wee condemne not: for Lycurgus ordained, that the dead ſhould be buried neere unto the Temples, that others paſſing by, might be ſtirred up by the ſight of their monuments to imitate their vertues, Plutarg. in Lycurg. But to place the dead in Church, or Church-yard, to be helped by the prayers of the living, as Toſtatus and Pererius, is a ſuperſtitious device of fantaſticall men, without any warrant of Scripture; for if they died in the Lord, they reſt from their labours, and their workes follow them, Revel. 14. 13. If otherwiſe, they are in the place of torment, from whence is no returne, Luk. 16. 26. and our prayers can doe them no good.

3. Confut. Againſt traditions and viſions.

Verſ. 25. GOd will ſurely viſit you. Ioſeph though he had received no viſion or revelation from God concerning this, yet he did verily beleeve the word and promiſe of God, which hee had heard of Iacob; which ſheweth their errour, that as not contented with the Scriptures, ſeeke other helps, as the Papiſts by their blinde traditions, the Anabaptiſts by their fantaſticall viſions, Calvin. But wee are taught that the Scriptures are ſufficient to lead us into all truth, and that they which do teach otherwiſe, though an Angell from heaven, are to be held as accurſed, Galath. 1. 8.

4. Confut. Againſt prayer for the dead.

Verſ. 25. YE ſhall carry my bones hence. The Patriarkes Iacob and Ioſeph, deſired to be buried in the Land of promiſe: 1. Becauſe that was the place, which the Lord did chooſe for his people to dwell in. 2. They did hereby teſtifie their faith in Gods promiſes, that he would bring their ſeed thither. 3. They deſired to be buried with their fathers, as having the ſame hope of the reſurrection. 4. They foreſaw by the ſpirit of prophecie, that the Meſſiah ſhould be borne there. 5. But this was no cauſe, as Bellarmine imagineth, that they might receive benefit by the prayers and ſacrifices of the dead. 1. For at this time, and 200. yeeres after Iacobs death, there was no worſhip of God nor publike prayer profeſſed in Aegypt, till the Iſraelites returned out of Egypt. 2. And if prayer were availeable for the dead, it might profit them which were buried in Egypt farre off, as well as neere hand. 3. No example can be produced out of the Canonicall Scriptures of the old Teſtament, that ever any prayed for the dead.

Bellar. de purgat. lib. 1. c. 2.

5. Confut. Againſt the carrying about of relikes.

Verſ. 26. THey put him in a cheſt in Egypt. Ioſeph was layed up in a coffin, and there kept: they did not rake in his aſhes, and take out his bones, and carry them about to worke miracles, as they doe the bodies of Saints in the popiſh Church, if they be their bodies: Plinie maketh mention of Pyrrhus, that his great toe on the right foot could not be burned with his body, and that it gave helpe being touched, to thoſe which had the ſwelling of the ſplene, whereupon it was laid up in the Temple, Plin. l. 7. Whether it were an impoſture of Sathan, or one of Plinies fables, I cannot ſay: many like tales current among the Romaniſts. But Ioſias practiſed the contrary, who would not ſuffer the bones of the Prophet of Iudah to be removed, that propheſied of him by name, 2 King. 23. 17.

6. Places

6. Places of morall observation.

1. Mor. To mourne moderately for the dead.

Vers. 3. THe Egyptians bewayled him 70. daies. But Ioseph onely mourned for his father seven daies vers. 10. wherein appeareth the difference betweene the mourning of the faithfull, which have hope, and of infidels, which have no hope of the resurrection: the one is moderate, the other excessive: So the Apostle teacheth, that wee should not mourne for the dead, as those that have no hope, 1 Thess. 4. 13. but with sobriety and in measure.

2. Mor. Vnity of religion the bond of peace.

Vers. 17. FOrgive the trespasse of the servants of thy Fathers God: there is nothing which ought more to perswade men to unitie, than that they worship one and the same God: as S. Paul exhorteth, to keepe the unitie of the spirit in the bond of peace, for there is one Lord, one faith, one baptisme, &c. Ephes. 3. 4, 5. Therefore Christians doe much forget themselves, in dishonouring their holy profession with unbrotherly strife and contention.

3. Mor. Oaths must be religiously kept.

Vers. 6. GOe and burie thy father, as he made thee to sweare. Even Pharaoh an Heathen prince made conscience of an oath, and therefore condescended to Iosephs request. This example shall condemne many Christians, that are carelesse to performe their oathes, Calvin. whereas the Scripture teacheth, that a man should keepe his oath, though hee swear to his owne hinderance, Psal. 15. 4.

4. Mor. A guilty conscience alwayes fearefull.

Vers. 15. IT may be that Ioseph will hate us: Iosephs brethren, now after 40. yeares, call to minde the trespasse committed against Ioseph, Mercer. such is the nature of a guilty conscience, upon every occasion it is apt to be revived and stirred: as the Lord said to Cain: If thou doest not well, sin lieth at the doore, Gen. 4. 7. of such Moses saith, the sound of a leafe shaken shall chase them, Levit. 26. 36. Therefore when any hath sinned, let him seeke soundly to heale the wound of his conscience, that it doe not grieve him afterward.

5. Mor. Perfect reconciliation doth good for evill.

Vers. 21. FEare not, I will nourish you, &c. Ioseph here sheweth his unfained reconciliation, in that he doth not only forgive his brethren, but also doth them good: Many now adaies think they are perfectly reconciled, if they doe not recompence evill, though they will not extend their hand to doe good to them, who were before their enemies. But our Saviours doctrine is otherwise, that we should doe good to those that hate us, Matth. 5. vers. 44.

6. Mor. To renounce the world, and the vanities thereof.

Vers. 22. IOseph dwelt in Egypt, he and his fathers house. The Latine readeth, with his fathers house: it is like, that Ioseph did joyne himselfe in society of religion with his fathers house, yet exercising his place of government still: wherein he shewed, that he regarded not the honours and pleasures of the Court, in respect of the fellowship with Gods Church: So the Apostle saith of Moses, that he chose rather to suffer adversity with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sinne for a season, Heb. 11. 25. by these examples we are taught to renounce this world, not to be entangled with the vanities thereof, but to presse forward in desire to our heavenly Canaan.

Here then is an end of this booke: which the Jewes make such account of, that they have numbred the very letters, which make 4395. But as they dwell in the letter, so we should take delight in the spirituall sense and godly edifying. Thus have I by Gods gracious assistance finished this labourous and painfull worke: most humbly beseeching God, to make me able to goe forward in this course, if he shall see it to be to his glorie, and the good of his Church: to whom I give all hearty thanks, who hath thus far holpen and assisted me: and so I conclude with that saying in the Revelation;

Praise, honour, and glory, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the lamb for ever, Revel. 5. 13.

TO THE MOST CHRISTIAN RIGHT NOBLE, MOST EXCELLENT AND mightie Prince, IAMES by the grace of God King of Great Britaine, France and Ireland, Defender of the true Christian Faith.

ANtipater King of Macedonia (most gracious Sovereigne) when one presented unto him a booke treating of happinesse, is said to have rejected it with this answer: I am not at leisure. To whom the presenter replied; Be not King, if thou hast no leisure. Your Majestie with better reason might be excused by want of leisure, if such kinde of presents were neglected; both because your Highnesse affaires of the Kingdome are greater, and such gifts are now exhibited oftner. But that replie was rash and audacious: for be so much the more is worthie the name of a King, who intending more weightie businesse, cannot attend smaller matters: yet seeing Princes are as gods in earth, and this is Gods glorie, who dwelling on high abaseth himselfe to behold things in heaven and earth; may it please your Majestie to descend a little from your Throne of honour, and to vouchsafe to take knowledge of this gift, which is now offered.

Plutarch. ex Stobæo, ser. 66.

Psal. 113. 5.

I here present to your sacred view the historie of Moses birth, education, acts, and exploits: whose faithfulnesse in Gods house, courage against Gods enemies, clemencie and pitie toward his people, and other excellent vertues, as they are mirrors for Princes, so well expressed in your Majesties acts: So in nothing more lively doth your Highnesse, our Moses, resemble this ancient and worthie Moses, than in the manifold preservation of your life and state, even from your cradle and infantie unto this present. Moses being a childe should have beene destroyed; after he was Governour of Israel, divers times did they assault him, murmure and conspire against him: So your Majesties infancie hath beene assaulted, and since your royall person endangered by many unnaturall conspiracies: but now of late most of all in that barbarous and devilish treason, intended against your princely person, and the honourable state of this land, assembled in Parliament.

O goodly ſight! Or Valeſus Proconſul of Aſia under Auguſtus Cæſar, having put to death three hundred men, walked and vaunted himſelfe among the [illegible] bellat, saying; O rem regiam: O Kingly act! Sylla was not so bloudie, who commanded seven thousand Citizens to be killed, whose crie was heard to the Senate house, where Sylla with the Senatours was assembled; for hee did forbeare the Senate house: nor that King of Persia, which commanded the people of Syria to have their eares cut off: or inefull Cambyses, who in his expedition against the Æthiopians, caused every tenth man to be tithed out for food, his armie being almost famished. But [illegible] one man of ten that feared God, and loved the truth, should have beene left alive: yea the very infants could not have beene exempted from this generall massacre: as Hierom speaketh of the crueltie of the Hunnes: Cogerentur mori qui nondum vivere cœperant, & nescientes malum suum, inter hostium manus riderent: They should have beene forced to die, that yet begun not to live: and not knowing their doome, should have smiled under the bloudie hand of the enemie. Hierom. ad Oceanum.

Blessed be God therefore who hath in his great mercie and love to his Church, disappointed their wicked imaginations: in this snare which they laid for others is their owne foot taken: and they are sunke into the pit, that they made for others: the stone which they would have rolled upon us, is fallen upon their owne head. And as Ambrose writeth of the Bees: Apes quæ non obtemperaverint legibus regis, immoderatum aculei sui vulneri; That they which disobey the order of their King wrought them, die upon their owne stings: So that engine, wherewith the Romanists thought to have gored others, hath wounded themselves. As they with Abimelech sought to have fired the tower of Sichem, so their owne parts have justly felt the fire: and as with Sathan, that used the winds to overwhelme the house upon Iobs children, they attempted with a sulphureous spirit to have blowne up that honourable house, so now most worthily their owne members are exposed to the winde and aire, and their wicked acts leave a sulphureous smell behind them. This I write not (God is my record) as rejoycing in their confusion, but grieving rather at the cause thereof, pitying their persons, but hating their actions, ut probem me (as he saith) non homines odisse, sed errores: To shew, that I hate not the men, but their manners. They with Dathan and Abiram are gone downe into the pit, whose mouth they opened to swallow others: as they laboured in the earth to worke iniquitie, so their names are written in the earth to blot out their memorie: they which wickedly imagined to deprive others of burial, with Iehoiakim are themselves buried, as an asse is buried, and cast forth without the gates of Ierusalem. Hierom. ad Oceanum. Heywood. lib. 5. cap. 11. Iudg. 9. 49. Numb. 16. Ierem. 22. 19.

Now nothing remaineth (most Christian King) but that we give due thankes unto our gracious God, who hath wrought this glorious deliverance. In which action of thanksgiving, the Church of God hath used to performe three duties: To give some praise unto God; to send presents one to another, in signe of joy; and to give almes to the poore. In the first your Majestie hath given us example, who in the very place, where the danger was devised, and deliverance received, publiquely as a godly Iehoshaphat blessed God: and this honourable Parliament, concurring with your Christian Majestie, hath well seconded your princely example, in decreeing an annuall commemoration to bee kept of that day: no lesse worthie to bee remembred, than the Iewes feast of Purim, when vile Haman had cast lots over them for their destruction: or the feast of the dedication of the Temple, after Antiochus had polluted it: for how can our mercifull God be sufficiently praised, who discovered the secret counsels of the wicked, undermined the underminers, and he that is a wall of 2 Chron. 20. fire about Ierusalem, hath quenched their fire? There is a path (as Iob saith) which no fowle hath knowne, neither hath the eye of kites seene it: yet the Lord hath declared their works, (as Elihu answereth) and he hath turned the night, that there is no darknesse, nor shadow of death, that the workers of iniquitie might be hid therein. The Lord hath so brought to passe, that neither sagitta volitans per diem the arrow of treacherie flying by day; nor negotium ambulans in tenebris, any spiracie walking in the darke, hath come neere us: therefore alwaies praised be his name. Concerning sending of presents, a testimonie of our joy, that honourable assemblie hath with loving hearts presented to your Majestie a subsidiarie benevolence, as a token of their dutie and thankfulnesse. And may it please your Majestie also to accept the widowes mite, this poore present, which I in all humblenesse and loyaltie dooe offer to your Princely view: thinking it not the least part of my terrene happinesse, that as my Synopsis was readie to meet your Majestie at your joyfull entrance, so this booke commeth forth (by Gods goodnesse) to congratulate for your prosperous deliverance. The gifts to the poore, are your Princely clemencie and bountie to your Majesties loving subjects; that as the first is extended according to the honourable customes of this nation in the determining of the Parliament, to some kinde of offenders: so the other is desired and expected, in seeing provision and maintenance to be procured for the Ministers and Preachers of the Gospell, which in many places is very small, and so the number of them to be not empaired but increased, that religion and learning may flourish, the two principall props of this Kingdome, as your Majestie well knoweth, howsoever some have impiously thought and profanely written to the contrarie.

God strengthen your Majestie, with all the honourable State, that as other countries have digged pits, which hold no water; so our Lawgiver, with the Princes of Israel, may dig wells (of springing water) with their staves, as it is said of Moses; that is, enact such lawes whereby the spring of the Gospell may be kept open, and run along to our posteritie; but the heads of the bitter Romish waters may be dammed and stopped: that all the people of God may use the same joyfull acclamations to such good lawes, as the Israelites did to the well; Rise up well, sing yee unto it. And so in the last, I end with the conclusion of Baraks song: So let all thine enemies perish O Lord, but they which love him, shall be as the Sun that riseth in his might.

Your Majesties most humble Subject,

Andrew Willet.

TO THE MOST REVEREND FATHER IN GOD, RICHARD BY THE DIVINE PROVIdence, Archbiſhop of Canterburie, Primate and Metropolitane of all England, and of his Majeſties moſt Honourable Privie Counſell.

AS concerning lawes, ſo of bookes (Right Reverend Father) there are two opinions; ſome miſlike there ſhould be many, as Arceſilaus in Laertius; whoſe ſaying was, Quemadmodum ubi multi medici, ibi multi morbi, ita ubi permultæ leges, ibi plus vitiorum; Like as where are many Phyſitians, there are many diſeaſes; ſo where there are many lawes, there are many faults. Some thinke it not neceſſarie there ſhould be any: as Demonax uſed to ſay, Leges prorſus eſſe inutiles, ut quibus boni non egerent, mali nihilo fierent meliores; That lawes were altogether unprofitable, becauſe neither the good ſtood in need of them, neither were the evill bettered by them. But Chryſoſtome with a better ſpirit, approved all good lawes, and would have none [illegible]: In cythera non ſatis eſſe in uno tantùm nervo concentum efficere, univerſos oportet percuti numeroſe & decenter; Like as to make muſick on an harpe, to ſtrike upon one ſtring was not ſufficient, unleſſe all were played upon in due meaſure. The like judgement is to bee given of bookes, that as ſuperfluous ſcribling might be well ſpared, ſo neceſſarie and profitable writing is not to be lightly eſteemed.

There are then three ſorts of men, whom I firſt deſire briefely to ſatisfie, and then I will in few words declare the contents, order and end of this worke.

Firſt, ſome there are, that hold theſe labours ſuperfluous, and thinke that this age is given too much to ſcribling, and that the world is peſtred with too many books. But this is their error, that, becauſe ſome books are vainely written, doe ſo judge of all: and finding ſome treatiſes unneceſſarie, they imagine the reſt to be ſo. Indeed it cannot be denied, but that there are ſome writings, which as Ariſton compared Logike, are like ſpiders webs, very curious, but nothing profitable: yet hee which ſhould contemne all, becauſe he juſtly condemneth ſome, were like to an unwiſe patient, who, becauſe of ſome unlearned Empirikes, ſhould reject the skilfull Phyſitian; as even the Heathen Poets Λιαν τηχικοι εἰσιν οἱ χρῆσιμοι. ψυχῆς ἰατρὸν καταλιπεῖν τὰ γράμματα.

could ſay, that he, which neglected learning, left the Phyſitian of his ſoule. In mens divers wits, the diverſitie of Gods gifts diverſly appeareth: There is no eye ſo quicke, but may overſee ſomewhat, which another may eſpie: no wit ſo ſharpe, but may be more whetted: nor yet any gift ſo meane, but there may be ſome uſe thereof: nor no labourer ſo ſimple, but may bring ſomewhat to further Gods building, as the Apoſtle ſaith, Ye may all propheſie one by one, that all may learne, 1 Cor. 14. 3. and all may have comfort. Even the greateſt Prophet, and beſt interpreter, may receive ſome benefit by the meaneſt Preacher, and expounder. True it is, that in theſe dayes, bookes are counted the vileſt vileſt merchandiſe; and the laſt thing, for the moſt part, which a man buyeth, is a booke; and no thing is thought more neceſſarie, than that which is for the ſoule. This alſo is the cauſe, why men are more ſued unto, than wiſe men, and Merchants and Uſurers doores are more frequented than Preachers houſes: becauſe, as one being demanded the reaſon, why wiſe men were more rare than men, and not the rich to the wiſe, anſwered, Wiſe men know what is neceſſarie for them, and ſo doe not the other: Therefore the one ſeeketh things temporall, as requiſite for the bodie, the other neglecteth wiſdome, being neceſſarie for the ſoule. Now concerning ſuch neglecters of divine things and contemners of ſpirituall labours: I ſay, as Hierome anſwered Ruffinus, Mihi & Iſmenium canens, ſi aures ſurdæ ſunt cæterorum: I will ſing unto me and mine, as Amphion the Muſician ſaid to his ſcholar Iſmenius, if other mens eares be deafe.

Another ſort there be, that are given to carpe at other mens writings, who if they be ſuch as are enemies to the truth; I ſay with the Apoſtle, Am I become your enemie, becauſe I ſpeake the truth? Hierom ſaith, Scio me offenſurum quàm plurimos, qui dum mihi irascuntur, indicant conſcientiam; I know I ſhall offend many, who while they be angrie with me, bewray their conſcience. If they ſpeake againſt him that defendeth the truth, they ſhew themſelves therein enemies to the truth; if they cannot indure error to be diſcovered, they declare themſelves to be in error: In this caſe therefore, they which are offended, doe diſcover their own conſcience to bee corrupted. But if the reprehenders of this worke, be ſuch as blame other mens diligence, becauſe they themſelves are idle, and finde faults with that, which they cannot mend, ſuch as like nothing, but their owne; I anſwer with the Apoſtle, He that praiſeth himſelfe is not allowed, but he whom the Lord praiſeth. Now howſoever other are affected toward me, and my poore labours, this minde I will beare toward the ſharpeſt Cenſurers and their writings: that the Apoſtle ſaid of certaine contentious Preachers in his time, That, ſo Chriſt be preached, whether under pretence or ſincerely, hee would therein joy: So I ſay of ſuch writers, whether they write of emulation, and vaine glorie, or of ſincere affection, ſo the truth be maintained, I doe joy therein, and give God thanks for their labours. As Hierom writeth of his friends letters: Si amas, ſcribe obſecranti, ſi iraſceris, iratus licèt ſcribe, magnum & hoc deſiderii ſolatium habebo, ſi amici literas vel indignantis accipiam; Ad Nitriam: If thou loveſt me, write unto my requeſt, if thou art angrie, yet write; it is ſome comfort unto me, that I may receive thy letters, yea of an angrie friend.

But ſome doe thinke, that it is in vaine for men to write in this age, which ſo ſmally conſidereth their paines, and that it is labour loſt, which findeth not recompence in the world. As though learning were the reward of the pen, and the grace of God depended upon the grace and favour of men. But as gifts of God, as they are not bought with money, ſo neither ſhould they be ſold for money. He that ſerveth the world, let him looke for his reward in the world: he that ſerveth Chriſt, ſhall finde him a plentifull rewarder. He that ſaid to his Apoſtles, Great is your reward in heaven, hath a reward in ſtore for thoſe which labour in his name: They which expect either praiſe or profit in this world, having their deſire, doe receive their reward, as our Saviour ſaid of the Phariſees that did all of vaine oſtentation: They have their reward. As for the praiſe of men, as Hierom ſaith of the Preacher, Docente te in Eccleſia, non clamor populi, ſed gemitus inferatur, lachrymæ auditorum laudes tuæ ſint; ad Nepotian. When thou teacheſt in the Church, ſeeke not the to raiſe the crying, but the ſighing of the people; let the teares of the hearers be thy praiſe. As the Preacher muſt not reſpect the praiſe of men, ſo neither the writer. And concerning other reward of gaine or preferment to be expected, Ambroſe hath this excellent ſpeech; Propoſitam pia mens mercedem non appetit, ſed pro mercede habet bonæ conſcientiam, & juſti operis effectum; anguſtæ mentes invitentur promiſſo, erigantur ſperatis mercedibus; lib. 1. de Abraham cap. 8. A godly minde coveteth no propounded reward; but counteth the conſcience of well doing, and the good effect of the well done worke, a reward: let unwilling minds bee enticed by promiſes, and ſtirred up with hope of rewards.

Now it remaineth that I briefely ſhew the argument, order, and matter of this Commentarie, wherein I have chiefely propounded unto my ſelfe (omitting the ordinarie and uſuall collections, diſcuſſing and ſolution of ſuch queſtions as ſeemed more obſcure and difficult: according to that ſaying of Auguſtine, Verbi Dei altitudo exercet ſtudium, non denegat intellectum; The depth of the word of God, doth exerciſe meditation and ſtudie, it denieth not underſtanding. Which fitly reſembleth the holy writers, the Prophets and Apoſtles, to the Angels whom Jacob ſaw aſcending and deſcending: Aſcendentes ſunt, quando perfectis perfecta prædicant; deſcendentes quando

...lis & imperitis ſimplicia inſinuant: They aſcend, when they preach perfect ...perfect: they deſcend, when they inſinuate plaine things to the ſimple. I have ...ſame method in this Commentarie upon Exodus, which I did before obſerue upon ...Genesis: that the one may helpe the other. This hiſtorie of Exodus conſiſting of ...two parts, the redemption of the Lords people, and the conſtitution of them being redeemed, by whole-ſome lawes and ordinances; I haue accordingly diuided into two parts, or tomes: the firſt whereof ...the peoples deliverance, and preſervation, unto the 19. Chapter: The ſecond treateth of ...their inſtitution, and ſetling of their eſtate by wholeſome lawes, both Morall, Iudiciall and Ceremo-niall: which part likewiſe is diſtributed into two books, the firſt containing the promulgation of the ...lawes, to Chapter 30. the other the execution thereof, thence to the end of the booke.

...I proceede in the old Teſtament hitherto: not being yet reſolued with my ſelfe, whether ...the bookes of the Hebrew Scriptures in order, which a mans life time would ſcarce ſuffice in ...the manner to goe thorow, or to make choice of the more difficult books indifferently out of the old ...and new Teſtament: In the handling whereof, wee ſhall ſee the different gifts of Interpreters, as ...S. Hierome well noteth, Multi ſuper Euangelia bene diſſerunt, ſed in explanatione Apoſtoli im-...ſiſſunt, alii cum in inſtrumento novo optimè ſenſerint, in Pſalmis & veteri Teſtamen-...to parum. Dialog. 1. adverſ. Pelagian. Divers doe treat well upon the Goſpels, but in ...explaining the Apoſtle are unlike themſelves: others being of ſound judgement in the new ...Teſtament, are no bodie in the old. But yet to begin with the old, maketh a good way to underſtand ...the new: for the law is a ſchoolemaſter, as the * Apoſtle ſaith, to bring us unto Chriſt. And as Am-...broſe elegantly reſembleth it, Lex velut inferioris molæ ſaxum, tarda, pigra, otioſa; The law as ...the nether milſtone is heavie, ſlow, and of ſmall riddance. But yet as the upper milſtone, though ...of greater agilitie and quicker diſpatch, yet cannot grinde without the nether, but both together make ...perfect: ſo the truth and faith of Chriſt, as fine flower, is betweene the old and new Teſtament ...ſifted and diuided forth unto us.

But this further I muſt aduertiſe the diſcreet Reader of, not to take offence, that I haue made ...in this Commentarie, both of Proteſtant and Popiſh writers, old and new upon this booke (as I ...haue here ſet them downe in the margen) not rejecting the judgement of any that witneſſe for the ...truth. For as the Apoſtle alleageth the Heathen Poets, ſo farre as they are witneſſes of the truth: ...I thinke a Proteſtant, by that warrant, may borrow of ſuch Interpreters, which otherwiſe fauour ...not of ſuperſtition, where their pen is a miniſter and handmaid of truth: and whereas S. ...Paule ſaith, Haue not the faith of our glorious Lord Ieſus Chriſt in reſpect of perſons; they ...doe refuſe the teſtimonie of the truth at any mans hand, in reſpect of any ſchiſme, ſect or profeſ-...ſion, ſhewe to be partiall in diſcerning of the truth, againſt the Apoſtles rule; wherein Pro-...teſtants are more equall than the Romaniſts: for they thinke ſcorne to uſe our writers, though ...of more excellent parts: as appeareth in Pererius Commentaries, who forteth out his collections ...only out of men of his owne ſect (I ſpeake of the new writers) whereas he needed be no more aſhamed, ...to haue followed the judgement of Luther, Caluine, Simlerus, Iunius, and other worthie writers ...among the Proteſtants, as we doe not refuſe the learned obſeruations of Cajetanus, Montanus, ...Vatablus, with others of their ſide. I haue therefore out of their writings taken the beſt and left ...the reſt: where they ſpeake the truth, I alleage them; where they are found in error, I refute them: ...in following Hieroms preſident, Operis eſt & ſtudii mei multos legere, ut ex plurimis di-...ligos flores carperem, non tam probaturus omnia, quàm, quæ bona, electurus. Adverſ. ...Rufin. I profeſſe this to be my ſtudie, to gather varietie of flowers out of divers, not to al-...low all which I finde, but to make choice of the beſt. And as Ambroſe well ſaith, Legimus ...ut non, ne legantur; legimus, ne ignoremus; legimus, non ut teneamus, ſed ut repudiemus: ...ſome things we reade, that others ſhould not read them; we reade them, not to be ignorant ...of them; we reade them, not to retaine them, but to reject them.

...Theſe my labours, as your Grace was my great incourager firſt to undertake them, ſo it is meet ...they ſhould with the firſt reape the fruit of them. And this I wiſh from my heart, and humblie ...pray of God, that, all domeſticall contentions being laid aſide, wee the Miniſters of the Goſpell ...may ſo ſpend our time, and imploy our paines, that the age preſent might receive comfort by our ...labours, and poſteritie profit. And I ſay with Auguſtine to Hierome, Quieſcamus ab his ...contentionibus, noſtræ vitæ ſalutique parcamus, minus certè aſſequatur illa, quæ inflat, dum ...non impugnatur illa quæ ædificat: Let us reſt from theſe contentions, and fauour our life and ...ſalue: let that have leſſe which puffeth up, ſo that be not offended which edifieth. Mens ...charitie ſhould give place to charitie, and opinion of knowledge to peace, and ſelfe loue to the ...common

CERTAINE DIRECTIONS TO THE READER.

Deſire thee (courteous Reader) to follow theſe directions in the reading of this worke. In the whole Scripture and euery part thereof, there are two things generally to be conſidered, the ſenſe and underſtanding, and the uſe and profit: As the Apoſtle toucheth both, firſt ſpeaking to Timothie of the Knowing, that is, the underſtanding of Scripture, then of the profitable uſe, 2 Tim.3.15,16. The ſenſe of the Scripture is either the literall and ſingle ſenſe, which is ſeene in the interpretation of the words; or the compound and mixt ſenſe, which conſiſteth either in ſhewing the coherence of the text, with the other parts going before, and following; or in removing of doubts, difficulties and contradictions. Now the uſe and profit of Scripture, either conſiſteth in doctrine, in confirming the truth, and confuting error; or manners, in reproving vice, or exhorting to vertue: and thus the Apoſtle ſaith, The whole Scripture is profitable to teach, to improve, to correct and inſtruct in righteouſneſſe, 2 Tim.3.16.

According to this diſtribution, have I obſerved ſix points upon every Chapter: three belonging to the ſenſe, the Argument and method ſhewing the coherence, the divers Readings explaning the ſignification and ſignification of words, and the explication of queſtions, which concerneth the removing of doubts: the other three doe ſhew the uſe, in noting the doctrines for confirmation of the truth, the controverſies for the confuting of errors; and then follow the Morall obſervations, tending either to the inſtruction of vice, or inſtruction in righteouſneſſe.

In the Divers Readings, I. ſignifieth Junius, V. Vatablus, C. the Chalde Paraphraſt, S. the Samaritane, L. the vulgar Latine tranſlation, A. Arias Montanus, P. Pagnine, B. the great Bible, G. the Geneva edition, H. the Hebrew originall. And the letters in the margen ſhew the ſame readings: the ſtarre fixed in the margen noteth the diverſitie of reading in ſome principall place. Theſe my labours now I commend unto thy favourable acceptation (Chriſtian Reader,) and both thee and them, to the gracious bleſſing of our glorious Lord Ieſus Chriſt: to whom be praiſe for ever.

GENERALL OBSERVATIONS out of the whole Booke.

1. The summe and argument.

AS in the former booke Moses shewed the originall and beginning of the Church: so in this hee declareth the progresse and increase thereof. Simler: wherein, both Gods faithfulnesse and truth appeareth in performing his promise made to their fathers, in multiplying their seed wonderfully, and that under the miserable thraldome and bondage of Egypt. Pellican. and the Lords glorie and power notably appeared in those mighty signes and wonders, whereby Pharaoh was forced to let Israel goe. Varab. his fatherly and tender care also shewed it selfe, in sparing his people and not utterly destroying them, when they fell into lust, murmuring, and idolatrie: still correcting them as a father, by his chastisements to bring them to repentance, yet remembring his ancient love still following them with new benefits. Genevens. and his wonderfull providence is manifested in giving them lawes to be governed by, [illegible] unto them a most excellent forme of worship. Iunius. And the summe of this booke is [illegible] in the 105. 3. Certaine generall questions out of the whole booke explained.

Quest. I. Concerning the inscription of the booke.

THis booke is called in Hebrew of the first words, velle shemoth, that is, and these are the Greekes, it is called Ἔξοδος, Exodus, of the miraculous going of the Israelites out of The inscription of the bookes of Scripture is of three sorts: for it is taken either from wrote them, as the bookes of Esay, Ieremy, &c. or whereof they be written, either in of Iosuah, and of the Judges: or in part, as the bookes of Samuel: or else from the as the booke of Leviticus, Numbers, &c. or of the first words of the booke: as Genesis, brewes, beresheth, in the beginning: Leviticus, vaiikra, and he called, &c. which are the first and so also is this booke named, as is said before: Iun. and the reason of it may be this, writer of any booke of Scripture left it without name, they of elder time for reverence did forbeare to give it any title. Simler.

Quest. II. Of the computation of yeeres, comprehended in the storie of Exodus.

CConcerning the continuance of time and number of yeeres, which are comprehended they are found to be 148. as may bee thus gathered: From the death of Ioseph to the are yeeres 60. from the birth of Moses unto the departure of Israel out of Egypt, from the departure of Israel thence unto the Tabernacle erected, was one yeere, chap. 40. two latter numbers are certainly gathered out of the Scripture: only the first may be is thus also warranted: all the time of the peregrination of Abraham and his seed in Egypt maketh 430. yeeres, Exod. 22. 40. this time beginneth when Abraham was called out and 30. yeeres was run at the birth of Isaack: who at 60. begat Iacob, Gen. 25. 26. who downe into Egypt unto Ioseph, Gen. 47. 9. who being then 39. yeeres old, and dying at lived after that yeeres 71. then put hereunto 80. yeeres of Moses age: all maketh (of 30. 60. 130. 71. 80. together) yeeres 371: there remaineth then the summe of 59. up the whole summe of 430. yeeres.

Quest. III. Whether Moses were the writer of this booke.

NOw that Moses was the pen-man and writer of this booke (the spirit of God be inspirer thereof, it is diversly evident: 1. for Moses testifieth of himselfe, that he wro of the Lord, Exod. 24. 4. which are contained in this booke. 2. The Scripture so divi the old Testament, that they were written either by Moses, or some other of the Pro 3. Our Saviour alleaging a certaine place out of this booke, doth call it the booke of read in the booke of Moses? so also Luk. 20. 37. And that the dead shall rise againe, even Moses shewed beside the bush, when he said, &c.

QUEST. IV. Whether Moses Judiciall lawes do now necessarily bind the Civill Magistrate.

In this booke divers both morall, ceremoniall and Judiciall lawes are prescribed, where- first there is no question, but that the one doth bind us still, and the other is abrogated: ing the Judicials of Moses, it is controverted, whether Christian Magistrates are bound to which Judicials being of three sorts, either such which are annexed to the Morall law, as of adulterie and murther and disobedience to parents with death, and such like: or such as to the Ceremoniall law, as the punishment of those that touched any dead thing, or that woman in her monethly course, and such like: or such as belonged to the peculiar policie Common-wealth, as concerning the yeere of Jubile, the raising up of seed to the bro- in maying his wife, and such like: of the two latter there is no doubt made, but that the ed together with the ceremonies, whereon they attended, the other as proper to that go- now determined: only the third kinde of Judicials remaineth, about the which great que- how farre Christian governours are obliged to the same.

discussing of which question, 1. I neither am of their opinion, which thinke that the Judiciall the libertie of the Christian Magistrate to adde to it, and take from it, and to alter it, as shall for the time and manner of the countrey: for this were, 1. to be wiser than God, to leave those directions and rules of justice, which he hath set downe: and the Apostle saith, the foo- of God is wiser than men, 1. Cor. 1. 25. that which seemeth to be meanest of the Divine orders, is the wisest humane inventions. 2. And there is but one Law-giver that can save and destroy, Onely God that gave unto man his life, hath power to take it away: and therefore otherwise Goliath given direction, either by particular precept, or generall rule the life of man is not to bee 3. And seeing Magistrates are but Gods Ministers, Rom 13. 4. they must execute justice ac- his will: for it is required of a disposer that he bee found faithfull, 1. Cor. 4. 2. but Gods will appeareth not; than in his word. 4. And seeing whatsoever is not of faith (that is, firme per- is sinne, Rom. 14. 23. and faith must be grounded upon the word, as being wrought by the 10. 17. how can the Magistrate approve his acts of justice as in the sight of God, unlesse hee warrant the same by the word?

The Christian Magistratie not necessarily tied to Moses Judicials.

2. Neither yet can I consent with those which thinke, that the punishment inflicted by Moses for the ach of the morall law together with the morall law is imposed upon Christian Magistrates: as it is lawfull to punish adulterie otherwise than by death, nor simple theft by death but by restitution: in profusion, in Exod. for if this were so, then the Gospell should overthrow the policie and institu- divers Common-wealths, which of a long time have continued: but God is the author of peace, confusion. 1. Cor. 14. 33. 2. Mardoche and Daniel having place of government under the Persian no doubt ministred justice according to the lawes of that countrey. 3. Our Saviour Christ ing to give tribute to Cæsar, and injoyning obedience to the higher powers which did beare and that for conscience sake, Rom. 13. seeme to give approbation to the lawes of nations main- and tending to equity. 4. Our Saviour himselfe observed not the judicials belonging law: for whereas he that gathered stickes upon the Sabbath was stoned to death by Moses, excuseth and defendeth his Apostles, who did, as much as the other, in rubbing the eares necessity, Matth. 12. yea hee giveth a rule, that for fornication onely and adulterie it lawfull for a man to put away his wife, Matth. 19. which exception needed not, if either in fact or in right afterward, adulterers and adultereſſes were to bee punished by death. If it be answered Christ took not upon him the office of the Civill Magistrate, to impose corporall punishment: yet our Saviour have defended his Apostles, nor yet by silence have left them unreproved for ne- the law.

How far Moses Judicials doe bind.

Therefore the best resolution is, that the morall judicials of Moses do partly bind, and partly are left do not hold affirmatively, that we are tied to the same severity of punishment now, which was but negatively they doe hold, that now the punishment of death should not be adjudged, of death is not given by Moses: Christian Magistrates ruling now under Christ the Prince that is of clemencie & mercie, may abate of the severitie of Moses law, & mitigate the pu- death: but they cannot adde unto it, to make the burthen more heavie: to shew more ri- Moses, becommeth not the Gospell, to extend more favour is not unbeseeming: of these two reasons are as followeth: 1. That which Ambrose urgeth out of the mouth of Luke, how reproveth his Disciples, because they would have had fire come downe upon the Samaritanes, such example hee thus inferreth: Ostenditur nobis, non semper in eos qui peccaverunt vindi- quam amplius prodest clementia tibi ad patientiam, lapso ad correctionem: It is shew- vengeance is not to bee taken of those that offend, because oftentimes clemencie is more patience in thee, and amendement in the offender. And this collection is ratified by the an- our in that place: The Sonne of man is not come to destroy mens lives, but to save 2. Augustine urgeth the example of Christ, who suffered the woman taken in adul- without punishment of death, Joh. 8. Whereupon hee inferreth that the adultereſſe is to death, but to live rather, to be reconciled to her husband, or to come to repen- answer is, that our Saviour doth not here abrogate the Law against adultery, but refuseth only to meddle with the Magistrates office: Piscator. Anſ. Neither doe wee say that Christ abrogateth that law: but leaveth it free and taketh away the necessitie of it. And though Christ exercised not the Magistrates office in his owne person, yet in this case, it had not beene impertinent to have given direction to have her before the Magistrate, as in another case, he sendeth the leper to the Priest *Matth.*8.4. if it had pleased him to impose still the severitie of the law: yea our Saviour shewed by his answer: *Let him that is amongst you without sinne, cast the first stone at her, Ioh.*8.7. that hee would not have them such strait executors of the rigour of Moses law upon others, but rather to bee severe judges of themselves, and with charitable affection to support the frailty of others, to the which themselves were subject. 3. Further, the difference betweene the times of the Law and of the Gospell must be considered: then they received the spirit of bondage to feare, but now the spirit of adoption, *Rom.*8.15. then they which came neere the mount, where the morall Law was given, were stoned or thrust thorow with darts, whether man or beast, *Heb.*12.20. but it is not so now: then the bloud of Abel cryed for vengeance, but the bloud of Christ now calleth for mercie: and so *speaketh better things than that of Abel, Heb.*12.24. Therefore to mitigate the severitie of Moses Law, in some cases (yet not leaving sinne unpunished, nor by connivence cherishing the same) it is more sutable to the profession of the Gospell of peace and mercie.

The rigour of Moses law mitigated.

Wherefore I here say with Chrysostome: Vbi paterfamilias largus est, dispensator non debet esse tenax. Where the master of the house is bountifull, the steward must not be sparing: Melius est propter misericordiam rationem reddere, quàm propter crudelitatem: It is better to be called to account for too much pitie, than for cruelty.* 4. The continuall practice of the Church sheweth as much, that the rigour of Moses judicials is mitigated. S. Paul willeth the incestuous man only to be excommunicate, 1. *Cor.*5. it seemeth then that there was no law in force to put such to death: nor in Cyprians time, who thus writeth: Quidam episcopi in nostra provincia, &c. Some Bishops in our province have altogether shut up penance against adulterie. Nor after that in the time of the Eliberin Councell, which was held under the reigne of Constantine, where it was decreed, *can.*9. Mœchatus post pœnitentiam, That he which committed adulterie after publike penance, should finally be denied the Communion. In Hieromes time it seemeth that adulterie was punished by death: who in a certaine epistle maketh mention of a young man, qui adulterii insimulatus ad mortem trahitur: who being accused of adultery was led forth to death: yet Augustine, as is shewed before, reasoneth against it: but of all other Origen writeth most plainly: Apud Christianos, si adulterium fuerit admissum, &c. Among Christians if adulterie be committed, it is not commanded that the adulterer or adulteresse be punished with corporall death, &c. neither therefore was the law cruell then, neither now doth the Gospell seeme to bee dissolute: but in them both the benignitie of God appeareth (yet) by a diuers dispensation: then by the death of the bodie the people was rather purged from their sinnes, than condemned: but unto us sinne is purged, not by corporall punishment but by repentance: and it is to be feared lest our punishment be greater, whose vengeance is laid up for the next world (when as they were absolved from their sinne by the paying of the punishment) as the Apostle saith, how much more punishment is he worthy of, that treadeth under foote the Sonne of God? Two reasons Origen yeeldeth of this his opinion, that there is now a mitigation of the rigour of Moses law; because then it served as an expiation of their sinnes, prefiguring the death of Christ: as S. Paul applieth that sentence (Cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree) which is generally delivered by Moses, to the particular death of Christ, *Galat.*3.13. but now the expiation of sinne is by repentance and remission of sinnes in Christ. Againe, now a greater punishment abideth the contemners of the Gospell, even eternall in the next world, and therefore corporall death is not so much inflicted now, for God punisheth not twice for the same thing, as Origen in the same place alleageth.

* Or rather the author of *Oper. imperfect. Hom.*43. *in cap.*32. Matth. and it is alleaged *Caus.*27.94.1. *cap.*12. *Cyprian. lib.*4. *epist.*2. Epistol. ad Innocentium.

Whether adulterie necessarily is to be punished by death.

Yet, although we contend, that the capitall punishment of Moses law may now be dispensed with in some cases upon the reasons before alleaged, this is not either to condemne those Common-weales which doe reteine still and practise the severity of Moses law against adulterers, who therein sinne not: but as Ambrose saith of the Apostles, that asked for fire to come downe upon the Samaritanes: Nati discipuli peccant legem sequentes: Yet did not the Disciples offend, following the law: neither to excuse those places, where this sinne is too easily and lightly punished, as Erasmus complaineth in his time: Non est adulterium lusus magnatum est: Now adulterie is but a sport of great men. Where adulterie is not capitally punished, yet great severity otherwise should be used: as it was decreed in the Eliberin Councell, that *he which having a wife committed adulterie, should be under penance five yeeres, can.*64. *He that sinne that way after should not bee received to the peace of the Church till his dying day. c.*48. *He that commit adulteries after penance, should never be restored to the communion of the Church. c.*7. These or the like severe constitutions, this wanton and lascivious age hath need of, that this overflowing sinne might be kept in with higher bankes, than now it is: So then I conclude this point with Cyprian, who speaketh of divers kindes of Ecclesiasticall censure used in divers places, thus writeth: Manente concordiæ vinculo, suum quisque actum suum disponit & dirigit unusquisq; Episcopus, &c. The bond of amity remaining still, every Bishop directeth and disposeth his owne act, that he is thereof to give account unto God. The like may bee said of Princes and Magistrates, in their dominions and regiments: that the difference in publike punishments (all intending the glorie of God, and the brideling of sinne) is no cause to breake peace or breede hatred betweene Christian states.

Moses Iudicials are not to be exceeded in severity.

Now for the other part, that Moses Judicials doe bind negatively, that is, where Moses Law inflicteth not death, there Christian Magistrates are not to punish with death: the reasons are these: 1. Because the regiment of the Gospell should exceed in terror, the strictnesse and severitie of Moses Law. 2.

AGaine: in that the Lord, when the people sinned, scourged them, and yet not to their destruction but to their amendement: it sheweth that both God is not partiall, but will punish sinne, even in his owne children, as also, that the afflictions, which God layeth upon his children, tendeth not to their overthrow sion, but is sent rather to worke their conversion: Genevens. The Apostle saith; If ye endure chastisement God, offereth himselfe unto you, as unto sonnes. Heb. 12. 7.

3. Mor. Example of speciall vertues in this booke.

FUrther, in this booke many examples of singular vertues are propounded worthy of imitation: as piety in the Midwives, of faith in Moses parents, of meeknesse in Moses, and faithfulnesse towards his people, of zeale in the Levites: that all flocked to Moses to execute vengeance upon the Idolaters. Simler.

Chap. I.

THis chapter sheweth the occasion which moved the Lord (for the cause thereof was in himselfe) to procure the deliverance of his people. This occasion is of two sorts:

First, the wonderfull increase of the people, where is mention made both of their names and number comming downe to Egypt, vers. 1. to vers. 7. then of their increasing in Egypt, vers. 7.

Secondly: The other occasion is the affliction of the Israelites, which followed upon this their increasing and multiplying: where is set down their consultation with the threefold end thereof, vers. 10. Then the execution: where foure severall afflictions of the Israelites are described. 1. Their hard usage under the taskmasters, vers. 11. 2. Their miserable bondage being at the command in generall of the Egyptians not only for publike but private workes, vers. 3. The male children are commanded to be slaine: where first the charge is given by Pharaoh to the Midwives, vers. 15. 16. Then the execution followeth contrarie to the Kings expectation: where three things are declared; the reason which induced the Midwives not to obey the Kings cruell edict, v. 17. their defence unto the King, vers. 18. 19. the reward of the Midwives, vers. 20. 4. Then followeth the generall edict for the destroying of all the men children, vers. 22.

3. The explanation of doubtfull queſtions.

Quest. I. Why the twelve Patriarkes are ſo often rehearſed.

Verſ. 1. These are the names of the children of Iſrael. The names of the twelve Patriarkes are ſo often rehearſed in Scripture: 1. becauſe of them came the twelve tribes, the Prieſtly alſo and the Kingly order ſprang from thence. 2. And this myſticall number of twelve is uſed in Scripture, to deſcribe the ſpirituall ſtate of the Church under Chriſt: as twelve thouſand are choſen out of every tribe, Apoc. 7. and the new Jeruſalem is ſet forth by the twelve gates, and twelve foundations, Apoc. 21. Simler. 3. And to ſhew the truth and conſtancie of Gods promiſes, in increaſing the ſeed of Iacob, of twelve fathers into many thouſands. Pellican. 4. And beſide the dignitie and prerogative of the children of God herein appeareth, who are chiefely remembred in Scripture where mention is made of the wicked, it is by the way and as it were by accident, and in a manner beſides the proper intention of the Scripture. Ferus.

Quest. II. Why Iacobs ſonnes are not alwayes rehearſed in the ſame order.

Verſ. 3. Iſachar, Zebulon and Benjamin: the Patriarkes are ſeldome rehearſed in the ſame order: for Gen. 46. firſt Leahs children, then her maide Zilpahs: then Rachels ſonnes, and laſtly Bilhah her ſonnes are numbred: but here Benjamin Rachels ſonne is ſet before the ſonnes of the handmaides: the order is kept Geneſ. 35. So Reuben is here named firſt, but in the order of the campe Iudah hath the firſt place, Num. 2. and when the ſpies are ſent out Numb. 13. another order is obſerved. Simler. The reaſon hereof may be theſe: 1. becauſe in the old Teſtament for the moſt part the order of nature, not of dignitie is followed: for though Reuben were the eldeſt in birth, yet Iudah had the regall preeminence. Bor. This is done, that we ſhould not be curious obſervers of numbers, or mens nativities. Pellican. 3. The Patriarkes had now all received their fathers bleſſing, and were incorporate into one holy people: to ſhew therefore their equalitie, and that there was no difference of the tribes before God, ſometimes one is named firſt, ſometime another. Ferus. 4. But here, and Gen. 35. all the children of Iacobs wives, as ſonnes of free women are rehearſed before the ſonnes of the maide ſervants. Iun. Vatab.

Quest. III. How they are ſaid to be ſeventie ſoules, that went downe with Iacob into Egypt.

Verſ. 5. So all the ſoules that came of Iacobs loynes were ſeventie: 1. They were beſide Iacob 66. with Iacob 67. with Ioſeph & his two ſonnes 70. ſo then in this number Iacbos wives are not reckoned, but onely thoſe which came out of his loynes: but Ioſeph muſt be included, and therefore it is added: Ioſeph was in Egypt. Iunius readeth, cum Ioſepho, with Ioſeph, in the ſame ſenſe. 2. Whereas the Septuagint read 75. whom S. Luke followeth in Stephens ſtorie, Act. 7. becauſe it was not ſafe to depart in the matter of number from the received tranſlation; Iunius thinketh, that in that number all are comprehended beſide Iacob, that are rehearſed in that catalogue, as Iacobs two wives, Er and Onan, which all make 75. But why ſhould Iacob be left out in the number of 75. and included in the number of 70. and to what purpoſe ſhould Er and Onan be comprehended in that ſumme, ſeeing they were dead before and came not downe into Egypt? But ſeeing the Septuag. Gen. 46. doe rehearſe five nephewes of Ioſeph, Machir, and Gilead his ſonne of Manaſſes, Sutalam, and Edem his ſonne, and Taam of Ephraim, it is more like, that S. Luke, for the reaſon before alleaged, therein followeth the Septuagint: Aretius. See more of this upon that queſtion, Gen. 46.

Quest. IV. Of the wonderfull multiplying of the Iſraelites in Egypt.

Verſ. 7. And the children of Iſrael fructified, &c. 1. The people increaſed exceedingly: which is here expreſſed by foure words of like ſignifications: paru, they fructified: iyſrezu, they brought forth in abundance, as the fiſh: iyrbu, they were multiplied, and jagghatznu, they waxed ſtrong. Simler. and ſo accordingly they multiplied that of 70. perſons, there came 700000. of every one tenne thouſand. Pellican. Yea, whereas above ſixe hundred thouſand of men able to goe to warre from twentie yeres old and upward were numbred, that came out of Egypt, Numb. 1. 46. out of which number were excepted all the males under twentie, and all the old men, beſide the women, which were not ſo few as ſixteen, ſeeing it was not unuſuall in thoſe dayes for one man to have divers wives: it may be ſuppoſed, as is ſo judged by ſome, that the whole number could not bee leſſe than thirtie hundred thouſand. Verſ. 3.

Quest. V. In what time the Iſraelites ſo exceedingly increaſed.

Further, this multiplying of the Iſraelites, to take the longeſt time from the firſt going downe of Iacob, to the returne of the Iſraelites thence, was in the ſpace of 215. yeeres. Some thinke that the greateſt increaſe was the firſt hundred yeere, after that generation was dead, verſ. 6. which is uſually taken in Scripture for the ſpace of an hundred yeeres. Simler. But there by that generation are underſtood onely the men of that age. Vatab. Auguſtine taketh all the time after the death of Ioſeph, which Perer. counteth 145. yeeres. But the chiefe time of this increaſe was after Iacobs death, before the time of their bondage: how they increaſed alſo in the time of their bondage is declared afterward verſ. 12. Neither doth it ſeeme ſtrange, that in the ſpace of 215. yeeres the Iſraelites did ſo wonderfully increaſe, ſeeing ſundry authors doe write, that Ninus, who began to reigne 250. yeeres after the floud, did lead in his armie armie against the Bactrianes 700. thousand footmen, and two hundred thousand horsemen: Diod. Sicul. lib. 3. cap. 2. ex Ctesia. Perer.

Lib. 18. de Ciuitat. Dei c. 7.

How this wonderfull increase should be wrought: 1. we neither need to thinke with Augustine that it was miraculous. 2. nor with the Hebrewes to imagine, that every one of them brought forth two or three at a birth. Pellican. For although it be often seene, that women may have many at a birth, as Aristotle maketh mention of one that had twentie at foure times, five at every birth, and that it is usuall in Egypt for the women to have two and three, and sometimes five at a birth: Trogus reporteth that in Egypt they bring forth sometime seven at once. Bor. yet this is not usually nor often seene. 3. Therefore, supposing, as is most like, that all the Hebrew women were very fruitfull, that they bore betimes, and were child-bearing long, being not cut off by untimely death or sickenesse: it seemeth not unpossible that such a number by ordinarie meanes, in the circuite of 215. yeeres might be multiplied: for seventie persons in thirtie yeeres, if they beget every one but one in a yeere, will have 2100. Cut off the odde hundred, and admit that the third part onely of the other number was apt for generation, that is fixe hundred which make 300. couples or mariages, those will beget in thirtie yeeres more, which is the 60. yeere from their comming into Egypt, nine thousand: the third part hereof three thousand, maketh fifteene hundred couples: which having but every yeere one, will beget the next thirtie yeeres, which makes 90. in all, 45000. hereof the third part 15000. will make 7400. couples, leaving the odde hundred: which will beget by the 12. yeere, 222000. the third part whereof 74000. maketh 37000 couples, and will beget by the 150. yeere 1110000 the third part hereof 370000. maketh 185000. mariages, which will beget the next thirtie yeeres, by the 180. yeere, 5550000. whereof the third part 185000. which maketh beside the five odde thousand, 920000. mariages, which will beget by the 210. yeere, 27600000. that is, 27. thousand, fixe hundred thousand: Simler. Though herein no miracle be admitted, yet could it not be done without the exceeding blessing of God, especially, that notwithstanding their cruell bondage, and sore labour, yet they multiplied without number. Perer.

Lib. 7. de histor. animal. cap. 4.

Somewhat about this time, the children of Ephraim being increased went against the men of Gath to take away their cattell, but presuming before the time they were slaine, and Ephraim mourned for them. 1 Chron. 7. 21. Osiander.

Quest. VII. Who this new King was that knew not Ioseph.

Vers. 8. There arose a new King in Egypt. 1. This new King was neither an Assyrian borne, as Cajetan conjectureth upon these words of Isay chap. 52. 4. My people went downe into Egypt to sojourne there, and Asshur oppressed them without cause; but the Prophet in this place toucheth both the oppressions of the Israelites in Egypt, and under Asshur: neither in the Egyptian Chronicles was there any Assyrian King either before Moses, or for a thousand yeeres after, till the reigne of Cambises the Persian. 2. Neither could this King be Mephres, in whose ninth yeere Ioseph should die, and the bondage of Israel begin: as Vincentius. For seeing all the Patriarkes were dead before their affliction began, of which number Levi, elder than Ioseph by foure yeeres, lived 137. yeeres, Exod. 6. and so survived Ioseph (who died at 110. yeeres) 23. yeeres: then could not Mephres be this King, that began to reigne before Ioseph died. 3. Neither was this King Rameses, as some thinke, because one of the cities which the Israelites built was called by that name; for Rameses was King of Egypt in the time of the Trojan warre: Plin. lib. 36. cap. 8. which was three hundred yeeres after the death of Moses: if he reigned in Egypt in the time of Deborah, as thinketh Eusebius, he was 140. yeeres after Moses, 4. But it is most probable that this King was Amemphis, in whose 18. yeere Eusebius thinketh Moses was borne: so Hierome in Chronicis, some call him Memnon, the speaking stone, whose image did use to speake at the Sunnes rise, and so continued untill Christ: Perer. Simler.

Quest. VIII. Why this Pharaoh is called a new King.

He is called a new King, because he came of another family: Ioseph, or for that he brought in a new kind of government, altering and changing the lawes, as the Chalde Paraphrast: and ruling at his owne pleasure: Simler. He knew not Ioseph, either being borne after his time, or having forgotten his benefits, as Darius had Mardoches faithfulnesse, Esther 6. Iunius. Wherein his great ingratitude appeared: for two great benefits Ioseph had procured; one in generall, in saving the whole land in the time of the famine; the other to the Crowne, in annexing to it the fift part of the revenewes of Egypt: Perer. As also herein Iosephs modestie appeared, that did not in his long time of honour, which continued 80. yeeres, raise up an honourable and wealthie state to his posteritie, seeing his house was so obscured: but, as is most like, he and his sonnes joyned themselves unto their brethren, not hunting after the wealth of Egypt, where they knew they were but strangers: Simlerus.

Quest. IX. The causes of the affliction of the Israelites.

Vers. 10. Come let us worke wisely with them, &c. 1. There were three causes why the Egyptians consulted to oppresse the Israelites: first they envied their happinesse and prosperitie, for God every way blessed them: then they hated them for their religion, in which regard the Hebrewes were an abomination to the Egyptians, for they sacrificed those beasts which the Egyptians worshipped: Gen. 46. 34. and Exod. 8. 26. Thirdly they were afraid of them, lest they should joyne with their ging, and rebell against them: Peter. 2. And three things they feared, lest they might take part with their enemies, or rebell by their owne strength, or make an escape out of the land: Iun. They feared all their iointly, and every one in particular, therefore it is better read disiunctively: see before in the diuersitie. 3. They worke wisely, or cunningly, craftily (for so the word Chacham is taken both in the good and bad part) not as the Hebrewes imagine, because they would not destroy them with the sword (whereby God might be revenged of them in the same kind, but deuised by the water to destroy them, whereby the Lord promised never to destroy the world againe: but their craft is seene in attempting diuers waies to keepe them under, that if they prevailed not by one meanes, they might by another: and in the end themselves they worke wisely, providing both for their owne securitie, and for their profit in the seruice of the Israelites: Simler. Likewise they oppresst them cunningly, that they might not be accused of open and manifest tyrannie: Osiander. 4. Iosephus alleageth another cause of this affliction: that about that time one of the Egyptian Priests foretold unto the King of one that should be borne, who when hee once came to yeeres, should worke much harme to the Egyptians, and greatly exalt the people of Israel: lib. 2. antiquit. cap. 5. But this being his conjecture, no such thing here insinuated by Moses may be more safely rejected, than credited.

How Pharaoh is said to deale wisely, that is, subtilly with Israel.

Quest. X. Of the hard affliction of the Israelites.

12. THerefore they did set taskmasters over them, &c. 1. Divers wayes were the Israelites most grievously oppressed in Egypt. 1. Philo writeth, that they were caused to carrie burthens above their strength, that they were forced to worke night and day: that the same were constrained to be brickmen, and servers: they were employed in making brick, digging, and building: insomuch, that many of them died under their burthens, and were not suffered to be buried: and beside, the most cruell men were set to be their taskmasters: Phil. lib. 1. de vita Mosis 2. Iosephus addeth further: that the Israelites made ditches and trenches to convey the river: and built the great Pyramides of bricke, yea they carried the filth and dust out of the citie: lib. 2. antiquit. cap. 5. 3. Eusebius out of Eupolimus writeth, that to make the Hebrewes more odious, they were commanded to go otherwise apparelled than the Egyptians: but we need not seeke further than in the Scriptures: as the businesse of their worke is set forth, that they wrought in clay and bricke, and in all manner of rurall workes, Exod. 5. they were compelled to seeke straw themselves to make their bricke with, and yet nothing was diminished of their daily taske: if they failed their officers were beaten. And therefore in respect of their hard servitude, the Lord saith, he brake the bands of their yoke, Levit. 26. 13. and tooke them out of the iron furnace, Deut. 4. 20. Thus the Egyptians three wayes kept them under, they exacted of them tribute to empoverish their substance: for they laid burthens upon them, to weaken their bodies, and by this meanes they thought to hinder their generation and increase: Simler.

Quest. XI. Of the cities Pithom and Rameses, which the Israelites built for Pharaoh.

11. AND they built the cities of munition Pithom and Rahamses: 1. The word is Mischeneth, which signifieth not Tabernacles, as the Latine translation readeth, being deceived as is thought by the similitude of this word and succoth, which signifieth Tabernacles: most reade the cities of treasure: Mischeneth is taken for a treasurer, Isa. 22. 15. the Hebrewes take them to bee granaries, where the Egyptians laid up their store of corne, which was the riches and treasure of Egypt: & so Vatablus readeth them, storehouses. Lyranus thinketh they were called cities of treasures, because they were so sure, that they might serve for the keeping of treasure. Oleaster deriveth the word of sachan to enclose or shut up, as it is taken, Psal. 139. 3. Thou hast shut up all my wayes: and so mischeneth should signifie places to keepe or shut up any thing: and in this sense, they may be taken cities of defence inclosed with walles: Iunius. And so it is most likely that these were cities of munition, as the Septuagint read, and the word is taken, 1 King. 9. 19. sic Iun. 2. Pithom some thinke to bee the towne Butis or Buto at one of the mouths or dores of Nilus, famous for the Oracle of Latona: but it is rather the towne Patumos in the borders of Egypt toward Arabia Petræa, whither reached the great ditch made from Nilus to the red Sea, supposed to be the worke of the Israelites, which Herodotus falsely ascribeth to Pharaoh Necho: Iun. 3. The other citie Rahamses, Tostatus thinketh to be the same with that in the land of Goshen mentioned Gen. 47. 11. by anticipation: not bearing then that name but so called when Moses wrote this booke. Hierome thinketh that it is there the name of a Province, here of the chiefe citie of the Province: Peter. which is most like, because the Israelites tooke their journey from Rameses: but from thence, being so many, they could not goe: it seemeth by the Hebrew points to be a divers place from Goshen: for that is called Rahmeses, this Rahamses, and so thinketh Iunius. 4. The Septuagint beside two cities, make mention also in this place of On, which is Heliopolis: but this citie was not built by the Israelites, as Hierome well obserueth, seeing long before in the storie of Ioseph, Putiphar is said to be the Prince of On, and the Septuag. Gen. 41. doe make it to be Heliopolis.

Now concerning the continuance of the servitude of the Israelites: 1. It was neither so long, as Iosephus thinketh, foure hundred yeeres: for seeing the whole time of their being in Egypt could not passe foure hundred and thirtie yeeres, Exod. 12. 40. and Ioseph lived seventie yeeres after Iacobs coming into Egypt, it would follow, that this affliction began fourtie yeeres before Iosephs death: and beside, beſide, Ioſephus is herein contrarie to himſelfe, who in the ſame booke, lib. 2. antiquit. maketh the whole time of the Iſraelites abode in Egypt but two hundred and fifteene yeeres. 2. Neither yet was the time ſo long as Euſebius conjectureth, 144. yeeres from the death of Ioſeph: for not onely Ioſeph, but the reſt of that generation were dead before their oppreſſion began, of the which number was Levi, who lived 23. yeeres after Ioſeph: for he was foure yeeres elder than he, and lived 137. yeeres, and Ioſeph died 110. yeeres. 3. Neither is the conjecture of the Hebrewes certaine, that the affliction tooke beginning at the death of Levi, from whence to the going out of the Iſraelites were 122. yeeres, or thereabout: for not onely Levi, but all of that generation were dead, whereof ſome came very young into Egypt, as Phares, not then above a yeere old, who is like to have ſurvived Levi long: ex Perer. 4. Not yet did their ſervitude continue an hundred & fifteene yeeres, beginning after one hundred yeere of their being in Egypt, which was a full generation: Simler. for Phares was of that generation, who is likely to have exceeded an hundred yeeres. 5. Wherefore ſeeing all that generation was firſt dead, of the which Phares was one, who being a yeere old at Iacobs comming into Egypt, may be ſuppoſed to live according to the rate of the yeeres of mans life then, which was about 130. (as Levi lived 137. Kohath 133. Amram 137. Exod. 6. 16, 20.) then it will follow, Phares age of 130. being ſubduced from 215. the time of the Iſraelites being in Egypt, there will remaine about 86. or 87. yeeres of their affliction: when the Hebrewes ſuppoſed Miriam Moſes ſiſter to have beene borne, ſo called of the bitter affliction which was all her time, ex Perer.

Quest. XIII. The reaſons why the Lord ſuffered his people to be afflicted in Egypt.

WHy the Lord ſuffered his owne people to be thus hardly entreated: 1. It was not chiefly or onely for their Idolatry, which they learned and practiſed in Egypt, as Thoſtatus thinketh. Quæſt. in Exod. For though it is like that they learned ſome corruption that way of the Egyptians: as the Prophet ſheweth that the breaſts of their virginitie were preſſed, and they committed fornication in their youth in Egypt, Eſa. 23. 2. & it appeareth by their ſetting up of the golden calfe, which was a reſemblance of the Egyptians god Apis: yet it is not like that they practiſed Idolatrie while Ioſeph lived, nor generally were corrupted, for then the Egyptians in all likelihood would not have ſo hated them, if they had beene conformable unto them in their Idolatrous worſhip. 2. Other reaſons therefore may be heere yeelded, why the Lord ſuffered his people to be thus tried. 1. That the Iſraelites ſhould hate the impure manners and ſuperſtitions of Egypt. 2. That by this meanes they might be ſtirred up to pray to God for their deliverance, and to long for the land of Canaan. 3. That God might take juſt occaſion to ſhew his judgements upon Egypt. 4. That the Iſraelites alſo might be occaſioned hereby more juſtly to hate of the Egyptians cruell yoke. 5. That Gods goodneſſe and power might be ſeene, in ſupporting his people and increaſing them even in the middeſt of their affliction. 6. That the Iſraelites remembring their cruell bondage in Egypt, ſhould have no mind to goe thither againe. For ſeeing this notwithſtanding, if ſome rebellious of them attempted to make them a Captaine, and to returne into Egypt, Numb. 14. what would they have done, if they had lived in all fulneſſe and pleaſure there? Perer.

Quest. XIV. Whether the Mid-wives were Egyptians, or Hebrew women.

15 MOreover the King of Egypt commanded the Mid-wives of the Hebrew women. 1. Thoſe Mid-wives were not Egyptian women, as Ioſephus thinketh, to whom Pererius ſubſcribeth with others, as Aretius Simlerus, for they were ſuch as uſually miniſtred to the Hebrew women, as the text ſheweth, before this time, and it is not to be thought, that the Iſraelitiſh women had no Midwives of their owne: beſides their religion ſheweth as much, becauſe they ſerved God, that they were Hebrew Mid-wives: and the derivation of their names, doth give conjecture thereof: Shiphrah is derived of Shafar to be bountifull, to adorne, and Puhah of Pahah, to crie out, a name fitting a Mid-wife, that is bold acquainted with the crying of children: and whereas Ioſephus giveth this reaſon, becauſe the Hebrew women would have beene partiall for kindred, ſaith: it may ſeeme no more unlikely, that Pharaoh uſeth Hebrew women (whom he might thinke for the feare of their life would obey his commandement) then he did Hebrew taske-maſters over the reſt of the Iſraelites, Exod. 5. 15. who might have beene thought indifferent overſeeers. I therefore rather thinke with Auguſtine, that thoſe Mid-wives were Hebrew women, than Egyptians: 2. Yet could they not be Iochabed (Moſes mother, and Miriam Moſes ſiſter ſome Hebrewes) who was too young, not above ſeven yeere elder than Moſes, to be imployed for a Mid-wife, Simler.

Auguſt. libr. contr. mendacium c. 15. 16.

Quest. XV. Why Pharaoh onely giveth his cruell charge to two Mid-wives.

THeſe two Mid-wives are named. 1. Not, as Cajetan, becauſe they attended onely upon the ſort of the Hebrewes, whoſe children eſpecially Pharaoh intended to cut off: for Pharaoh is generall to kill all the male children. 2. Nay, there were many more called, as Perer. but these as the more famous. 3. But theſe were the chiefe, and had the charge and command over the reſt, to them they are to take their direction. Pellican, Vatablus: and whereas Cajetan denieth that there any ſuch prefidencie or ſuperiority among the Mid-wives, it appeareth to be otherwiſe, that among Grecians, there were ſome, to whom the choiſe care of that buſineſſe was committed: as Phavorinus ſaith: and that publike ſchooles were kept for that ſervice: Iun. in Analyſ. 4. Now it is eaſie to gueſſe why the male children were commanded to be put to death, rather than the other: 1. Becauſe they feared any rebellion or inſurrection by that ſex. 2. They were fairer than the Egyptian women, might keepe them for their luſt. 3. They were induſtrious, in ſpinning and needle work, and for that cauſe might be kept for their ſervice: Perer. 5. But herein Pharaoh ſheweth himſelfe more cruell than either Athaliah in putting to death the Kings children, or Herod in ſlaying the infants, or then Aſtiages, or Amulius, that would have deſtroyed Remus and Romulus: for theſe did not make a generall edict againſt the children of an whole nation, as Pharaoh doth, nor yet ſurpriſed infants newly borne. Borrh.

Quest. XVI. Whether the Mid-wives made a lie and are therein to be juſtified.

And the Mid-wives anſwered Pharaoh, becauſe the Hebrew women are not &c. The moſt doe hold, that the Midwives doe here make a fained excuſe, by an officious lie. 1. And of thus thinke, moſt are of Auguſtines opinion, that the Mid-wives herein offended: becauſe no ſaying againſt the truth is juſt: yet God rewarded them not for their diſſembling, but for their mercy: non eſt benignitas mentis, non iniquitas mentientis: the benignitie of the mind, not the iniquitie of the Lib. contra mendacium Cap. 10. rewarded: ſo alſo Simler. Borrh. with others: and Auguſtine addeth this reaſon: that if many times the works of the fleſh are pardoned, for the works of mercy that follow after; much more, meritò miſericordiæ dimittuntur, quæ propter miſericordiam committuntur: for mercy ſake theſe things are remitted, which are committed of mercy. 2. Others thinke that the Mid-wives were hindred by their lie: Greg. lib. 17 moral. for which might have beene eternall, in terrenam eſt compenſationem declinata, was becauſe of the lie turned into an earthly recompenſe. Gregorie: But ſeeing the feare of God, hath not onely the promiſe of this life, but of the next, and the Scripture teſtifieth of theſe Midwives that they feared God, it is ſpoken without warrant, that they were onely temporally bleſſed. 3. Some doe juſtifie this act of the Mid-wives as ſufficient to make it meritorious, though not of an eternall, yet of a temporall reward. Thom. Aquin. But to this opinion may be oppoſed that ſaying of Aug. Non remunerata eſt in illis fallacia, ſed benevolentia: Their fallacie was not rewarded in them, but their mercie. 4. Rupertus doth ſimply defend this diſſimulation, and holdeth it to be no ſinne: becauſe it proceeded of charitie, and God rewarded it, and as he did Rahab be condemned, for making the like excuſe, Ioſh. 2. Cont. But theſe reaſons are very weake. 1. The excuſe proceeded not of charitie, but from feare: and though it did, charitie muſt be alwayes joyned with veritie, otherwiſe it is inordinate. 2. Their mercy onely was commended, and their infirmitie by Gods mercy pardoned. 3. Not Rahabs infirmitie, but her faith is commended, if her excuſe were true. 4. But as Rahab may in that place be defended to have made a true excuſe, ſpeaking of ſome other men, that were departed from her, which came to her houſe: ſo here alſo the Mid-wives may ſay true, that the Hebrew women having ſecret notice from the Mid-wives, might be delivered in ſecret, before the Mid-wives came: Iun. And it is not unlike, but as they were chaſter than the Egyptian women, ſo God might give them more ſtrength and ſpeedier deliverance. Pellican. Here it will be objected, that it is ſaid the Mid-wives preſerved the men children, becauſe they feared God, verſ. 17. and therefore it is like they were preſent. Simler. But this may be underſtood of the care that they had of the infants, by whoſe meanes they were preſerved. Vatab. For otherwiſe it was not poſſible, that theſe two in their owne perſons could be preſent at every womans travaile to ſave the children.

Quest. XVII. How the Lord is ſaid to make them houſes.

And becauſe the Mid-wives feared God and he made them houſes &c. There are two generall expoſitions of this place: Some doe interpret the word Lahem, them, of the Mid-wives: ſome of the people of Iſrael.

Of the firſt: 1. Some referre it to the Iſraelites that they provided for the Mid-wives, and kept them from Pharaoh: but that is not like, ſeeing the Iſraelites could not at this time defend themſelves from his cruell rage. 2. Some underſtand it of Pharaoh, that he made ſtrong houſes for them, that all the Hebrew women ſhould come to them to be delivered: but that had beene a thing impoſſible. 3. Some referre it to God that he made them houſes: which is diverſly expounded: the Hebrewes, ſuppoſing the Mid-wives to be Iochebed and Miriam, by houſes underſtand the Kingdome and Prieſthood, which ſhould ſettled afterward in their of-ſpring, for Iochebed was the mother of Aaron, and Miriam they ſay married to Caleb: but this is uncertaine, Ioſephus writeth, lib. 3. antiquit. that ſhe was the wife of Hur: and before hewed, that Miriam for her age could be none of them. David Chimhi underſtandeth it of preſerving from the rage of Pharaoh: Toſtatus of their incorporating and graffing into the nation and common-wealth of Iſrael, as Rahab was: but it is more like they were Hebrew women, as is before touched, and needed no ſuch ingraffing. Hieronse underſtandeth it of ſpirituall houſes in heaven, ſo Rupertus: Auguſtine and Theodoret, of giving them riches: Pererius of increaſing their families, for Hierom. 3 Heap. 65. Iſai. the phraſe uſed. Sarah ſaith, when ſhe gave Hagar to Abraham, I may be builded by her: Gen. 16. This uncertaintie there is in the firſt expoſition. 4. Therefore the ſecond is rather to be preferred, to underſtand it of the people, that God made them houſes, that is, families, and increaſed them: for theſe reaſons: 1. Becauſe in the Hebrew there is a maſculine pronoune lahem: which although ſome times is ſometime taken for the feminine, as Exod. 2. 17. Piſcator, and elſewhere: and Vatablus ſaith that hem, is ſometime taken for nun, yet it is more properly taken in the native and originall uſe, where there is no neceſſitie otherwiſe to enforce it, Iun. 2. Becauſe the houſe and familie is not builded by the woman, but by the man: Simler. 3. This better agreeth to the words going before, that the people multiplied, verſ. 20. and the words following, if we read them thus, And ſo it was, becauſe the Mid-wives feared God, and he made them houſe; That Pharaoh charged all his people, &c. Pharaoh ſeeing that God by

by the meanes and occasion of the Mid-wives, as the instruments, God as the author and chiefe cause increased the people, then he cast about another way, how to effect this cruell purpose, Iun. Simler.

Quest. XVIII. Whether the Mid-wives onely were temporally rewarded.

NOw what manner of reward it was, which the Lord here giveth, it may thus be briefly resolved. 1. Neither with Gregorie is it to be thought, that because of their dissimulation, they were onely temporally rewarded: for the text saith they feared God: and the feare of God is not onely in this life, but more rewarded in the life to come. 2. Hierome and Rupertus here understand the spirituall and eternall lasting houses in heaven: but the words before, v.20. shew that hereby a temporall blessing is instituted: the Mid-wives prospered, the people multiplied. 3. Therefore the last resolution is, that no doubt the charitie and mercie of these Mid-wives, and the feare of God in them was eternally rewarded: but the temporall blessing is here onely expressed: both in respect of the times, because as Hierome saith: Ista vita promissio est propria novi testamenti: The promise of eternall life is peculiar to the new Testament: and in regard of carnall and weake men who are by temporall promises more easily allured: so the promise made to Abraham, whose faith and obedience were eternally crowned, were in shew temporall: as the length of life, increase of his posteritie, victorie over his enemies: as appeareth *Gen.*15. ex Perer.

Hier. in cap. 65. Isai. Rup. lib. 1. Exod. cap. 7. Epist. ad.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. That God is not the author of evill.

Vers.12. They were grieved, or fretted because of the children of Israel: But Psal. 105.25. it is said, he turned their heart to hate his people. The hatred and griefe which the Egyptians conceived against Israel, seemeth to be ascribed to God: yet farre be it from us to thinke that God is the author of the least sinne, much lesse of so great a sinne as to hate the people of God: for as God is not tempted with evill, so neither tempteth he any man, Iam. 1.13. This manner of phrase therefore in Scripture may receive five severall expositions, which may all together be received: first God is said to turne their hearts not effectivè, but permissivè, not by way of working, but permitting, or suffering, as Theodoret: because he gave way to their wicked will, eorumq; insidias minimè prohibuerit, and hindered not their evill purpose. 2. God is said to doe it, as he hardened Pharaohs heart: subtrahendo gratiam, by withholding his grace and leaving them to themselves. Cajetan. 3. God doth it as an universall cause, because in him we move we live, and have our being, *Act.*17. not as a particular agent: as Rupertus useth this comparison: Quemadmodum sol molle lutum convertit in durum: As the Sunne turneth the clay and mire from soft to hard of which changing, the Sun is onely the generall cause, the proper and next cause is the quality of the matter. 4. God turneth their heart into hatred occasionaliter, by ministring the occasion only: Non cor illorum malum faciendo, sed populo bene faciendo cor eorum sponte malum convertit in odium: Their heart being evill of it selfe he turned to hatred, not by making it evill, but by doing well unto his people. God is said to doe it, because he was the author of the welfare of his people, whereby the envious Egyptians were provoked to hate them. 5. The Lord is said to harden mens hearts ordinativè & dispositivè, because he knoweth how to rule and dispose of their evill and obdurate hearts, and turne it to his glorie, as Augustine proceedeth in the same place, Quo illorum odio, & ad exercitationem populi filii, & ad gloriam nominis sui usus est Deus: Which their hatred God used, both for the exercise of his people, and to the glorie of his owne name, Ex Perer.

How the Lord is said to turne the hearts of the Egyptians to hatred. *Theod. in Psalm.*105. *August. in Psalm.*104.

2. Doct. God must rather be obeyed than men.

Vers.17. NOtwithstanding the Mid-wives feared God, and did not as the King of Egypt commanded. This their refusall to obey the Kings wicked charge, was both lawfull and commendable. The things which belong to Cæsar, as tribute, custome, honor, feare, *Rom.*13.7. must willingly in conscience be yeelded to Cæsar, Matth. 22.21. But the things which belong to God must not be given to Cæsar, as to violate our conscience, and to things displeasing unto God, to please men: But hereupon the Apostles resolution must stand, that it is better to obey God than men, Acts 4.19.

5. Places of confutation.

1. Conf. Touching the name of Masse.

THerefore did they set Princes or Officers of the tribute over them. The Hebrewes call tribute Messas, which signifieth to melt; in which sense the Popish Masse may very well be so called, for they have melted away all true religion and devotion by that idolatrous invention, and they find it a right masse indeed to draw tribute and advantage unto them from the people, and wasting their substance by such cunning fraud.

2. Conf. against merits.

Vers.20. GOd therefore prospered the Mid-wives. Pererius upon these words confuting the error of Gregorie, that these Mid-wives because of the lie which they made, deserved the blessing, saith, that considerig that they truly feared God, and that this worke of mercie, which they shewed, proceeded of the grace of God: *Sine dubio meruerunt vitam æternam: Without all doubt they merited eternall life. Disput.*10. in 1. *Exod. numer.*4. 5. But this is an unsound assertion: for seeing of mercie was blemished with their infirmitie in telling a lie, as Pererius himselfe thinketh, in which regard they had need of Gods mercie, as Augustine saith: Deus pro misericordia ignoscebat mendacio: God [illegible] how then could one and the same act include both merit, and require [illegible] grace and mercie cannot stand together, as the Apostle sheweth, If it be of grace, it is not of [illegible] were grace no more grace, Rom. 11.6. These two reasons doe evidently convince that we doe [illegible] in Gods hand, both because our best deeds are imperfect, and have need of grace to par- [illegible] imperfections thereof: and beside, we are the Lords bounden servants, we doe no more than our [illegible] we doe our best, and even then also are unprofitable servants, Luke 17. 10. God indeed [illegible] good works, but rather of his goodnesse and mercie, than our deserving, whose mercie is [illegible] gracious promising, and his right consisteth in his faithfull performing.

3. Conf. against good works before grace, or without grace.

NOw Bellarmine further by this example of the Mid-wives, whom he supposeth to be Egyptians, and no Gentiles, thus rewarded of God for this their act of mercy, would prove that men naturally may [illegible] some good morall worke, without any speciall helpe of Gods grace, if they bee not urged and [illegible] some temptation: Lib.5. de gratia, & lib. Arbit. cap.9.

1. He taketh that as granted, which is before denied, that they were Egyptians; I have proved [illegible] 14. that it is more like they were Hebrew women. 2. It is an erroneous speech, that in this [illegible] were not assisted with Gods grace. For the text sheweth that it proceeded from the [illegible] of God, which cannot be without Gods speciall grace and assistance: and Pererius well confesseth [illegible] were adjuta per interiorem earum animæ infusam gratiam: helped by inward grace infused into [illegible] Ibid. 3. This example is unduly alleaged, for here they were assayled by a manifest tentation [illegible] of their lives in disobeying the King, and therefore according to Bellarmines owne principles [illegible] not doe this good worke without the speciall helpe of God.

6. Places of morall use.

1. Mor. For their comfort that die in exile.

NOw Ioseph died and all his brethren. All these died and obtained not the promise, and they died out of their country. It should not therefore seeme a grievous thing unto the children of [illegible] they end their dayes in a strange country, in exile or banishment, or upon other occasions. For [illegible] *the Lords and the fulnesse thereof, Psal.*24. 1. Perus.

2. Mor. God turneth affliction to the good of his children.

The more they vexed them, the more they multiplied. God can turne affliction to the best prosperitie: our owne corruption maketh oftentimes hurtfull unto us, but affliction by Gods [illegible] becommeth fruitfull and profitable unto us; as the Prophet David saith, Before I was afflicted [illegible] *Psal.*119.67.

3. Mor. God overturneth the counsels of the wicked.

And they were more grieved. Thus we see how God is able to disappoint and overturne the counsels of the wicked; the Egyptians thought by thus oppressing the Israelites to breed their owne quietnesse, and now seeing the children of Israel to increase the more, they are so much the more grieved and discontented. Thus God turned the counsels of Pharaoh against the Israelites, of Saul [illegible] David, of the Jewes against Christ, upon their owne head: Similerm.

CHAP. II.

1. The method and parts of the Chapter.

IN this Chapter is set forth the condition of the instrument, which God prepared for the deliverance of the people, to vers. 23. and of the people which were to be delivered. For the first, Moses is set forth first in his infancie, where is shewed his nativitie, vers. 1, 2. his conservation by the naturall care of his mother, v. 3. and sister, v. 4. and the supernaturall instinct of Pharaohs daughter, who taketh up the childe, v. 5. then his education to vers. 10. Secondly in manhood, where his publike actions are described, both in shewing himselfe a judge in being revenged of the Egyptian, and a mediatour between his brethren, to vers. 14. and his private conversing to Midian, vers. 15. and his marriage there, both with the occasion thereof, his inhabiting with Reuel, and the introduction thereunto, his kindnesse [illegible] vers. 17. and the fruit of his marriage, the birth of his sonne. For the second, [illegible] the complaint of the Israelites for their bondage, vers. 23. the mercifull consideration of [illegible] and fatherly consideration unto them, vers. 25.

2. The divers readings.

V.I. Vers. 3. Tooke for him an arke of bulrushes. Iu. A. P. B. L. rather than of reed. S. of papir, that is, of a kinde of stuffe, whereof they made papyr, the word is gome, another word is used in the end of the verse for reed.

G.I. Vers. 14. Spakest thou this to kill me? Iu. A. better than thinkest thou to kill me. G. or wouldest thou kill me? L. S. the word is Amar to speake.

I.C. Vers. 15. And Pharaoh heard of this matter. G.I.A.P. rather than heard of it. B. or heard this word. L.V. or this word. S. Dabar signifieth both, the first rather, for Moses speech offended not, but his act.

I. Vers. 16. The Prince of Midian had seven daughters. I. C. rather than the Priest. G. B. Cohen signifieth both, and it seemeth he was both Prince and Priest, as they used to be in those dayes.

L.c. Vers. 17. Drove them away. I. that is, the servants which attended upon Reuels daughters: for it is put in the masculine gender, better than to read it in the feminine, as V.L.I.A.P.

L.S.c. I.A.P. Vers. 18. When they came to Reuel their father. I.G.B. eum qui erat, not Iethro. I.

Vers. 22. Here the Latin and Septuagint make mention also of the birth of Eliezer, transposing it out of the 18. chapter: but no such thing is in the Hebrew.

Vers. 23. It came to passe after these dayes. I.A.P.S. rather than in processe of time. G. B. or when many dayes were past. V. the sense rather than the words: dayes are here put for yeeres, for this was 40. yeeres after.

3. The explanation of doubtfull questions.

Quest. I. Of Amram Moses father.

Vers. 1. There went a man of Levi. This was Amram the sonne of Kahath the sonne of Levi, who lived 137. yeeres, Exod. 6. 20. he was borne, as Eusebius writeth, 14. yeeres before the death of Ioseph, that is, 55. yeeres after Iacobs going downe into Egypt: who saith he begat Moses at 77. yeeres. Perer. Moses yet maketh no mention of his parents names, lest he should seeme to boast of his parentage. Ferus. 2. The Hebrewes have here a notable fiction that this Amram lived unto the time of Ahiah the Silomite, who was in the dayes of Ieroboam, that is above five hundred yeeres, for from the going of Israel out of Egypt unto the fourth yeere of Salomons reigne are numbred 480. yeeres: adde unto them 77. yeeres of Amrams age when he begat Moses: and 80. yeeres, the age of Moses, at the returne of him out of Egypt, so we shall have above 600. yeeres, whereas the Scripture testifieth that he lived but 137. yeeres. 3. But that which Ioseph reporteth is more probable, that this Amram being a faithfull man praying unto God for his people, had a vision, wherein hee was bid to bee of good comfort, and that the child whose life was sought should be his sonne, who should be preserved from the Egyptians rage, and be the deliverer of his people, Ioseph. lib. 2. cap. 5. but seeing the Scripture maketh no mention, we may leave it to choose whether we will receive this report.

Eusebius.

Quest. II. Why it is said he went and tooke.

NOw it is said he went; not that he went to any other place or Citie, for seeing his wife was of the same familie of Levi, it is like that they did dwell not farre asunder. 2. Neither it is understood of his returning to his wife, from whom he had sequestred himselfe to fasting and prayer, as Ferus: for the text evidently speaketh of his first taking of her to wife. 3. But heereby is shewed his advised purpose and determination in taking her to wife, as also some notable thing insinuated to follow, as it is said that Ruben went and lay with his fathers concubine, Gen. 35. Simeon Quest. III. Of Iacobed Moses mother whether she were aunt or cosine Germane to Amram.

TOoke to wife a daughter of Levi. This was Iocebed, 1. who was not the daughter of Amram but and so cosine Germane to Amram. as the Septuagint & Latine translator, to whom consent Lyranus, Montanus, Cajetanus, Pererius with others: for though it should be granted that the Hebrew word Bath doth sometime signifie the uncles sonne, as Ierem. 32. 12. Hanameel is called Ieremies uncles sonne, yet the word sonne may be supplied, as before vers. 8. he is called his uncles sonne: yet seeing the Scripture evidently saith, that Iocebed was borne unto Levi, Numb. 26. 59. it is without controversie that she was Levies daughter, sister to Kahath, and Aunt to Amram, being his fathers sister, Exod. 6. 20. 1. The Hebrewes are farre wide, that would have Iocebed borne about that time that Levi went to Egypt, for then she should have beene about 135. yeeres old, elder by fortie yeeres than she bore Aaron, and if Moses birth had beene so miraculous, the Scripture would not have passed it over Perer. And the Scripture beside saith, that she was borne to Levi in Egypt, Numb. 26. 59. 2. was this Iocebed another of the same name beside the daughter of Levi, as some have thought, and said to be Dodabee, his, that is, Amrams, Aunt, Exod. 6. 20. 4. The founder of this opinion Iocebed was the naturall and proper daughter of Levi, the Scripture so testifying, Kimchi, Kabalists, Bugnine, Iunius, with the Chalde Paraphrast, and Simlerus with others. The reason why, that Levi might beget her at 100. yeeres. Abraham begat Isaac at 100. yeeres, and Isaac at 127. yeeres, being 10. yeeres younger than Abraham, and Iacob at 100. begat Benjamin. And unlike, but that Iocebed at 68. yeeres might beare Moses, in those dayes women might continue bearing till then: but howsoever this computation be counted, yet is it evident out of Scripture that Iocebed was daughter unto Levi, and therefore all disputation to the contrarie is needlesse.

Quest. IV. Why such mariages were tolerated in those daies.

NOw though afterward such mariages betweene the aunt and the nephew were forbidden by the Law directly, Levit. 19. yet it need not seeme strange that then such mariages were in use, even among the faithfull: 1. Because as Thostatus saith, it was ante legem datam, before any law was published. So Abraham married his brothers daughter, Iacob married two sisters. 2. The paucitie and the fewnesse of the righteous seed is to be considered, and the confusion of those times which made those things to be tolerated. Iun. Annot. 3. They had a desire to match in their owne kindred, as Abraham, Isaack and Iacob did, and by that meanes they joyned often mariage in neere degrees of kindred, Simlerus.

Quest. V. When Amram married his wife.

COncerning the time, when this man of Levi tooke his wife, though it be mentioned after Pharaohs cruell edict, yet it was done before: 1. Because Aaron was elder than Moses by three yeeres, Exod. 7. and Miriam Moses sister elder than he; for she was of discretion to watch what should become of her brother: the conservation therefore of these children sheweth that this cruell edict tooke no place then. Neither is it likely that it continued long after Moses birth: for if all the male children had beene cut off since Moses birth, who was 80. yeeres old when Israel came out of Egypt, then there should have beene few or none under that age that went out: and although by some secret provision some infants might have escaped, yet considering the straitnesse and diligent search, which was made, as the Hebrewes thinke every three moneths, such a multitude in all likelihood could not have beene preserved, as went out of Egypt: therefore it is not unprobable that Iosephus writeth, that an Egyptian Priest told Pharaoh that about that time a child should be borne, which should bee the ruine of him, and his Kingdome, and that Pharaoh upon this did especially at that time give charge to destroy the infants, to meet with that childe, as also he did cause to bee put to death all the children in Bethlem, and the coasts thereof, from two yeere old and under, Matth. 2. 16. thinking also among the rest to surprise that holy babe. 3. Now it may seeme strange that Amram would take a wife in this miserable time, not being ignorant that they should beget children to be bondslaves; but hee being a faithfull man, and beleeving verily that the Lord would redeeme his people, to bring them into the promised land, doth therefore take the married estate upon him, both for mutuall comfort in those heavie times, and to increase the people of God, Simler.

Pharaohs edict against the children continued not long.

Quest. VI. Of the time of Moses birth, compared with the times before, and the times after.

Ex. 2. And the woman conceived and bare a sonne. 1. Moses is borne the seventh from Abraham, another Enoch (who was the seventh from Adam, Iud. 14.) buried also of God; another Noah, who was saved also in the Arke, and preached to the world 120. yeeres, for so long Moses lived. Now for the time of Moses birth. First to compare it with the yeeres which went before, and the notable matters therein; it was from the beginning of the world 2430. yeeres, not 2370. onely, as Pererius: from Noahs floud 714. from the birth of Abraham 425. after the going downe of Isaack into Egypt 215. and from the beginning of the Egyptian servitude 7. yeeres. The truth of this computation may appeare by gathering the summes of yeeres together. From the beginning of the world to the floud are 1656. Gen. 5. from thence to the birth of Abraham 352. not 292. as Pererius: for hee reckoneth Abraham to be borne at the 70. yeere of Terah, whereas hee was begotten 60. yeeres after, at the 130. yeere of his father, being 75. yeeres old, when Terah died at 105. as it is evident by comparing Gen. 11. 32. and 12. 4. From the first promise made to Abraham to the giving of the Law in Mount Sinai, S. Paul reckoneth 430. yeeres: from the going downe of Isaack into Egypt, untill the returne of Israel thence, 215. yeeres: and Moses was borne 80. yeeres before their going out of Egypt. 3. The time of Moses birth thus agreeth with the computation of the yeeres following. Moses was borne 80. yeeres before the going of the Israelites out of Egypt, Exod. 7. 7. & 120. yeeres before their entrance into Canaan, Deut. 34. 7. In the reigne of David 517. yeeres; before the building of Salomons Temple 560. yeeres: for from the going out of the Israelites untill the fourth yeere of Salomon, when the Temple was built, are counted 430. yeeres, 1 King. 6. 1. to which adde 80. yeeres of the life of Moses: before the captivitie of Babylon 990. yeeres, for from the building of Salomons Temple untill the captivitie, are yeeres 430. which unto the aforesaid summe 560. maketh 990. And before their returne out of the captivitie of Babylon, which was 70. yeeres after, 1060. yeeres: before the comming of the Messias 1620. as Pererius: and others more truly not above 1500. Concent. Pererius to justifie his computation maketh his account by the Greekes Olympiades. Christ was borne in the last yeere of the 194. Olympiade, that is, from the beginning of the Olympiades 776. yeeres. And the Olympiades begun about the 8. yeere of Ahaz King of Judah, about 280. yeeres from the building of Salomons Temple. But seeing the computation of time unto the Messiah is expressed in Scripture, there is no need to take any direction from forren writers.

So then whereas before the summe of yeeres from the building of the Temple unto the Messias, meaning, the last captivitie of all under Zedekiah, was said to be 430. from this must be abated 70. from the third yeere of Iehoiakim, when the first captivitie begun, Dan. 1. 1. and there the 70. yeeres captivitie tooke beginning, so we have 480. yeeres: unto this number must be added Daniels 70. weeks unto the death of the Messiah, which make 490. yeeres: and thirtie and odde yeeres must bee added (the space betweene the birth and the death of the Messiah) so we shall have about 940. yeeres from the building of the Temple to the birth of the Messiah: unto which adde 560. yeeres from Moses birth to Salomons Temple, ſo the whole ſumme of yeeres from Moſes birth untill Chriſte, will bee 1 9 as it is ſaid before, 120. leſſe than Pererius by his Olympiades accounteth. 4. To compare Moſes with forren accidents: Moſes was borne before the beginning of the Olympiades 840. yeeres, which gan in the 8. yeere of Ahaz, and after Ogyges floud 180. yeeres: for Euſebius out of Iulius Afr ſheweth that Ogyges floud was 1020. yeeres before the beginning of the Olympiades. Moſes birth 430. yeeres before the Trojane warre, which was 407. yeeres before the beginning of the Olympiad and Moſes was borne before the building of Rome 865. yeeres, for Rome was founded in the begin of the 7. Olympiade, that is, the 25. yeere after they begun: ex Perer.

The time of Moſes birth compared with forren ſtories.

Quest. VII. Of the antiquitie of Moſes, who is found to be the moſt ancient of all writers, either ſacred or prophane.

Concerning then the antiquitie of Moſes, it is evident that hee is the firſt and moſt ancient of all ther ſacred or prophane writers: 1. The propheſie of Enoch, mentioned in the Epiſtle of Iude, is from a more ancient writer than Moſes: which was either kept by certaine or undoubted tradition, or was framed by the Doctors of Iudah, from the ſhort ſpeeches which Moſes hath of Enoch. The boo of the Lords warres, Sihons victorie, Numb. 21. was after the Law, and it was ſome rehearſall of the b tels, which the Lord fought for Iſrael, made much about the time: but being not now extant, it is wi out compaſſe of this queſtion. 2. For prophane authors and writers Moſes farre exceedeth them all it may be thus ſhewed: 1. The Greeke Chronicles have nothing more ancient than the times of Inac and Phoroneus, the firſt Kings of the Argives, when Ogyges floud happened; as witneſſeth Dionyſ. Hal carneſſ. and Plato in Timæo reporteth that Solon contending before the Egyptian Prieſts for the anti of Greece, goeth not beyond Phoroneus and Niobe. About this time Ptolomeus Mendeſius the Egy Chronicler writeth that Moſes reigned among the Jewes: but, as is before ſhewed, he could not be 180. yeeres after Ogyges floud. 2. From this floud unto the time of Cecrops the firſt Athenian K Athens lay deſert almoſt two hundred yeeres, and long after Cecrops were Deucalions floud, Phae burning, Cadmus, that builded Thebes, Eſculapius, Theſius, Hercules: ſo that Moſes being before Cec is found to be farre more ancient than any of theſe. 3. Moſes is elder than Homer the moſt ancient Gre writer, as Ioſephus ſheweth, lib. 1. cont. Appion. who was long after the Trojan warre; Plinie thinke 250. yeeres, after Solinus 270. Cyrillus 160. Herodotus three hundred yeeres: but it is certaine that h was at the leaſt one hundred yeeres after. But Moſes was borne 430. yeeres before the battell of Tr as is before ſhewed: ſo that he is farre elder than the ſeven wiſe men of the Grecians, and then Pythago Heraclitus, Hippocrates, Democritus, Anaxagoras, Socrates, Plato with the reſt, who were many yeer after Homer. 4. Hence then appeareth that notable error of Appion the Grammarian, in Tiberius Cæ time, who would have Moſes bring the Iſraelites out of Egypt in the firſt yeere of the ſeventh Ol piade, at what time the Tyrians built Carthage in Africa. For it is evident that Carthage was built a the time of the Trojan battell: for Æneas went from thence to Dido the founder of Carthage, as Virg teſtifieth: and Ioſephus writing againſt the ſaid Appion, ſheweth, that from Hiram King of Tyre, in wh time the Temple was built, unto Pigmalion and Dido, were 155. yeeres, and to the beginning of Olympiades in the 8. yeere of Ahaz reigne, were 280. yeeres: ſo that by this account Carthage built 140. yeeres before the count of the Olympiades began. Appion then is found to be in a double er for both Moſes was divers hundred yeeres before the building of Carthage, and Carthage was built before the computation of the Olympiades: ex Perer.

Appion the Grammarian that wrote againſt the Jewes of two groſſe errors.

Quest. VIII. Whether the name of Moſes were knowne unto the Gentiles before Chriſt.

Now then it is evident, 1. that Moſes name was knowne unto the ancient writers of the Gen as Saconiatho that Phenicean Antiquarie, and Beroſus Chaldeus, Ptolomeus, and Manetho, Egy Chronographers; and among the Grecians Artapanus, Polemo, Eupolemus, doe make honourable tion of Moſes: Likewiſe Troyus Pompeius cited by Iuſtin. Martyr. lib. 36. and Diodorus Siculus: Nu nius Pythagoricus calleth Plato the Attik or Athenian Moſes. 2. But yet ſparing mention is made of ſes among the Ethnik writers, becauſe they held his writings to bee ſacred and divine, and ſo not to prophaned and made common; as Demetrius Phalerius the keeper of the great Library of Alexa ſaid unto Ptolomeus Philadelphus, alleaging at the ſame time the examples of Theopompus, the Hi grapher, and Theodectes the tragicall Poet, that when they attempted to tranſpoſe ſome things o Moſes bookes, the one into his ſtory, the other into his tragedie, the firſt was perplexed in mind, other ſmitten with blindneſſe, till they perceived their error and deſiſted: Ariſteus. 3. Origen deceived, who thinketh that till after Chriſt the name of Moſes was not heard of among the Gen Homil. 2. in Cant. Pererius.

Quest. IX. How Moſes is ſaid to be a proper child, and by whom he was hid.

Verſ. 2. When ſhe ſaw that he was faire and goodly, ſhe hid him. 1. Both the parents did their p hiding him, Heb. 11. 13. but the mother was the chiefe, either in regard of her motherly affection, or for that the advice came firſt from her. 2. Ioſephus writeth that Amram had a ſpeciall revel & viſion concerning this child, that he ſhould be delivered from this danger, and be himſelfe a deliv his people. But ſeeing theſe parents of Moſes are commended for their faith, which muſt bee gro upon the word of God, it is likely that they builded rather upon the promiſes made to their Fathers, any ſpeciall revelations. 3. The child was goodly to ſee to, that is, a certaine divine comelineſſe red in him, not onely properneſſe of body, as Stephen ſheweth, Act. 7. and the Apoſtle, Heb. 11. 23. th theirs then principally proceeded of faith, which was ſo much the more increaſed by the object of this lyly child, in whom they ſaw ſuch ſignes of grace, as that they doubted not, but that God would take protection of him: Simler.

QUEST. X. The Arke wherein Moſes was put, whereof it was made, and where placed.

Ver.3. She tooke an Arke of bulruſhes. The word here uſed is Tebath, which is given alſo to Noahs Arke and the Arke of the Tabernacle: The Septuag. retaine the ſame word Thibis, without any other interpretation; but it is like, through the error of ſome Scribes, that Thibin was put for תבת, as the edition Complutenſe readeth: but Origen is here deceived, that thinketh Thibis to bee a coffin or caſe of wicker, or of the barkes of trees, Hom.2.in Exod. it ſignifieth nothing but an Arke for the frame; the manner whereof it was made, is beſide expreſſed: 2. which ſome thinke was of Reed: Vatab. Gene- of cotes of Bulruſhes: Iun. Pag. Mont. which is moſt like; or of the tree Papyrus, as Ioſephus, whereof they made the paper (which word is uſed to this day, though our paper be now made of linnen) it was a matter that might eaſily be ſupported in the waters: and both to faſten the ſtuffe the better, and to keepe out the water, they daubd it with ſlime and pitch: Simler. as Noah pitched his great Arke to hold out the waters. 3. This Arke for the bigneſſe, Ioſephus thinketh was no greater than could well containe a child: but Ioſephus is deceived that they put this Arke or coffin into the middeſt of the floud, for the text is evident that they put it amongſt the flagges or reedes, that it ſhould not ſo eaſily flote upon the water, and to be the better defended from the winde: Pererius.

QUEST. XI. Whether Moſes parents did well in expoſing him.

Heere the queſtion will be moved, whether Moſes parents did well in expoſing the infant thus to evident danger, ſeeing nature hath given unto bruite beaſts a naturall inſtinct rather to adventure their lives for their young ones, than to leave and forſake them. Theſe reaſons then may bee yeelded in defence of this their fact: 1. That if they had kept their childe at home, then they had moſt certainly offered not onely him to danger, who could not be hid, partly from the diligent inquiſition of Pharaoh, partly from the notice of the Egyptians, among whom they dwelled, Iunius: but alſo his parents by all likelihood ſhould have periſhed: therefore in that they doe thus expoſe the infant, they doe deliver him to uncertaine danger, leaving him to an uncertaine: Perer. 2. Beſide, they uſe all carefull meanes to ſeeke for the childe, in pitching the Arke, in laying it in a ſafe place, Perer. from whence the mother might take it by ſtealth and ſuckle it at her pleaſure, Simler. Beſide, they appointed his ſiſter to bee his eye, to ſee what ſhould become of the infant. 3. Further, though there be no certaintie either of the revelation ſhewed to Amram that the childe ſhould be preſerved, as Ioſephus writeth, or of that excuſe of the Hebrewes, that Miriam being a Propheteſſe gave direction what they ſhould doe; yet ſeeing this all of them proceeded of faith in God, as the Apoſtle ſheweth *Heb.*11. it is not to be doubted, but that in this they were directed by the inſtinct of the ſpirit, and that they did it not in griefe and deſpaire, as it ſeemeth to affirme, that they wiſhed they had expoſed their childe ſo ſoone as he was borne, ſeeing they could no longer keepe him.

QUEST. XII. Of the education of Moſes, and his adoption to be Pharaohs daughters ſon.

Vers.5. When ſhe ſaw the Arke among the bulruſhes, ſhe ſent her maid to fet it, &c. The Chalde Paraphraſt readeth here, that ſhe put forth her arme to take it: for the word amah ſignifieth in the Caldee, but then it is with dageſh and a maid, then it is without dageſh, amah, not ammah as here; and therefore Aben Ezra refuſeth the Chalde reading. Beſide, Pharaohs daughter comming downe to waſh her, it is not like ſhe was among the flagges, where the Arke was, which had beene an unfit place to waſh in. Simler. 2. By Gods providence Moſes owne mother became the childs nurſe: Ioſephus writeth the occaſion, becauſe when diverſe Egyptian women were brought, the child refuſed to ſucke of them, and would not take the breaſts of any but of his mother: but the true occaſion is here expreſſed, that Moſes ſiſter perceived that ſhe was in love with the child ſhe offered to goe call a nurſe of the Hebrew women. 3. Pharaohs daughter adopted him to be her owne ſonne, not as Philo thinketh, faining her ſelfe to be with child, and making Pharaoh beleeve that is was her owne; neither yet did the proper- ſute of the child onely allure Pharaoh to conſent that his daughter ſhould nouriſh him as her ſon, eſpe- cially if it were true as Ioſephus writeth, that while Pharaoh played with the child he tooke off his Dia- dem and Crowne, which the Egyptian Prieſt that foretold of his birth, did interpret to bee ominous to his kingdome, and therefore gave counſell the child ſhould be ſlaine; but Pharaohs daughter ſnatched out of his armes and ſo ſaved the childs life. This then is chiefly to be aſcribed to Gods ſpeciall pro- vidence, who ſo wrought that the child ſhould be brought up even among his enemies.

QUEST. XIII. Whence Moſes had his learning, of the Egyptians onely, or of the Grecians alſo.

Pharaohs daughter adopted Moſes for her ſonne, ſo (as S. Stephen witneſſeth) he was learned in all the wiſdome of the Egyptians, & being counted a Princes ſonne, had no doubt a Princely education. Heere Philo is deceived, who beſide the arts and ſcience which hee learned of the Egyptians, as Aritheticke, Geometrie, and the Hieroglyphikes, that is, their hid and ſecret and Enigmaticall doctrine, was taught of the Chaldes Aſtronomie, and Philoſophy of the Grecians: for beſide that Stephen maketh mention of his Egyptian learning, it is certaine that there was no profeſſion of Philoſophy or of learning among the Grecians, before the ſeven wiſe men, before whoſe time Moſes was borne almoſt a thouſand yeeres, Perer. And Moſes was about Inachus time, long after whom in the eleventh generation, Cadmus found out the Greeke letters, after whom flouriſhed Amphion, Orpheus, Muſæus, Linus: Simler. 2. Neither is it probable which Artapanus an ancient writer affirmeth, that beſide many other benefits which Moſes brought to the Egyptians, hee taught them the uſe of letters, and therefore was honoured of them under the name of Mercurius: for ſeeing Moſes received his learning from the Egyptians, it is likely they had alſo the knowledge of letters.

Euſeb. lib. 9. de præparat. Evangel. cap. ult.

Clemens Alexandrinus lib. 1. Lib. de civitate Dei 18. cap. 59.

3. That alſo is as uncertaine which Clemens Alexandrinus alleageth from Eupolemus, that Moſes taught the Iſraelites the knowledge of the letters: for beſide that Auguſtine thinketh that the Hebrew tongue was continued from Heber, and preſerved in the family of the fathers together with the letters long before the giving of the Law, grounding his opinion upon that place, Deut. 29.10. where the Septuagint read γραμμάτων εἰσαγωγεύς, that Moſes appointed Scribes and inſtructors of the letters: Ioſephus alſo writeth that the Hebrew letters were in uſe before the floud, and that they of Seths poſteritie having learned of Adam, that the world ſhould be twice deſtroyed, once by water, and the ſecond time by fire, did make two pillars, the one of brick, the other of ſtone, and did therein grave the principles of the arts and ſciences, that thoſe profitable inventions ſhould not be loſt, that if the waters diſſolved the bricke, yet the other pillar of ſtone might continue, which Ioſephus ſaith, was to be ſeene in his time in Syria, Ioſeph. lib. Antiq. Ex Perer.

Whether Moſes found out the uſe of letters.

Quest. XIV. What kinds of learning Moſes received of the Egyptians.

FUrther, it will bee inquired what manner of learning it was which Moſes learned of the Egyptians. 1. Such profitable arts, as were profeſſed among the Egyptians, as Arithmeticke, Geometrie, Aſtronomy, Moſes was inſtructed in, as being fit to prepare him for that publike adminiſtration, wherein he ſhould be employed. 2. The Egyptians had more ſecret and hid kind of learning called the Hieroglyphicks, which by certaine outward ſymboles and Emblemes did ſet forth divers myſticall, morall & politike principles, which kind of doctrine was not knowne to the vulgar ſort; herein Iuſtinus Martyr thinketh that Moſes was trayned up, having the knowledge onely thereof, not the uſe, which was vaine, friuolous and ſuperſtitious: Iuſt. qu. orthodox 25. 3. But that Moſes by imitation of the Egyptian Hieroglyphicks did forbid certaine kindes of beaſts to be eaten, and ſome onely and not other to be ſacrificed, as Eleazer the high Prieſt anſwered the Ambaſſadour of Ptolemy Philadelphus: as Pythagoras had alſo his Enigmaticall precepts, Ignem gladio ne fodias; Do not gall the fire with a ſword; that is, provoke not an angry man: Cor non comedendum; The heart is not to be eaten, that is, griefe is not to be nouriſhed in the minde: Hirundinem in domum non eſſe recipiendam: Not to receive a ſwallow (that is, a brabler) into the houſe, and ſuch like: that Moſes uſed many ſuch legall helpes in preſcribing of his legall rites and ceremonies, it is not to be thought, ſeeing he had his direction from God and ſaw a paterne of ſuch things which belonged to the Tabernacle in the mount, Exod. 25.40.

Ariſteus in his hiſtorie of the 72. tranſlations.

Quest. XV. Whence the Egyptians received their learning.

BUt if further it be demanded, from whence the Egyptians received their varietie of learning. Whether is the opinion of Iamblicus probable, that Mercurius, called Triſmegiſtus, (becauſe he was a great Philoſopher, a great King, and a great Prieſt) was the author of the Egyptian learning, which he alleageth, certaine antient authors teſtifying, to have written of the wiſdome of the Egyptians, 36[illegible] bookes: for this Mercurius the nephew, as is ſuppoſed, of the other Mercurius, whoſe grandfather the mothers ſide Atlas was, in whoſe time Moſes was borne, as Aug. lib. 8. de civ. Dei cap. 8. being Moſes, could not be the inventor of the Egyptian skill, which Moſes long before learned. 2. Neither yet is it certaine that Abraham inſtructed the Egyptians in theſe ſciences as Ioſephus writeth; for his abode and continuance was not long in Egypt, and ſo he wanted time there to lay the foundation of many artes. 3. Auguſtine yeeldeth to the opinion of Varro, that Iſis the daughter of Inachus firſt diſcovered to the Egyptians the grounds of theſe artes, who yet is more likely to have beene the inventor of husbandrie and other ſuch profitable trades, than of the myſticall arts and ſciences. 4. Therefore the more probable opinion is, that by whomſoever the firſt ſeeds of this myſticall profeſſion were ſowne among the Egyptians, it is not to be doubted, but that by Iacobs comming downe, but eſpecially [illegible] long time of government, their knowledge was much increaſed, the ſcripture bearing witneſſe hereof. Pſalm. 105. 21. He made him Lord over his houſe, to teach his Senators wiſdome: and by the computation of the Hebrewes 215. yeeres in Egypt the Egyptians might profit more in the profeſſion of wiſdome, which that ſuperſtitious people might with their gentiliſmes and ſuperſtitions intermingled, change and alter. And for the truth hereof that the Egyptians learned many things of the Hebrewes, this may ſerve as an evidence, that in Herodotus, Diodorus Siculus, and other waiting of the ancient Egyptians many things are found, having ſome conformity with the doctrine, law and uſages of the Hebrewes, as Perer

Lib. 18. de civ. Dei cap. 40.

Quest. XVI. Why it pleaſed God that Moſes ſhould be inſtructed in the Egyptian learning.

NOw it pleaſed God, that Moſes ſhould be thus trained up in the wiſdome of the Egyptians and a courtly bringing up, that by this meanes he might bee inſtructed in the government of the Common-wealth and be prepared for that publike function which he ſhould afterward be called unto. So David was taken from the flocke and brought up in Saules court to learne the diſcipline of the King[illegible]

Though it pleased God to use the ordinary meanes for Moses instruction, yet he alwayes doth not so, and especially in the new Testament the Apostles were extraordinarily inspired, being in humane learning altogether unexpert, for there was more abundance of spirit and grace in the new Testament under Christ, than in the old under the Law, Simler. 2. Beside, Moses by this meanes became famous and got thereby great authoritie among the Egyptians, that there might be greater respect had unto his message afterward, and being fully instructed in the knowledge of the Egyptians he was the better able to discerne the errors and superstitions, both to convince the Egyptians and to containe the Israelites in the obedience and profession of the truth, ex Perer.

Quest. XVII. Why Moses had this name given him.

Vers.10. She called his name Moses. 1. Concerning the imposition of the name of Moses, neither is the opinion of Philo and Clemens Alexandrinus probable, that it is an Egyptian name derived of (Mos) which signifieth water; and Iosephus will have it compounded of Mos water, and Ises saved; for the etymon of the name is not from the water, but because he was drawne and taken out, as the reason there expressed. 2. Neither yet is it like that Moses was in the Egyptian language, called Mueves, as Ioh. Diodor. Siculus, or Movion, as Pererius out of Aben Ezra, being of the same signification which Moses is in Hebrew, that is, drawne out; for then it is like the Egyptian name would have beene expressed as Iosephs is, Gen. 41. 45. and Daniels Chalde name, Dan. 4. 5. 3. Nor yet is it probable that Pharaohs daughter having learned the Hebrew tongue of her maids did give an Hebrew name unto Moses, as Eusebius, Lippom. Thostatus: for seeing the Hebrewes were an abomination to the Egyptians, it is not to be thought also, that they abhorred their names. 4. Therefore I rather incline to thinke with Bucer and Osiander, that this word whereof Moses is derived, is Massah to draw out; as it is taken Psal. 18. 17. Thou hast drawne me out of the waters, might be common both to the Hebrewes and to the Egyptians, as some words are common to divers languages, both alike in sound and signification; or it was translated or transposed out of the Egyptian tongue into the Hebrew. 5. But as for other names that Moses should be called by, as at his circumcision Ioachim, which signifieth established, and afterward Melchi, my King, as Clemens Alexandrinus writeth, wee reject them, as having no ground in the text, seeing hee is perpetually called by the name of Moses, which name was by Gods providence imposed, wherein is set forth the principall part of his calling to draw the Israelites out of the waters and troubles of Egypt, and to lead them through the red sea, and so indeed historically to draw them out of the waters.

Quest. XVIII. Of Moses visiting his brethren.

Vers.11. And in those daies when Moses was growne, hee went forth to his brethren. 1. Very little mention is made of Moses time spent in the court till he was fortie yeere old, for then as S. Stephen sheweth, Act. 7. he began to visit his brethren, like as little is expressed of the doings of Christ while he lived privately till he was thirtie yeere old, Pellican. 2. Iosephus writeth how in this time he warred against the Ethiopians, and while he besieged Saba, the King of Ethiopia his daughter fell in love with him, and was married to him, whom the author of historia scholast. saith was Zipporah. But the Scripture sheweth that she was the daughter of the Prince of Midian, Perer. 3. He was now growne not onely in stature of body, but in the grace and gifts of the spirit, Pellican. And as it seemeth having neglected, and forgotten his brethren hitherto, being now especially stirred up & called of God, he goeth to visit his brethren; he did it not onely of a naturall instinct, as Hilary seemeth to write. 4. And this the Apostle sheweth to have beene an excellent worke of faith: For 1. he refuseth to be called Pharaohs daughters sonne: He renounceth his courtly life and the pleasures of Egypt. 3. He preferreth the afflictions of Gods people before the pleasures of Egypt. 4. He looketh unto the reward, Heb. 11. Ferus. But if it be asked, why Ioseph did not so likewise to leave the court, as Moses did, I answere, first that some write that Ioseph did in his old age leave Pharaohs court, and went and dwelt with his brethren in the land of Goshen; beside, the case betweene Ioseph and Moses is farre divers, for in Iosephs time Pharaoh was a friend to Israel, now an enemy; then the people were in happy case, now the state is miserable; Iosephs calling was to be a feeder of Israel in Egypt, Moses to bring them out of Egypt, Simler.

Why Moses left the court and Ioseph did not.

Quest. XIX. Whether it were lawfull for Moses to kill the Egyptian.

Vers.12. When he saw no man hee slew the Egyptian. Concerning the fact of Moses in killing the Egyptian, we are farre off from accusing, or blaming the same, which was at the first the opinion of Augustine, who thus writeth against Faustus. Consulta aterna lege reperio, non debuisse homicidam Mosen, qui nullam ordinariam potestatem habebat, quamvis improbum occidi: I finde in the eternall Law that Moses having no ordinary power, ought not to have killed no not a wicked man. But afterward he retracted this opinion, quæst. 2. in Exod. Oecumenius also upon Jude bringeth in the Devill contending with Michael the Archangell, that Moses was not worthy of buriall, because he unjustly killed the Egyptian: But S. Stephen defendeth this fact of Moses as being a proofe of his calling from God, Acts 7. 25. Some of the Hebrewes thinke, that the Hebrew here smitten of the Egyptian, was the husband of one Dathan, with whom the Egyptian committed adultery, and had by her that blasphemer that was put to death, Levit. 24. and therefore he was justly killed of Moses: but these are meere conjectures. 3. Some Hebrewes thinke, that Moses killed not the Egyptian with the sword, but by the word of his mouth, as Peter killed Ananias, Act. 5. but then Moses needed not to have beene so circumspect, and to have have buried him privily in the sand, Simler. 4. Cajetane defendeth this fact, because this Egyptian was one of the cruell taskmasters, that oppressed the Hebrewes, and therefore it was lawfull to kill him: if Moses had beene a private man, it had not beene lawfull, no not to kill an enemie in this case. 5. Paulus Burgensis upon this place is of opinion, that Moses might doe this in charitie, to deliver his brethren and to relieve the oppressed, though he had not a singular inspiriation, or publike calling to doe it: Ambrose seemeth to thinke, lib.1.de officiis, cap.36. And the Scripture seemeth to warrant it: Deliver them that are drawne to death, Prov.24.11. But though it be an act of charitie to deliver, and to rescue, yet is an inordinate charitie, to kill one to deliver another. 6. Wherefore the best defence is, that Moses was inspired of God, and had his authoritie from him, to doe the office of a Judge betweene the Hebrew and the Egyptian; which is affirmed by Saint Stephen, He thought that his brethren would have understood that God by his hand should give them deliverance, Act. 7. 25. And this is the resolution of Augustine quæst.2. in Exod. Thostatus, Lyranus and Thomas Aquin. Unto this may be added, that Moses being reputed sonne of Pharaohs daughter, was a publike person, and so of great authoritie: Iun. in Anal. It may be also that all the circumstances of this fact are not expressed: as that the Egyptian did so vex the Hebrew, as that the one could not be rescued without killing of the other, or Moses might kill him in his owne defence, the Egyptian running upon him, when hee offered to rescue the Hebrew: Pererius. But the best defence is, that Moses was hereunto extraordinarily stirred up of God: which extraordinarie motions are not now of us to be imitated or to be drawne into example, Ferus.

Thom. secund. secund. q. 61. artic. ult.

QUEST. XX. Why Moses though warranted from God, yet useth great secrecie and circumspection in this businesse.

Vers.12. And he looked round about, and when hee saw no man, &c. It will be objected, if Moses had authoritie and a calling from God to kill the Egyptian, why did hee it secretly? To this it may be answered, that although Moses was to himselfe assured of his calling, yet was it not known whether to the Hebrewes or Egyptians; and therefore his calling being yet secret and hid, it was fit that his acts should be secret: otherwise his publicke acts, his calling being yet secret, would have beene as much offensive and called in question, as if hee had had no such calling: Iun. in Analys. So Ehud killed Eglon privately in his secret chamber, Iudg. 3. and Gedeon, being not yet publikely knowne and taken to be appointed of God to deliver his people, did pull downe the altar of Baal by night, Iudg.6.27. Herein then Moses sheweth his godly discretion that he might proceed by order.

QUEST. XXI. How Moses is said to feare, seeing the Apostle denieth that he feared the King, Heb.11.26.

Vers.14. Then Moses feared and said, &c. Yet the Apostle saith, he feared not the fiercenesse of the King, Heb.11.26. To reconcile Moses and the Apostle: 1. We approve not Theodoret exposition, that Moses is said not to feare, in respect of the cause of his flight, the killing of the Egyptian which fact he feared not; as not repenting him hereof: but this interpretation seemeth somewhat harsh and the Apostle sheweth that he feared not the King, no not when he left Egypt: therein then consisted the vacuity of his feare, not in respect of the fact. 2. Chrysostome expoundeth his not fearing of the King leaving Egypt, that yet he feared not to returne againe thither: but Moses was strengthened and incouraged of God to returne afterward: the vision which he saw 40. yeeres after, did not take away his former feare. 3. Theophylact understandeth it of the degree of his feare: hee did not so feare the King, as that he fled a farre off, but went to Midian a Countrie adjoyning, not fearing that the King would pursue him thither: But the Apostle exempteth him, not onely from some degree, but from all feare. 4. Some referre his feare unto the affliction, and persecution, that by this meanes was like to be increased: he feared not for himselfe, but for the people, Pellican: but Moses speaketh of his owne feare, upon which he fled: his fleeing was a meanes to deliver himselfe from the danger, and not the people. 5. Others say, that he feared not so much the King as hee feared to offend God, lest if he had offered himself to the danger and not made an escape, he should have tempted him by presuming: Osiander. But the text sheweth that hee was afraid of Pharaoh and fled from him. 6. Others confesse that Moses shewed infirmitie of feare, but it was covered by faith and so not imputed: Genevens. But the Apostle denieth that he feared at all. 7. Some doe expound it not of Moses first leaving of Egypt, when indeed he feared the King, but of his second departure, when he brought out the people thence, for then hee feared not Pharaohs anger at all, as is evident, cap.10.29. Lyranus, Thostatus, Pererius, Iun. And this exposition doth very well resolve this doubt. 8. Unto this also may be added, that if wee understand it of his first departure, Moses fled not for any feare in respect of himselfe, but lest that his calling by this meanes should be hindred, and he withdraweth himselfe not so much of feare, as to reserve himselfe for a fitter opportunitie: Simler. Nor yet doth he feare as distrusting his calling, but because hee lost this opportunitie: Iun. And the reason of his feare is expressed in the text: Then Moses feared and said, surely this thing is knowne. Hee feared lest he should be hindred in this businesse of the deliverance of the people. Thomas also to the same effect saith, that there are two things to be considered in feare, malum perabile, one to be dispraysed, when for feare any evill is committed, or any good omitted, and this is not in Moses; another that is Laudabile, praise worthie, si quis salva fide refugiat periculum [illegible] If one not violating his faith, doth shun the instant danger: unlesse we will say, that Christ, when he escaped out of their hands, that sought to stone him, did it of feare, Luke 4. But I rather preferre the former exposition, before touched.

QUEST. XXII. Why Moses sufferings are called by the Apostle the rebukes of Christ.

BUt seeing so oft mention hath beene made of that place to the Hebrewes, it shall not be amisse briefly to shew the meaning of those other words of the Apostle, vers. 26. esteeming the rebuke of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt: 1. We refuse here the exposition of Lyranus, that he calleth the rebukes of Moses the rebukes of Christ, because by faith foreseeing what Christ should suffer, hee by Christs example was confirmed to endure the like: for in this sense they are Moses rebukes rather than Christs. 2. Neither are they called Christs rebukes, because they were such as Christ commendeth: Blessed are they that suffer persecution for righteousnesse sake, Matt. 5. 3. or for that Christ was to come of that people, and therefore their rebukes are counted the rebukes of Christ: Cajetan. 4. or because Moses was a figure of Christ, and suffered the like rebukes: because that as Moses left the Court, and palace of Pharaoh, to be partaker of the afflictions of his people, so Christ descending from heaven tooke upon him our infirmities: Oecumenius, Theophylact. 5. But they are called Christs rebukes, because he suffereth in his members, and accounteth their afflictions as his owne: in which sense the Apostle saith he fulfilled the rest of the afflictions of Christ in his flesh for his bodies sake, which is the Church, Col. 1. 24.

QUEST. 23. Why Pharaoh sought to slay Moses.

Vers. 15. PHaraoh heard of this matter, and sought to slay Moses. The causes why Pharaoh sought Moses life, Iosephus alleageth to be these three: 1. Because the Egyptians envied his prosperous successe in the warres against the Ethiopians. 2. They feared him, as like to be one, that aspired to great matters, and might seeke some innovation and change in Egypt. 3. The Egyptian Priests did propheste of him, that he was like to prove very dangerous to Egypt. By these meanes the King was incensed against him. But I rather approve that which Philo writeth, that Pharaoh was not so much moved against Moses, for the death of one Egyptian, as for that by this he perceived, that Moses was a friend and favourer of the Hebrewes, whom he accounted his enemies, and an enemie to the Egyptians his subjects and friends: Philo lib. de vita Mosis.

QUEST XXIV. The causes why Moses lived in exile and banishment 40. yeares.

Vers. 15. THerefore Moses fled. Zeiglerus thinketh that whereas at the fortieth yeere of Moses age there were 390. yeeres expired since the promise made to Abraham, and that tenne yeeres only remained of the affliction of the people, which was to continue 400. yeeres in one place and other, Gen. 15. 13. Moses thought to prevent the time, there being but tenne yeeres to come: and therefore did punished his presumption with fortie yeeres exile. But this cannot stand with the Apostles testimonie of Moses, that by faith he forsooke Egypt: if it were a worke of faith, how could it be a punishment for his presumption? Therefore the causes of Moses flight and exile are better touched by Ferus: 1. That the people should not depend upon man, but trust in God for their deliverance. 2. That Moses might be weaned altogether from the pleasures of Egypt, and delicate life in Pharaohs Court. 3. That he might know, that the deliverance of Israel should not be by sword or strength, but by the spirit of God. 4. To punish the peoples ingratitude, for not more thankfully accepting of this benefit, that God had stirred up a deliverer: for not onely this Hebrew whom Moses rebuked, rejected his calling, but generally the people made light of it, as S. Stephen sheweth, Act. 7. 25.

QUEST. XXV. Of Midian what countrie it was, and where situate.

Vers. 15. ANd dwelt in the land of Midian. 1. This was the chiefe Citie of the Midianites, so called of Midian, one of the sonnes of Keturah by Abraham: it was situate in Arabia upon the red sea, Iosephus. 2. Hierome saith there were two Cities of this name, one on the South part of Arabia by the red sea; the other by Arnon, and Arcopolis, the ruines whereof were to be seene in his time. Hieron. de locis Hebraic. The whole Countrie was called Arabia, where the Midianites, Amalekites, Israelites dwelt together: Gen. 36. And these Arabians were called Petrei, of their metropolis or chiefe Citie Petra: Borrh. 4. This Citie was not farre from Mount Sinai, for thereabout did Moses keepe his father in lawes sheepe, Exod. 3. and thither came Iethro with Moses wife and children: and S. Paul placeth Sinai in Arabia, Gal. 4. 5. The women of this Countrie joyning with the Moabites inticed the Israelites to commit fornication, Numb. 25. These Midianites oppressed Israel seven yeeres, of whom Gideon slew 135000. Iud. 8.

QUEST. XXVI. Reuhel, Iethro, Hobab, whether the same.

Vers. 18. ANd when they came to Reuhel their father, &c. This Reuhel was not the same with Iethro, as the Septuagint and Latine translator here read, Iethro, and as Hierome thinketh, they were two of the same man. 2. Neither had he foure names, Iethro, Reuhel, Hobab, Keni, as Thostatus, Hieron contra Helvidium. for Hobab was the sonne of Reuhel, Numb. 10. 29. and hee was called Keni of his nation and family, because he was a Kenite, Numb. 24. 21. Iunius. 3 Pererius also is deceived, thinking that Hobab was Moses father in law, but his wives brother, and his father in lawes sonne: because (saith he) Moses father in law departed from them at Mount Sinai, Exod. 18. but Hobab staied with them still, and was guide in the wildernesse, Numb. 10. 31. But Pererius herein erreth also: for these two stories of Pererius deceived. Hobab, Exod. 18. and Numb. 10. must be joyned together: they were both one man, and hee had leave of Moses, as it is shewed Exod. 18. but he returned againe unto them, before they departed thence, to be their guide, as Moses requested, Numb. 10. and it is like he brought his kindred and family with him, because the Kenites are read afterward to have cohabited with Israel, Iudg. 1. 16. 4. Whereas Reuhel was grandfather unto Moses wife, called also their father, after the manner of the Hebrewes.

Iethro

Iethro and Hobab are the ſame, for they are both ſaid to be the father in law of Moſes, Exodus 18. and Num. 10. 29. and Hobab and Iethro was the ſonne of Rehuel: ibid. Iun.

QUEST. XXVII. Whether Rehuel were Prince and Prieſt of Midian.

Verſ. 16. AND the Prince of Midian, &c. The Hebrew word is Cohen which ſignifieth both Prince and Prieſt, and one that is preferred or exalted in any office or authoritie, as Davids ſonnes are called cohanim, chiefe rulers, or men of authoritie, 2 Sam. 8. 18. Prieſts they were not, being not of the tribe of Levi, but of Iudah. 1. Yet it is not like that he was King of Arabia, as Euſebius alleageth out of Artapanus an ancient writer: for it was not ſeemely for a Princes daughter to keepe their father ſheepe; neither is it like, if he had beene a King, that the other ſhepherds would have offered ſuch violence unto them: Simlerus. 2. Ioſephus, Philo, the Septuagint doe hold him to have beene a Prieſt: the Chalde Paraphraſe readeth, Prince. It is like he was both a Prince, and a Prieſt, as Melchiſedeck King of Salem was: and as after the captivitie of Babylon the ſame were both Princes and Prieſts in Judea: Perer. and of old time the Prieſthood went with the birthright; Borrh.

Euſeb. lib. 9. de præparat. Evang. c. ult.

QUEST. XXVIII. Whether Rehuel were an idolatrous Prieſt, or a Prieſt of the true God.

COncerning this Iethro his profeſſion. 1. I neither thinke this Iethro was an Idolatrous Prieſt before he came to Moſes, Exod. 18. and then firſt converted, as David Kimhi, to whom Pererius conſenteth: for it is not like that Moſes would have married an Idolaters daughter, Simler. at the leaſt he had not continued with him ſo long even 40. yeeres for nought, and his father in law an Idolater. 2. Neither is it probable that Iethro from the beginning was a Prieſt and a worſhipper of the true God, ſeeing he was the Prieſt of the Midianites, that were Idolaters: as Aben Ezra. 3. Therefore it is more probable, that firſt ſome ſeeds of true religion, and of the knowledge of God were preſerved among the Midianites even from Adam: yet intermingled with the ſuperſtitions of the heathen: Borrh. but Moſes abode and continuance with Iethro wee are to thinke that he was more eſtabliſhed in the knowledge of the true God: and was moſt of all confirmed, when he came to Moſes: Exod. 18. where indeed he profeſſeth himſelfe a true worſhipper and Prieſt unto the high God, offering ſacrifice unto him, Iun.

QUEST. XXIX. Why Zipporah is called an Æthiopiſſe, Numb. 12. 1.

Verſ. 21. WHO gave unto Moſes Zipporah his daughter. 1. This Zipporah here a Midianitiſh woman, is alſo the ſame which is called the Cuſhite or Æthiopiſſe, Numb. 12. 1. for that is but a fable of Ioſephus, that Moſes married the King of Ethiopias daughter: which Philo writing of purpoſe the Hiſtorie of Moſes life, maketh no mention of, being before Ioſephus: and Moſes is found to have had no more children, than thoſe which he had by Zipporah, which is a probable conjecture, that he had no more wives. 2. She is then called an Æthiopiſſe, not of the contrary, becauſe ſhe was ſuch, the Chalde readeth, or by way of contempt, becauſe the people of that countrie are noted for their deformitie: but there were two countries called Æthiopia, the one was the occidentall toward the Sea, beyond Egypt, the other was the Orientall toward the Eaſt bordering upon the red ſea, which the Arabians inhabite: Perer. And in Hebrew ſhe is called a Cuſhite, and Æthiopia is named Cuſh, becauſe the poſteritie of Cuſh inhabited both the Weſt Æthiopia and the Eaſt which is Arabia. The Midianites alſo were called Cuſhites, not becauſe they came of Cuſh, Gen. 10. but becauſe they inhabited in that country. Iun. And that Midian alſo is called Cuſh, or Æthiopia, it is evident, Habac. 3. 7. For iniquitie I ſaw the tents of Cuſhan, and the curtaines of the land of Midian did tremble: Perer. ex Hieron.

QUEST. XXX. At what time Moſes ſonnes were borne unto him.

Verſ. 22. SHE bare a ſonne whoſe name ſhe called Gerſhom, &c. 1. This child was borne unto Moſes long before his returne into Egypt out of Midian, where Moſes ſtayed 40. yeeres, and his other ſonne Eleazer: becauſe they were but little ones both, when Moſes tooke his journey into Egypt, for he put them upon an Aſſe, as not able to travell a foot, and the one of them was not circumciſed, whoſe circumciſion though it might be deferred ſome dayes, yet many yeeres it is not like that Moſes would put it off, Perer. 2. The Latine following the Septuagint, doe make here mention alſo of the birth of Eleazer, with the reaſon of the impoſition of his name: but that is not in the Hebrew, being tranſpoſed hither out of the 18. of Exodus.

QUEST. XXXI. To whom the right of impoſing names upon the children belongeth.

Verſ. 22. WHOſe name he called, &c. 1. Names are found ſometime to have beene impoſed by the father, as Leah giveth the name unto Ruben, Shemeon, Iudah, Gen. 29. 32. 33. ſometime the father, to whom that right eſpecially belonged, nameth his ſonne, as Ioſeph, Gen. 41. 51. ſometime both the parents deviſe the name, as Evah is ſaid to call her ſonne borne in Abels ſtead, Gen. 4. 25. And Adam alſo is ſaid to have given that name, Gen. 5. 3. 4. Sometime names are impoſed by generall conſent of friends, as Gen. 25. 25. They called his name Eſau. 5. And ſometime alſo a name is given up by common uſe, as Gen. 25. 30. he, that is, every one (as Iun. well readeth) called his name Edom. The right and authoritie of impoſing names belongeth unto the father: as Rachel called her ſonne not but Iacob Benjamin, Gen. 35. And when Iohn was circumciſed they would have named him Zacharie, but his father overruled the matter and ratified the other name, Luk. 1.

Quest. XXXII. Whence the name of Gersom is derived.

Sim. 1. For the derivation of this name, the first part thereof is taken from the word Ger, which signifieth a stranger, as it followeth in this place: for, saith he, I have beene a stranger in a strange : For the other part, Iun. thinketh it commeth of the word which signifieth to cast out, or expell, which is garash: but that cannot well stand with the other in this composition, unlesse the same syllable should be repeated; and beside, mem with cholem should be superfluous: therefore Pscator frameth it of Shamam, which signifieth to be desolate: Some derive it of Sham, there, because hee was a stranger there: but because the word Shem, name, is used immediatly before, he called Shemo, his name, it is most like that the word is compounded of Ger and shem, that is, a stranger, his name. 2. Some say he calleth it a strange land not in respect of Egypt, where they were onely sojourners, but of Canaan. But seeing Moses was borne in Egypt, and there he had his education, and there were friends, it is more like that he hath respect unto that place: being expulsed and exiled thence into a strange land: Iun. 3. There was also another Gersom beside, the sonne of Levi called also Gersom, Exod. 6.16.

Quest. XXXIII. What Pharaoh it was that died while Moses was in Midian.

Sim. It was after many dayes that the King of Egypt died. 1. Some thinke that this King was not Pharaoh, from whom Moses fled, but an other, and that this was the fourth change during whom raigned 28. yeeres, in whose latter yeeres Moses fled, then after him succeeded Acencres 12. then Acherres 9. yeeres, then Genebres 16. yeeres, who perished in the red sea. Simler: 2. But more probable, that this Pharaoh, that now died, was that King from whom Moses escaped: both that the Israelites now at the change of the King cried unto God, hoping to finde some alteration, as commonly doe looke for better times at the change of the Prince: Pellican. As also so much may be gathered by that which the Lord saith to Moses: go returne to Egypt, for they are all dead which were that is, both Pharaoh, and all those that sought to revenge the Egyptians bloud whom he slew. Iosephus also thinketh that this was the same Pharaoh, from whom Moses fled unto Midian. lib. 2. cap. 5.

Quest. XXXIV. Whether the cry of the Israelites proceeded from true repentance.

Obj. And the children of Israel sighed for the bondage, and cried. 1. Some thinke that this crie of the Israelites proceeded not from any true repentance, but from their present miserie and bondage: And God heard their crie of his fatherlie pitie and clemencie, as he often heareth the complaints of those which are worthily punished, so the Lord had respect to Ahabs sackcloth and semblance of humiliation. But it is rather to bee thought, that the afflictions of the Israelites had brought them to the knowledge of their sinne, and specially of their Idolatrie, which is mentioned by the Prophet Ezechiel. Their hearts being humbled with sight of their sinnes, for the which they were worthily chastised, they did make their complaint unto God: Iun. Simler. And this may appeare by their effectuall prayers, which they made, as proceeding from great contrition of heart and humilitie. Ferus. Wherefore Moses maketh further mention of their prayer, Num. 20. 16. shewing that at the instant & humble suite of the Israelites, the Lord sent his Angell to deliver them. Iun. This crie therefore of the Israelites in Egypt seemeth to be the same unto that which they made when the Egyptians pursued them, they are said to crie unto God in one place, and to murmur in the next, Exod. 14. 10. 11.

4 Places of doctrine.

1. Doct. Of the divine providence.

Heb. 11. 23. By faith for him an Arke. In Moses wonderfull preservation, we have a notable example of the divine providence: which sheweth that all things in the world are governed, ordered, and disposed according to the will of God: the hiding of Moses three moneths, his putting into those flags, the daughter of king Pharaohs daughter, the instinct which she had, to bring him up for her own sonne, that Moses came to be instructed in the Egyptian learning; doe all excellently set forth the fatherly care of God toward his, in their birth, education, preservation, as our Saviour also saith, even all the haires of your head are numbred. Matth. 10. 30. Pscator.

2. Doct. Lawfull meanes to be used.

Exod. 2. 3. And when she could not longer hide him, she tooke for him an Arke. Although they chiefly commended the childe by a sure faith to the providence, yet they refuse no meanes to provide for the things needfull, like as Noah pitched his Arke within and without: which teacheth us, that we should so depend upon Gods providence, as that we tempt not, but carefully use the meanes which God hath appointed, Pellican.

3. Doct. Difference of punishments according to the diversitie of sinnes.

Exod. 2. 14. Thinkest thou to kill me, as thou killedst the Egyptian? Moses without knowledge of the fact committed by him killed the Egyptian, for the which he was punished: which sinne maliciously are more severely punished, then those things which are done of ignorance: Ferus, Ferus.

4. Doct.

4. Doct. That it is lawfull to flee in time of persecution.

Vers. 15. Moses fled from Pharaoh. This shewes that it is lawfull for one to flie in the time of persecution, specially when his person is sought: so Iacob fled from Esau, David from Saul, Paul escaped out of Damascus, Perth.

5. Places of controversie.

1. Cont. The mariage of the aunt and nephew against the law of nature.

Vers. 1. A Man of Levi took a daughter of Levi. That is, Amram tooke to wife Iochebed his sister, as is before shewed, quest. 3. The Canonists upon these and such other examples of mariages doe inferre, that by the law of nature no degrees are forbidden, but betweene father and daughter, mother and sonne onely: because in other neere degrees even mariages were in use among the ctierbes. Contra. 1. It appeareth that these mariages, as to take the Aunt to wife, or uncle to husband, marrie two sisters, and such like, were even against the law of nature, seeing they are named among the abominations and pollutions of the Cananites, Levit. 18. 27. who transgressed not herein against positive or judiciall law, but against the law of nature. 2. This further is made manifest, in that the mariages by the light of nature, and some other nations did prohibite such neere mariages and conjunctions. 3. And the fathers acts and examples doe not therefore conclude that the prohibition of such mariages was not morall & naturall: for it cannot be denied, but in their owne opinion Loth meeth with his daughters was unnaturall: the law of nature in many things was then obscured, which afterward by the positive lawes was explained, Simler. in cap. 6. Exod.

2. Cont. That the mariage of ministers is lawfull.

Vers. 16. AND the Priest of Midian had seven daughters. Raguel himself was a Priest, and his son Iethro, who offered sacrifices unto God, Exod. 18. So that even among the Gentiles Priests were married, and the sonnes succeeded the parents in their Priestly function. As in the primitive Church we read of Polycrates, who in an Epistle to Victor writeth, that seven of his auncestors had been Bishops of Ephesus before him, and he himselfe was the eighth. The Apostles also were married: and Paul also sheweth that he might have taken this libertie as well as the rest, 1 Cor. 9. 5. and he alloweth every man to have his wife, 1 Cor. 7. 2.

3. Cont. Of the authoritie of parents in the mariage of their children.

Vers. 22. WHo gave unto Moses Zipporah his daughter. Here that ancient right of the father in disposing and giving their children in mariage is confirmed: Piscator. So Abraham provided a wife for Isaack, Rebeckah is given by her parents, they only aske her consent, Gen. 24. And the fathers power to ratifie or disannull the vow and promise made by the daughter, Numb. 30. maketh against the practice of the Canonists and Romanists, that ascribe very little to the consent of parents in mariage, and they allow that a mans sonne or daughter may against the minde of the parents be pulled into a Cloister and professe Monkerie.

NOw whereas after the 22. verse the Septuagint and the Latine translator doe insert a whole verse of the birth of Eleazar, with the reason of the imposition of his name: all which is not in the Hebrew in this place, but is transposed hither from the 18. chap. of Exodus, vers. 4. Bellarmine therefore make us beleeve, that herein the Latine text is perfecter than the Hebrew, because Moses made onely of one of Moses sonnes, whereas he had two, lib. 2. de ver. Dei, cap. 2.

Contra. 1. It followeth not because some thing is omitted in one place to be inserted in another: therefore the Hebrew text is defective, Matth. 8. Mark. making mention of one blind man, chap. 10. Luke likewise, chap. 18. 36. whereas S. Matthew speaketh of two blind men, chap. 20. 29. Therefore defective: so neither is the Hebrew here thought to be wanting, expressing onely one of them, seeing the other is supplied, chap. 18. 2. And if the Septuagint is to be justified here, they cannot be borne out also for adding five more of Iosephs posteritie, Machor, Galead of Manasseh, and Taam, and Edom of Ephraim, Genes. 46. which are not mentioned in the Hebrew, as not those borrowed from the 26. of Numb. and 1 Chron. 7. Likewise Exod. 6. 19. the Latine and Septuagint unto Moses and Aaron Miriam, which is not in the Hebrew: this rather shewes great boldnesse of translators, to adde that which the spirit of God pleaseth over in silence.

5. Cont. Prayers are not meritorious.

Vers. 24. THen God heard their mone, and God remembred his covenant. The Israelites prayers not for any worthinesse or merit of their sorrow, but the Lord for his promise sake [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

6. Places of morall use.

1. Mor. Rich and great men should have compassion on the necessities of their poore brethren.

verf. 11. HE went forth to his brethren to looke on their burdens. Moses though himselfe lived in all ease and courtly pleasure, yet could not so content himselfe, but goeth to visit his afflicted brethren, and is touched in compassion towards them, as Queene Hester also was moved with pity toward her people: which teacheth us, that rich and mighty men, that are in high and wealthy place, should not shut themselves to take knowledge of the necessities and wants of their poore brethren: therefore the Prophet reproveth the rich men of Israel, that dranke wine in bowles, and lived at ease, but no waies sory for the affliction of Ioseph. Ferus.

2. Mor. Friendly admonition is not to be despised.

Who made thee a man of authoritie? Moses here for his friendly admonition is recompensed with scornefull and disdainfull words: which is the property of naturall and carnall men to requy them with evill, which carefully watch over them by wholesome admonitions for the saving of their soule. Simler. But the Wise man saith, The eare that hearkeneth to the correction of life, shall remaine among the wise, but he that refuseth instruction despiseth his owne soule.

3. Mor. Godly names to be given unto children.

ver. 22. Whose name he called Gershom. Moses giveth unto his sonne a name that might put both himselfe, and his sonne also, when he came to yeeres of discretion, in minde of their state and calling, that they were but pilgrimes and strangers here. So did the Fathers use to give names unto their children of good signification and godly edifying: that fond use therefore is to bee reproved in Christians, that give names unto their children borrowed and taken from the Gentiles, and such as have no good signification, or which they understand not. Pellican.

4. Mor. Patience is necessarie in prayer.

cap. 2. 24. THen God heard their mone. Yet it was forty yeeres before the Lord sent them deliverance: we must not then thinke, that our prayers are neglected of God, if presently we see not the effect thereof: but we must waite the Lords leisure, and expect with patience, till it bee his pleasure to heare our prayers and grant our requests. Ferus. S. Paul prayed thrice, that is often, that the pricke of the messenger of Satan might be taken from him, yet was it not, but the Lord gave him his sufficiencie with patience and strength to endure that combat: 2. Cor. 12.

5. Mor. In affliction we must flie unto prayer.

And in that the people cried unto God in this their distresse, they rebelled not, nor sought to deliver themselves, by their owne arme or strength: it teacheth us that in all our afflictions wee should send upon God and betake our selves unto prayer: Pellic. as Saint Iames saith, If any be afflicted let him Iam. 5. 13.

CHAP. III.

1. The method and parts.

THe generall preparation of the Instrument of this great deliverance, is set forth in the Chapter going before, in his preservation, education, persecution. Now followeth the more speciall preparation in the vocation of Moses in this third Chapter, and his confirmation, chap. 4.

In this Chapter is set forth, first the preparation to his vocation, to vers. 7. Secondly, the vocation it selfe, to vers. 22.

The preparation consisteth partly in a vision which Moses saw, both in what place, vers. 1. what vision it was, vers. 2. how Moses behaved himselfe, vers. 3. partly in the voice of God, which Moses feared: wherein Moses is charged what he should doe, vers. 4. 5. and the Lord proclaimeth who he is vers. 6.

The vocation of Moses is either a generall charge or commandement to goe unto Egypt: where unto is injoyned him of God, vers. 10. with the occasion thereof, the afflictions of the people, the twofold end thereof, to deliver them out of Egypt, and to bring them into the good land of promise, 2. Moses excuseth himselfe, 1. By his infirmity; where the Lord satisfieth him by that promise and assuring him of the future event, that they should serve him in that mount, vers. 11, 12. 2. By reading the curiosity of the people in inquiring after his name that sent him, verse the 13. where he also satisfieth him by shewing his name, vers. 14. 15.

Beſide the generall charge, followeth a particular direction what courſe hee ſhall take, to verſ. 19. what effect it ſhall have. For the firſt, there is preſcribed whom hee ſhall joyne with him, the Elders of rael, verſ. 16. what he ſhall ſay unto them, verſ. 17. what they ſhall doe; goe unto Pharaoh, verſ. 18. effects or events are foure: 1. Pharaoh ſhall refuſe to let them goe, verſ. 19. 2. The Lord will ſ ſignes and wonders. 3. Then he will ſend them out, verſ. 20. 4. They ſhall goe out richly with orna and jewels, verſ. 21. 22.

Quest. I. How long Moſes kept his father in lawes ſheepe, what he did in the meane time, and to what end he was ſo exerciſed.

Verſ. 1. When Moſes kept the ſheepe. 1. Concerning the time, when this viſion here follow ſhewed to Moſes, it fell out 40. yeeres after he fled out of Egypt, Acts 7. 30. about the yeere of his age, for ſo old he was when Moſes appeared before Pharaoh, Exod. 7. 7. which was the yeere, Perer. 2. ſo that Moſes kept his father in lawes ſheepe the ſpace of 40. yeeres, for he was 40 old when he viſited his brethren, Acts 7. 23. and now he was 80. yeere old: wherein appeareth the gular patience of Moſes that was brought ab aula ad caulam, from the court as it were to the cote: in this ſtate of life continued forty yeeres: Simlerus. During which time it is ſuppoſed that he the Booke of Geneſis, and the Booke of Iob, for the comfort of his afflicted brethren in Egypt: is very like that hee gave himſelfe to contemplation, and much profited in the ſtudy of wiſedome, grounds whereof he had learned in Egypt, Perer. ex Philone. 3. And thus it pleaſed God to exerciſe ſes in a ſhepheards life, for theſe cauſes. 1. That by this meanes he might fully bee weaned from the ſures of Egypt, and as it were renounce the world. Perer. ex Gregor. 2. The paſtorall life and was a kinde of introduction to prepare him for the governement, which afterward hee tooke upon as it is in the Pſalme, Thou didſt leade thy people like ſheepe by the hand of Moſes and Aaron. Gods power might appeare, in raiſing Moſes from this contemptible kind of life, eſpecially in the of the Egyptians, that abhorred all keepers of ſheepe, to that high place, calling, and authority to he was afterward advanced. Similer.

Quest. II. Of the mount Choreb, whether the ſame with Sinai.

He came to the mountaine of God Choreb. 1. Ioſephus thinketh that mount Choreb and Sinai one: ſome thinke they were two mountaines joyning together, and that Sinai was the higher ſane thinketh that Choreb was the top of the mount Sinai: but it is more like, that Choreb was that hilly trace or circuit (ſo called of the drineſſe or barrenneſſe) wherein the mount Sinai was which place as Philo thinketh was full of buſhes, and that at the bottome of that buſhie hill ſhewed. 2. Moſes drave his ſheepe thither, becauſe there was good ſtore of graſſe by reaſon

Why Moſes went thither.

...ntercepted, becauſe of the reverence and holineſſe of the place: but the place was not had in ſuch ...erence before this viſion: therefore it is moſt like that he went thither, as to a ſecret place, and more ...for contemplation: and that to him thus prepared, this heavenly viſion appeared: Simler. Or the ...led by a ſecret inſtinct draw Moſes thither, where hee purpoſed to manifeſt himſelfe unto him: ...it is called the mountaine of God, not for any religion which was there placed of old, as Ioſe- Why it was called the mountaine of God.
...because of the height and excellencie thereof, as ſuch things are ſo called in Scripture, as the ce-...of God, Pſalme 104. 16. But it is ſo named by an anticipation, becauſe there the Lord did appeare ...Moſes* at this time, and afterward ſhewed himſelfe by viſible ſignes, at the delivering of the Law: Iun. ...This hill is famous in Scripture for ſeven memorable things there done: as the viſion of the fire in the ...: the ſtriking of the rock with Moſes rod: there Moſes lift up his hands when Ioſhua prevailed ...Amalek*: there the Law was given: Moſes faſted fourty dayes and fourty nights; and comming ...from thence broke the tables of ſtone: there Helias had that admirable viſion ſet forth, 1. Kin. 19.

QUEST. III. Of the viſion in the buſh.

And the Angell of the Lord appeared unto him in a flame of fire out of the midſt of the buſh.

1. This is one of the three moſt notable viſions of the old Teſtament, the two other were ...viſion of the ladder ſhewed to Iacob, Gen. 28. The other of the ancient of dayes unto Dan. 7. Perer. ...to theſe may be added as not inferiour to the reſt, the appearing of the Lord in mount Sinai, at the ...ing of the Law. 2. Viſions were of three ſorts, either ſuch as by ſpirituall illumination were manife-...to the intellectuall part and underſtanding, or ſuch as wrought upon the inward phantaſie, or were ...by ſome viſible ſignes to the externall ſenſe: Simler. as in this place. 3. This buſh is in Hebrew ...neb: which the Hebrewes deſcribe to be a ſhrub full of prickes, and without fruit, and ſo thicke, ...bird cannot enter without the rufling and pulling off her feathers: ſome thinke that the moun-...Sinai was called of Seneh, either becauſe of this buſh, or for that it was full of buſhes: Perer. ...There are two parts of this viſion, the flame burning in the buſh, and the Angell ſpeaking to Moſes out ...the buſh. Simler.

QUEST. IV. Of the flame of fire that burned not.

In a flame of fire out of the midſt. Plato maketh three kindes of fire; the thicke groſſe fire, as in the ...burning of wood; a bright and ſubtile fire, yet burning; and a cleere pure fire which lighteth onely, ...burneth not, ſuch as is in the ſtarres; And hereunto may bee added a fourth kind, which is the element ...fire, which neither giveth light, nor yet burneth. This fire was of the ſecond kinde: not a fire in ſhew ...or imagination, but a true fire, for otherwiſe it had beene no marvell that the buſh burned not: Perer. ...This fire was neither fetched downe from the element of fire, as ſome thinke, for ſo it ſhould have ...paſſed the middle and cold region of the aire, which is contrarie unto it; neither was it procured by an ...Angell who have not power of themſelves to change the ordinance and courſe of nature; but it was ...brought forth by God, made of the aire, or ſome other matter prepared of God: for this was a ſupernatu-...rall fire in thoſe three things, becauſe it continued without fuell to feed upon, it kept below and aſcen-...ded not, it burned but conſumed not, therefore it ſheweth a ſupernaturall worke. 4. Now that this fire ...conſumed not the buſh being a combuſtable matter, the cauſe is, becauſe the naturall force thereof was ...reſtrained by God: for if God concurre not with the nature of things, they cannot worke nor ſhew their ...force; as the three children walked in the firy oven, and were not burned. Whereas then the fire hath ...two inſeparable qualities, to give light and to burne, God yet could here divide and ſeparate them: this ...giveth light but burneth not, as the infernall fire ſhall burne, but give no light, as Baſil ſheweth upon ...28. Pſalme. Perer.

QUEST. V. What is ſignified by the burning of the fire without conſuming the buſh.

Concerning the ſignification hereof, the burning of the fire and not the conſuming of the buſh: ...1. The Hebrewes thinke that God made choice of theſe two, the fire, and the buſh: whereof the one ...is a fine thing, and the other hath no ſhape, that they ſhould make no image or repreſentation of God. ...Some thinke it betokeneth the Law that could not purge our ſinnes, ſignified by the bramble, but on-...ly ſhew and demonſtrate them. 3. Some underſtand the divine nature of Chriſt, which did not conſume ...or drive his humane nature. 4. Some apply it to the Virgin Mary, of whom Chriſt was borne, that ...holy fire, and ſhe not conſumed. 5. Some underſtand it of the ſtate of a regenerate man, in whom there ...are two parts, the illumination of the ſpirit, as the fire, and the corruption of the fleſh, as the bramble. ...Philo beſt expreſſeth what this fire reſembled in the buſh; the buſh ſheweth the vile and miſerable ...ſtate of the Iſraelites in Egypt; the fire, their affliction; the not conſuming of the buſh, that they ſhould ...be relieved in their trouble, and be delivered from it, and that in the end they ſhould bee as brambles to ...prick and wound their enemies: Perer. 7. Beſide, God ſheweth himſelfe by this ſupernaturall fire, farre ...unlike naturall and ordinarie fire, which conſumeth things neere hand, but toucheth not a farre off. ...He is friendly and favourable to his ſervants, that draw neere unto him, but he exerciſeth his judge-...ment on the wicked, that goe farre off from him. Ferus.

Quest. VI. Whether it were an Angell or God himselfe that appeared unto Moses.

Vers. 2. Then the Angell of Iehovah. 1. Some thinke that this was indeed an Angel, one of the ministring spirits in person: yet representing the majesty and authority of God, speaking not his owne, but in Gods name, and therefore he is called Iehovah, vers. 7. Dionys. cap. 4. de cælest. Hier. Perer. And their reason is, because this is the difference betweene the old and new Testament, that Angels were disposers and ministers of the one, and the Sonne of God himselfe of the other: 2. Others doe thinke, that this was Christ the second person of the Trinitie, in respect of the authority this message, but for the ministrie it was an Angel, appearing in this visible forme: Bertr. 3. But the former opinion is, that it was Christ himselfe, that appeared here in his person, though not in his substance may thus be made manifest: 1. It is evident that he was God; for the name Iehovah, vers. 7. and vers. 14. is peculiar to God, and not communicable to any Angel, either properly or representatively for the Angels, though speaking in the name of God, yet discovered themselves to be Angels: as Luke 19. I am Gabriel. And the Angel to Iohn, Rev. 22. 9. I am thy fellow servant: they used not to say, I am Iehovah. 2. Moses prayeth that the good will of him that dwelt in the bush might come upon the head of Ioseph, Deut. 33. 16. but it is not like that hee would wish unto him the blessing of an Angel, but of God himselfe: therefore in that he saith, of him that dwelt in the bush, he meaneth him which appeared in the bush, which was not an Angell in their sense, but God himselfe. 3. Againe, no other appeared now to Moses than he, which was the Captaine and guide of the Israelites in the desert, which was Christ himselfe, as S. Paul expoundeth, 1. Cor. 10. 4. Simlerus. 5. Now that it was the person of the Sonne that appeared, rather than of the Father, or of the holy Ghost, it is thus shewed; The Father is never said to be an Angell, that is, a messenger or sent: nor yet is the holy Spirit in Scripture called by that name, but the Sonne of God is called the Angell of the Covenant, Malach. 3. 1. in respect of his incarnation to come when he was sent of his Father into the world: Theodoret, Osiander: which name of Angell given unto Christ is a title of office, not shewing his nature: Simler. Now although the representation here is referred only to the Sonne, yet the operation and preparing of this visible forme, was the worke of the whole Trinitie, as all externall workes which are done without are. The visible shapes then wherein the Sonne of God, and sometime Angels appeared, were assumed for the time by the power of God to be laid downe againe: not to bee joyned by an hypostaticall union, as afterward our humane nature was unto Christ. 6. Seeing then that this was not any of the created Angels, but Christ himselfe, it is great curiositie and boldnesse to define what Angell it was; as Pererius conjectureth that it was Michael the Archangell, that appeared here to Moses, and to Iosuah, chap. 5. and to Daniel, chap. 10. For beside that it is hard to prove that Michael is the name of a created Angell, seeing the word signifieth one like unto God, in which sense it can agree only unto Christ: he is also called the Captaine of the Lords host, Iosh. 5. the Prince of the people of God, Dan. 10. which office none hath but Christ, who is called the Prince of our salvation, Heb. 2. 10. and this Prince suffered Iosuha to worship him, whereas the Angels will not suffer the servants of God to adore them, Revel. 22. 10. Wee therefore agree that hee that is called Michael, Dan. 10. is the same that appeared to Moses and Iosuah, but he was not a ministring spirit, or created Angell, but the Creator, Christ himselfe, who is blessed, and prince only, the King of Kings, and Lord of Lords: 1. Tim. 6. 15.

Whether hee that appeared were Michael the Prince of the people of God.

Quest. VII. What moved Moses to draw neere to behold this strange sight.

Vers. 3. Therefore Moses said, I will turne aside. 1. Some thinke that Moses being much conversant and exercised in the knowledge of naturall things, might of a curious minde approch to marke some naturall conclusion, because there are some kindes of fire, that breake out of the earth, as in Lemnos and Island, that doe consume water, and yet burne not tow: and when Sylla besieged Athens, there was a certaine tower which being besmeared with a certaine slime, could not bee set on fire. 2. But it is more like, that Moses tooke this to be some divine sight, as being exercised more in the contemplation of divine and spirituall things, and was moved to draw neere by some spirituall instinct, Ferus: yet he might not presume somewhat farre, and therefore is forbidden to come neere. Simlerus.

Quest. VIII. Why the Lord doubleth Moses name in calling him.

Vers. 4. Moses, Moses. 1. The Hebrewes thinke that this voyce, whereby God spake to Moses, was like to Amrams voice Moses father, which was well knowne unto him: and they further adde, that the Lord used to speake to his servants in such a voice, as was familiar unto them: as when the Lord spake to Samuel he went to Heli, supposing it had beene his voice, 1. Sam. 3. But the going to Heli sheweth not, that it was like that old mans voice, but that Samuel, not yet acquainted with the Lords voice, could not judge it to be any mans voice, but his, and therefore goeth unto him to be better instructed. 2. But this calling of Moses by name, is a signe of Gods favour unto Moses, so God calleth Abraham, Isaac and Iacob, whom he loved, by their names. The wicked are seldome called by their names in Scripture, like as among men, when one is called by his name, it sheweth kindnesse and love: as Scipio did call the citizens by their names, that they might thinke he had a care of them. And Cyrus called his souldiers by their names: Simler. 3. And this sheweth, that God taketh especiall notice and knowledge of such, whom hee singleth out by name, as our Saviour answereth Nathaniel, who wondred that Christ knew him by his name, whom hee had not seene before, that before Philip called him, when he was ther the fig tree he ſaw him, Ioh. 1.48. Ferus. 4. Beſide, this doubling of Moſes name ſerveth the better to prepare and ſtirre him up to give diligent attention to this heavenly viſion and voyce. Simler.

Quest. IX. What the putting off the ſhoes meaneth.

Verſ. 5. PUt thy ſhooes off thy feete. 1. We reade of three kindes of putting off the ſhooes in Scripture: the firſt common and uſuall, as a ſigne of griefe and mourning, as David came to Jeruſalem barefoote, 2. *Sam.*15.30. The ſecond civill, as by putting off the ſhooe they ſignified the yeelding up of inheritance, as it is preſcribed, *Deut.*25.9. and practiſed, *Ruth.*4.7. The third was religious, which betoke-ned the putting off of earthly & carnall thoughts, and the preparing of the minde for ſpirituall things: Aug. in Iudaeſ. 2. This putting off the ſhooes, 1. ſome ſay was commanded Moſes, that he thereby ſhould ſanctifie that place, by making bare his feete: but the place was holy already, becauſe of Gods preſence; the place was not holy becauſe Moſes put off his ſhooes, but becauſe it was holy, Moſes is bid to put off his ſhooes. 2. Ambroſe thus applieth it, that becauſe the ſhooes are made of the skinnes of dead beaſts, Moſes ſhould put off all feare of death, for feare whereof hee fled at the firſt time from Pharaoh. 3. Cyprian would have thereby ſignified, that Moſes by putting off his ſhooes, doth not challenge any right in the houſe of the Church, but reſigneth it to Chriſt the head and husband thereof: for this was the cuſtome, that the next kinſman by putting off the ſhooe, did ſurrender his right in the brothers wife deceaſed unto the next after him, Ruth. 4.3. Becauſe the putting on of the ſhooes did betoken haſte; as the Iſraelites were commanded to eat the Paſſeover with their ſhooes upon their feete: therefore the putting them off betokeneth the contrarie, not in haſte, but with due preparation, Moſes ſhould approach: Vatab. 4. But the moſt likely ſignification is, that all carnall thoughts ſet apart, Moſes ſhould draw neere with reverence, and ſpirituall preparation; Ferus: as into the houſe of God, *Eccle.*4.17.

Ambr. lib. 7. Comment. in Luc. Cypr. lib. 1. ad-verſ. Iud. cap. 19.

Quest. X. Why the Lord called himſelfe the God of Abraham, Iſaac, and Iacob.

Verſ. 6. I am the God of thy father, the God of Abraham, the God of Iſaac, and the God of Iacob. 1. By thy father, he meaneth Amram, ſhewing that he was the God of them and of their ſeed, and of all mindfull of his promiſe made to their fathers: Simlerus. 2. Abraham, Iſaac and Iacob are here named ſo much in regard of their ſanctity and excellent vertues: for Abel, Enoch and Noah were honoured in their time: but for theſe cauſes are they eſpecially named: 1. Becauſe to them ſpecially were the promiſes made touching the land of Canaan. 2. They were the next and immediate fathers of Iſrael. To them God more fully revealed himſelfe and ſhewed his counſell. 4. And principally for that thoſe Patriarks had moſt evident propheſies of the Meſſiah, as *Abraham, Gen.*22.18. that all the earth ſhould be bleſſed in his ſeed: and the ſame promiſe was renewed to *Iſaac, Gen.*26.4. Iacob alſo propheſieth of the comming of the Meſſiah, under the name of Shiloh. 5. Theſe three Patriarks are named to ſhew the efficacie of Gods promiſe made unto them: the time now approching when they ſhould ſee the accompliſhment thereof: Perer. 3. The name of God is thrice repeated, and ſet before Abraham, Iſaac, and Iacob; both to expreſſe the myſterie of the Trinitie, and to ſhew the ſpeciall and particular care that God had of each of them, being a gratious God unto them all: and becauſe unto them all were the promiſes made, the certainty whereof by this repetition is inſinuated. Pererius.

Quest. XI. Why Moſes hid his face.

Verſ. 6. THen Moſes hid his face. 1. For theſe cauſes wee find in Scripture that men have uſed to hide them for feare, as Adam hid himſelfe in Paradiſe for ſhamefaſtneſſe; as Rebeckah covered her ſelfe with the vaile, when ſhe ſaw *Iſaac, Gen.*24. for reverence and humility, as Elias covered his face, when the Lord ſpake unto him, 1. King. 19. for weakneſſe and impotencie, as Moſes face was covered from the Iſraelites, becauſe they were not able to behold the glory of his countenance, Exod. 34. Perer. For two of theſe cauſes Moſes here covereth his face, firſt as being guilty of his owne infirmity and weakneſſe, as being not able to behold the exceeding great glory of God, as alſo of reverence: Piſcator. Moſes is not mentioned here in direct words to have prayed or worſhipped, as wee read of others the ſeruants of God, when the Lord appeared unto them: not that Moſes either being aſtoniſhed forgat it, or diſabled himſelfe as not worthy, but he inwardly in his ſoule adored the divine Majeſty, as the humilitie of his externall behaviour ſheweth: Simler.

Quest. XII. How this text is alleaged by our Saviour in the Goſpell, to prove the reſurrection of the dead.

Now whereas our Saviour Chriſt, *Matth.*22. *Mark.*12. and *Luk.*20. alleageth this divine teſtimony; I am the God of Abraham, &c. and inferreth thereupon, he is the God of the living and not of the dead; therby convinceth the Sadduces that held there was no reſurrection: the queſtion is, ſeeing that this ſcripture proveth onely the immortality of the ſoule, which ſome of the Philoſophers held, and yet believed not the reſurrection, how this place was applied by our Saviour to prove the reſurrection of the body? then it may bee anſwered, that ſeeing Abraham, Iſaac and Iacob being departed out of this life are ſaid to bee living unto God, and theſe names were given unto them as conſiſting of ſoule and body, this place ſheweth, that both their ſoules doe live actually with God, and their bodies alſo in hope though dead, but onely aſleepe: Ireneus lib. 4. cap. 11. ſo alſo Chryſoſtome in 22. cap. Mat. 2. Some ſay that by neceſſarie conſequent, the mortality of the ſoule being granted, the reſurrection of the body muſt follow, becauſe the ſoule naturally hath a deſire to the body, and cannot have true and full happineſſe, untill the bodie which was partaker of the labours and travels of this life with the ſoule, be made fellow alſo with it in joy: which reaſon moved ſome of the Philoſophers, as the Pythagoreans and Platoniſts, which held the ſoule to be immortall, to dreame of the remigration and returne of the ſoule to the body, thinking it impoſſible, that the ſoule ſhould for ever bee ſeparated from the body: ſ. Thomas lib. 4. contra Gent: cap. 79. 3. But the beſt ſolution of all is Hieromes, that againſt the Sadduces, who denied the reſurrection of the body, onely for that they beleeved not the immortality of the ſoule, it was a ſtrong argument to convince them of error in denying the reſurrection, to take away the ground of their error in proviug by this text the living and being of the ſoule: this alſo is the ſolution of Cajetane.

Comment. in cap. 22. Math.

Quest. XIII. Why our Saviour ſpecially urgeth this place againſt the Sadduces.

FUrther, though out of the old Teſtament divers other places might be alleaged more pregnant at the firſt ſight, than this to prove the reſurrection of the dead, as Hierome doth ſpecially note that place Iob. 19. I know my redeemer liveth: yet our Saviour maketh choice of this out of Moſes, not onely as Hierome writeth, becauſe the Sadduces received no other parts of the old Teſtament, but the five bookes of Moſes: but ſeeing the Sadduces out of Moſes, had made the objection againſt the reſurrection; it was fit teſt alſo out of Moſes to confute them. Perer.

Quest. XIV. How God is ſaid here to deſcend.

Verſ. 8. THerefore I am come downe to deliver them. 1. As before, their crie is ſaid to aſcend unto God chap. 2. 13. ſo God here deſcendeth unto them, as being moved unto pity by their grievous crie and complaint: Borrh. 2. Yet God properly neither aſcendeth, nor deſcendeth, but this is ſpoken according to our ſenſe; then God is ſaid to deſcend out of heaven, the ſeate of his glory, when he ſheweth ſome viſible ſigne of his preſence, as here in the firy buſh: Piſcator. 3. God is ſaid to deſcend ſometime to take revenge, and to ſhew his judgements, as he is ſaid to deſcend unto Sodome, Gen. 18. ſometime to ſhew mercy, as here to deliver his people: Simler. 4. Here alſo ſome relation is had unto the ſituation of Egypt, which was a low countrie, and therefore the Lord here is ſaid to cauſe them to aſcend hence. Borrh. 5. And alwayes this is to bee marked, that when God is ſaid to deſcend, ſome notable event followeth: when God is ſaid to deſcend to ſee the ſinnes of Sodome, then that horrible overthrow of the City followed; and when he came downe to hinder the building of the tower of Babel, the ſtrange confuſion of languages was ſent upon them: ſo upon Gods deſcending here followeth the miraculous deliverance of Iſrael, and Gods juſt vengeance upon Egypt. Ferus.

Quest. XV. In what reſpect the land of Canaan is called a large country: Hierome.

INto a good land and a large. 1. Paleſtina in it ſelfe was no large country. Hierome ſaith that in length from Dan to Berſhebah it was not above 160. miles, and in bredth from Joppe to Bethlehem not above 46. miles. Hecateus Abderita, as Ioſephus writeth, deſcribeth Judea to conteine about thirty hundred thouſand jugera, that is, akers of fertile ground both in length and breadth and in the whole content. An the furlong or aker is ſo much ground as a yoke of oxen can plow in one day, which is in length 4 foote, and 120. foote broad: that is, foureſcore yards long and forty broad; counting 3. ordinate foote to a yard. It ſeemeth then that of it ſelfe it was no large countrie, not altogether ſo big as the Kingdome of Naples in Italy: It is therefore called a ſpatious and large countrie in compariſon of the land of Goſhen in Egypt, where the Iſraelites were pent up: and ſeeing ſeven nations more populous than the Hebrewes inhabited the land of Canaan, it was abundantly ſufficient for them: neither when the people were moſt increaſed, did they complaine of want of roome. Perer.

Quest. XVI. Of the great fruitfulneſſe of the land of Canaan.

A Land that floweth with milke and honie. 1. Theſe fruits are named for the reſt by the figure called Synecdoche, where a part is taken for the whole; the meaning is, that the land abounded with the beſt fruits. Iun. And theſe fruits are named which need leaſt labour and travell of the reſt. Simler. 2. As concerning the wonderfull fertility of this land the ſcripture giveth plentifull teſtimonie, for firſt the ſpies, that were ſent to ſearch the land, found it to be very fruitfull as they ſhewed by the fruit thereof. A land flowing with milke and hony, Numb. 13. 28. which is an hyperbolicall ſpeech, that is it abounded. Againe, the land of Canaan is commended, Deut. 8. 8. for theſe foure commodities: for wheat and barley, for fruitful trees, for ſpringes of water, and for mettals: further conſidering the great number of inhabitants, as in Davids time there were numbred 15. hundred thouſand fighting men, 1. Chro. 21. which is commonly eſteemed but at the fourth part of the inhabitants: for women and aged men, and children all under twenty yeeres are excepted, this countrie being of no greater circuite, was of exceeding great fertility, that was able to nourish ſo many hundred thouſand. 3. Hereunto alſo forren nations beare witneſſe. Hecatens before ſpoken of, who lived in the time of Alexander the Great, ſaith, there were in Judea thirtie hundred thouſand akers of moſt fruitfull land. Ariſteus in the time of Ptolomy Philadelphus King of Egypt giveth this teſtimony of this land, that it abounded with Olive trees, Vines, and Palme trees: with all kinde of ſpicerie, gold and precious ſtones brought in by the Arabians, with moſt fruitfull and pleaſant fountaines and rivers: and eſpecially hee giveth commendation of Jordan, the plaine whereof contained 60. thouſand akers of ground, and that it did uſe to overflow the ground

Ni

Nilus: and beſide, that unto the great City, meaning Jeruſalem) ſometime the people flocked out of the ntries adjoyning to the number of 60. myriades, that is 600. thouſand, whereof every one poſſeſſed an 100.
ces of ground. Likewiſe Ioſephus, much about our Saviour Chriſts time, ſhewed that the fruitfulneſſe of that land ſtill continued, and that all the fields in generall were very fruitfull both of corne and other ſuit, being compared with other countries; but the fields of Jericho and Hieruſalem, exceeded all the reſt, and eſpecially of Jericho, where the Palme trees were ſo fat, that they might preſſe out oyle by treading upon them. Bochardus that lived 300. yeeres ſince, and ſpent ten yeeres in the diligent ſearch of that country, after that it came into the poſſeſſion of the Saracens of his owne knowledge and experience, commendeth it for abundance of corne which groweth in great plenty out of the ground halfe tilled without any dung or compaſſe; the fields are like unto our gardens full of all ſweet herbes, wine, oyle, honey there aboundeth: and he ſtrangely reporteth of a certaine fruit called the apples of Paradiſe, which grow like unto a cluſter of grapes, an hundred together, and every one of the bigneſſe of an egge: the leaves of it are as long as a man, and ſo broad, that two of them will cover a man: the tree laſteth but three yeeres, and then out of the roote thereof ſpringeth another: Conies, Hares, Partridge, Quailes, Deere, are there in great number: and great ſtore of Lions, beares, and other wild beaſts: hee himſelfe had ſeene 3. hundred Camels in one heard. 4. Therefore both Strabo lib. 16. and Hierom. are deceived, which report upon the Countrie about Jeruſalem, which Ioſephus affirmeth to be more fruitfull than the reſt, to be dry, and barren, full of rockes and mountaines, and therefore hee underſtandeth the flowing of it with milke and honey, ſpiritually. Ex Perer.

Ioſephus lib. 5. Antiquitat.

Of the wonderfull fruit of Paleſtina, called the Apples of Paradiſe.

Hier. Epiſt. 128. ad Dardanum.

Quest. XVII. Whether the fruitfulneſſe of the land of Canaan doe yet remaine.

HOw this fruitfulneſſe of the land of Canaan, 1. was partly naturall, for it was fruitfull, even when the Canaans did inhabite it, before the Iſraelites poſſeſſed that Country, and it ſo continued in part after they were expelled thence, and the Saracens ſurpriſed it, as it is ſhewed before. 2. But this fertilitie was much increaſed by the bleſſing of God, as the Lord promiſeth unto his people if they would feare him and ſerve him, Levit. 26. 4, 5. and ſpecially the extraordinary bleſſing of God upon the 6. yeere is an evident argument thereof, which did yeeld increaſe ſufficient to ſerve them for three yeeres, for the ſeventh yeere the land did reſt, and the eight yeere they began to ſow, ſo that they did eat of the fruit untill the 9. yeere, Lev. 25. 22. 3. But this bleſſing of increaſe and abundance, was after turned into drineſſe and barrenneſſe becauſe of their ſinne, as the Lord threatneth, that their heaven ſhould be as iron, and their earth as braſſe, Deut. 28. 19. And in the time of the Macchabees, the great increaſe of the ſixt yeere was much abated: for their ſtore was ſoone eaten up, ſo that they were oppreſſed with famine, 1. Macchab. 6. 53, 54. Perer. And therefore it is no marvell, if the fruitfulneſſe of that land now, being inhabited by the enimies of God, be not anſwerable to the commendation given unto that Country in former times.

Quest. XVIII. Whether the Cananites were a peculiar people by themſelves.

In the place of the Cananites. 1. Iunius thinketh that this was the generall name of all thoſe nations which inhabited the land of Canaan, and that the particular and ſeverall kindes of people are named afterward. 2. But though ſometime this name be generall unto all the reſt, as they are mentioned among the ſonnes of Canaan, Gen. 10. 15. yet here and in ſome other places the Cananites are taken for a ſeverall nation from the reſt, as Gen. 15. 20. there are ten ſeverall kindes of people rehearſed that dwelt in Canaan, of which number the Cananites are reckoned in the eight place. Piſcator. 3. And indeed it may cleerly appeare that the Cananites were the ſame whom the Grecians call Phœnicians; as Andreas Maſius hath well obſerved in his learned commentaries upon the booke of Ioſhuah: for firſt the Septuagint in the fifth of Ioſuah, for the Cananites reade Phœnicians: and the woman whom our Saviour diſcribeth poſſeſſed of a Devill, by Matthew is called a Cananitiſh woman, by Marke a Syrophenician: beſide, theſe Cananites are ſaid to dwell by the ſea, Num. 13. 30. where the Phœnicians alſo inhabited: likewiſe as Ezechiel ſetteth forth the Phœnicians by their merchandiſe and traffike by ſea, and ſo conſequently their craft in bargaining, ſo alſo the Cananites are noted in ſcripture for their craft, Hoſea 12. 7. and their merchandiſe, inſomuch, that a merchant is called a Cannanite, as Prov. 31. 24. She giveth girdles to the Cananites, or merchants. Perer.

Quest. XIX. How many nations of the Cananites, and why they were caſt out.

The Cananites, the Hittites, and the Amorites, &c. 1. There are here but ſix nations rehearſed, the Girgaſhites are omitted: the ſame number is not alwayes obſerved; ſometime they are all comprehended under the name of the Amorites, Gen. 15. 16. ſometime of the Hittites, Ioſh. 1. 4. ſometime 3. nations only numbred for the reſt, as the Hevites, Cananites, and Hittites, Exod. 23. 28. ſometime ten nations are rehearſed, as beſide the uſuall ſeven, the Kenites, Kenazites and Kadmonites, Gen. 15. But of theſe ſeven are named, the Hittites, the Girgaſhites, the Amorites, Cananites, Perizzites, the Hevites and Jebuſites, as Deut. 7. 1. and ſo S. Paul teſtifieth that ſeven nations were caſt out of the land of Canaan, Act. 13. 19. 2. The Girgaſhites are omitted, ſome thinke becauſe they willingly gave place to the Iſraelites, as the Hebrewes thinke, and Auguſtine reported that the countrie people of Africa being asked whence they are, will anſwer that they were Cananites: they might then depart out of Canaan into Africa: Simel. But the contrary appeareth, Ioſh. 11. 20. that all the Cananites were hardned, ſaving the Gibeonites: It is more like that they were not a nation of any great power, and therefore are not named here by themſelves, but counted among the reſt. 3. Now in that God promiſeth unto the Israelites their Country, beside that the Lord may freely dispose of the earth being the supreme Lord thereof, these Cananites were of the posterity of Cham, and so under the curse; and beside, because of their sinnes, wherein they continued without repentance, they deserved justly to be deprived of their Countrie. Ferus.

Iſraelites

QUEST. XX. What made Moses so unwilling to take this calling upon him.

Vers. 11. WHo am I, that I should goe unto Pharaoh? 1. Moses doth not of diffidence or disobedience refuse, but of humility and modesty excuseth himselfe: as Esay saith, hee was a man of polluted lips, Isa. 6.5. and Ieremie, that he was a child, Ier. 1.6. Simler. And thus by making himselfe unable and unsufficient, the Lord enableth him. Pellican. 2. Moses excuseth himselfe both by the unfitnesse of his person, and the greatnesse and difficulty of the worke: Iun. And hee knew that both he was odious to Pharaoh, and all the Egyptians, as also not well accepted of his brethren, as appeared by that unthankfull Hebrew that upbraided him, in whom was discovered the minde and affection of the rest. Simler. 3. But this is to bee marvelled at, that Moses being so couragious and forward in Egypt in slaying of the Egyptian, should now bee so unwilling: wherein the like thing might befall him, which was seene in Peter, who offered himselfe to suffer much for Christ untill the time came: so Moses might then of a forward spirit put forth himselfe having not yet weighed the weightinesse of the calling, which was an act of his faith, yet mixed with some humane infirmitie. Simler.

QUEST. XXI. What signe it was that the Lord promised to Moses.

Vers. 12. THis shall bee a token unto thee that I have sent thee, &c. The most here doe understand this signe and token, to bee that which followed afterward, that they should serve God in this mountaine, as the Lord gave Hezekiah a signe of deliverance which came to passe afterward, that two yeeres they should eat of the fruit of the earth that sprang of themselves, and the third yeere they should sow and reape, 2. King. 19.29. which things were fulfilled afterward: Simler. And the reason is, because that which God promiseth, nothing can hinder and certainly shall bee accomplished, and therefore the signes which are to come, doe helpe to confirme the faith. Pellican.

Contra. But this seemeth not to bee the sense. 1. Because of the perfect distinction athnah commeth betweene, which breaketh off the first clause of the sentence from the latter part. 2. That instance given of the signe to Hezechiah proveth it not: for at that time by reason of the invasion of the enemies which had invaded the Country by the space of two yeeres, they lived of such things by the extraordinary blessing of God as the earth brought forth of it selfe: Iun. and therefore that signe was in part fulfilled already. 3. It is true, that whatsoever God promiseth, cannot be hindred: but such promises have need of a great faith to apprehend them: but signes doe serve to confirme faith, not for faith to work upon: for signes are visible to the sense, but faith is of things that are not seene: signes then are rather the causes and helps of faith, than the object. 4. Yet it is not denied, but that such signes as had relation to the Messiah, and were accomplished in him, were effectuall, though not present, because in Christ the promises of God are yea and Amen; such was that signe which the Prophet giveth to Ahaz, Isa. 7.2. Some therefore doe thinke that this signe is referred to the vision going before, of the fire burning in the bush: Iun. with some Hebrewes. 3. And both these clauses may be joyned together: that God confirmeth Moses both by that signe present: as also assureth him of the deliverance of the people, by shewing the fruit and effect thereof, that being delivered out of Egypt they shall serve God in that place to this purpose: Osiander. It may be also a commandement, that being delivered in token of their thankfulnesse, they should worship God there: Iosephus.

QUEST. XXII. Why Moses enquireth after Gods name.

Vers. 13. IF they say unto me, What is his name. 1. Moses in moving this question doth neither shew ignorance, as though being polluted with the corruptions of Egypt, hee had forgotten the true God; for seeing those acts of his in Egypt proceeded of faith, as the Apostle sheweth, Heb. 11. forsaking Pharaohs Court, and joyning himselfe to the people of God; and afterward in his circumcising the giving of his sonnes names, he professeth his faith toward God, naming Eleazar of the helpe of God: no such thing is to bee supposed of Moses. 2. Neither yet, as some thinke, did this proceed of Moses curiosity, as that he not contented with the promises made unto the Fathers, desired to know Gods name. 3. But Moses maketh this request to know Gods name in respect of the Israelites, to satisfie their curiosity, and to winne the more credit to his calling: Simler.

QUEST. XXIII. Of the best reading of these words, I am that I am.

Vers. 14. AND God said unto Moses, Eheje, because I am. These words are read diversly: some make neither of them a proper name, but reade thus: Ero qui ero, I shall be who I shall be in the future tense, as Montan. Paguinus. Some reade the first in the future, I shall be; the second in preterimperfect tense, which was: Piscat. But it is better expressed in the present tense, as it is usuall with the Hebrewes to put one tense for another, as the Septuagint and Latine ων, which am. 2. Some take them both a proper name, Eheje, & Eheje. Aretius. But it seemeth that the first is only a proper name, as it is taken in the end of the verse: Eheje hath sent me, and that which followeth is the reason of the name, because I am, rather than, which I am, or that I am: so Iun. Simler.

Quest. XXIV. What the name is which the Lord here giveth himselfe.

NOw concerning this name Eheje. 1. Neither is it a divers name in effect from the name Iehovah, which the Lord proclaimeth afterward, as thinketh Aquinas: for they are both derived of the same verbe of the word Hajah, which signifieth to be: Eugubin: 2. Neither yet are here two names expressed, one of the essence and being of God, Eheje, or Iehovah; the other of Grace, the God of Abraham, Isaac and Iacob, as Ferus: for the Lord, v. 15. joyneth them altogether, making but one name of them all. 3. Nor yet doth the Lord here deliver his name never heard of before, and which it is not lawfull to utter; as Iosephus: for the name of Iehovah was knowne to Abraham, Gen. 15.7. I am Iehovah: and vers. 8. Abraham calleth him Lord Iehovi: therefore this name Iehovah was uttered: as it may appeare also by the corrupt institution of the Heathen, who from the name Iehovah, derived the name in some cases, of Iupiter, Iovis, Iovi, which they ascribed to the principall God. 4. Neither properly hath the Lord any name, for he is incomprehensible, and therefore not to be limited by a name: Dionys. And names are given to shew the difference of things, but God is one: Iustin. Martyr. But here the Lord describeth himselfe, by his everlasting being, who is of himselfe, and giveth being to all other things, which excellencie of being is most peculiar unto God (as best shewing what hee is) of all other attributes which are given unto him.

Quest. XXV. Of the meaning of the name Eheje.

Vers. 14. FOr the meaning of this name Eheje: 1. It signifieth (as the Hebrewes) all the difference of time, both past, present, and to come; as this name is expounded, which was, which is, and which is to come, Revel. 1.8. So also Gregor. Nazian. Universum id, quod est, in se complectitur, nec principium habens, nec finem habiturum: He comprehendeth in himselfe whatsoever is, neither having beginning nor end. 2. It is as Augustine saith: Nomen incommutabilitatis; A name of unchangeablenesse: for the creatures which have their dependance of themselves, cannot say, Ero, I shall be: Simler. 3. It sheweth the condition of God, that hath his being of himselfe, and not of any other: Ferus. 4. The goodnesse of God that giveth unto all things their being, Rom. 11.36. Of him, through and for him are all things: as Damascene, Quod esse dicuntur, id habuit Dei bonitate donatum: In that things are said to be, they have it given them by the goodnesse of God: in Epist. ad Ephes. cap. 3. 5. It declareth the infiniteneſse of God: that he is all in all, 1. Cor. 15.18. as Bernard well noteth: Hoc est ei esse, quòd hæc omnia esse: This is unto him to be, to be all these things, as wisedome, goodnesse, righteousnesse, &c. 6. This name of God maketh difference betweene the true God, who only is, and the false Gods of the Egyptians, and other heathen which had no being at all: Oleaster. 7. Rabbi Salomon referreth it to the deliverance of these Israelites, that God will bee with them and assist them: but this being a name to continue unto all generations, v. 15. is not to be restrained to this instant. 8. Some referre it to the incarnation of Christ, in which sense the Lord should say, I will be: Simler. 9. This name sheweth both the power of God, that nothing is under his everlasting being, and his goodnesse, in promising his continuall presence and assistance with the Church of God: Simler. 10. This name then is the most absolute and peculiar name of God, shewing his eternitie without either beginning or end, his unchangeable nature, perfection, goodnesse, and holinesse: Peter. And this name of God was not unheard of among the wiser sort of the Heathen: for Plutarch writeth that this sentence was set upon the doores of the Egyptian Temples: Ego sum omne, quod fuit, quod est, quodq; futurum est: I am whatsoever was, is, and is to come. And Thales Milesius being asked what God was, said, Quod semper est, neque principium habens neque finem: That which alwayes is, having neither beginning nor end. Plutarch also writeth, that it was written in the doore of the Temple of Apollo, Tu es, Thou art. And Plato in Timæo, saith, Id solum esse quod est prorsus immutabile: That only is said to be which is immutable: but those things which are mutable and changeable, may rather be said to be, then be. For these and other such divine sentences in Plato, some have thought, that Plato either had read himselfe the bookes of Moses, or had conferred with some Hebrewes, while he sojourned in Egypt. And this seemeth to be the more probable, because Aristobulus, who flourished in the time of the Machabees, writing to Ptolemey Philometor, saith, that Moses bookes were translated into Greeke before the time of Alexander the Great, and that Pythagoras and Plato had received many things from them. Clearchus also one of Aristotles schollers testifieth, that Aristotle had conference with a certaine Iewe a wise and learned man of whom he learned many things. Ex Pererio.

Whether Plato and other Philosophers, received any light from Moses bookes.

Quest. XXVI. Of the name of God Iehovah, whether it be ineffable.

Vers. 15. Iehovah the God of your fathers, &c. this is my name for ever, &c. 1. The Hebrew Cabalistes will have the word gholam, being here written without vau, not to signifie for ever, but rather hence they would gather, that the name of Iehovah is ineffable, and not to be uttered: But beside that gholam, but gholam with shurek signifieth bid, the words following unto all ages doe shew, that they are here read for ever, the latter words expounding the former. Indeed the name Iehovah is inexplicable in regard of the signification thereof, (for who can declare the essence of God?) not of the foure syllables. Simler. 2. This name Iehovah signifieth the same with Eheje, being added as more plaine and better knowne: and it betokeneth two things principally, both the eternity and alwayes being of God, and his cause of being to all other things, both efficienter, formaliter and finaliter, as the efficient cause of all things is of whom, the formall, through whom, the finall, for whom all things are. Iun. 3. And this name Iehovah betokeneth Gods power in his goodnesse and truth: the first in being able, the second in being gracious and willing, the third in being constant to fulfill his promises. Borrhaius. 4. This name Iehovah is also incommunicable to all other: Elohim is given sometime to Angels, sometime to Judges upon earth. But Iehovah is peculiar to God: and therefore the Messiah is very God, to whom this name is given in Scripture. 5. Beside, some Hebrewes thinke that the Messiah should at his comming reveale and make knowne this name of Iehovah to the world: and so our Saviour commandeth his disciples to baptise in the name of the Father, Sonne, and holy Ghost, which name of the Trinitie is comprehended in Iehovah: Simler. The first letter, Iod, they would have to signifie the Father, the second, he, the Sonne, the third, being vau, the holy Ghost, and the second he the humanity of the Sonne. Osian.

Quest. XXVII. Why Moses is bid to gather the Elders together.

Vers. 16. GOe and gather the Elders. 1. The Elders not in age, for such a great number of aged folke among 600. thousand could not well be gathered together. Simler. But the Elders in office either for government or instruction; which president Moses followeth, Chap. 12. 21. and Chap. 18. 7. Iun. For although their state was now confused and out of order, which was afterward by Moses reduced to a perfect forme, yet there was a kinde of government among them in Egypt, as may appeare, chap. 5. where officers of their brethren were set over them. Simler. 3. The elders therefore must first be acquainted with the Lords message, both because it was not safe to impart it to the ignorant and unruly multitude, who would have given no great regard: Pellican; as also that the Elders and rulers by their example and perswasion might draw the rest. Ferus.

Quest. XXVIII. Why they make request but for three dayes journey.

Vers. 18. LEt us goe three dayes journey in the wildernesse. 1. In that they went further than three dayes journey, they did Pharaoh no wrong, for they were not his subjects, but he usurped authority over them, and beside they therein followed the Lords direction, that went before them. 2. Yet notwithstanding they dealt not deceitfully with Pharaoh: for it was not necessarie that they should impart their whole councell to their enemies: the truth is not wholly at all times to bee uttered, it may in part bee concealed: as the Lord gave Samuel instruction when he went to anoint David, 1. Sam. 16. Iunius. 3. The Lord therefore would have them cautelously and prudently to propound their message: that they would goe but three dayes journey, and into the wildernesse, which was in some sort under Pharaohs jurisdiction, that the request being so reasonable, if Pharaoh should deny it, he might be left without excuse. Ferus.

Quest. XXIX. How the people is said, not to have sacrificed in the wildernesse.

THat we may sacrifice unto Iehovah. Yet the Prophet Amos denieth that they sacrificed unto God in the wildernesse for the space of 40. yeeres, but carried the tabernacle of Moloch, Amos 4. 26. and Act. 7. 7. This then is to be understood, not simply, and absolutely, but in part, that they did not sacrifice unto God, as they ought, but that many of them were Idolaters, and polluted with the superstitions of Egypt, so the Lord denieth, that he required of them, to tread in his Courts, Isay 1. 12. or to offer sacrifice, and yet he commanded such things: so he saith, I will have mercie and not sacrifice: that is, not sacrifice without mercie. Simler.

Quest. XXX. How it is said that Pharaoh should not let them goe, no not with a strong hand.

Vers. 19. HE will not let you goe, yea not with a strong hand. 1. The most reade, but with a strong hand, that is, being forced by the mighty hand of God: sic. Lat. Pagnin. Septuag. Simler. but then it should be im lo, unlesse, except, not velo, which signifieth neither. 2. Some doe understand the strong hand of the Israelites, that Pharaoh will let them goe, but not with a strong hand, that is, with their armies and forces. 3. Some referre it to Pharaoh, that hee would not let them goe, because by a strong hand, that is by his armies and forces, hee was not able to keepe them still. 4. But the most proper sense and meaning is, that Pharaoh no not with a strong hand (referring it unto God) should let them goe, that is, hee should stand out a great while, notwithstanding the plagues which should be sent upon him, but at the length he should yeeld: So his heart was obstinate during the nine first plagues: but not when the first borne were slaine, made him to stoope. sic Fagius, Iunius, Piscator.

4. Places of doctrine.

1. doct. That there is but one God.

2. doct. That Christ is God.

Vers. 14. I Am that I am, or Eheje, which am: here is proved the unity of the Godhead: that God is one: for he only is God, Who is, that is, from all eternity, for they are no Gods which are not from the beginning: so the Lord saith, There is not a God besides me, Isay 44. 8. He that is, Where as it is before proved that this was Christ, which appeared in the bush to Moses, and that saith of himselfe, I am, and so it is expounded of Christ, Rev. 1. Which was, which is, and is to come: it is also evident that Christ is God, as our Saviour himselfe saith: Ye beleeve in God, beleeve also in me. Joh. 14. If he were not God; we were not to beleeve in him.

Vers.18. We pray thee now let us goe: The Lord could if it had pleaſed him, have delivered his people at the firſt with a mighty hand: but the Lord doth not alwayes ſhew his immediate power, but worketh by meanes, as here he firſt ſendeth a meſſage to make him more inexcuſable if he reſiſted. Ferus.

3. doct. God doth not alwayes ſhew his immediate power, but worketh by meanes.

5. Places of controverſie.

1. Cont. Againſt the ſuperſtitious profeſſion of Anchoriſts and Heremits.

Vers.1. Drove the flocke to the backſide of the deſart: In that we reade, that holy men repaired oft to deſart places, as Moſes, Elias, Iohn Baptiſt, yea our Saviour went apart often to pray: this is no warrant for the popiſh profeſſion of Anchoriſts and Heremites: for theſe holy men did but for a time only ſequeſter themſelves, the more ſeriouſly to be given to prayer and meditation, not leaving and renouncing their callings, as the other ſuperſtitious ſort doe. Againe, they in time of perſecution fled into deſart places, therein ſhewing their humane infirmity, leaſt they might have beene forced by perſecution to deny the faith: but theſe doe place the greateſt perfection in this life, in that ſolitary profeſſion. Sinder.

2. Cont. Whether Angels have power to bleſſe, and their bleſſing to be craved.

Vers.2. The Angell of the Lord appeared unto him. Pererius thinketh that this was a miniſtring or a created Angel, notwithſtanding Moſes wiſheth the good will of him that dwelt in the buſh to come upon the head of *Ioſeph, Deut.*33.16. for (ſaith hee) the bleſſings may be deſired as well of Angels as of holy men: as Iacob prayeth that the Angell bleſſe the children, *Gen.*48.16. *Contra.*1. We deſire not, but that Angels, as well as men may inſtrumentally pronounce the bleſſings of God, as from him, and in his name, but not originally, and ſo to be reſorted or prayed unto, as the authors and fountaines of bleſſing. 2. It is without example in Scripture, to wiſh any bleſſing, but from God, as the Apoſtles continually uſe this ſalutation in their Epiſtles, Grace, mercie, and peace from God the Father, and from the Lord Ieſus Chriſt. 3. The Angell, whom Iacob ſpeaketh of, in the ſame place he calleth the God of his fathers. 4. And Moſes alſo calleth him that dwelt in the buſh, Iehovah: verſ. 12. Bleſſed of Iehovah be his land.

Perer. Diſput. in 3. cap. Exod. Numer. 27.

3. Cont. Againſt ſuperſtitious outward rites and ceremonies.

Vers.5. Put thy ſhooes off thy feete: By this uſage aud ceremonie, Pererius would warrant all theſe ſuperſtitious rites and uſages, which are a foote among them in the popiſh Church: and thus inveyeth againſt them which condemne them. Quis non Hæreticorum noſtri temporis rideat amentiam, aut non acerbè exuretur? who will not either deride the madneſſe of the Heretikes of our time or accuſe their impietie! Thus theſe barefoote Friers doe rage, as though they were mad, when their ridiculous toyes and fopperies are enveyed againſt. Concerning this ceremony of baring the feete, it was for the time comendable, during the time of ceremonies, but it is now no more required of us, than other Jewiſh ceremonies which are aboliſhed: but this hath beene alwayes Sathans craft, to bring men to an outward imitation of ceremonies leaving the ſubſtance: for even ſo among the heathen this cuſtome was continued of going barefoote in ſacred actions. Pythagoras gave this rule to his ſchollers: Nudis pedibus rem ſacram facito; With bare feete diſpatch the ſacred buſineſſe: the Romans had their nudepedalia ſacra, their barefoote ſacred ſolemnities. The Lacedemonians alſo did worſhip with bare feete: It is ſufficient for us, leaving the ceremony to retaine the thing: to come before the Lord with bare hearts and duely prepared affections: In Auguſtines time, the contrary ceremony was ſtrictly obſerved, not to touch the ground with bare or naked feete: of which kinde of curioſity in outward uſages hee thus complaineth: Tam multis præſumptionibus plena ſunt omnia, ut gravius corripiatur qui per octavos ſuos terram nudo pede non tetigerit, quam qui mentem vinolentiâ ſepelierit: All things are ſo full of humane preſumptions, that hee more ſharply rebuked, which during his octaus, (i. after baptiſme) doth touch the ground with bare feete, then he which drencheth his ſoule in wine. S. Paul concerning ſuch things giveth this rule, *Touch not, taſt not, handle not, All which things periſh with the uſing, Coloſ.*2.21.22. and a little before *verſ.*17. Which are ſhadowes of things to come, but the body is in Chriſt.

Epiſt.

4. Cont. Againſt the holineſſe imagined to be in places.

Verſ.5. For the place where thou ſtandeſt is holy ground. It was holy for this preſent, becauſe of the apparition and preſence of God, but this was no inherent holineſſe, annexed continually to the place: but when the cauſe of this holineſſe ceaſed, the heavenly viſion and apparition, the effect alſo, the holineſſe in the ground, was ſuſpended. Bethel was an holy place, when Iacob ſaw the viſion of the ladder and ſo long as the worſhip of God there continued: but when it began to be defiled with Idolatry, it is no more Bethel, the houſe of God, but Bethaven, the houſe of iniquity. The temple of the Jewes was holy, and becauſe of it Jeruſalem was called the holy Citie, ſo long as they continued in the true worſhip of God: but after they had crucified the Lord of life, both the temple and Citie, as prophane, were deſtroyed. Herein appeareth the error of former times when ſuch bloudy battels were fought for the winning of the Holy land (as it was called) by the evill ſucceſſe whereof it is evident, that Chriſtians were too much addicted to the holineſſe of the place. Wee deny not but that a reverent reſpect is to bee had of places, both for the end that we deſire to ſee thoſe places where holy men have lived, to imitate their their vertue, and in respect of the use, that such places, as are consecrated to the exercises of religion, should not be prophaned, and abused: but to put any religion or holinesse in such places is superstitious. Simlerus.

6. Morall observations.

1. Obs. The mutabilitie of the honours of this life.

Vers. 1. When Moses kept the sheepe, &c. Moses which was before a man of authority, brought up delicately in Pharaohs Court, is now become a shepheard, and keepeth the fields, enduring both heat and cold. Such is the mutabilitie and changeable state of this life: that soone may a man be brought from honour to contempt, from wealth to woe, from fulnesse to want, as is set forth unto us in Iob. Simler. Which should teach every man in his high and flowing estate, to bethinke himselfe of adversity, as Iob saith, The thing which I feared is come upon me, Iob. 3.25.

2. Obs. Against vaine curiositie.

Vers. 5. Come not hither. As the Lord inviteth us by faith to draw neere unto him: so he mislikes carnall curiosity: as the people were charged not to come neere mount Sinai to gaze upon God. Marie Magdalene is forbidden to touch Christ, the Apostles are rebuked for gazing up into heaven Acts 1. We are hereby taught not curiously to search into the secrets of God: but that wee understand according to sobrietie, Rom. 12.3. Simler.

3. Obs. Gods children, notwithstanding their afflictions, are not forsaken.

Vers. 7. I have surely seene the trouble of my people, &c. The Lord seeth and taketh knowledge of the troubles and afflictions of his people: and notwithstanding these their grievous sufferings they are the people of God still: Affliction therefore doth not separate us from God, or make him unmindfull of his children: Pellican. Nay, it is an argument rather that God loveth us, and that wee are his children when he layeth his fatherly correction upon us: as the Apostle saith, If yee be without correction then are ye bastards, and not sonnes, Heb. 12.8.

4. Obs. Against the ambitious aspiring unto offices.

Vers. 11. Who am I that I should goe unto Pharaoh? Moses modesty in disabling himselfe, and declining this honourable calling, convinceth them of vaine ambition in these dayes, who farre unlike Moses, being unapt and unfit, for their gifts, yet aspire unto great places by favour, and indirect meanes: neither yet are they to be commended, which doe on the other side hide their gifts, and will by no meanes consent to be imployed in the publike affaires of the Church: as Ammonius, who when he was to be made a Presbyter, cut off his eare, that hee might bee refused for the maime of his body, and threatned further to cut out his tongue, if they did not desist in their purpose: yet that is not the fault of this age, but the contrary rather, the ambitious hunting after preferments and honours. Simler.

Chap. IV.

1. The argument and Method.

IN this Chapter is set forth, the confirmation of Moses in his calling, and his obedience thereunto.

The first part is extended to verse 18. where as Moses maketh three severall excuses and exceptions, so he receiveth three confirmations: The first excuse is, that the people will not beleeve, vers. 1. The confirmation followeth by three signes, two of them are presently shewed before his face, the turning of a rod into a Serpent, vers. 6. and making his hand leprous vers. 6. 7. both these signes are shewed, and returne againe to their first nature: then followeth the third signe which is promised, but not presently effected, by turning the water of the river into bloud, vers. 9. The second excuse is by Moses infirmity of speech, v. 10. the confirmation followeth where the Lord first sheweth his power, v. 11. then promiseth his assistance, vers. 12. The third exception that Moses taketh, is an absolute refusall, as being altogether unfit. To this the Lord replieth: 1. In shewing his displeasure. 2. In promising the assistance of his brother Aaron: where the fitnesse of his [illegible] is shewed, and his readinesse in meeting him, vers. 14. then the Lord promiseth to be with them both vers. 15. Afterward the order and distinction of their offices is declared, God will speake to Moses, Moses to Aaron, Aaron to the people, vers. 16. 3. The Rod is given him as a signe, vers. 17.

The obedience is set forth first of Moses to his calling, to vers. 27. then of Aaron, v. 28. with the successe thereof, the beleefe of the people, vers. 31. In Moses obedience and execution, 1. The preparation to his journey is described with his wife and children, to vers. 21. 2. Then the renewing of his charge and commission, to vers. 24. 3. A certaine accident by the way is mentioned, what had like to have fallen Moses for want of his childs circumcision, and how he escaped the danger, to vers. 27.

2. The divers readings.

Vers.2. He ſaid a ſtaffe. I.V. rather than a rod. B.G.S.L.A.P. the word is matteh, of natah, becauſe a man leaneth upon his ſtaffe: and a ſtaffe rather is fitter for a ſhepheard than a rod. I.V.

Vers.8. Nor hearken to the voice and the firſt ſigne. I. better than, the voice of the firſt ſigne. B.G. cum cæter. as the next verſe ſheweth, that the voice is to be referred to Moſes: If they will not beleeve theſe two ſignes, nor hearken to thy voice. I.

Vers.9. And the waters ſhall be which thou takeſt out of the river they ſhall be turned. I. V. A. P. ſhall be is twice iterated in the originall, not once only, as B.G.L.S. I.V.

Vers.10. Hearken to me my Lord. I.V. for me. P. rather than, I pray thee my Lord. L.S. or, Oh Lord. B.G. my Lord, or to me, where hearken, or attend, or ſome ſuch word muſt be ſupplied: ſo alſo *verſ.*13. I.V.

Vers.11. Or him that ſeeth, or the blinde. B.G. cum cæter. or him that hath his ſenſe, or the blinde. I. but the word properly ſignifieth the ſeeing, as Pikechim is taken, *Exod.*23.8. the ſeeing: and the oppoſition of the privative here ſheweth as much. B.G. cum cæter.

Vers.25. Zipporah tooke a ſharpe knife. G.B. better than a ſtone. B.V.S.A.P. or ſharpe ſtone. V. tzor ſignifieth a rocke or ſtone, and that which is ſharpe, as Pſal. 89. 43. it ſignifieth the ſharpneſſe of a ſword: and it is not like that Moſes and his companie were without a knife, being ſo fit an inſtrument for a circumciſed. I.G.

Vers.28. Then Moſes told &c. all the buſineſſe and words of Iehovah for the which hee had ſent him. I.L. for which he had ſent unto him. S. better than to referre it to the Lord, which had ſent him. V.B.G.A.P. as verſ.30. ſheweth: And Aaron had told all the words which the Lord had ſpoken to Moſes. I.L.S.

Vers.31. They did obeiſance, and bowed themſelves. I. rather than, bowed downe and worſhipped. G.B. cum cæter. hiſtachauh ſignifieth to bow downe properly, but with intent to worſhip. I.

3. The explication of doubtfull queſtions.

Quest. I. Whether Moſes offended, with charging the people with unbeleefe.

Vers.1. But loe, they will not beleeve me, &c. The Hebrewes thinke that Moſes ſinned in charging the people with unbeleefe, and therefore he was puniſhed, in that his hand became leprous. But Moſes herein did not geſſe amiſſe: for he knew that they were a ſtiffe-necked people, Ferus: and he had daily experience of their unthankfulneſſe: Simler. Beſide, he conſidered that he was but baſe and contemptible, and not of ſufficient authority to bee reſpected: Iun. and the power and tyranny of Pharaoh would keepe them backe from crediting him: Borrh. and they would thinke it unlikely, that God would ſpeake to him whom never man ſaw: Pellican. 2. But it is more to bee doubted, how Moſes knew that the people would not beleeve, ſeeing that the Lord had ſaid before, that the people ſhould hearken to his voice, chap. 3. 18. Some thinke that Moſes infirmity here ſtrived with his faith againſt the word of God: Borrh. Genevenſ. But it is not like that Moſes was ſo diſtruſtfull or diffident, not to give credit to Gods word. Other thinke that the Lord ſpeaketh there onely of the Elders, Moſes of the people in generall. Some, that Moſes meaneth not the people only, but the Egyptians alſo, that they would not beleeve: Ferus. Some, that the Lord ſpake before conditionally: If they hearken to thy voice, then thou and thy elders ſhall goe to the King of Egypt. But Moſes exception rather is here conditionall, and ſo ſpeaketh by ſuppoſition, if the people beleeve not, as the Septuagint: then he deſireth to know how he ſhould perſwade them: ſo he doubteth not of the thing, but deſireth to be inſtructed in the manner. Simler.

Quest. II. What the firſt ſigne meaneth of turning the rod into a ſerpent.

Vers.3. He caſt it into the ground, and it was turned into a ſerpent. 1. Aben Ezra by the rod turned into a ſerpent, underſtandeth the cruelty and tyranny of Pharaoh; by the ſerpent turned into a rod, the abating of Pharaohs pride and tyranny, when he ſuffered the Iſraelites to depart. 2. Lyra expoundeth it of the Hebrewes, who when they were firſt afflicted, became contemptible as a ſerpent creeping on the ground, and occupied in baſe and terrene workes: but afterward they obtained liberty and authority when they were delivered, and ſo the ſerpent was turned into the rod. 3. Some refer it to Moſes, that he was as a ſerpent, that is, terrible to Pharaoh, but he was comfortable to the people of Iſrael: Simler. 4. Auguſtine doth by way of allegory apply it to Chriſt, hee is the rod turned into a ſerpent: the rod of the Croſſe, which ſeemed baſe and contemptible unto the Jewes, became the terror of the Gentiles. 5. Rupertus another way doth interpret it of Chriſt: The rod caſt upon the ground, was the Sonne of God taking our nature upon him, it became a ſerpent, ſo Chriſt was that hanged on a tree: by the ſerpent Chriſts death is ſignified, becauſe by the ſerpent death came into the world, and by Chriſts death the ſerpent was overcome. 6. Pererius here underſtandeth by the rod caſt upon the ground, the nature of man corrupted by the temptation of Satan, and reſtored by Chriſt, as the ſerpent was changed againe into the rod. 7. Others doe expound it of the judgements of God, which before they are ſhewed in the world, are as a rod not felt, but afterward they are ſharpe and terrible even unto the children of God, as Moſes fleeth away at the ſight of the ſerpent: Exod. But the beſt ſignification is this: Firſt in generall that theſe ſignes are terrible, both to ſtrike a Serm.86.de tempore.

terror in the heart of the Egyptians, as also mystically to shew a difference of the Law, the ministe whereof is fearefull and full of terror, and the Gospell which bringeth comfort, Ferus: as also in partic lar it sheweth, that the rod of Moses government should be terrible as a serpent to the Egyptians, but rod and scepter of upright and lawfull government to the people. Iunius.

Quest. III. What is signified by the leprosie of Moses hand.

Vers. 6. Behold his hand was leprous as snow. First, some make the signification of this signe morall: that the leprous hand of Moses sheweth the workes of the Law, that justifie not: Fe 2. Some make the sense thereof mysticall: Augustine in the place before recited, and Rupertus, undersi the leprous hand of the Synagogue of the Jewes rejected, that are cast off, as the leprous person was out of the hoste; and the hand restored and healed, betokeneth the Church of the Gentiles adopte stead of the Jewes. Pererius referreth it to Christ, that he being the hand, that is, the powes of his Fa by taking our nature upon him, became as it were leprous, that is, deformed and contemptible by his frings and passion, but by his resurrection and ascension his glorie appeared. 3. Some doe rather re the historicall sense. Lyranus by the leprous hand understandeth the miserable state of the Hebrewes the time of their cruell servitude, who in their deliverance received their former liberty. Theodoret eth the leprosie better to signifie the pollutions of Egypt, wherewith Israel was defiled, who being d vered were restored to the true and sincere worship of God. Ferus doth thus interpret it: that Mose his first sending was an occasion, that the Hebrewes were more cruelly handled, for, say they, You h made our savour to stinke before Pharaoh, chap. 5. 21. but afterward his ministery and message w their joy and deliverance. 4. But because the hand being the instrument of working, betokeneth the nistery and authority of Moses, the best application is, that God would use a meane instrument to his will, Moses in regard of his base and contemptible estate, having lived a long time in exile and b ment, seemed as a thing leprous and vile, yet God should in this his service make him a glorious w and instrument: sic Iunius, Simlerus. 5. And this signe did both shew in generall, that as the leprosie o ly eured by God, so their deliverance was only Gods worke: Ferus: and in particular to admonish ses that he should not be lifted up in his minde, because of the miracles wrought by his hand, but be led with the remembrance of his owne infirmity, the leprosie of his hand. Theodoret.

Quest. IV. What kinde of leprosie Moses hand was striken with.

As snow: That is, white as snow, as Iunius: see also Philo and Iosephus. 1. This was the worst ki of leprosie, called Elephantiasis, because it spotted the skin, and made it looke like to an Elephan there were of it two kindes: the common and generall leprosie, and a peculiar onely found in Egy which was incurable, and commeth by contagion of the river Nilus, as Lucretius writeth lib. 6. 1. T white leprosie was of all other the worst, when the body was all over spotted with white marks, fil white scales and scurfe: whereof there were two principall signes; when the white spots did chang haire also white, and were deeper and lower than the skinne, Levit. 13. 3. With this kinde of lep leprosie was Miriam striken, being leprous white as snow, and halfe eaten and consumed therewith, child halfe consumed in the mothers wombe: Numb. 12. 10. Iunius.

Quest. V. Whether the third signe of turning the water into bloud were shewed at this time.

Vers. 9. It shall bee turned into bloud. Iosephus thinketh that this signe, as likewise the two other w done in this place: But the truth is, as Philo noteth, that the other two were shewed now, third was done in Egypt, because hee is bid to take of the water of the river, that is, of Nilus: P 2. This miracle seemeth to bee divers from that chap. 7. of turning the waters of the rivers into b for there the waters in the rivers are changed, here the water is taken out of the river; there the wa continued 7. dayes, but here the water is powred upon the dry land, and so it is like it was soone dri of the earth, and returneth not into his kinde, as in the two first miracles. And againe, Aaron is s have done these miracles in the sight of the people, vers. 30. but the waters of the rivers were no turned into bloud: therefore in this place those signes are shewed, which should serve principally to firme Moses calling before the Israelites, which afterward as occasion was offered were done also Pharaoh. Simler. 3. And this signe of turning water into bloud did signifie that the time was h that God would judge the Egyptians for the death of the infants, whose bloud they had shed in the ters: Lyranus, Simlerus.

Quest. VI. Whether in these miracles there were a substantiall change.

NOw, here it will be demanded whether these conversions and changes were verily and substa done, or they so appeared only. 1. But it is not to be doubted of, for the very substance and na of these things for the time was changed. 1. Because the word and the thing must agree together. the Lord saith that the water shall be turned into bloud, therefore it was turned; but the Hebrew is more significant, shall bee into bloud: so the rod was into a serpent, that is, turned or changed. T sense both of the sight and feeling discerned them to be truly changed. 3. Because it is not hard or hard with God, the creator of the substance, to change the substance. 4. Such were these conver as that of water into wine by our Saviour Christ, at the marriage feast, Ioh. 2. which was a true sion. Simler.

2. And this is one ſpeciall differenee, betweene the miracles which are wrought by God, and ſuch wonders as are wrought by Satan, theſe are done in truth, the other in illuſion; as our Saviour ſaith, A ſpirit hath not fleſh and bones as ye ſee me to have, Luke 24.39. that is, ſpirits may aſſume a ſhape, but a true body Satan cannot counterfeit; as Hierome ſaith, Signa quæ faciebat Moſes imitabantur ſigna Ægyptiorum, ſed non erant in veritate; The ſignes of the Egyptians did counterfeit the ſignes which Moſes did, but they were not in truth, for the rod of Moſes devoured the rods of the Egyptians.

QUEST. VII. Whether Moſes indeed had an impediment of ſpeech, and what it was.

Verſ. 10. I am not eloquent, &c. but I am ſlow of ſpeech and ſlow of tongue. 1. Some thinke that Moſes ſpake thus only of modeſty and humility; Borrh: But it appeareth by the Lords anſwer that there had ſome want in his ſpeech. 2. Others judge that Moſes thus ſpeaketh by way of compariſon, that ſince God had talked with him (which they define to be three dayes) taking thoſe words ſimply according to the letter, as they are in the Hebrew, I am not eloquent from yeſterday, to yer yeſterday) whereas he ſpeaked ſomewhat before, now hee ſeeth that his eloquence is nothing: Origen. in cap. 3. Rupertus. But theſe words yeſterday and yer yeſterday, doe for the moſt part ſignifie indefinitely the time paſt, as Gen. 31. Labans countenance was not toward Iacob, as yeſterday and yer yeſterday, and ſo it is taken here, and the rather because theſe two times are diſtinguiſhed, I am not eloquent, yeſterday and yer yeſterday: and the reaſon which followeth, no not ſince thou ſpakeſt with thy ſervant: and beſide Moſes after this complaineth that he was of uncircumciſed lippes, *Chap.*6.12. Hee therefore only at this time ſeemeth not ſo to bee, as ſome thinke that Moſes indeed was aſtoniſhed at this viſion, and thereby began to be as ſpeechleſſe: Lyranus, Pelican. But that infirmity continued afterward as is before ſhewed, and therefore it was not occaſioned by his preſent aſtoniſhment. 4. Others do thinke that Moſes had indeed an impediment of ſpeech, but it was onely in the Egyptian language, which he might have forgotten, in this long time of his abſence: Hugo S. Victor. But beſide that it is not like that Moſes could forget that language, wherein he had been trained up 40. yeeres, he ſimply complaineth of his utterance. 5. Therefore it is moſt like that Moſes had ſome naturall impediment in his ſpeech: and ſome one or more of theſe defects: either that hee was a man of few words, not flowing in ſpeech, for ſo it is in the Hebrew, a man of words, which the Chalde tranſlateth, a man of ſpeech: or that he was not a man of choice words, not eloquent, as the Latine readeth: or that he was of a ſlow tongue, as the Latine: ſo it is in the Hebrew, of a heavy tongue, or of ſlow pronuntiation, as the Septuagint reade, of a ſmall voyce, for he ſaith that hee was both of an heavie or ſlow mouth, and of a ſlow tongue. 6. But that ſeemeth to be one of the Hebrewes fables, that Moſes by his meanes became a man of imperfect ſpeech: that when Pharaoh playing with him had ſet his crowne upon his head, and he had caſt it downe, which one of the Egyptian Prieſts interpreted to be an ominous ſign againſt Pharaoh and his Kingdome: then to trie the childs innocencie, they put a burning cole to his mouth, by the which the top of his tongue was ſeared, and ſo the child thereupon began to ſtammer in his ſpeech: Perer. 7. Now it pleaſed God to make choice of ſuch an unlike inſtrument, one of an imperfect ſpeech, that God might have all the glory of this worke, and nothing ſhould be aſcribed unto man: for the ſame cauſe, our Saviour made choice of his Apoſtles from ſimple and unlettered men, to whom he gave the gift of utterance, and of divers languages. Theodoret. 8. But here it will bee objected, that Stephen ſaith of Moſes, that he was mighty in words and in deeds, *Act.*7.22. How then could he be imperfect and defective in ſpeech? To this ſome anſwer, that he was mighty in invention and diſpoſition, not in elocution; for ſo the Greeke word λόγος, may as well bee referred to the inward conceit of the minde as to the words of the mouth: Simler. But this rather may bee anſwered: that as S. Paul ſaith of himſelfe, though hee were rude in ſpeech, yet he was not ſo in knowledge, 2. *Cor.*11.6. the power of S. Pauls ſpeech conſiſted not in eloquence of words, but in the wiſdome of the ſpirit: ſo Moſes though defective in the manner of elocution, yet might ſpeake with gravity and wiſdome, and ſo bee powerfull in words. Wherefore notwithſtanding this or what elſe is objected, the moſt probable opinion is, that Moſes had ſome naturall impediment of ſpeech, as appeareth both by his owne excuſe, by the Lords anſwer, by the coadjutorſhip of Aaron his brother, an eloquent man, *verſ.*14. and becauſe Moſes after this ſaith, he was a man of uncircumciſed lips: and whereas he ſaith here, nor ſince thou haſt ſpoken to thy ſervant, his meaning is, that if at this time, when God ſpake unto him, who was able to take away all impediment of ſpeech, yet his infirmity remained, much more was it like afterward to continue. Iunius.

QUEST. VIII. How God is ſaid to make the deafe and dumbe.

Verſ. 11. Who hath made the dumb or the deafe? 1. Wee refuſe here the fables of the Hebrewes, that when Pharaoh had appointed one to kill Moſes, he was ſtriken blind, that he could not ſee Moſes, and Pharaoh became both deafe and dumbe, that though he eſpied Moſes eſcape, yet hee could not ſpeake to have him ſtayed: but it is evident by the ſtory, that Moſes fled before hee was aſpied. The Lord here ſpeaketh in generall, not of any one dumbe or deafe, but that as hee ſendeth infirmities upon man, ſo alſo hee is able to heale them. 2. And although theſe infirmities are evill in reſpect of nature, yet God is the author of them, becauſe they are good alſo in reſpect of the end, as to humble man and bring him to repentance, and to ſet forth the glory of God: as our Saviour ſaith of the blind man: that his blindneſſe came, that the workes of God might be ſhewed upon him.

Hebrewes fables.

QUEST. IX. How and wherefore the Lord was present with Moses mouth.

Vers.12. I will be with thy mouth. 1. Although Moses was no eloquent man, in outward speech, as he mane eloquence is accounted: yet there was in him a grave and divine eloquence, such as th Apostles were endued with: the Lord promiseth the assistance of his spirit, and to bee present with h mouth. 2. But the impediment of his tongue, the Lord doth not altogether take away, both that God glory and power might appeare, and that Moses should see how needfull the helpe and society of his bro ther was: neither did Moses pray unto God to heale that infirmity, but only useth it as an argument t decline his calling. Simler.

QUEST. X. Whom Moses meaneth, that he would have sent.

Vers. 13. Send by the hand of him whom thou shouldest send. 1. Lyranus thinketh that Moses meant his brother Aaron, who was elder than he, and fitter for his eloquent speech: but no men tion was made yet of Aaron, whom Moses knew not to be alive, as may be gathered *vers.*18. till the Lor first spake of him and promised hee should assist him. 2. Rabbi Selomo taketh that hee meaneth Iosuah whom God revealed unto him, should be the man, that was to lead Israel into the promised land. Be beside that Iosuah is not yet spoken of, this request of Moses would have shewed some emulation, or env toward Iosuah. 3. Many of the ancient writers, as Iustinus Martyr, Tertullian, Cyprian with others thi that Moses here speaketh of the Messias, that should be sent into the world: so also Perer. But this s meth not to be so fit, both for that Moses not being ignorant of the prophesie of Iacob concerning th comming of Shiloh, and how the Lord promised that he would raise up a Prophet like unto him, Deu 18. 18. which is understood of Christ; could not yet expect the comming of the Messiah: and this r quest for the comming of the Messiah, proceeding of faith, would not have provoked the Lords wra Therefore Eugubinus opinion (though Pererius checkt him for it) is not herein to be misliked, that ne ther would have those places of Scripture, which are understood of the Messiah, to bee referred to others for that savoureth of Judaisme, nor yet that which is spoken of others to be applied to Christ, which al would bewray curiosity and superstition. 4. Therefore the plaine meaning of Moses is, that whereas God might find out many more fit than himselfe, he would send by their hand, (that is, ministery) so he aimeth not at any one in particular to be sent, but any other whosoever.

QUEST. XI. Whether Moses sinned in his so often refusall, seeing God was angry with him.

Vers.14. Then Iehovahs wrath was kindled. 1. Neither doe we consent to some Hebrewes that doe ag gravate Moses sinne, as distrusting Gods word, and therefore some say hee was punished in being deprived of the Priesthood which was given to Aaron: some in that he was not suffered to enter into the land of Canaan. Contr. But neither was the first a punishment, for Moses still was the chiefe, a gave Aaron direction: and it was a comfort to Moses to have such a coadjutor: and beside, Aaron w the elder, to whom the priesthood appertained. Neither was Moses offence here the cause why he ente not into the land of Canaan, but his disobedience at the waters of strife: Simler. 2. Neither on the oth side is their opinion sound, that doe justifie Moses herein, and commend his humility in refusing weighty a calling, as Gregorie, who by Pauls example would have us ready to suffer adversities, and Moses to refuse prosperity. And Hierome commendeth Esaies readinesse after his lippes were purg and Moses unwillingnesse, being guilty to himselfe of his owne infirmity. Contra. 1. In that God was a grie with Moses, it is evident he offended. 2. And as S. Paul was willing to suffer adversity becau it was Gods will, the spirit so testified every where of him, that bands and persecution did abide him: so Mo should not have refused this charge, seeing God so often had signified his will unto him. 3. And if Esa well after the Lord had purged his lippes, being before unwilling, to shew his readinesse: then Mo not well, who after the Lord had promised to be with his mouth, yet still persisted in his refusall.

Lib.35. mor. cap. 23.

Epist.142. ad Pardam.

3. Thostatus grantoth that Moses sinned, yet it was a veniall and small sinne, because wee read of punishment that followed. Cajetanus is of the same opinion, and his reason is taken from the phrase h used, The wrath of God was kindled: as when a man is moved suddenly of choller than of set purp Contra. In some sense we confesse, that both this and all other of Moses sinnes, and of all the elect are veniall, in respect of Gods mercie in Christ that pardoneth them: but otherwise in it owne nature, not this nor any other sinne is pardonable: for the wages of sinne is death, *Rom.*6.23. in the justice of G 2. Neither was this sinne of Moses veniall, that is, a light and small sinne, for such sinnes the Lord pa over in his children: but here he was angry with Moses: If the Lord should bee angry with every sinne, and oversight of his children, who should abide it? 3. The forbearing of punishment sheweth the smalnesse of the sinne, but the greatnesse of Gods mercie. 4. Cajetanes observation is false: for same phrase jichar aph Iehovah, Iehovahs wrath was kindled, is used upon occasion of great sinne w the people murmured, *Numb.*11.3. and lusted for quailes, *vers.*33. the same words are there put. 5. T then may safely be held, that although Moses at the first might in humility disable himselfe, yet after had given him satisfaction to all his doubts, upon his foure severall refusals, first, for his owne infir cie, and the greatnesse of the businesse, *Chap.*3.11. Secondly, because they might inquire after Gods n *Chap.*3.14. Thirdly, he excuseth himselfe by the incredulity of the people; Lastly, by his owne im fection of speech: yet after all this, to stand still upon his refusall, sheweth no small infirmitie in Mos it may appeare by the effect, because God was angrie with him: yet Gods anger is not such a children, as against the wicked: for there he is angry and punisheth, here he is angrie and rebuketh, with de withdraweth not his favour: for immediatly the Lord concurreth with Moſes deſire, and giveth him his brother to be his aſſiſtant: Simler. So that Gods anger here is as when the father is angrie with his child, or one friend with another, which notwithſtanding is no breach of friendſhip.

Quest. XII. Why Aaron is called the Levite.

Vers. 14. Aaron thy brother the Levite. 1. This is not added, becauſe the Prieſthood ſhould have belonged to Moſes, the Leviticall order to Aaron, but that Moſes was deprived of that honour for refuſing his calling: as Rabbi Salomon: Pellican. 2. But becauſe there might bee other Aarons, not of Levie, this is expreſſed by way of diſtinction, that Moſes might know that the Lord did meane none other Aaron, but his owne naturall brother of Levi: Iun. Simler. 3. And this might bee the reaſon thereof, becauſe the Lord purpoſed to annex the Prieſthood to Aaron and his poſteritie. Simler.

Quest. XIII. How Moſes is ſaid to be as God to Aaron.

Vers. 16. Thou ſhalt bee to him in Gods ſtead: This ſheweth, 1. that Moſes ſhould bee ſuperior unto Aaron, as his Prince (as the Chalde Paraphraſt) and Aaron as his Chancelor: Moſes ſhould give him direction from God what to ſpeake: Oſiander. 2. By this alſo Moſes authority is ſignified, by which as in Gods place he ordained Aaron to be the high Prieſt. Pellican. 3. Likewiſe, he is as God, as a wiſe counſellor, and full of Gods ſpirit, to whom Aaron ſhould reſort for counſell: Vatab. Genev. 4. And as Aaron was Moſes ſpokeſman to the people, ſo Moſes ſhould bee Aarons mouth to talke with God, ſo the Septuagint and Latine read: Thou ſhalt be for him, in thoſe things which appertaine to God. 5. But Moſes in another ſenſe is ſaid to bee Pharaohs God, Exod. 7. 1. not only to declare Gods will unto him, but to execute Gods judgements upon him. Genevenſ.

Quest. XIV. Whether Moſes did well being called of God, in taking his leave of his father in law.

Vers. 18. Therefore Moſes went and returned to Iethro. 1. Some doe charge Moſes here with an overſight, that he preſently diſpatched not into Egypt, but firſt tooke his leave of his father in law: for Iacob went away without Labans privity, and S. Paul ſaith that hee did not conſult with fleſh and blood after he was called, Galath. 1. 2. Contra: theſe examples are altogether unlike: for Laban was unfriendly to Iacob, and he feared he would worke him ſome diſpleaſure, and Iacob was then at his owne hand, and kept sheepe for himſelfe, and beſide he had in a manner ſold over his daughters to Iacob, and uſed them as ſtrangers: But Moſes had a kinde and loving father in law, he then kept his ſheepe as hee was wont, and he entertained Zipporah ſtill as his daughter: and therefore Moſes could not in humanity but take his leave of him. 3. S. Paul conſulted not with any for the approbation of his calling, being before fully aſſured, neither doth Moſes conferre with Iethro to any ſuch end, but only to performe the office of humanity. Simler. 4. Wherefore the calling of God doth not take away civill duties to parents and kindred, ſaving where they are an impediment to our calling, in which caſe wee are rather to forſake father and mother, than to diſobey God. 5. Moſes therefore taketh his leave of Iethro, both becauſe he purpoſed to carry away his wife and children, and for that he had before covenanted to doe ſo with Iethro, chap. 2. 21. Ferus.

Quest. XV. Why Moſes concealed from Iethro, the principall end of his going.

Let me goe and returne to my brethren. 1. Moſes concealeth from his father in law the principall cauſe of his journey, which was the calling of God, both for that he ſought Gods glorie and not his owne: Ferus: leſt he ſhould have ſeemed to boaſt of his viſions: Oſiander; and he doth keepe it ſecret of moſt likely, leſt he might be thought to be a vaine man in telling ſuch incredible things. 2. In ſaying he went to ſee whether his brethren were alive, and to viſite them he diſſembleth not, though he went to doe more; for it is evident by taking his wife and children with him, that Iethro knew hee purpoſed not only to viſite them, but to ſtay there: ſo that it ſeemeth likely, that Moſes imparted ſo much of his purpoſe concerning his ſtay there: Simler. and in generall alſo, that he went for the comfort and profit of his brethren, and others, but in particular he kept ſecret the end of his going. 3. Iethro being a good man would not hinder ſo charitable a worke, though he had ſpeciall uſe of him: Ferus: eſpecially having ſuch experience of the fidelitie and wiſedome of Moſes, that without great cauſe, he knew he would not deſire to depart from him. Simler.

Quest. XVI. Whether God ſpake to Moſes in Midian beſide that viſion in Horeb.

Vers. 19. And Iehovah ſaid to Moſes. 1. Some thinke that this ſentence is tranſpoſed, and that God firſt thus ſpake unto Moſes, before he had moved his father in law: Genevenſ. Pellican. But although ſuch tranſpoſing of the order be uſuall in Scriptures, yet heere it need not to bee admitted: for God often appeare to Moſes to confirme him: Iun. and this was ſaid in Midian, the other viſion in Horeb: the diſtinction of the place ſheweth them to be divers apparitions: Simler. 2. The Lord encourageth Moſes, taketh away all doubts, and telleth him that all which ſought his life, as well Pharaoh, as others of the bloud of the ſlaine, were dead: Iun. And thus much Moſes might impart alſo to his father in law, that he might be more willing to let them goe. Simler.

Quest. XVII. Of Moses wife and children, and of his provision for his journey.

Vers. 20. Then Moses tooke his wife and his sonnes, and put them on an asse. 1. Here mention is made of Moses children in the plurall, whereas onely Gershom is spoken of before, chap. 2. But Eleazar also was now borne, which is the child that Zipporah afterward circumcised: therefore of the birth of both his children must bee supplied out of the 18. chapter. 2. Moses was not great, nor yet his companie, that one asse could suffice to carry his wife and children: that his abilitie was not such as to provide Camels: thus the Lord would use weake instruments. He commeth not with power, honour and riches to deliver Israel, but in the name of God: as the Prophet Zacharie prophesieth of Christ: Behold thy King commeth, &c. poore, and riding upon an asse. Zach. 9. 9. taketh his wife with him, as the Apostles carried about their wives, 1. Cor. 9. 5. because men are to forsake father and mother to cleave to their wives: Simlerus: and Moses would have them also joyned to the people of God: Ferus. 4. Yet at this time Moses wife and children went not forward into Egypt, but by reason of that which fell out by the way about Moses childe, his wife being thereby offended, Moses sent them backe unto his father in law, who bringeth them unto him, Exod. 18. Iunius.

Quest. XVIII. Why Moses staffe is called the rod of God.

Vers. 20. Moses tooke the rod of God in his hand. 1. It is called the rod of God, not as the Hebrewes imagine, because it was foure square, the foure letters of the name of God Iehovah being written upon it, or because it grew in Iethros orchard, and none could pull it up but Moses; or because it was sent from heaven: but it was so called, because the Lord commanded Moses to take it in his hand. Pererius: and for that thereby the Lord would have Moses to worke miracles, Iunius: yet not by any vertue in the rod, but by the power of God: Pellican. 2. It was also called Aarons rod, because he was the minister, but God was the author and worker of the miracles: Simler. This rod also was a signe of the divine authority of Moses, like as Magistrates have their ensignes of office carried before them. 3. Thus it pleased God who could have wrought by wonders without any visible signes, that Moses should use the rod, for the more visible demonstration of the power of God: yet the Lord useth these meanes which have no power of themselves, or likelihood to effect that which is wrought: as Naaman was bid to wash himselfe in Jordan: our Saviour used spittle and clay to anoint the eyes of the blind: David goeth with a staffe against Goliah. And this the Lord doth that the worke should not be ascribed to the meanes: Simler. 4. And hereby also the high spirit and pride of Pharaoh might bee abated and confounded, when hee saw so great workes to bee wrought by the contemptible staffe of a shepheard. Simlerus.

Quest. XIX. How God is said to harden Pharaohs heart.

Vers. 21. I will harden his heart. 1. Some thinke that God is said to harden the heart, when he delayeth his punishments, and so men abusing Gods patience and long suffering are hardened: but seeing the hardning of mans heart is one of the greatest punishments, that can fall upon man, whereas Gods long suffering proceedeth from his mercie, and is a great benefit; these two cannot agree together, that the same thing should be both a punishment and a benefit. Simlerus.

2. Neither doth it satisfie that God hardeneth by permission and sufferance: for if God permitteth either unwillingly, then should he not be omnipotent, or willingly, so should he be accessarie to sinne: for permission therefore be opposed to Gods will, as though hee should suffer only things to be done, and as an idle beholder, and no doer, this distinction cannot be admitted. If permitting be taken for not approving or not assisting with his grace, so the Lord may be said to permit: but then he rather permitteth or suffereth the heart to be hardened, than hardeneth it. Simlerus.

3. Wherefore thus the Lord may bee said to harden the heart: 1. By the deniall or withholding of his grace, as he tooke his good spirit from Saul: and the Lord is not debtor to any, hee may give his grace to whom it pleaseth him, and withhold it at his pleasure. 2. God may leave a man to himselfe, and give him over unto Satan, who worketh upon the corruption of mans owne heart, and hardeneth it: so was a lying spirit was sent upon Ahabs Prophets. 3. The generall power of moving and working is of God, but the evilnesse of the action is of mans owne corruption: as when the Rider doth cause the horse to goe, hee is the cause of his going, but the horses evill and uneven going proceedeth of his lamenesse: Simler. And like as a good workman using a bad instrument, so the Lord worketh by the wicked: Borrh. 4. The occasions whereby the heart is hardened through mans corruption, decline oft from God, as the miracles which Moses wrought, whereby Pharaoh became more indurate and obstinate. 5. God is to be considered here as a just Judge, who punisheth mens former sinnes by their hardnesse of heart, as here Pharaoh is judged: so the hardning of the heart is of God, as it is pœna, not as it is culpa, faulty: Ferus. 6. Likewise God is said to harden the heart, dispositivè, because he ordereth of it, and turneth it to such end as shall bee most to his glorie: as the Lord ordered the envie of Iosephs brethren in selling their brother, and the treachery of Iudas in betraying his Master, to the good of his Church and his owne glorie: Simler. So some things are done in the world simply and absolutely according to the will of God, and by it, all such good actions. Some things are not done absolutely according to Gods will, but in respect of a further end, for the which the Lord permitteth them to be done. Gods will was that Pharaohs heart should be hardened, that God might declare his power in him. Rom. 9. 16. Borrh. 7. Thus God hardeneth not onely by permitting, but in withdrawing his grace, ing and disposing even mens evill actions to the end which the Lord hath propounded to himselfe, and ...using the meanes which the corruption of mans heart apprehendeth, and perverteth to his destruction: ...God is the cause of the action of hardning, but man is the cause of the sinne: Iunius. So God hardeneth, ...hardeneth, and man hardeneth his owne heart: man as the instrument, Satan as the worker and ...God as the supreme Judge overruling every action, and disposing of it unto good: Borrh. As in ...is as the mariner that worketh, the evill spirit as the winde and weather that tempteth and ...God as the sternes man that directeth and guideth all. So Augustines resolution is: Deus vo-...proprio suo vitio malum, in hoc peccatum judicio suo justo & occulto inclinavit: God by his ...secret judgement inclined his will, being evill by his owne corruption, into this sinne. De liber. arbit. ...there speaketh of Shemei, whom David saith, God bid curse him: the like may bee said of ...who is properly said to have hardened his owne heart, Exod. 8. 15. as the next and immediate ...of it: but God hardened it, concurring as a just Judge in punishing Pharaohs sinne, by obstinacie ...hardnesse of heart. See more of this question before, chap. 1. doct. 1.

God, Satan, and man himselfe are said to harden the heart, but diversly.

Quest. XX. How Israel is called the first borne sonne of God.

Vulg. Israel is my sonne even my first borne. 1. Israel is called the Lords first borne, not only in respect of eternall election: as Pelican: for the election of God doth not hinder terrene government; ...be eternally elected of God and yet bee Pharaohs servants still. 2. Neither is this spoken only ...chiefely, because they were the first nation that publikely professed the worship of God, and had ...title of the Gentiles, who were as the younger brother. Ferus. 3. Nor yet is it spoken only by ...of similitude, that they were as deere unto God as the first borne. Piscator. 4. But they were the ...people by a peculiar election, whereby the Lord had set them apart from all other people to ...would give his lawes, and therefore Pharaoh was not to keepe them in servitude, belonging to ...Lord: Simler. Therefore to them did belong the right and preeminence of the first borne, as ...authority. Borrh. And they were beloved of God in the right of the Messiah the first borne of ...creatures, and the only begotten sonne of God: Iun. who was to bee borne of that nation according ...flesh. Osiander. 5. Therefore God will slay the first borne of Egypt both of man and beast, because ...injurie offered to his first borne; and this being the last judgement, which was shewed upon ...it is like, that God revealed to Moses aforehand all those severall plagues, which afterward were ...upon Pharaoh.

Quest. XXI. Who smot Moses in the Inne, and how.

vers. 24. The Lord met him, and would have killed him. 1. In the Hebrew it is said, Iehovah met him, ...the Latin, and Septuagint read, the Angell of Iehovah; giving the sense rather than the ...word: for Iehovah by his Angell smote Moses: the Angels of God are found in Scripture to bee the ...ministers of Gods judgements: Pelican, Iun. 2. Tertullian thinketh that Moses sonne that was uncir-...cised was in danger, rather than Moses himselfe: but that is not like, for then Moses himselfe rather ...had beene in case, would have circumcised the child rather than his wife. 3. For the manner of pu-...nishment inflicted upon Moses: that is a ridiculous fable of R. Salomon, that the Angell appeared in ...shape of a Dragon, and swallowed up Moses past the middle to the place of his circumcision, and then ...Zipporah in haste had circumcised the child hee let him goe againe. Theodoret thinketh that the ...Angell appeared with a drawne sword, threatning Moses: but Moses was more than threatned, for hee ...felt within that hee was not able to circumcise his child: therefore the common opinion of the He-...brewes is, that Moses was smitten with some sudden disease, as may appeare in that his wife was faine to ...cut her sonnes foreskinne: and yet it is like that whether the Angell appeared in a visible humane ...shape, or otherwise came upon Moses, that by some visible and evident signe hee and his wife perceived ...it was for neglect of circumcision. Iun.

Quest. XXII. For what sinne the Lord would have killed Moses.

Vpon concerning the cause, why the Lord laid his heavy hand upon Moses. 1. It was neither because ...he carried his wife and children with him, which were a cumber unto him and therefore hee sent ...them back, as Augustine, and Eusebius Emisenus: for seeing Moses had no speciall commandement to ...leave them behind, he was therein to follow the common order, and duty required in matrimony, to take ...his wife and children. Simler. And he could not have left his wife behinde without offence to ...her father in law, who might have thought hee had neglected her, and would take him another wife in ...her stead. Neither was his feare the cause, because he was afraid to goe unto Pharaoh, as Theodoret, for ...he was now in his journey, and was resolved to goe forward. 3. Therefore the cause indeed was, for the ...want of the circumcision of the child, as David Kimhi, Rupertus, Thostatus with others: Ex Pererio: ...for it appeare, because that as soone as the child was circumcised Moses was presently delivered from ...danger: therefore some Hebrewes conjecture, that God punished him for making so long stay in the ...wilderness and without ground. Simler.

Augustin. quæst. de tempore.

Quest. XXIII. Whether the Israelites transgressed in omitting circumcision 40. yeares in the wildernesse.

...will be further questioned why the Lord was angry with Moses for deferring of circumcision, ...seeing he did tolerate it in the Israelites, which were not circumcised in the desert by the space of forty

forty yeeres, as is evident, *Iosh.*5. Some therefore thinke, that the Israelites were dispensed with for being not circumcised in the wildernesse, because it was not so needfull in that place seeing the people were separated from all other nations, and lived apart by themselves, and therefore circumcision was not so necessarie there, the speciall end whereof was to distinguish the Israelites from all other people: but when they came over Jordane among other nations, then they received circumcision the badge or cognisance of their profession: so Theodoret, Damascen. Contra. But this was not the principall end of circumcision, to make difference betweene the Israelites and other people: the chiefe scope thereof was to bee a seale of the covenant betweene God and his people, and therefore ought not in any place to have beene neglected.

2. Some therefore excuse this omission of circumcision in the desert, by the continuall journeying of the Israelites, they were still to follow the direction of the cloud, whether by day or night: but they could not travell immediatly upon their circumcision. Perer. Who further addeth, that if it had beene a fault in them, Moses would not have suffered such a great breach of the law, seeing the man that gathered stickes upon the Sabbath was punished. Contra. 1. The continuall travell of the Israelites could not bee the chiefe or onely cause of such omission, seeing they stayed many yeeres in one place, as in Kadesh barnea, *Dent.*1.46. and when they were circumcised in Gilgal, they were presently also to goe forward in expedition against their enemies, and yet that was no hinderance or let to their circumcision. 2. There is great difference betweene the transgression of one man which might easily bee censured without danger, and the sinne of all the people, which could hardly bee redressed, for Moses knew them to be a stiffe-necked and rebellious people.

3. Therefore it cannot be otherwise held, but that the omission of circumcision in the people was a transgression of the covenant: and that the people did of contempt and disobedience omit it, beside the excuse of their removing campe, as Augustine well judgeth, quæst. 6. in Iosuah, for the people continually murmured, and wished to be in Egypt, and thought to returne thither, and many of them were Idolaters; therefore it was no marvell, if they casting off the yoke of obedience, and despising the covenant of God, regarded not likewise the signe thereof: Iun. Beside, it must be considered that the commonwealth and Church were not then setled, neither the passeover, nor sacrifices, or other rites, were then observed duly according to the order prescribed; and therefore Moses saith, that when they were come into their inheritance, *Yee shall not doe after all these things, which we doe here this day, that is, every man whatsoever seemeth good in his owne eyes, Deut.*12.8.

Quest. XXIV. What moved Moses to deferre the circumcision of his child.

IT is further doubted what should bee the cause why Moses deferred the circumcision of his child. 1. The cause whereof some impute unto Moses father in law, that Moses did forbeare the circumcision, lest it might have beene an offence unto him, Tharg. Hieros. but the stay seemeth rather to have beene in his wife, as shall afterward appeare. 2. Aben Ezra thinketh that the child was not eight dayes old, when Moses set forward in his journey, and that he would not circumcise him by the way, because he made haste. Contra. But it is not like, if Moses having beene married forty yeeres, had a child so young that he would have adventured to travell with his wife, having beene so lately delivered; neither if circumcision had beene deferred because of Gods service, would the Lord have beene so angry with him. Simler. 3 Some judge, that Moses might thinke circumcision not to bee so necessary in a strange land, especially Moses wife being a stranger, and so his sonnes Israelites but by the halfe bloud. Ferus. But Moses could not be so ignorant; for as he was perswaded, that his seed was within the covenant, so he knew that the signe of the covenant belonged unto him. 4. Wherefore the most probable conjecture is, that after Moses had circumcised one of his children, his wife tooke such offence at it, that to content her he did forbeare to circumcise the other, and this may appeare by the circumstance of the text, because she with such indignation calleth Moses a bloudy husband, shewing her discontent and dislike of circumcision: Iun. Piscator, Pellican, Simler.

Quest. XXV. Why the Lord correcteth Moses by the way, and not before.

NOw the reasons why the Lord did thus urge Moses by the way, and not before, may bee these. 1. Because Moses had now taken a publike office and charge upon him, and he was unfit to be a ruler in the Church of God that could not order his owne familie, as the Apostle sheweth, 1. *Tim.*3. therefore it would have beene a great offence and scandall unto all Israel, if Moses the minister of circumcision should have any uncircumcised in his house. Iun. Perer. 2. While Moses was under his father in law, he was not at his owne liberty, as now, and therefore it is more exactly required of him now than before: Ferus. 3. The Lord doth it also at this time to trie his obedience, whether this correction laid upon him would make him give way and start from his calling. Ferus.

Quest. XXVI. Whether Zipporah circumcised her sonne with a sharpe knife.

Vers.25. ANd Zipporah tooke a sharpe knife. 1. Some thinke that circumcision among the Jewes was ministred with no iron instrument, but only of stone, and thinke that Zipporah in this place circumcised her sonne with a sharpe stone, as the Chalde, Septuagint and Latine reade: so August. serm. 41. de tempore. Bernard with others. But seeing no such instrument is specially prescribed, *Gen.*17. where circumcision is instituted, it seemeth there was no such necessity of using a stone onely. 2. Others doe thinke that it was indifferent to use either a sharpe knife or stone; but in this place they say it was done with a stone ſtone, becauſe the word tzur ſignifieth a rocke or ſtone, and Ioſh. 5. hee is bid to prepare knives of ſtone: and this circumciſing with a ſtone did more lively reſemble the ſpirituall circumciſion by Chriſt, who is the Rocke: ſo Hugo S. Victor, and Thoſtatus, and Thomas. Contr. 1. Though the word tzur doe uſually ſignifie a rocke or ſtone, as Ezech. 3. 9. yet in ſome places it is taken for that which is ſharpe, as Pſal. 89. 44. tzur eberbo, the edge of his ſword: the ſame words inverted are uſed Ioſh. 5. 2. Charboth tzurim, ſharpe knives, which are ſo called tzurim, becauſe they were in ſharpneſſe like to a ſharpe ſtone: Piſcator: or were ſharped with flints or whetſtones. Oſiand. 2. And ſeeing Zipporah was in haſte, a ſharpe knife, ſuch as they were not without, was readier at hand, than a ſharpe ſtone, which unleſſe it had beene prepared of purpoſe, would not have ſerved that turne: and whence ſhould Ioſuah have ſo many ſharpe ſtones to circumcile above 600. thouſand? Ioſh. 5. Therefore as Pererius thinketh that the Sichemites becauſe of their number were circumciſed with knives and ſwords, rather than ſtones, ſo it is more like ſo many thouſands of Iſraelites were. 3. And for the correſpondencie of the type and the ſubſtance, if it had correſted in the likeneſſe of the inſtrument, Saint Paul ſpeaking ſo much of circumciſion, would not have omitted it. 3. Therefore upon the reaſons before alleaged, 1. both becauſe a knife was readier, Zipporah being in haſte, and a knife being at hand was a fitter inſtrument than a ſtone; Iunius. 2. And it had put the child to more paine, to hackle off his foreskin with a ſtone; 3. Neither was it poſſible to finde ſo many ſharpe ſtones to circumciſe 600. thouſand, as Ioſhuah did; we conclude that Zipporah did this cure with a knife, not with a ſtone.

Deuard. 1. ſir. de circumciſ. Hug. lib. 2. de ſacram. 12. Thoſtat. in Exod. Thom. 2. par. 4. 70. reſp. ad ſecund.

Quest. XXVII. Whether both Moſes ſonnes or one only were uncircumciſed, and upon what occaſion.

verſ. 25. And cut away the foreskin of her ſonne. 1. Cajetanus thinketh that the ſingular number is put here for the plurall, and that both Moſes ſonnes were uncircumciſed: becauſe Zipporah at this time calleth Moſes a bloudy husband, as now firſt having experience of bloudy circumciſion: But it is not like that Moſes eldeſt ſonne, who might now be toward forty yeeres old, was ſo long uncircumciſed: and whereas before verſ. 20. Moſes is ſaid to take his ſonnes, and here mention is made only of a ſonne, the reaſon is againſt his conjecture: and Zipporah calleth him a bloudy husband, becauſe ſhee was forced to draw her owne childs bloud with that cutting, which ſhe was not put to before.

2. Some therefore thinke, that Moſes had left one of his ſonnes with his father in law as a pledge of his love and ſincere affection, ſo that he had one only child with him: Hugo. But the text alſo is againſt this conceit, for Moſes tooke both his ſonnes with him, verſ. 20.

3. Some thinke that Eleazar, Moſes youngeſt ſonne, was borne but a little before Moſes tooke his journey, and that for haſte thereof he deferred his circumciſion, Lyranus, Thoſtatus, Pererius. But if Moſes had it in mind to circumciſe his child, he would not of purpoſe have tranſgreſſed the law of circumciſion, which exactly requireth every male to be circumciſed the eight day.

4. Wherefore the more probable conjecture is, that Moſes, ſeeing the circumciſion of his firſt child might have beene ſo offenſively taken, did in gratiam uxoris, to content his wife, forbeare: this deferring then of circumciſion proceeded rather of his humane infirmity and forgetfulneſſe, than of any ſet or deliberate councell. And this the circumſtance of the text will beare, ſeeing Zipporah as not yet thorowly acquainted with this myſtery, doth caſt away the foreskin with ſuch indignation: Iunius, Pelicanus, Genev.

Quest. XXVIII. At whoſe feete Zipporah and what ſhe caſt.

verſ. 25. Caſt it at his feet, &c. 1. The Septuagint read προσεπεσεν, fell downe at his feete, ſo alſo Cajetanus: whoſe meaning is that Zipporah fell downe at the Angels feete, intreating to ſpare her husband: but ſo ſoone as the child was circumciſed Moſes recovered, and the Angell left him. 2. Rabanus readeth after the ſame manner, ſhee fell downe, thinking that ſhee was proſtrate at Moſes feete, intreating him to diſmiſſe her. But Moſes rather ſent her backe in his owne diſcretion, unto his father, with her children: it had beene an unwomanly part and not commendable, for the wife to deſire to depart from ſuch an husband. Simler. 3. But whereas the Hebrew word tagangh ſignifieth, ſhe cauſed it to touch, or caſt; ſome ſay ſhe caſt the circumciſed foreskin at the feete of the Angell to appeaſe him: ſo the Chaldee Paraphraſt, and Tharg. Hieroſolymitan: but the words following in the next verſe, ſhew that ſhee caſt it at his feete whom ſhe called bloudy husband: Perer. 4. Some referre it to the child, that ſhee caſt it at his feete, and Kimhi ſaith it was an uſe among the Hebrewes to call the infant circumciſed, the father or husband. But to what end ſhould Zipporah ſay thus to a young infant that underſtood her not? Simler. 3. Therefore ſhe caſt it at Moſes feete, whom in indignation ſhe calleth bloudy husband: Simler. Perer.

Quest. XXIX. Why Zipporah calleth Moſes huſband of bloud.

verſ. 26. Thou art indeed a bloudy huſband unto mee. 1. The Septuagint tranſlate, the bloud of my ſonne, ſtetit, is ſtayed: which tranſlation having no ground at all, or colour out of the originall, Auguſtine to great buſineſſe, quæſt. 11. in Exod. and maketh him flie unto allegories and myſteries: it ſeemeth to make a contrary ſenſe unto the originall, ſeeing ſhe called Moſes a bloudy husband, for ſhedding of her ſonnes bloud: it is like then it ſtayed not. 2. Rabanus thinketh that ſhee called him ſo, and accuſeth him of crueltie, for commanding her to circumciſe her child: ſo alſo Vatablus: ſeeing ſhee by this meanes redeemed her husbands life, ſhee no doubt did not thinke much of her childs circumcision in that behalfe, but thought it well done to save his life. 3. Some thinke, shee by bloud meaneth not only this present griefe, but other troubles which she was like to endure: as if shee should say, if our journey began with such a hard hap, what is the end like to be? 4. Aben Ezra will have Zipporah thus to say unto the child, whom they used to call chatan, husband, spouse, because of the joy of circumcision: whom she first calleth husband of bloud, because she feared that her husband would dye; but when she saw he was escaped, then she correcteth her speech, and calleth him husband of bloud, because of the circumcision: but this name of husband, who seeth not, better to agree to Moses, than to her child? Ex Perer. 5. Wherefore she thus saith unto Moses, calling him husband of bloud, both because shee was faine to redeeme him with the bloud of her child, and in respect of circumcision it selfe, which she held to be a bloudy law being not yet thorowly instructed in these rites: sic Thostatus, Iunius, Ferus: but shee calleth him not man of bloud, which name in Scripture is given to cruell and bloudy men, but husband of bloud.

Quest. XXX. Whether those words rehearsed againe, were uttered by Zipporah or by Moses the writer.

Vers. 26. But shee had said husband of bloud because of the circumcision. 1. Piscator, because the word is put in the plurall, circumcisions, thinketh that she so speaketh in respect of the circumcision of both her sonnes: but seeing one of them only is here circumcised, and because at this time only Zipporah was put to doe it her selfe, which caused her thus to say, shee so speaketh because of the circumcision of this child. 2. Some thinke that these are the words of Zipporah, and that shee either qualifieth her former speech, turning her words which she had uttered, of the bloud and death of her husband, (for so Aben Ezra taketh them to be spoken to the child, that he was circumcised, with the death and losse of her husband) and after that by this circumcision she perceived her husband to bee recovered, shee applied her speech to circumcision. Iunius in his Analysis (saving that hee holdeth these words to be uttered to Moses, and not to the child) expresseth the same meaning, that Zipporah expoundeth and excuseth her former words, that by bloud she understandeth circumcision whereby the young infant, being upon the way, and in an Inne, might bee put in danger. 3. But I rather approve Iunius judgement in his annotations, that these are the words of Moses, rather than of Zipporah, shewing a reason of her speech: for that shee repeated the same words, being uttered with indignation twice, it is not like; especially after that the danger was over, shee had small cause to expostulate with Moses: for then she had shewed that shee had preferred the childes health, before the life of her husband: so also Zeiglerus.

Quest. XXXI. How Zipporah knew that Moses was striken for the neglect of circumcision.

But another question will be here moved, how Zipporah knew that Moses was in danger for neglect of circumcision. 1. Some thinke that the Angel appeared in a visible shape, and both by signes and words threatned Moses because his child was uncircumcised: Cajetan. But to devise words or speech to be said beside Scripture, it is not safe. 2. Some thinke that Moses was put in mind by this sudden sickenesse of his fault, and spake or made signes to his wife to circumcise the child: Aben Ezra, Simla. But the suddennesse, and greatnesse of the sickenesse which made Moses altogether unable to doe it himselfe, may be thought also to have given him small respite, either to bethinke himselfe, or to give notice to his wife. 3. Some thinke that shee had heard before of her husband, how straightly they were injoyned to circumcise their children the eight day: and that of her selfe it came into her minde that they had not done well in omitting the childs circumcision: Oleander. But it seemeth by her words of indignation that shee had not so reverent an opinion of the necessity of circumcision, as of her selfe to enter into an action so much displeasing unto her. 4. Therefore I consent with Iunius, that (whether the Angell appeared in visible shape, or no, as some thinke; yet) by evident signes, it appeared both to Moses and Zipporah, that Gods wrath came upon him for that cause: the phrase here used, that the Lord, occurrebat ei, came upon him, & dimisit eum, and departed from him, doth shew, that God after some sensible manner assaulted Moses, that they both knew, both from whence that sudden stroke came, and for what cause.

Quest. XXXII. Who it was that departed from Moses.

Vers. 26. So he departed from him. 1. Not Zipporah tooke her leave of Moses, and returned to her father as Lyranus: for beside that the Verbe is put in the Masculine gender in the original: it is more like that Moses sent Zipporah backe, than that shee first sought it. 2. Nor yet is the meaning that Moses left him, that is, his child new circumcised and sent him backe to his father in law: as Paulus Burgensis. It should have beene said then, that Moses left her, which is his wife, rather than him, that is, the infant, that could not shift for himselfe. Perer. 3. And to understand it of the disease, that it left him, is somewhat improper: But it must be referred to the Angell, for he departed now from Moses, that before ran upon him, met him, or assaulted him: sic August. q. 11. in Exod.

Quest. XXXIII. Of the mysticall application of this story.

Now for the mysticall application of this story. 1. That of Gregory Nyssen: is somewhat farre fetcht: that Moses married to Zipporah a Midianitish woman sheweth a Christian teacher addicted to Philosophie, which he must circumcise and pare off many errors from, before it can bee admitted to Christian Christianity. 2. So is also that application of Pererius not so fit, that as Moses was chastised because one of his children was uncircumcised, though the other had received circumcision: so it suffiseth not the Gentlement only to be reformed and circumcised, but the will and affection also must be purged. 3. That of Ferus is more fit: that Christ may be said to be our husband of bloud, by whose bloud we are purged: And Zipporah betokeneth the Church, which by repentance doth circumcise her children to make them acceptable unto God.

Quest. XXXIV. What manner of faith it was which the people had in beleeving Moses.

Vers. 31. So the people beleeved. 1. Not all the people whom the Egyptian taskmasters would not suffer to intermit their worke: Simler. but a convenient number of the people gathered together with the Elders: Pellican. 2. These having seene the signes before mentioned, as the Rod turned into a Serpent, Moses hand suddenly to become leprous, and to be healed againe, and the water turned into bloud, gave credit unto Moses and Aaron, and beleeved they were sent of God: Osiander. 3. But this seemeth to have beene but a temporarie faith: for a while after they are offended with Moses and Aaron, when their affliction at the first was made more heavy. Simler. 4. And now they see the effect of the promise, that the people should at the first hearken unto them, Chap. 3. 18. Borrh.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. The use of true miracles.

Vers. 5. That they may beleeve. The end then and use of true miracles is to confirme faith: whatsoever miracles are wrought to any other end, as to perswade any false doctrine, and to draw away the people from the true worship of God, are false miracles wrought by the operation of Satan, and are not to be regarded, as Moses sheweth, Deut. 13. 2. Simler.

2. Doct. Things by their nature noxious and hurtfull, are subdued to the faithfull.

Vers. 4. He put forth his hand and caught it. By this that this Serpent is turned againe into a Rod, and hath no power to hurt or harme Moses, we see that by the power of God, things by nature hurtfull, yet to the beleeving and faithfull are not noxious, or discommodious. The Lions mouthes were stopped against Daniel, the Viper that leaped upon Pauls hand, forgat her kind. This power and privilege floweth from Christ our head, which as it is externally shewed in such miraculous workes, so spiritually it is now seene in that the old Serpent, the enemie of mankind, hath no power to hurt any of the members of Christ. Simlerus.

3. Doct. Temporary obedience doth often turne aside a temporary punishment.

Vers. 26. So he departed from him, &c. Zipporah here not of any devotion, but of necessity, circumcised her sonne, yet it pleased God so to accept of this forced obedience that he spared Moses: so many times a temporary and externall obedience doth turne away a temporall punishment: as Ahabs humiliation put off the punishment threatned, that it came not in his dayes. So the Samaritanes corrupt worship of God delivered them from the Lions, 2. Kings 17. Simler. Piscator. If God be so pleased sometime with outward service, accepting the small beginnings of those that are comming unto him: how much more acceptable unto him is the true spirituall worship?

1. Cont. Against popish transubstantiation.

Vers. 3. And it was turned into a Serpent. This can give no warrant to the popish transubstantiation, and that imagined conversion of the bread into the body of Christ: for here both the Scripture testifieth, that the Rod was turned into a Serpent, and the sense discerned it: but they can shew neither word for their devised change, and sense also is against it. Simler.

2. Cont. Against the Arrians, that Christ is a true God.

Vers. 16. Thou shalt be to him as God. The Arrians most blasphemously abuse this place, making Christ no otherwise God, than Moses is called God. Cont. 1. Not the name Elohim, only is given unto him, but Iehovah, which is given to no creature. 2. Not only the name of God, but honour, and worship are given unto him, and to no creature beside: Let all the Angels of God worship him, Hebr. 1. 6. 3. Where the word Elohim is given unto men, it is not properly attributed unto them, but by way of comparison with others, as here in respect of Aaron, Moses is so called, as by way of relation unto him, because they are in his stead in earth: but the Godhead and name of God is simply and properly given to Christ.

3. Cont. Ecclesiasticall persons subject to the civill magistrat.

FUrther, though Aaron be Moses mouth, and speake for him to the people, yet Moses is made his superiour: so though the Priests and Ministers doe declare unto the people the will of God, and the law is to be required at their mouth; yet are they subject to the Civill power, as here Aaron to Moses: Pelican. as the Apostle saith, *Let every soule be subject to the higher powers, Rom.*13.1.

4. Cont. Against the baptisme of infants by women.

Vers.25. AND Zipporah tooke a sharpe knife. This example is alleaged by the Romanists to prove the lawfulnesse of Baptisme by women in the case of necessity: *Bellar. lib.*1. *de Bapt. cap.*7. Contra. But this example cannot serve their turne: 1. because the Minister of circumcision in the old Testament is not precisely appointed as the Minister of Baptisme is: for the Levites and Priests were not specially charged by commandement to bee Ministers of circumcision, but that charge did indifferently lie upon the masters of the family, *Gen.*17.9. But in the Gospell they are bid to baptise, that are commanded to teach, *Mat.*28.20. Piscator. 2. The Romanists lay upon baptisme a necessity of salvation: but here the necessity was not in respect of the infant uncircumcised, but in regard of Moses, and not a necessity of eternall salvation, but of preserving the outward life. Piscator. 3. Zipporah did it in presence, of Moses: by this example they may allow women also to baptise in the presence of the lawfull Minister. Simler. 4. And though it pleased God to remit the temporall punishment, upon this externall obedience, yet this sheweth not, that God did approve this act: as before instance is given of the Samaritanes, who were delivered from the Lions, being but halfe worshippers of God, 2. King. 17. the Lord onely sheweth hereby, that it is pleasing unto him that the externall discipline of the Church should be preserved. *Simler.*5. This then being in it selfe an unlawfull act in Zipporah, saving that necessity forced it, and extraordinary; it cannot be drawne to an ordinarie practice, specially where there can bee no such necessity. Iun. 6. This example rather sheweth that baptisme though by an unlawfull Minister, is to be held to bee baptisme, as after Zipporah had circumcised her sonne, he was not circumcised againe, then that such are to be allowed lawfull Ministers. Heretikes are not fit Ministers of Baptisme, yet if they keepe the true forme of Baptisme, the Church useth not to baptise after them: for, as Augustine well saith, That which is given cannot be said not to be given, although it may be rightly said, not to be rightly given.

Lib. 2. cont. epist. Parmen. cap. 13.

5. Cont. That the punishment for the contempt of circumcision was not only temporall, but in Gods justice eternall.

Vers.24. THE Lord met him, and would have killed him. Bellarmine from hence would prove, that this penalty of the neglect of circumcision was only temporall, and consequently, that circumcision had not to it annexed the promise of remission of sinnes and deliverance from eternall death, as the Sacraments of the new Testament have, lib 2 *de effect. sacrament. cap.*17. *Resp.*33. *ad argum.*1.

Cont. 1. The penalty inflicted for the omission of circumcision is laid upon the party himselfe that is not circumcised, even that person shall be cut off, *Gen.*17.4. therefore this example of punishment imposed upon the parent, for the neglect of it in his sonne, is not fitly urged to that end. 2. that law is made against those that willingly neglect circumcision, and so wilfully breake the Lords covenant: but here is no contempt but only negligence and oversight. 3. It followeth not, Moses only should have been temporally chasticed, for this negligence, therefore the neglect of circumcision was onely punished by temporall death: like as God would have killed Aaron with temporall death for consenting to the Idolatry of Israel, *Deut.*9.20. Doth it therefore follow, that the punishment of Idolatrie was only temporall? God unto his servants remitted in mercie the eternall debt chastising them onely temporally, for their amendment and the example of other. 4. But that the contempt of circumcision deserved everlasting death in the justice of God appeareth both by the phrase, that soule shall be cut off from his people, which signifieth a finall perishing from the Church of God, both in this world and in the next, as it is taken, *Levit.*20.3. that he which giveth his seed to Moloch shall bee cut off: as also by the reason there given, because hee hath broken the Lords covenant: and cursed is every one which transgresseth any part of the law, *Deut.*27.26. And the curse of God is not only temporall, but eternall. 5. Further, that circumcision had annexed to it a promise of grace, and remission of sinnes, the Apostle sheweth, calling circumcision the seale of the righteousnesse of faith, *Rom.*4.11. and the outward circumcision represented the circumcision of the heart, whose praise was not of men but of God, *Rom.*2.29.

6. Cont. Against the necessity of Baptisme.

NEither can this example of Zipporahs necessary circumcision of her sonne bee fitly alleaged to prove an absolute necessity of baptisme: an hypotheticall, that is, a conditionall necessity depending upon the precept of Christ, wee graunt, that it is necessary, that baptisme both in generall should bee retained in the Church, because Christ hath instituted it; and in particular, that every one should yeeld reall obedience thereunto, as unto Christs ordinance, when it may bee conveniently had: but such a personall necessity as to imagine children dying without baptisme, to bee excluded the kingdome of God, and not be admitted. 1. This were to tye salvation unto the externall signe, and so to limit the working of the spirit. 2. Some of the fathers indeed, as Augustine, held such a necessity, but hee made the same necessity of the other Sacrament, upon these words of our Saviour, Ioh. 6.53. Except yee eat the flesh of Sonne of man, &c. ye have no life in you, &c. Simler. 3. There is not the like neceſſitie of baptiſme now, and of circumciſion then, for that was tied to the eight day, ſo is not baptiſme: and the neceſſitie was not in reſpect of the infant, but of the parent that neglected it: as the child here was not in danger but Moſes himſelfe.

6. Morall obſervations.

1. Obſerv. That one ſtandeth in need of anothers gifts.

Verſ.14. DOe not I know Aaron thy brother &c. that he ſhall ſpeake. God could if it had pleaſed him, have given unto Moſes the gift of eloquence & utterance, but he rather joyneth Aaron as aſſiſtant unto Moſes, not giving all gifts unto one, but ſo diverſlie diſpenſing and diſpoſing his graces, that one may ſtand in need of another: even as the members of the bodie cannot ſay one to another, I have no need of thee, 1 *Cor.*12.21. Simler.

2. Obſerv. Againſt emulation.

WHen he ſeeth thee, he will be glad in his heart. That is, hee ſhall bee farre from emulation or envie though his younger brother were preferred before him, as Cain envied Abel, Iſmael, Iſaac, Eſau, Iacob. Simler. This teacheth us, that wee ſhould not envie the preferment of others before their equals, and in ſome ſort their elders and ſuperiors: preferment neither commeth from the Eaſt nor from the Weſt, or from the South, but it is God who maketh high and low, *Pſal.*75.6.

3. Obſerv. Againſt negligence in receiving the Sacraments.

Verſ.24. HE ſought to kill him. We ſee by this what a great ſinne it is before God to neglect the Sacraments: if the Lord ſpared not Moſes his faithfull ſervant, for an overſight onely and negligence, how much greater ſhall their puniſhment be, that runne into open contempt of the holy myſteries? Ferus. Let men learne then by this example, that they deferre not the baptiſme of their children, nor omit the receiving of the Sacraments; for God holdeth this as a wrong done to himſelfe, when his ordinance is neglected, contemned or prophaned: for this cauſe (ſaith the Apoſtle) many are weake and ſicke among you, and many ſleepe, 1 *Cor.*11.30.

4. Obſerv. That maſters of families, eſpecially paſtors, doe rule well their owne families.

FUrther, in that it ſufficed not, though Moſes himſelfe were circumciſed, ſeeing his child which was of his familie and charge was uncircumciſed: this is gathered, that it is the dutie of maſters of families, ſpecially of Paſtors and Miniſters, and ſuch as have charge over others, that they ſee that all their domeſticks be well ordered and governed: for otherwiſe God will require it of them; as is evident in the puniſhment of Heli, who being a good man himſelfe, yet bare too much with the lewdneſſe of his ſonnes, Perer. as the Apoſtle ſaith, Hee that cannot rule his owne houſe, how ſhould hee care for the Church of God? 1 *Tim.*3.5.

5 Obſerv. The ſword and word muſt concurre together.

Verſ.27. HE met him in the mount of God and kiſſed him. Moſes the Prince and chiefe Magiſtrate, and Aaron appointed to be the chiefe Prieſt, doe each kiſſe the other, and joyne both the Politike and Eccleſiaſticall power together; then the people beleeved: ſo the Church of God is edified, when the ſword and word doe concurre together: as David and Sadok, Ioas and Iehoiadah, Iehoſaphat and Amaziah, Ioſias and Hilkiah, the Kings and chiefe Prieſts did one aſſiſt the other, Ferus.

Chap. V.

1. The Argument and Method.

THis Chapter hath two parts: The firſt containeth the meſſage which Moſes delivered to Pharaoh, verſ. 1. with Pharaohs refuſall, verſ. 2. and their replie from the authoritie of God, *verſ.*3. The ſecond ſheweth three events of this meſſage: the firſt is the increaſing of the peoples ſervitude commanded by Pharaoh, to *verſ.*10. and executed by his officers, to *verſ.*11. The ſecond, the beating of the officers and rulers of the children of Iſrael, verſ. 14. with their complaint unto Pharaoh, *verſ.*15.16. with his unmercifull and ungentle anſwer, to verſ. 19. The third is the expoſtulating of the offi- with Moſes and Aaron, to *verſ.*20. and of Moſes with God, to *verſ.*22,23.

2. The divers readings.

3. The God of the Hebrewes hath met with us. I. P. better than, is called over us. B.A. or hath called I. P.
S. or, we worſhip the God of the Hebrew. G. The word nikra is ſo taken, 2 *Sam.*1.6. and it is here taken the ſame ſenſe, as the other nikra with he, *chap.*3.18. as it may appeare by the like conſtruction with the preſition ghal.

I. A. P. Leſt he meet us, or fall upon us with the peſtilence. I.A.P. better than, leſt the peſtilence come upon us. L.V.S. or, bring upon us the peſtilence. G. for then the preposition ſhould bee ſuperfluous, or, leſt hee ſmite us with B. but the word phagangh ſignifieth to run upon, not to ſmite.

I. S. Verſ. 5. And would ye make them leave their burthens? I. It is better read with an interrogation, and ſo it containeth a reaſon, why he would not have the people called from their worke: as the Septuagint following the ſenſe and not the words, let us not therefore cauſe them to ceaſe, better than to read affirmatively, ye have cauſed them to ceaſe. A.P. or, doe cauſe them to ceaſe. B.G. as being confident upon their multitude, and ſo intending a rebellion: or, how much more if ye give them reſt from their worke? L. that is, if they multiplied before being under ſore labour, how much more if they take their eaſe? but here their words, how much more, are not in the originall.

I. A. P. Verſ. 9. Let them not regard lying words. I. A. P. L. vaine words. V. S. B. G. but ſhakar ſignifieth properly to lie, to deale falſely, as Gen. 21. 23.

I. A. P. Verſ. 14. Finiſh your works, every dayes taske in the day thereof. I. A. P. better than, finiſh your dayes worke, every dayes taske. G. for the words are tranſpoſed, or, your dayly taskes in their due time. B. the ſenſe, but not the words: or, the works belonging to the day. S. or, fulfill your worke every day. L. here is wanting, the day.

L. Verſ. 16. The fault is in thy people. I. or, thy people offendeth. P. better than, there is wrong done to thy people. L.S.B. or, thy people is blamed. G. V. It is better referred to the Egyptians that they were in fault, becauſe they gave them no ſtraw, than to the Iſraelites: it is not like they would lay the fault upon their brethren.

Verſ. 19. After he had ſaid, that is, the King. I. better than, after it was ſaid. L. G. B. for the word leemar, is in the active, or, they ſaying, λέγοντες, S. it is referred to the King that ſo had ſaid, verſ. 8.

3. The explanation of doubtfull queſtions.

Quest. I. Why the Lord ſo often ſent Moſes and Aaron.

Verſ. 1. Then Moſes and Aaron went and ſaid unto Pharaoh, &c. Whereas the Lord might at once have deſtroyed Pharaoh, and have delivered his people, yet it ſeemed beſt unto him by divers and ſundrie meſſages to deale with him: 1. That Gods power might appeare in ſhewing his wonders. 2. That the Iſraelites might ſee the wonderfull care which the Lord had of them. 3. To exerciſe their patience, being not delivered at the firſt. 4. And to leave Pharaoh without all excuſe, Simler.

Quest. II. Whether Moſes and Aaron went in alone to Pharaoh.

COncerning the number of them that went to Pharaoh: 1. Neither is the conceit of the Hebrewes to be received, that thinke, the Elders, who ſhould have accompanied Moſes and Aaron, forbeare of feare, and therefore they were not afterward ſuffered to goe up into Mount Sinah with Moſes: for neither did Aaron goe up, and yet preſented himſelfe with Moſes to Pharaoh. 2. Neither is it to be thought with Thoſtatus and Pererius, that the Elders went not in with Moſes: for this had beene directly againſt Gods commandement, chap. 3. 18. 3. Wherefore it is like that the Elders alſo went in, but Moſes and Aaron onely are named as the principall, as verſ. 4. Pharaoh in ſaying, get ye to your burthens, ſpeaketh not to Moſes and Aaron onely, but to the other Iſraelites with them: Iunius, Simlerus.

Quest. III. Whether Pharaoh were altogether ignorant of God.

Verſ. 2. I know not Iehovah. 1. Paulus Burgenſ. thinketh that Pharaoh ſo ſpake, becauſe the name Iehovah was not knowne to him. But it is not like that Moſes would uſe a ſtrange name of God, which Pharaoh underſtood not. 2. Thoſtatus thinketh that hee ſimplie denied not God, but that he was ignorant of Iehovah, that is, the ruler and governour of the world, that ſeeth and beholdeth all things. But this is too curious, and it ſeemeth that Pharaoh had no good opinion of the Godhead and divine power, 3. Therefore, whereas there is a twofold knowledge of God, the one naturall by the creatures, the other ſpirituall by the word of God; the firſt onely ſheweth that there is a God, the other teacheth who that God is, and how to be ſerved; it is like that Pharaoh was not altogether void of the firſt, which he abuſed, detracting from the true God, and giving the divine honour unto filthie Idols, but the true God he was utterly ignorant of, Borrh. 4. So that beſide his groſſe ignorance, hee in pride of heart contemneth and deſpiſeth the true God: Simler. Hee acknowledgeth the God of the Hebrewes to bee no God, and inferiour to the Idols of Egypt: Perer. and of no ſuch power to command him being King of Egypt: Pellican. afterwards by plagues and judgements hee is taught to confeſſe and acknowledge God, Ferus. 5. There are foure cauſes that for the moſt part doe bring men to denie God: either feare, as Peter denied Chriſt; or groſſe ignorance, as the wicked thinketh there is no God, Pſal. 10. 4. or corruption and wickedneſſe of life, as the foole ſaith in his heart there is no God, Pſal. 14. 1. or abundance of proſperitie, which maketh a carnall man thinke that hee is ſufficient of himſelfe without God: and therefore the Prophet prayeth, that God would not give him too much, Leſt I be full and denie thee, Prov. 30. 6. Theſe three did concurre in Pharaoh, his ignorance, wicked life, and abundance of proſperitie, Perer.

Quest. IV. Why mention is onely made of going three dayes journey.

Verſ. 3. Let us goe three dayes journie into the deſert, &c. 1. Some doe myſtically apply theſe three dayes journie as Auguſtine to the Trinitie. Ferus underſtandeth it of the purging of our thoughts, words and works, Perer. Of the way of Chriſtians by faith hope and charitie. Borrhaus obſerveth the number of three dayes, as *chap.*19. when they are bid to ſanctifie themſelves againſt the third day. Ionas three dayes in the belly of the whale, Chriſt roſe the third day. But ſuch myſticall applications are but vaine wittie devices. 2. Neither is the conjecture of the Hebrewes ſound, that whereas it was not but three dayes onely, but three moneths journey unto mount Horeb, where they ſacrificed, as appeareth *chap.*3. they ſay a day is taken here for a moneth: for thus Moſes requeſt ſhould have beene captious, and full of deceit. 3. Therefore Moſes maketh mention onely of three dayes journey, as the Lord commanded him, who knew that Pharaoh would not grant ſo ſmall and reaſonable a requeſt, that his inhumanitie might bee made manifeſt, and ſo Gods judgements to be juſt, Thoſtat. Lyran. 4. And though God purpoſed that Iſrael ſhould never returne into Egypt againe, yet it was not neceſſarie, nor convenient, that all the Lords counſell ſhould bee revealed to ſuch a cruell Tyrant: and herein Moſes told no untruth, but onely prudently concealed ſome part as the Lord directed him, Simler.

Quest. V. What other things were ſaid and done by Moſes before Pharaoh.

Concerning other things ſaid and done by Moſes. 1. Neither is it likely that Moſes rehearſed unto Pharaoh the benefits, which the Egyptians had received of him, as Ioſephus, but rather he might make mention of Iosephs worthie acts done in Egypt. 2. Neither is any credit to be given to Artapanus report, alleaged by Euſebius, how Moſes cauſed fire to come out of the earth, that being committed to priſon, his keepers were ſuddenly ſlaine, and the gates opened of themſelves, and he came into Pharaohs chamber without any let: and how certaine Prieſts for deriding the name Iehovah, which Moſes had written in a table, were ſudenly ſtriken dead: it is like, if ſuch memorable things had beene done, Moſes would not have omitted them, Perer. Therefore to know the ſumme of Moſes acts, it ſufficeth us to have recourſe to the ſtorie here penned by himſelfe. Euſeb. lib. 9. de preparat. Evang. cap. ultim.

Quest. VI. In what ſenſe Pharaoh ſaith they were much people.

Verſ.5. Behold now much people is in the land, and would ye make them leave their burthens? 1. Some referre it to that which was ſaid before, *verſ.*3. Moſes gave this reaſon of his requeſt, that the people might be diſmiſſed to ſacrifice to God, leſt he come upon them with the peſtilence: and ſo Pharaoh ſhould anſwer, that although the peſtilence came upon them, he could ſpare many of them, becauſe they were a great multitude. 2. Some thinke that Pharaoh objecteth to them rebellion, that they being conſident upon the ſtrength and multitude of the people, did gather them together, and cauſed them to reſt their works, intending ſome mutinie: Vatab. 3. Other doe make this to be the ſenſe, if the people having beene kept under by ſore labour, doe ſo increaſe, how much more if they had their eaſe? ſic Pellican, Oſiander, Latin. interpret. 4. But it is beſt read with an interrogation: Seeing they are much people, would you hinder them, and ſo their works ſhould be intermitted, that were ſo profitable and of ſuch advantage to Pharaoh? Iun. Simler. This ſenſe is moſt fitting and agreeable to the text, as may appeare by the ſcope thereof.

Quest. VII. Why they uſed ſtraw in making bricke.

Verſ.7. Ye ſhall give the people no more ſtraw. 1. They uſed ſtraw to make bricke both to temper the clay therewith, that it might be firmer: Lyran. as alſo to cover it, and keepe it from parching and chapping by the ſunne, as alſo to burne the bricke with: Simler. 2. There was great uſe of bricke in Egypt, not onely becauſe they wanted ſtone, but for that the buildings made of bricke were durable and continued long, as the wall that compaſſed Athens was made of bricke, and Iupiters temple: *Plinl. lib.*35. *cap.*14. The ſame author alſo reporteth from Epigenes, that there was bricke worke in Babylon of ſeven hundred yeeres continuance, wherein the obſervation of the ſtarres were graven: Perer. 3. As for the allegories which are here deviſed, as by the ſtrawe to underſtand evill thoughts, by the clay, corrupt doctrine, Pharaoh, the devill, I omit them as humane devices.

Quest. VIII. Whether Moſes ſinned in expoſtulating thus with God.

Verſ.22. Moſes returned unto the Lord and ſaid, &c. 1. Some (as the Hebrewes) doe altogether blame Moſes in expoſtulating thus with God, and lay upon him an imputation of a grievous ſinne, and for this cauſe they ſay the Lord would not ſuffer Moſes to enter into the land of Canaan. But Moſes herein had committed ſo great an offence, the Lord would not have vouchſafed him ſo gratious audience. 2. Neither yet is Moſes altogether to be excuſed, as ſome thinke, that he ſpeaketh not out of his owne ſenſe, but in the peoples: Auguſtine thinketh, that he uttered not verba indignationis, ſed inquiſitionis, & admirationis, words of indignation, but of inquiſition, as deſirous to be further inſtructed. 3. But that Moſes was impatient of delay, and complaineth that the people were not yet delivered, whereas the Lord had before told Moſes that Pharaoh would not let them goe at the firſt, this ſheweth Moſes forgetfulneſſe, and herein his faith and infirmitie ſtrive together: Simler. Borrh.

Quest. IX. How the Lord is ſaid to afflict his people.

Verſ.22. Why haſt thou afflicted this people. 1. God is ſaid to afflict his people not onely becauſe he ſuffered it to be done, for ſo (as Thoſtatus reaſoneth) God might as well be ſaid to lie, becauſe he permitteth it to be done. 2. Neither onely becauſe the meſſage, which the Lord ſent by Moſes unto Pharaoh, was the occaſion of this perſecution, Perer. 3. But, beſide that ſuch evils as are puniſhments of sinne, and not sinne may be caused by the Lord, as the Prophet saith, Shall there bee any evill in a city, and the Lord hath not done it? Amos 3.6. The Lord is said to afflict his people, as by whose providence their affliction was sent, and the Lord directeth the same to his glory, the good of his people, and the destruction of his enemies, Simler.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. The beginning of our calling alwayes most difficult.

Vers. 23. Since I came to Pharaoh to speake in thy name, he hath vexed thy people, &c. This people being neere unto their deliverance are more grievously vexed: so the beginning of a mans calling and turning to God is alwayes most difficult, and Satan seeketh by all meanes to supplant them, that are departing from him: so it is said in Ecclesiasticus, chap. 2. 1. My sonne, if thou wilt come into the service of God, prepare thy soule to tentation: Ferus, Pererius.

2. Doct. The preaching of the law discovereth and reviveth sinne.

FUrther, in that by Moses preaching to Pharaoh, he was thereby more incensed, and his cruelty increased, we see what the preaching of the Law worketh without the Gospell, it reviveth sinne, and discovereth that which before lay hid: as the Apostle saith: Sinne tooke occasion by the commandement, and wrought in me all manner of concupiscence, Rom. 7.8. Ferus. not that the law is evill, or properly bringeth forth or causeth sinne, but mans corrupt nature thereby taketh occasion, and rebelleth against the commandement, and so sin which before lay hid and secret, is made more manifest and beginneth to shew it selfe: see Rom. 7.12.13.

5. Places of Controversie.

1. Conf. Not Protestants but Papists and Romanists, the raysers of rebellion and plotters of treason.

Vers. 1. THen Moses and Aaron went and said to Pharaoh, &c. thus saith the Lord God of Israel. Ferus hereupon giveth this note, that Moses notwithstanding the unjust vexation of his people, doth not cause them to rebellion, but goeth in peaceable manner to the King: so farre he collecteth well: then he proceedeth, and very untruly chargeth the Protestants, whom he blasphemously calleth Heretickes, in this manner. Qui specioso quodam obtentu, nescio cujus libertatis & religionis Evangelicæ, omnia humana juxtaq; divina jura confundentes ac pervertentes rapinis incendiis q; ac cædibus sectam suam fundare, & propagare ac confirmare conati sunt: Who by a goodly pretense of (I know not what) libertie, and the religion of the Gospell, confounding and perverting all humane and divine lawes, endevour by rapines, burning and slaughter to establish, propagate and confirme their sect. Perer. in cap. 5. disput. What could be said or devised more maliciously against the profession of the Gospell? If one word onely be changed, and for Evangelicæ in Pontificiæ: if for the religion of the Gospell he had said the Popish religion, nothing could be more truly: For we call the heaven and earth to witnesse, that we are free from such imputation of rebellion, as the late dayes of the Marian persecution in England can plentifully testifie, when many hundred Martyrs willingly laid downe their lives, like meeke lambes, and patiently committed their bodies to the fire, not inciting the people to any insurrection or stirring against their Prince. But the Romanists all the dayes of Queene Elizabeth, our late Sovereigne of blessed memorie, tooke a quite contrarie course: they would never suffer her to be at rest: but first attempted a rebellion in the North, after in Ireland, procured the Spanish nation to enterprise a professed invasion; wherein the Lord shewed himself protector from heaven: not contented herewith, they hatched as cockatrice egges many unnatural sons against her sacred person: but the Lord preserved his annointed from their wicked conspiracies granted her, in despite of them all, to end her dayes in peace. Since which time their heads have still working, and have disquieted, and endangered the state, first by conspiracie of some Popish Priests, combined with some more noble in birth, than in any other condition, or part of true nobilitie. And of late by the desperate plot of some miscreant Gentlemen, Jebusited by that wicked seed and seminarie of Rheims, they would have undermined the Parliament house, set the same on fire, and made an end at once of his sacred Majestie, with all his honourable States and Peeres: more cruell than Caligula, which wished that all the Senators of Rome had but one necke, that he might have stricken it off at once. Now let all men judge whether these be not the men rather which pervert all humane and divine lawes, which with fire and sword would make havocke of all; the very enemies of all pietie and humane societie.

Pererius.

2. Conf. Against the Epicures that denie the divine providence.

Vers. 20. WHy hast thou afflicted this people, &c. This teacheth that afflictions and calamities which are sent upon the people, doe proceed from God, and are governed by his providence, contrary to the wicked opinion of Epicures, who did not acknowledge any divine providence in the world, but ascribed all to fortune and chaunce: like to these, whom the Prophet speaketh against, which are setled in their dregges, and said in their heart, the Lord will neither doe good nor evill, Zeph. 1.12.

6. Places of Exhortation and morall duties.

1. Obſerv. The neglect of the ſervice and worſhip of God procureth plagues.

Verſ.3. Leſt he run upon us with the peſtilence. The neglect then of the ſervice of God procureth divers plagues, as here Moſes feareth leſt the people if they ſhould not offer ſacrifice and doe ſervice unto God, ſhould be puniſhed: Simler. So the Apoſtle affirmeth that the Corinthians were chaſtiſed, ſome with ſickneſſe, ſome with death, for unreverent receiving of the Lords ſupper, 1 *Cor.*10.30.

2. Obſerv. Many receive the Goſpell joyfully at the firſt, but after fall away.

Verſ.21. The Lord looke upon you and judge. At the firſt this people when Moſes brought them a joyfull meſſage of their deliverance, were glad and thankfully received that gladſome tidings, chap.4.31. But now being more vexed and oppreſſed than before, and not ſeeing their preſent deliverance, they murmure againſt Moſes: Such is the propertie of many in theſe dayes, that are content to receive the Goſpell, as long as it bringeth eaſe and proſperitie with it, but in time of adverſitie they fall away: Ferus; whom our Saviour compareth unto ſeed ſowne in ſtony ground, which as ſoone as it riſeth, is parched away with the heate of the ſunne, *Matth.*13.5.

3. Obſerv. The Goſpell falſly challenged to be the cauſe of Gods judgements.

Verſ.21. Ye have put a ſword into their hand to ſlay us. They lay the fault upon Moſes and Aaron, and make them the cauſe of their trouble: So Achab charged the Prophet Elias, that he troubled Iſrael: Thus the heathen Idolaters accuſed the Chriſtians, as the cauſes of the plagues and famines that were in the world; as blind ſuperſtitious people doe now lay the like imputations upon the Goſpell, whereas their ſuperſtition and Idolatrie procureth Gods judgements, Simler.

4. Obſerv. In the time of affliction we muſt fly unto God by prayer.

Verſ.22. Moſes returned to the Lord, &c. By which example wee are taught in all our afflictions and neceſſities, to have recourſe unto God by prayer, as the Apoſtle preſcribeth, *If any man be afflicted, let him pray, Iam.*5.13. So the Prophet ſaith, *For my friendſhip they were my adverſaries, but I gave my ſelfe unto prayer, Pſal.*109.4.

5. Obſerv. Some things fall out in ſhew contrarie to Gods promiſes in the beginning to trie our faith.

Verſ.23. And yet thou haſt not delivered thy people. The Lord after he hath made gracious promiſes to his ſervants, doth ſuffer ſome things contrarie thereunto to fall out for the time; for the tryall of their faith and patience: God promiſeth unto Abraham to multiplie his ſeed as the ſtarres of heaven, and yet afterward bid him ſacrifice his ſonne, in whom the hope of his ſeed was: So God promiſed the Iſraelites proſperous ſucceſſe againſt Benjamin, yet at the firſt they were twice overcome: David was annointed King in Sauls place, yet hee was perſecuted of Saul, and driven from his countrie for a while: but at the length, the Lord made good to the full all his promiſes toward him, Perer.

Chap. VI.

1. The Argument and method.

This chapter hath two parts: the firſt is a declaration or rehearſall of the charge which the Lord giveth unto Moſes: which containeth a double commandement or commiſſion: the firſt to goe unto the Iſraelites, to promiſe them deliverance, unto *verſ.*20. The other unto Pharaoh, to *verſ.*14.

In the former three things are ſhewed: 1. The foundation of the peoples deliverance: which conſiſteth in the power of God, *verſ.*3. his promiſes made to the fathers, *verſ.*4. his compaſſion upon the afflictions of the people, *verſ.*6. 2. The promiſe followeth, partly to deliver them out of bondage, *verſ.*6.7. partly to bring them into the land of Canaan, *verſ.*8. 3. The effect is ſhewed, that the people becauſe they were afflicted hearkened not unto him. In the other commiſſion, firſt the Lords commandement is ſet downe, *verſ.*11. 2. Then Moſes refuſeth, *verſ.*12. 4. The renewing of the commandement.

In the ſecond generall part by way of digreſſion is inſerted the genealogie of Moſes, who came of Levi: wherein, firſt briefly the genealogie of the two elder ſonnes of Iacob, Ruben and Simeon, is ſet downe *verſ.*14.15. to make a way for Levi. Then the genealogie of Levi is expreſſed, and of his three ſonnes, of whom, *verſ.*17. Merari, *verſ.*19. of Kohath and of his ſonnes, Amram, (of whom came Moſes and Aaron, who are ſpecially inſiſted upon *verſ.*25. to the end) and of Izhar, *verſ.*21. and Uzziel, *verſ.*22.

3. The explanation of difficult questions.

Quest. I. Of the divers names which are given unto God in Scripture.

Hierome epist. 136. ad Marcellam. Vers. 3. I Appeared &c. by the name of almightie God. Hierome noteth that in the Scripture there are tenne severall names given unto God: 1. Eel, which signifieth strong. 2. Elohim. 3. Eloha, God, derived of the former word Eel, so called because he is mightie and powerfull. 4. Sabaoth, or Tzebaoth, the God of Hostes. 5. Helion, high, as Gen.14.22. he is called the most high. 6. Eheje, Exod.3.11. so named of his being. 7. Adonai, Lord. 8. Shaddai, Genes.17.1. omnipotent, all sufficient; which Aquila translateth strong, mightie. 9. Iah, which is contracted of Iehovah. 10. The last and tenth name is Iehovah.

Quest. II. Of the divers kinds of names given unto God.

THe names which are given unto God are of foure sorts: 1. Some are simply given unto God without respect to any other thing but himselfe, and either these names shew his essence, as Iehovah, or the persons of the Trinitie, as the Father, Sonne, Holy Ghost. 2. Other names have relation to the creature, so he is called the Creator, Lord, Governour, Preserver. 3. Some names include a negation, or a remouing of some imperfection incident to the creatures, so is God called immortall, immutable. 4. Some names are given from the properties which are essentiall in God, but accidentall in others, as hee is called just, wise, mercifull, gracious, ex Perer.

Quest. III. Of the excellencie of the name Iehovah.

BUt of all names which are given unto God, none doth more fully expresse unto us what God is than the name Iehovah: first it is derived of hajah, which in piel doth not onely signifie to be, but to give being: which best agreeth unto God, not onely for that he gave being and life unto all things, but giveth being to his promises, and gratiously effecteth whatsoever he hath promised to his servants: Simler. The Hebrewes also observe, that the letters of this name of Iehovah, jod, he and van, are called literæ sonorum quietis: The letters of breathing and of rest: whereby is signified, that God is the author of breath and life, and that in him onely there is true rest to be found. 3. Some of the Rabbines doe in this name comprehend the Trinitie, for Iehovah, they say, signifieth God begetting or giving essence, and if there be a God begetting, there must bee also a God begotten: and because it is impossible, but that betweene the God begetting and the God begotten there should bee a coeternall and consubstantiall love, therefore in this name is insinuated the holy Spirit the God of love. 4. Hereupon some also thinke that our Saviour alludeth to this name, when he thus saith in his prayer, Father I have manifested thy name unto the men, whom thou gavest me, Ioh.17.6. that is, hee declared openly the doctrine of the Trinitie, commanding his Disciples to baptise in the name of the Father, of the Sonne, and of the Holy Ghost: Perer. 5. Beside, whereas some other names of God, as Adonai, Elohim, are communicable unto creatures, as to Angels and men; the name Iehovah is not communicated to any but given onely unto God: Simler.

Quest

Quest. IV. The name Iehovah understood of Christ.

SOme thinke that the name Iesus is derived of Iehovah, shin, being inserted onely to signifie the assumption of the humane nature: but the Angell giveth another interpretation of the name Iesus, because Christ should save the people from their sinnes, Matth. 1. so that it is rather derived of Iesuah, salvation, than of Iehovah: Simler. But howsbever it is for the derivation of this name, the signification doth most properly agree unto Christ, who is indeed God Iehovah: for so the Prophets speaking of Christ doe call him Iehovah, as Ierem. 22. 61. This is the name whereby they shall call him, Iehovah our righteousnesse. And as now the Lord calleth himselfe Iehovah, because of this powerfull deliverance of the Israelites out of the bondage of Egypt: so Christ shewed himselfe Iehovah in delivering of us from the spirituall thraldome of Satan, Borrh.

Quest. V. Of the right pronuntiation of the name Iehovah.

FUrther, there is some difference in the pronuntiation of this word Iehovah, which is called tetragrammaton, because it consisteth of foure letters, he, jod, vah, he, as ΘΕΟΣ in Greeke, Deus in Latin have likewise foure letters. Irenæus doth seeme to call it Iaoth: Isodor, iodiod: Diodorus Siculus saith that the name of the Jewes God was Iao: lib. 2. cap. 5. So also Macrobius lib. 1. Saturnal. cap. 18. Clemens Alexandrinus Iau: lib. 5. Stromat. Theodoret saith that the Samarites pronounce it Iava, the Hebrewes Iabe: quæst. 15. in Exod. Perer. But the received pronuntiation is Iehovah. as may appeare by the abbreviation thereof used in Scripture, Iah; Exod. 15. 2. Iah is my strength. Hence also it is probable that the Heathen derived the oblique cases of Iupiter, Iovis, Iovi: for from Iehovah, the word Iove seemeth to be contracted, which might make Varro also to thinke, Deum Iudæorum esse Iovem, that Iove was the God of the Jewes, as Augustine alleageth out of Varro. Lib. 1. de cons. sens. Evang. cap. 22.

Quest. VI. Whether the name Iehovah be ineffable, that is, not to be pronounced.

BUt here will be moved a greater question, why this name Iehovah should be called ἀφεάτον, ineffable, not to be uttered, as the generall custome of the Hebrewes is at this day not to expresse it: 1. We refute Genebrards opinion, who confidently affirmeth that the word Iehovah is neither Iudaicum, nor Christianum, neither a Jewish, nor a Christian word, neither received of the Fathers, nor of the Rabbines, nor yet learned of Christ and his Apostles: to this it may be answered, that the Rabbines followed herein the received use of the Hebrewes: and whereas the Septuagint in stead of Iehovah read κύριος, Lord, it is no marvell, if in the new Testament, therein they follow the translation of the Septuagint, being of so great authoritie. 2. Bellarmine, because Hierome for Iehovah readeth here Adonai, contendeth that it ought alwayes to be so read: and that the points or prickes of this word Iehovah, are the same that are in Adonai: which moved Origen also in his Hexapla to read for Iehovah, Adonai. Contra. It is evident that Iehovah and Adonai are two divers words, and therefore not of one pronuntiation, and sometime they concurre together, as Gen. 15. 8. Iehovi Adonai: will they here read the same word twice Adonai, adonai? That the same prickes doe serve divers words, is not strange nor unusuall: and the Septuagint observe not this rule, for they read not Adonai, but κύριος. 3. A third opinion is, that the name Iehovah was of old and former times pronounced, but the right pronuntiation thereof was lost in the Captivitie of Babylon, as likewise the puritie of the Hebrew tongue; Perer. But this is a meere conjecture, and yet this being admitted, that some alteration of the tongue then happened, yet this sheweth no more that this word Iehovah should not bee pronounced, than other Hebrew words, but that onely the manner of pronuntiation is changed, which thing falleth out in all languages in continuance of time. 4. Others thinke, that Iehovah cannot be pronounced, because the letters, whereof it consisteth, make no perfect sound. 5. But the Hebrewes generally of a superstitious conceit doe forbeare from reading or naming Iehovah, even in their Synagogues, in the lecture of the Law, thinking that holy name thereby to be prophaned: and they would prove it by that place, Lev. 24. 16. that he which nameth the name Iehovah should be stoned. Contr. 1. That the name Iehovah may safely be pronounced, it is evident by this place, because the Lord himselfe sheweth a difference betweene his name Iehovah, and other names: which Moses could not have understood, if the Lord had not spoken it. Againe, if it bee not lawfull to be pronounced, neither is it to be written: if the Hebrewes doe the one, why not the other? they themselves doe allow that the high Priest may pronounce it in their solemne feasts in the Temple, when they use that publike blessing, which is prescribed Numb. 6. 24. Iehovah blesse thee and keepe thee: it is not therefore simply unlawfull to utter that reverend name. 2. That place alleaged serveth not their turne: for beside that the word nakab signifieth as well to pierce through, and consequently to curse, as to name: It is evident, that the Lord speaketh not of simple pronouncing the name of Iehovah, but of blaspheming it in contempt and disdaine, as there in the next verse before the word Kalal is used, which signifieth to curse. 6. Wherefore the conclusion is this, that wee grant the name Iehovah, not in respect of the letters, but of that which is thereby signified, the nature and essence of God, to be ineffable. Againe, it may be so called in some sense, because this reverend name is not communicable to any creature. And also, in that it is not to be prophaned or unreverently used, and upon light occasion, but in grave and serious matters: any of these wayes we confesse the name Iehovah to bee ineffable, but not in their sense, as though it were impietie at all to pronounce it, and that in the very reading of the Scripture we should forbeare to name it, but to pronounce some other word in stead thereof, Simler.

Quæsti-

Quest. VII. How the Lord was not knowne to Abraham, Isaac and Iacob by his name Iehovah.

Vers. 3. But by my name Iehovah was I not knowne unto them. 1. Some thinke that the Lord spake not at all unto Abraham, Isaac & Iacob, by the name Iehovah, but that Moses using that name in writing the storie of Gen. spake according to his time: Osiander. But this cannot be admitted, for then whereas the Lord is brought in saying to Abraham, I am Iehovah, Genes. 15. if the Lord did not there give himselfe that name, then he should be made to speake otherwise than he did. And againe, whereas Abraham giveth this name to the mountaine, Iehovah ijreh, the Lord will see or provide: Moses should write an untruth, if that Abraham had not indeed so called it. 2. Some other thinke, that the meaning is, that God had not shewed his power before in working of such wonders and miracles, as he did by the hand of Moses: Paulus Burgens. Rupertus. But beside that the Lord here saith, that he had shewed himselfe unto them by his name Shaddai, that is, omnipotent, and so mightie in workes: it is evident, that as great miracles were wrought before, as the taking up of Henoch, the drowning of the whole world, the burning of Sodom and Gomorrah with fire and brimstone, the turning of Lots wife into a pillar of salt. 3. Some thinke that by this speech is insinuated the great increase of the knowledge of God, which was more fully revealed to Moses, than to Abraham Isaac and Iacob, and afterward was greater in David, and so the neerer they came unto the times of the Messiah: and the Apostles excelled all that went before them in knowledge: sic Gregor. and Gloss. interlinear. But this seemeth not to be the proper meaning, for then it might as well be said to David, that his times compared with Moses, God was not knowne to Moses by his name Iehovah. 4. Others doe thus interpret: that God had not to any of them declared the meaning of this name Iehovah, as he did to Moses, Exod. 3. where he calleth himselfe, Eheje, which am, which is the sense of the name Iehovah, which signifieth the essence and being of God: and beside the Lord did more fully reveale his glorie unto Moses, than unto any other Prophet, Numb. 12.8. He shall see the similitude of God: Lyran. Cajetan. Thostatus. But if this were the meaning, then neither afterward unto the other Prophets should the Lord have beene knowne by the name Iehovah, seeing Moses in respect of cleere illumination hath the preeminence before all Prophets before or after. But that cannot bee, seeing God was revealed unto other Prophets by that name. 5. Oleaster thus expoundeth: i. That whereas Shaddai may be derived either of Shadad, which signifieth to spoyle or pray upon, or of Shad, which signifieth the teates, and so consequently plentie: and Iehovah is taken either from the roote Hevah, to be, or rather of Hovah, which signifieth destruction, as Exech. 7.26. God was knowne to the fathers both in giving them plentifull graces, and spoyling their enemies, to bestow on them, as he tooke from Laban, and gave unto Iacob: but now he began to be knowne by that name Iehovah, in destroying Pharaoh and the Egyptians, &c. But beside that Oleaster in deriving of the name Iehovah, dissenteth from all other; his collection is not generally true: for God had before shewed his power in destroying the wicked and ungodly, as in the floud, and in the overthrow of Sodome and Gomorrah. 6. Wherefore the best interpretation is this, that whereas the name is taken often for the thing signified by the name, as Act. 1.15. The number of the names that were in one place were, &c. i. the number of men: and Rev. 3. I have seven names in Sardis: So here the name Iehovah is taken for God himselfe: Perer. Then whereas the fathers did beleeve in God as omnipotent and all sufficient, able to effect his promises, which they possessed onely in hope, but saw them not fulfilled: Now the Lord will performe unto Israel, whatsoever he had promised to their fathers, in delivering them from their enemies, and giving the land, which he sware unto their fathers that hee would give unto their seed: as the Lord himselfe saith unto Moses, vers. 7.8. and thus will he be knowne by his name Iehovah, which signifieth being of himselfe: for so of God, in him, through him, and for him are all things; Iun. Simler.

Quest. VIII. Why the genealogie of Reuben, Simeon and Levi is inserted.

Vers. 14. These bee the heads of their fathers houses, &c. Moses setteth downe the genealogie of certaine tribes, that it might bee knowne, for the more certaintie of the storie, of what stocke those two famous Prophets Moses and Aaron came, the Lords Ambassadors to Pharaoh, and instruments of these great works and wonders wrought in Egypt, and of the deliverance of the people: Borrh. 1. And Moses setteth downe the generation of Reuben and Simeon, which were the two elder, that he might orderly proceed to Levi, lest hee might have beene thought onely to set downe his owne petigree: Simler. 3. And these three tribes are specially named, because they of all other were most hardly censured by Iacob Reuben for his incest, and the other two for their murther, lest they might have beene thought unworthily to have beene rejected: Perer. 4. Moses most insisted upon the genealogie of Levi, because that tribe was afterward chosen for the dignitie of the Priesthood, Simler.

Quest. IX. How Reuben is said here to be the first borne.

Vers. 14. The sonnes of Reuben the first borne. 1. He was the first borne by nature, but he lost the prerogative of the first borne by his incest: unto the which belonged a double preeminence, of one of a double part, which right was transferred to Ioseph, of whom came two tribes; the other of dignitie and authoritie over the rest of the brethren, which was conveyed to Iudah: Perer. 2. Of Reuben and Simeon, onely those are rehearsed, that came downe with Iacob unto Egypt, because Moses doth make haste to set downe at large the offspring of Levi, descending even unto Phinehes, the sonne of Eleazar the sonne of Aaron: Iun. 3. Some names are elsewhere otherwise termed, as he which is called Iemuel, is named in the Chronicles, Nemuel, and Sahar, Zerah. Obad here named is there omitted, either because he died in Egypt, or else his posteritie was extinct and ceased in the wildernesse, Simler.

Quest. X. Of the age of Levi.

Vers. 16. The yeeres of the life of Levi, were 137. Levi was elder than Ioseph by foure yeeres: for hee was the third sonne of Lea, borne in the third yeere of the second seven of Iacobs service, in the end whereof Ioseph was borne; hence divers certaine conclusions concerning the Chronologie of the Scripture may be inferred. 1. That Levi was 43. yeere old, when he came downe with Iacob into Egypt, for then was Ioseph 39. 2. That Levi lived 23. yeeres after the death of Ioseph, who lived an 110. yeeres, for Levi was 4. yeere elder than Ioseph, and lived 137. 3. That Levi lived after he came into Egypt 94. yeeres, unto the which if we adde 43. yeeres, which was his age before he went into Egypt, we shall have the whole life of Levi 137. yeeres. 4. Levi died 121. yeeres before the going of the Israelites out of Egypt: for all the time of their aboad in Egypt was 215. whereof Levi lived 94. in Egypt, which summe being deducted from 215. the residue is 121. yeeres. 5. It is gathered that Levi died before Moses birth 41. yeeres, for Moses was 80. yeeres old, when Israel was delivered out of Egypt, but Levi died 121. yeeres before that, then it will follow that he died 41. yeeres before Moses, ex Perer.

Quest. XI. Of the age of Kohath.

Vers. 18. Kohath lived 133. yeeres. 1. Thus read both the Latine, Septuagint, and Chalde, agreeable to the Hebrew: So that Eugubinus is deceived that saith Kohath, according to the Septuagint, lived but 130. yeeres. 2. Hence it is evident that Kohath died 2. yeere before Moses birth, and 82. yeeres before the deliverance of Israel: for Kohath comming downe with Levi into Egypt, may be supposed to be borne the same yeere: from whence to Moses birth are 135. yeeres, unto which adde 80. yeeres of the life of Moses, and we have the whole summe of 215. yeeres, the whole time of the Israelites being in Egypt. But hee lived onely 133. yeeres: then he must be dead two yeeres before Moses birth. 3. Hence Alexander Polyhistor is found to be in error, who holdeth, as Eusebius reporteth, Kohath to bee but 40. yeere old, when Levi died, who was rather than 94. yeere old, but 43 yeere younger than his father, being borne the same yeere when Levi went downe into Egypt.

Euseb. lib. 9. de præparat. Evang. cap. ult.

Quest. XII. Of the age of Amram.

Vers. 20. And Amram lived 137. yeeres. If Amram were borne 14. yeeres before Ioseph died, and begat Moses in the 77. yeere of his age as Alexander Polyhistor in Eusebius accompteth: then it is evident that he died 21. yeeres before the departing of Israel out of Egypt, and in the 60. yeere of Moses age, as may bee thus gathered: Ioseph lived after Iacob came downe into Egypt 71. yeeres, being then 39. and his whole age was 110. so Ioseph died 144. yeeres before the departure of Israel, for the foresaid numbers of 71. and 144. put together make the above said summe of 215. yeeres: it will then follow, that Amram borne 14. yeeres before Iosephs death, and living 137. yeeres, died 121. yeeres before the going forth of Israel, ex Perer.

Quest. XIII. Why the sonnes of Korah and Aaron are set downe.

Vers. 21. Also the sonnes of Izhar. 1. Moses in the rest of Levi his posteritie, descendeth but to the fourth degree, saving in Aaron and Korah, because of the one came famous Phinehes, and the sonnes of the other are expressed, because they died not in their fathers rebellion, Numb. 16. 11. 2. Hebron or Chebron, his posteritie is not set downe, it may be he was obscure, and therefore not mentioned, Borrh. 3. The rest here also are expressed because elsewhere they are spoken of, for the manifestation of the history: as Nadab and Abihu, Levit. 10. 1. Misael and Elzaphan, Levit. 10. 4. Eleazar, Numb. 20. and Ithamar, Exod. 38. 21. Iun.

Quest. XIV. Why Aaron tooke a wife of the tribe of Iudah.

Vers. 23. And Aaron tooke Elisheba daughter of Aminadab. 1. These two, Aminadab and Nahasshon his sonne, were Princes of Judah. 2. Thus Levi and Iudah doe match in marriage together, to signifie the conjunction and affinity that should bee betweene the regall and priestly office, Simler. Hitherto the positive law of not confounding the tribes by marriage was not made: and yet afterward notwithstanding it was lawfull for the Priests of Levi to take unto them wives of other tribes, for, because the Levites had no inheritance given them, by such marriages there could follow no inconvenience, by confusion of their inheritance. So Iehoiadah the high Priest married the King of Judahs sister, and Elizabeth wife to Zacharie the Priest was Cousin to Mary the blessed Virgin, of Judah, Simler.

Quest. XV. How Moses without ostentation setteth forth his owne commendation.

Vers. 27. These are that Moses and Aaron, &c. 1. Some thinke that these words should be inserted by Ezra, who digested the Scriptures into order, because it seemeth not to stand with the modestie of Moses and Aaron to set forth such a commendation of himselfe. But no such supposition is here necessarie: for Moses here ascribeth nothing to himselfe, but onely sheweth how they were set apart of God for this great worke: neither is all kind of boasting unlawfull, namely, such as is referred to the glory of God, as Saint Paul did say of himselfe, that he laboured more than all the Apostles. 2. As Aaron is in the former former verse set before Moses, as having the preeminence of nature, because he was eldest: so here Moses is set before Aaron, as having the preeminence of grace, who was first called, and from whose mouth Aaron was to receive direction, and by whose hand Aaron was consecrated to the Priesthood, Pellican.

QUEST. XVI. In what sense Moses saith he was of uncircumcised lips.

Vers. 30. I Am of uncircumcised lips, and how should Pharaoh heare me? &c. 1. Whereas the Septuagint read, of a small voyce, Augustine moveth this doubt, that Moses should be said to have so small a voce, as though Pharaoh onely had not beene able to heare them, quæst. 7. in Exod. But this doubt ariseth upon ignorance of the originall, for the true reading is, I am of uncircumcised lips. 2. As circumcision properly signifieth the cutting off that which is superfluous, in the bodie, and so consequently of any superfluitie in any power or facultie: so uncircumcision signifieth the remaining of that superfluous part, either in any part or power of the bodie, or of the soule: so because Moses stammered in his speech, and so doubled many superfluous syllables, in that sense he saith his lips, that is, his words uttered by his lips were uncircumcised: Iun. But that which is uncircumcised is also taken for that which is polluted and defiled, as S. Stephen saith, Act. 7. that the Iewes were of uncircumcised hearts and eares, Perer. But this is diligently to be marked, that God, notwithstanding Moses so oft complaineth of this naturall defect and imperfection, yet would not take it from him, but giveth him the supplie of his brother Aarons eloquence, that Moses should not be sufficient of himselfe, Perer.

4. Places of doctrine.

1. Doct. Knowledge still increased the neerer they approched to the time of the Messias.

Vers. 3. BVt by my name Iehovah was I not knowne. The Lord did more fully reveale himselfe to Moses than to Abraham: David saw more than Moses of Christ, as it is extant in the Psalmes, and evident by the particular prophesies of the Messiah: Daniel saw more than David, describing the very time of the Messiahs comming: The Apostles saw more than the Prophets, which desired to see those things which they saw, and did not see them, Matth. 13. Thus we see that still in processe of time knowledge increased, and more still was added unto it, and the neerer they came unto the time of the Messiah, the greater was the light: Gregor. homil. 16. super Ezechiel.

2. Doct. God performeth his promises for his owne mercy and truths sake.

Vers. 4. AS I made my covenant with them. The onely cause that moveth the Lord to be gracious to his people, is the remembrance of his covenant which proceeded from his love: there was nothing in this unthankfull people to procure the love of God toward them: So the Apostle saith: Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us, 1 Ioh. 4. 10. Piscat.

5. Places of confutation.

1. Conf. Of certaine Heretickes, that take exception to the authoritie of the booke of the Canticles.

Vers. 3. I Appeared unto &c. by the name of almightie God. Certaine Heretikes (because God was known to Abraham by his name Shaddai, to Moses by his name Iehovah, and there is no booke in Scripture beside the Canticles, wherein some of these names of God are not found) have impiously taken exception upon this reason against this booke. Contra. True it is that in the Canticles, which are indeed to set forth the sweet spirituall love betweene Christ and his Church, the fearefull and terrible names of God are omitted: in stead of omnipotent, the Church calleth Christ her Spouse, peaceable and lovely: for Lord, her Spouse, her beloved: for Iehovah, that ineffable name, she compareth him to a bundle of Myrrhe, and to an Ointment powred out: so Christ also giveth unto the Church amiable termes, as Sister, Spouse, the Dove and such like: and this is the cause why those fearefull names are omitted in that booke: Perer. And for the same cause Christ in the Gospell setteth not forth God under the names of Adonai, Shaddai, Iehovah, as in the Law, but under the name of God, and our Father, because the Gospell bringeth peace and comfort, not feare and terror: sic Zeigler.

2. Conf. Of the Iewes that attribute great force to the letters of the name Iehovah.

BVt by my name Iehovah was I not knowne. The Jewes ascribe much unto this name, affirming that by the vertue thereof miracles may be wrought, and that Christ did thereby effect his great works: they attribute unto this name power to cast out deuils, to adjure spirits, to heale diseases: and hereupon Magicians in their deviliish invocations abuse the names of God, Elohim, Adonai, Iehovah.

Contra 1. Words have no vertue or propertie beside the signification. If by words pronounced any thing bee effected, it proceedeth of faith, not of the sound of the words: if any words of themselves wrought any thing, most like the words of prayer; yet not the words, but the prayer of faith saveth, Iam. 5. 15. If it be answered, that the uttering of the name of Iehovah to such purposes is with faith, I replie that it cannot be, because faith is grounded upon the word: but they have no warrant out of the word that the syllables of the name Iehovah have any such force. 2. Indeed in the name of Iehovah, that is, by by faith in his name, many great works have beene done, but not by vertue of the letters and syllables. As the seven sonnes of Sceva a Jew, by the bare name of Iesus could doe nothing, Acts 19. 14. but by faith in his name were miracles wrought, Act. 3. 16. 3. Christ wrought miracles not by words and syllables, but because he was Iehovah, the Lord of life and power himselfe, he by his owne power brought forth these wonderfull works. 4. Iosephus writeth that Alexander meeting Iaddua the high Priest in his priestly garments, having the name of Iehovah in his forehead, did fall downe at his feet and worshipped. But this was not done by vertue of those letters, but by the power of God: for being secretly asked of Parmenio, why hee, whom all men adored, fell downe at the high Priests feet, answered: Non hunc se adorare, sed Deo cujus pontifex esset honorem illum habuisse: That he worshipped not him, but yeelded that honour to God, whose Priest he was. Iosephus lib. 11. Antiq. in fine.

6. Places of morall use.

1. Observ. The greater light of the Gospell requireth greater faith.

Vers. 3. But by my name Iehovah was I not knowne. This then was a just rebuke unto the Israelites, that whereas their fathers being a great way from the fulfilling of the promises, and having not such manifest revelations and signes, as they now had by the Ministerie of Moses, yet were more firme in faith than that present incredulous age, Simler. So shall it bee a just rebuke unto us, that live now in the cleere light of the Gospell, if wee be lesse zealous of Gods glorie, than they which have lived before us in the time of ignorance. Therefore let us give eare unto the Apostle: The night is past, and the day is at hand: let us therefore cast away the works of darknesse, and put on the armour of light, Rom. 13. 12.

2. Observ. Affliction at the first is grievous, but in the end comfortable.

Vers. 9. But they hearkened not unto Moses for anguish of spirit. Such is the condition and qualitie of affliction, that it maketh the heart heavie, and so disquieteth the soule, that it can not raise up it selfe to lay hold on any spirituall comfort: Simler. as the Apostle saith: No chastising for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous: but afterward it bringeth the quiet fruit of righteousnesse to them that are thereby exercised, Heb. 12. 11. Here the Apostle sheweth two divers effects of affliction, one which proceedeth of our naturall infirmitie, to worke sorrow and griefe; the other wrought by grace in those that make good use of their chastisement, it bringeth in the end peace and comfort.

3. Observ. God raiseth honourable instruments from meane places.

Vers. 16. These are the names of the sonnes of Levi, This tribe, by reason of Iacobs curse laid upon it, was in disgrace and contempt; yet God out of the same raised these honourable instruments Moses and Aaron. So God many times raiseth his servants out of the dust: as Mary was a poore despised handmaid in Israel, yet chosen to be the mother of Christ: the Apostles were taken some from base trades, other from ignominious offices, as Matthew that was a Publican.

4. Observ. God giveth his gifts diversly.

Vers. 30. I am of uncircumcised lips. Moses had not the gift of eloquence, but he had a most plentifull gift of heavenly wisdome and understanding: thus God distributeth his gifts diverslly: Pellican. Aaron had the gift of eloquence, but was in heavenly knowledge and illumination inferiour to Moses. So the Apostle saith, To one is given by the spirit the word of wisdome, and to another the word of knowledge, and to another diversities of tongues, 1 Cor. 12. 9. 10. Every one hath not all gifts, that one may stand in need of another.

Chap. VII.

1. The Method and Argument.

MOses appeareth the second and third time before Pharaoh, delivering the Lords message unto Pharaoh for the dismissing of his people, and upon his refusall sheweth signes, and calleth for the first plague, of the turning of the waters into bloud.

There are three parts of the whole Chapter.

The first containeth the renewing of the charge and commandement of God to Moses to goe unto Pharaoh, to verse 8. wherein these things are declared: 1. The authoritie which the Lord giveth to Moses over Pharaoh, vers. 1. 2. His commission what he shall speake, vers. 2. The event, Pharaohs refusall. 4. The end, that God may worke his great judgements in Egypt, vers. 5. Moses and Aarons obedience, with a description of their yeeres and age, vers. 6. 7.

The second expresseth the generall signe, which serveth for the confirmation of Moses calling, by turning his rod into a Serpent, from vers. 8. to vers. 14. wherein three things are further shewed: first, the commandement of God to Moses, vers. 8. Secondly, the execution by Moses, vers. 9. Thirdly, the event, the hardnesse of Pharaohs heart, vers. 13. with the occasion thereof, the Magicians counterfeit miracle in doing the like.

The

The third part describeth the first plague laid upon Egypt: 1. The denuntiation thereof by the Lord: containing the message to Pharaoh, *vers.*15.16. The matter or subject of the first plague, the water and fish therein, the one shall bee turned into bloud, the other shall die, *vers.*17. with the generall instrument Aarons rod, *vers.*19. 2. Then followeth the execution by Moses, *vers.*20. 3. Then the events follow: first, the fish die, the water stinketh, vers. 21. Secondly, Pharaohs heart is hardened, by reason of the like practice by the Egyptian Sorcerers, *vers.*22, 23. Thirdly, the endevour of the Egyptians in digging pits for water.

2. The divers readings.

B. G. cum cater. Vers.1. Aaron thy brother shall be thy Prophet. B.G.A.P.cum cater, shall be thine interpreter. L. the sense, but not the words: Nebi signifieth a Prophet.

B. G. cum cater. Vers.4. Pharaoh shall not hearken unto you, that I may lay my hand. B. G. and I will lay my hand. L.V.A. P. S. H. rather, when I have laid my hand I. Pharaohs hardnesse of heart is set forth, as the cause rather, why the Lord would send his judgemenrs, than an effect, as the former verse sheweth, and *chap.*3.19.

I. A. P. So Moses and Aaron did, as Iehovah commanded them, so did they. I. A. P. better than, Moses and Aaron did as the Lord commanded them: even so did they. B. G. cum cater. for the perfect distinction about comming betweene, divideth the first part of the sentence.

I. A. P. Vers.9. Shall be turned into a Dragon. I. A. P. S. rather than, a Serpent. B.G.V.L. Tannin signifieth a Dragon: yet he meaneth a Serpent: called a Dragon, because of the fearfulnesse and greatnesse of it, as Moses fled from it. *chap.*4.3.

B. G. L. Vers.18. The Egyptians shall be grieved to drinke: that is, loath. B.G. shall be troubled in drinking L. shall be wearied in drinking. I.V. shall not be able to drinke. S. shall labour. A.P. so laah signifieth, and it is sometime taken for to grieve, or loath, as Iob 4.2.

3. The explanation of difficult questions.

Quest. I. Of the divers appellations of the name of God.

Vers.1. I Have made thee Pharaohs God. This name and title of God is used and applied foure wayes in Scripture. 1. essentially, and so it is given onely unto the blessed Trinitie, and is not communicable unto any creature: 2. personally, and so it agreeth onely unto Christ as man: 3. according to the vaine opinion and estimation of men: so the Idols of the Gentiles are called gods, as 1 *Cor.*8.5. Though there be that are called gods, &c. 4. by way of similitude, as Princes and Magistrates in respect of their authoritie, wherein they represent God in earth, are called gods: so also Prophets, in respect of their divine knowledge, holy men for their sanctitie, and Angels for the excellencie of creation, and the ministers in regard of their divine function and calling, have that name and title given them: Perer. 2. To this agreeth also the distinction of Gregorie, that some are called gods nuncupativè, that is, by a kinde of stile and appellation, as Moses is here called Pharaohs God: but the Lord is called God essentially: *The God of Abraham, Isaac and Iacob, Exod.*3. *Gregor. hom.*8. *in Ezechiel.*3.

Quest. II. In what sense Moses is called Pharaohs God.

Moses is called Pharaohs God: 1. not onely for that from God, and in Gods name he declared his will unto him, for the delivering of his people, as Vatab. 2. nor yet, that he was as a Prince over to Pharaoh, as being mightier than he, and of greater power: as the Chalde readeth, and Simeon construeth: 3. but he is so called in respect of the divine authoritie given unto him, in bringing those great plagues upon Egypt, which made Pharaoh to feare him as God, and the Magitians afterward acknowledged, that he wrought by the finger of God: Perer. 4. Augustines note also is not here to be omitted, that otherwise Moses is said to be in Gods stead to Aaron, *Exod.*4. that is, a director of him in things belonging to God: otherwise here he is said to be Pharaohs God, that is, to execute judgement upon him, Augustine much to his purpose *quæst.*17. in Exod.

Quest. III. In what sense Aaron is called Moses Prophet.

Aaron thy brother shall be thy Prophet. 1. This word Prophet is taken five wayes. First, it signifieth such as did prophesie and foretell things to come, which in old time were called Seers, and in this sense this name also was given unto false Prophets, that tooke upon them to declare things to come, as also S. Paul calleth Epimenides the Cretensian Prophet, because he truly prophesied of the manners of that people, *Tit.*1, 2. They are said to prophesie, which had a speciall gift to sing and play upon instruments, as Asaph, and Heman, are said to prophesie upon their harpes, 1 *Chron.*25. 3. They also had the name of prophesying given them, which onely in the outward behaviour were like unto Prophets, that is, ons rauished for the time and beside themselves, as Saul is said to prophesie, when the evill spirit came upon him, 1. Sam. 18. 10. that is, he was as a man beside himselfe. 4. To prophesie is taken for the doing of some strange and miraculous worke, as the dead body of Elisha, is said to prophesie, Eccl. 48. because by the touching thereof, one was restored to life. 5. To prophesie is to expound and interpret, as S. Paul useth this word, 1. Cor. 14. comparing prophesying and the gift of tongues together: and in this sense is Aaron Moses Prophet, that is, his interpreter and spokesman to Pharaoh. Peterius.

Quest. IV. Why the tribes of Israel are called armies.

Vers. 4. And bring forth mine armies. 1. The Israelites are so called in respect of their numbers, because every tribe of them by it selfe was able to make an army: for if the summe of 600000. be divided into 12. partes, each part will make. 50000. Simler. 2. Beside, this sheweth that they should come forth of Egypt, not as men afraid, or fleeing, but with courage and strength: as chap. 13. 18. it is said, they went up armed or well appointed out of Egypt. 3. Hereby mystically is signified the great numbers of servants and people of God: Borrh. 4. They came up by their armies, that is, by troupes and companies, for as yet their commonwealth was not constituted, nor distributed into tribes. Iunius.

Quest. V Of Moses age.

Vers. 7. Now Moses was 80. yeere old. 1. To this agreeth S. Stephens narration that Moses was forty yeere old when he fled out of Egypt, and that forty yeere more was expired before he returned into Egypt, Act. 7. 23. 30. 2. This is inserted concerning Moses and Aarons age, for the further evidence of the story, and to serve for the chronology of the Scripture and computations of times. 3. And in that Moses and Aaron were called to place of governement being now aged, it sheweth that it is not fit, that the publike administration of offices should be committed to young men, especially such as are too young in gifts necessary for governement.

Quest. VI. Whether Pharaoh asked a signe? and whether a signe may be required.

Vers. 9. If Pharaoh speake unto you, saying, shew a miracle, &c. 1. Though it be not expressed afterward, that Pharaoh asked a miracle, yet it is not to be doubted, but that according to Gods direction to Moses, he first shewed not this signe till Pharaoh had called for it, because it is said, vers. 10. that they did, as the Lord commanded. 2. But to aske a miracle, is not alwayes peculiar to the wicked: sometime the godly may require a miracle for the confirmation of their faith, as Gedion did. But Pharaoh here asketh a signe of a captious minde, that if Moses could not have warranted his calling by a signe, hee might justly have rejected him: and yet after that the signe was shewed, he would not give place, but seeketh other evasions. 3. This is the third time that this signe was shewed, once in mount Horeb, where the Lord gave this signe to Moses, and afterward before the people to assure them of Moses calling, Exod. 4. and now here before Pharaoh. Ex Simler.

Quest. VII. Of the divers names of the Egyptian Magicians here used.

Vers. 10. Then Pharaoh called for the Wisemen and Sorcerers. 1. Here are foure words used to describe the Magicians of Egypt, the first is chacamim or chacam to be wise: which Simlerus taketh to be a generall name of that superstitious sect of Magicians, that challenged unto themselves the onely opinion of wisdome, being full of sophistry and deceit, (as the Septuagint read (Σοφισταὶ) rather than of true wisdome. Vatablus saith, the next word Sorcerers, is an exposition of the former. But I thinke rather it was a peculiar kinde of Magicke, whereof there are set downe 8. severall professions, Dent. 18. 10. and the same that is there called jidgheni, a wisard, of jadagh, to know: the Septuagint readeth γνωστὴν ϑ, a marker or observer of signes, such as by the intrals of beasts and such other observations gave conjecture, as Gen. 41. 8. they are taken for those which were cunning in the interpreting of dreames.

The next word is mecasphim, praestigiatores, whom we call Juglers, which deceived mens senses: the Septuagint read φαρμακοὺς, veneficos, or as the Latine, maleficos, such as by sorcery bewitched men or beasts.

The third sort are charturnim, which are taken to be the Genethliaci, the casters of mens nativities. The Septuagint call them ἐπῳδοὺς, enchanters: R. Levi taketh them to be those which by naturall meanes seeme to doe strange things, while their craft is not perceived, as here they seeme to make serpents of rods. R. Saadias would derive it of chor and atam, which signifieth an hole, and secret, because they did hide in secret holes and places, as in graves, those whom they consulted with, and which gave answer unto them: but this seemeth to be curious.

The fourth word is lahate of lahat, which signifieth fire, or the blade of a sword, as Gen. 3. 24. because Magicians use not onely words to enchant with, but other instruments: Aben Ezra. But their enchantments are rather so called because they deceive men, making them to take one thing for another, as the eye is easily deceived in shaking of a bright sword: Borrh.

Quest. VIII. Of the divers kindes of magick.

Besides these here named, there were other kindes of Magick, as Plinie rehearseth divers, as how they divined by water, by the aire, by the starres, by basons, shadowes, talke with the dead, lib. 30. c. 11. 2. And more out of Proclus and Porphyrius, sheweth, that they made two kindes of Magick, the one was theurgia, which by certaine sacrifices, and a fained purity of the body, and by other rites, did invocate, as they thought, the good spirits: the other was called goetia, because they used mourning in invocating of ſpirits; and Necromantia, becauſe they conſulted with the dead. 3. Suidas maketh three ſorts: Magia, art Magicke, which was by invocating of the ſpirits, for the effecting of ſome good worke, as were made to beleeve. Goetia, which by mourning called upon the ſpirits of the dead: Pharmacia, they uſed or applied any venomous or poyſoned thing. Ex Perer. 4. But to know the divers deviliſh vices which Magicians uſed, we can have no better direction than from the Scripture it ſelfe, Deut. 18. Where beſide theſe two kindes before rehearſed, of jidgeni the wiſard, and caſheph, the Jugler or deceiver, there are ſix more magicall practices ſet downe: The firſt is Kaſam, the diviner, μαντευόμενος, Septuagint, ſuch as tooke upon them to tell of things which were loſt, and to declare hid matters and things to come, ſuch as divined by viſions, as Micah. 3. 6.

The next is meghonen, an obſerver of times, Planetarius, a Planetary, ſuch as by the aſpect of the ſtarres, moving of the cloudes, and by ſuch like tooke upon them to prognoſticate, not of naturall things, but of civill and humane affaires: ſo is the word uſed, Iſai. 2. 6. They are Southſayers, as the Philiſtims: and what the Philiſtims were we may read, 1. Sam. 6. who by the going of the cart, and by the way it tooke, did take upon them to finde out the author of the plagues, that were ſent upon them: the Septuagint reade, καὶ ὀνειροπολοῦντες, ſuch as obſerve words and uſe ſpels.

The third is nachaſh, an Augur or Conjecturer, οἰωνιζόμενος, ſuch as by the flying of birds, or ſuch like doe make conjectures: as they that count the croſſing of a hare the way, ominous, and ſuch like.

The fourth is caſheph, the plurall whereof is caſhphim, deceivers, touched before.

The fift is chober, chaber: the Inchanter, ἐπάδων ἐπῳδήν, Septuagint, that uſeth inchantment, as it is compounded by anothet word, Pſal. 58. 6. Iachaſh, which ſignifieth to mutter or whiſper, ſuch as take upon them to charme Serpents, and adjure Devils, and to doe great cures by hanging inchanted things about the necke, or ſuch like: the word chabar ſignifieth to joyne, becauſe ſuch have a league and conjunction with evill ſpirits.

The fixt is ſhoel obh, that asketh of familiars, ἐγγαστρίμυθος, ventriloquus, Septuagint, that give anſwers, as though a ſpirit or familiar ſpake within them: for obh ſignifieth a bottle, or the belly ſwelling and profeſſed up, and ready to braſt, as Iob. 22. 20.

The ſeventh is jidgoni, the Wiſard, ſpoken of before.

The eight is doreſh el hametim: ἐπερωτῶν τοὺς νεκρούς, that inquireth of the dead, ſuch as make men beleeve they can raiſe up the dead to conſult with them: whereas it is the Devill in their likeneſſe: as the witch of Endor brought up the Devill in likeneſſe of Samuel, 1. Sam. 28.

Quest. IX. Of the firſt author and inventor of art Magick.

Verſ. 11. These Charmers of Egypt. Though Egypt was much given to this deviliſh invention of Magicke, yet neither were they the firſt founders, nor the onely profeſſors of it. 1. Moſt Writers doe make Zoroaſtres of Perſia the author of it, as Plinie and Diogenes Laertius, Iuſtinus: Plinie writeth of him, that hee only of all men that ever were laughed the ſame day hee was borne, and his braine ſo moved up and downe, that it would remove or put off the hand laid upon it, which, they ſay, was a ſigne of his great and myſticall knowledge: the author of the Scholaſticall hiſtory ſaith, that this Zoroaſtres was Ninus, who wrote this art Magicke, and the ſeven liberall Arts in fourteene pillars, ſeven of bricke and ſeven of bricke, to preſerve them from the deſtruction of the world, one by water, the other by fire. 2. Concerning the antiquity of Zoroaſtres, hee was neither ſo ancient, as ſome write, that hee was ſixe yeeres elder than Plato, or five thouſand yeeres before the battell of Troy, as Hermippus, (as Laertius teth him) nor yet was he ſo late, as Xantus Lydius maketh him to be, but ſix hundred yeeres before Xerxes expedition into Greece. For Zoroaſtres was in the time of Ninus when Abraham lived, from whom birth to the firſt Olympiad are counted 1268. yeeres: and the battell of Troy was 407. yeeres before the beginning of the Olympiades. But Xerxes paſſage into Greece followeth in the 75. Olympiade, and his death in the 108 Olympiade: by this it is evident, that Zoroaſtres was neither ſo many yeeres before the firſt, nor ſo few as the reſt imagine. 3. But Caſſianus deriveth the firſt invention of Magicke from before the floud: for whereas Adam having the knowledge of the celeſtiall bodies and elements, taught the ſame unto Seth: which kinde of knowledge continued uncorrupt in the righteous ſeed, till they joyned in marriage with the poſterity of Cain, then they abuſed and prophaned the ſame to the ſeeking out of ſuperſtitious and Magicall devices: which wicked inventions they ſay were preſerved by Seth, and by him graven in certaine plates of mettall: ſic Caſſianus collat. 8. cap. 21. So theſe deviliſh practiſes continued along, and were diſperſed in the world: they were rife in Canaan in Moſes time, as may appeare by the Lawes made againſt ſuch in divers places, but eſpecially Deut. 18. 10. And afterward about the time of the Trojane warre theſe Magicall ſtudies were much followed, as Homers fable of Circe ſheweth. Orpheus among the Theſſalians, and Oſthanes, that accompanied Xerxes in his warre againſt Greece, were famous in this kind. Pythagoras, and after him Empedocles, Democritus, Plato ſeemed to make great account of them. In the Apoſtles times, Iarchas among the Indian Drachmanes, Teſpeſion among the Gymnoſophiſts of Æthiopia excelled in this kinde, and Simon Magus was in that time. But Apollonius Tyaneus in Domitians time went beyond them all. 5. And what might be the cauſe, that theſe Diabolicall ſtudies received ſuch liking in the world, Plinie declareth: becauſe this Magicall profeſſion boaſteth of three notable Arts, Phyſicke or Medicine, the Mathematikes, and a colour or ſhew of Religion is the third: and thus mens mindes were bewitched therewith. But whoſoever was the maiſter and inſtrument to ſet abroach theſe impious Arts, Satan was the author and inſpirer of them: for he was a lier from the beginning, and when hee telleth a lye hee ſpeaketh of his owne, as our Saviour ſaith. Ioh. 8. 44.

also confesseth as much, that the mysticall knowledge of these things came first from the spi-selves: Quibus rebus gaudeant, quibus alliganter dii hominibus significarunt: ad hac quibus rebus
, quæ illi offerenda sint, &c. The Gods (hee meaneth such Gods as Magicians worship) them- told unto men, what things they were pleased with, and with what they are bound; and further they are forced, and what is to bee offered unto them. Ex Perer. Which testimonie of Porphyrie Ex. Eusebio lib. 5. cap. 7. de præparat. Evang.
sheweth what we are to thinke of those usuall receits against witchcraft, as in scratching the burning of some part, or seething of the urine, and such like: that these were Satans owne revelations at the first in making carnall men beleeve that he is bound with such things.

Quest. X. Who were the ringleaders and chiefe of the Egyptian Magitians.

But further it be inquired, who these Magicians were; 1. Saint Paul sheweth that the principall of them were Iannes and Iambres, 2. Tim. 3. which Paul had either by some certaine tradition, or by inspiration, for in Scripture their names are not found; so thinketh Chrysostome, Theodoret, and Theophy- lact upon that place. It seemeth that some Heretikes afterward, by occasion of these names framed a booke of Iannes and Iambres, which Origen and Ambrose count among the Apocryphall bookes, and of like authority, 2. Other forren Writers also have made mention of these two, Iannes and Iambres, as Nu- menius Pythagoricus (as Eusebius reporteth) writeth that these two resisted Moses, whom he calleth Mu- saeus the Captaine of the Jewes: Plinie also calleth them Iamne and Iotape, whom hee saith, were many Origi. tract. 35. in Matth. Amb. of. in hunc librum. Euseb. lib. 9. de prapar. Evang.
hundred yeeres after Zoroastres, wherein he is deceived, for from Abrahams birth, which was in the time of Ninus, when Zoroastres flourished were not above 500. yeeres. 3. But that seemeth to bee very strange which Palladius reporteth in the life of Macarius, if it be true: that whereas Iannes and Iambres in their life had made them a sepulchre, in a pleasant place, set with all manner of fruitfull trees, and therein made a fountaine of water, which place was kept by evill spirits: Macarius having a desire to see this place, and approaching thither, was met with 70. Devils in divers shapes, gnashing their teeth, and running upon him: but he not affraid passed along, and came to the sepulchre, where the great Devill appeared unto him with a naked sword, shaking it at him, and there he saw a brasen bucket, with an iron chaine, wasted and consumed, and pomegranates dried, having nothing in them. Wee may worthily suspect that some Friers finger hath beene tempering with this fable, as in other reports of the Saints lives, to get credit unto them with fained miracles. A strange report if true, of the place where Iannes and Iambres were buried.

Quest. XI. Whether things done by magicall inchantment are in shew or in truth.

NOw it followeth to shew by occasion of this conversion of rods into serpents wrought by these Egyptian Magitians, whether such things done by magicall inchantment are verily so effected, or are in shew and appearance only. 1. It cannot bee denied, but that many apparitions brought forth by sorcery, are meere illusions, as the transforming of Ulysses companions into divers shapes of beasts: so the Arcadians are said by swimming over a certaine river to bee turned into wolves. Augustine writeth of August. lib. 18. de civit. Dei. cap. 18.
certaine women in Italy, that by giving certaine inchanted cheese unto passengers, changed them into beasts, and used them to carry their burdens for a time. The like Philostratus reporteth of Apollonius, that as he sat at the table, brasen men served them with drinke, and filled the cups like butlers; and how the image of Memnon in Egypt, as soone as the Sunne rising shined upon the mouth, began to speake:
and how Vespesion the chiefe of the Gymnosophists in Æthiopia caused an elme with a low and soft voice to salute Apollonius. So to this purpose in the Cannons mention is made of certaine women, that were Causa 6. qu. 3. cap. Episcop.
so deluded of Satan, that they thought they did ride in the aire in the night, and were brought unto a solemne place, where they did feast with Diana, and Herodias. 2. These and such like were but done in conceit and imagination: for the Devill cannot in truth bring forth the substance of Lions and such other beasts, which cannot come without generation and not at once but in continuance of time they come to their growth: and seeing to speake and worke are actions incident to man, they cannot bee performed in truth by images and dead things: And whereas they have seemed by Magike to raise up the dead, is also written of Apollonius, that is beyond the Devils power, for the soule being immortall, the Devill hath no command over it, it is in Gods hand: and though he had, yet can he not prepare the body, being without naturall heate and life to bee a fit and apt instrument againe for the soule. 3. Yet notwithstanding, that some workes of Magicians are counterfeit, it followeth not that all should bee so:
for Scripture sheweth that a false Prophet may shew a signe or wonder, that may come to passe, Deut.
13. Apollonius principles and receipts were currant through the world, whereby they used to stay the course of waters, and incursion of wild beasts, which Justinus Martyr thinketh might bee done, by Iustin. respons. ad. 24. qu. Orthodox.
the great skill which hee had in naturall things. The Roman histories remember, how Claudia Vestalis, to prove her chastity did move a ship her selfe alone, tying her girdle to it, that many men and oxen could not stirre. So Tuscia another vestall Virgin, for the triall of her chastity, carried water in a sieve from the Tiber unto the Capitoll, Plin. lib. 28. cap. 2. These things seeme verily to have beene so done, but by operation rather of Satan, to keepe the prophane Gentiles still in blindnesse and unbeleefe, than by ministery of the good Angels, as thinketh Thomas Aquinas, ex Perer. 4. Now that many such things are truly effected by Sorcerers through the power of Satan, it is evident by these two reasons: first, because Satan by the subtility of his nature, and long experience hath great knowledge of naturall things, he knoweth their sympathies, and Antypathies, their qualities and operations, he can apply and temper causes together, and so is able to worke wonders, though not true miracles, which are beside the order and course of nature, which Satan cannot invert. As to put this for an example, the small fish which is called Echinus, or Remora, is able by applying himselfe to the ship to stay it, though it bee under saile, and have both the sea and winde with it: which Plinie sheweth to have beene found by experience, how that Antonius his ship at one time, and Caius at another were stayed by this fish: Now if a Magitian should secretly apply this fish to a ship, hee might bee thought to worke a great wonder, and yet it should bee naturall. The other reason is, that beside the knowledge of nature, Satan is skilfull in all humane arts and sciences, by the benefit whereof even men doe worke wonders: as Archimedes was able to stirre a ship with his hand by certaine engines which he had prepared, which a great number of men by strength could not doe: He also devised such kinde of instruments, when Marcellus the Roman Captaine besieged Syracusa, whereby they so annoyed their enimies and made such havock, and slaughter of the Romanes, that Marcellus himselfe said, they fought not against men, but against the Gods. Architas the Pythagorean, by Mechanick art, made a dove of wood to flie. Severinus Boetius serpentes of brasse to hisse, and birds of brasse to sing: If men can make such admirable things by art it need not seeme strange, if by the power of Satan wonderfull matters are sometime compassed. Ex Perer.

Plin. lib. 32. cap. 1.

Wonderfull things wrought by art.

Quest. XII. What things are permitted unto Satan to doe.

THe next point to be shewed here is, what things, which seeme to us to be miraculous, the Devill may doe by himselfe, or his ministers, the Magitians. First in generall, wee are here to consider a twofold action of spirits, the one is immediate; as they can themselves passe speedily from place to place, as Iob. 1. Satan came from compassing the whole earth: for if the Sunne being of a bodily substance, can compasse the heavens of such a huge circuit, many hundred thousand miles about, in the space of 24 houres, the spirits can doe it with greater agility: they have also power to transport bodies from place to place, as our Saviour yeelded his body to be transported of Satan, to the tempters further confusion. The other action is mediate, as Satan can transport, and bring together the causes of things, which being tempered and qualified, may bring forth divers naturall effects, which are wrought immedialy by the naturall causes, yet mediately by Satan which bringeth them together. Secondly, in particular these things are permitted to Satans power, he can transport bodies and carry them from place to place, as the Ecclesiasticall stories make mention, how Simon Magus was lift up on high in the aire by the power of Satan, but by the prayer of Peter was violently throwne downe: so sometime serpents, and men have beene seene flie in the aire: Albertus Magnus saith, that oxen have rained and fallen out of the aire; all which may be wrought by the conveyance of Satan. 2. The Devill can suddenly convey things out of ones sight, as Apollonius from the presence of Domitian. Thus it may be that Gyges, if that report be true, not by the vertue of a ring, but by the power of Satan became invisible. 3. They can make images to speake and walke, as before wee heard of Apollonius brasen butlers, and the image of Memnon, the image of Iuno Moneta, being asked if she would remove to Rome, answered, Se velle, that she would, and the image of fortune being set up, said, rite me consecrastis, yee have consecrated mee aright. Maxim. lib. 1. cap. ultim. de simulachris. But the Devill cannot give power unto these things dead, to performe any action of life, but that hee moveth and speaketh in them: as the Angell did Balaams Asse to speake. 4. The Devill can cause divers shapes and formes to appeare, as of men, and other things in the aire, or on the ground, as in the life of Antonie the Devill appeared to him in the shape of terrible beasts. 5. And as he can counterfeit the shape of living things, so also of others both naturall, as of gold, silver, meat, and artificiall, as of pots, glasses, cuppes: for if cunning artificers their skill can make things so lively as that they can hardly bee discerned from that which they resemble, as Plinie writeth of Zeuxis grapes, lib. 35. cap. 11. much more can Satan coyne such formes and shapes as Philostratus, lib. 4. of the life of Appolonius maketh mention, how a certaine Lamia pretending marriage to one Menippus a young man, shewed him a banquet furnished with all kinde of meat and precious vessels, and ornaments: which Appolonius discovered to be but imaginarie things, and shee confessed herselfe to bee a Lamia. 6. The Devill by his subtile nature can so affect the sensitive spirits, and imaginative faculty, as that they shall represent unto the inward sense, the phantasie of some things past, or to come, and cause them to appeare to the outward sense, as wee see that franticke persons imagine many things that they see things which are not, and there is no doubt but that the Devill can effect that, which naturall disease worketh. 7. Hee can also conforme the fantasies of those that are asleep, to represent unto them things, which the Devill knoweth shall come to passe, and by this meanes to bring credit to dreames. 8. In some things the Devill can interpose himselfe, and helpe forward those superstitious means which are used to prognosticate; as the Augurs by the flying and chirping of birds, by looking into the intrals of beasts, by casting of lots, tooke upon them to divine, and the Devill by his mysticall operation concurred with them, more strongly to deceive. 9. The Devill can stirre up in naturall men the affections of love, anger, hatred, feare and such like: as he entred into the heart of Iudas, Iohn 13. 1. and that two wayes, either by propounding such externall objects, as helpe to inflame, and set on fire such affections, and by conforming the inward phantasie to apprehend them: Hieromi in the life of Hilarion how a certaine virgin by Magicall enchantments was so ravished with the love of a young man, that she was mad therewith.

Divers particulars of strange workes which Satan hath power to doe if God permit.

Lamia is taken for a spirit in the shape of a woman.

Quest. XIII. How divers wayes Satans power is limited.

These things before recited, Satan by his ſpirituall power is able to doe, yet with this limitation, that his power is reſtrained of God, that he cannot doe what he would: but ſometime the Lord letteth him loſe, and permitteth him to worke, either for the triall and probation of his faithfull ſervants, as is evident in Iob, or for the puniſhment of the wicked, as hee was a lying ſpirit in the mouthes of Ahabs falſe Prophets: for if Satan had free libertie to exerciſe his power, like as hee ran upon the heard of ſwine, and caſt them all headlong into the ſea, ſo hee were able to force men into many dangers, both of their bodies and ſoules: Ex Perer. Beſide this abſolute limitation and reſtraint of Satan when God doth ſtay him from working; there are two other kindes of inhibiting, for neither hath Satan ſuch free ſcope, to exerciſe his rage upon the faithfull, as hee hath power to worke upon the children of diſobedience: for they are his proper ſubjects: and in them the God of this world blindeth their mindes, 2. Cor. 4.4. and they are taken in the ſnares of Satan at his pleaſure, 2. Tim. 2.26. But over the faithfull hee hath no command, to delude, deceive, or ſeduce them, neither to invade them at all without ſpeciall licence from God, as Iobs tentation ſheweth. And againe though the Lord for ſome cauſes beſt knowne to himſelfe doe give him leave to trie his children, yet God ſo qualifieth his aſſaults and tentations, as that they effect not that which Satan intendeth, but are diſpoſed of to that end, which the Lord propoundeth: as Satan deſired to winnow Peter as wheate, and thorowly to have ſifted him, but Chriſt withheld him that his faith failed not, Luk. 22. 31, 32. and that his tentation tended not to his deſtruction.

God divers wayes limiteth the power of Satan.

Concerning this threefold limitation of Satan, I thinke it not amiſſe here to adde the ſentence of Auguſtine. For the firſt, that Satan cannot doe what he would, but his power is reſtrained, he thus writeth: Quantum poſſet nocere diabolus, quantum vult, non aliquis juſtorum remaneret: If the Devill might hurt, as much as he would, not any of the juſt ſhould remaine. For the ſecond, that Satans power is more free and abſolute over the wicked, he thus ſaith: In filiis diffidentiæ tanquam in ſuis mancipiis operatur, quemadmodum homines in pecoribus: In the ſonnes of unbeliefe he worketh, as in his owne veſſels, as men upon their cattel. Againe: Sicut homo de pecore ſuo facit quod vult, de alieno pecore ut faciat, expectat ſibi dari poteſtatem domini eſt: As a man doth what hee will with his owne cattell, but with another mans he cannot doe any thing, but expecteth firſt that leave be given him of the owner. For the third, that when the Lord permitteth Satan to aſſault his owne ſervants, yet he moderateth the action, that Satan worketh not his will upon him, but what he intendeth for their deſtruction, the Lord directeth to be onely for their probation, Auguſtine alſo thus inferreth: Utitur Deus Angelis malis, non tantùm ad puniendos malos, ut in Achab, ſed etiam ad probandos & manifeſtandos bonos, ſicut fecit in Iob: God uſeth evill Angels not only to puniſh the wicked, as in Achab, but to prove and make knowne the good, as he did in Iob. Thus then is this point determined: 1. The Devill hath not now ſuch power as before his fall: as Auguſtine ſaith: Sunt nobis potentiores, propter quam tam firmi nunc ſunt ac ſi in priſtino ſtatu permanſiſſent: They are mightier than wee are, that we ſo ſtrong as if they had remained in their former eſtate. 2. The good Angels have greater power and prevailing upon the creatures than the evill. Auguſtine: In hac Angelis longe amplior poteſtas eſt bonis & potentior & major bonis: The Angels both good and bad have greater power than man over theſe inferiour creatures, and yet the good have greater power than the evill. 3. Satans power is limited, he doth not what hee will. 4. The Devill hath more command over the wicked, than power over the righteous. When he practiſeth againſt the righteous, yet his malice is reſtrained, God turneth the tentation to that end which ſhall be to his glory and the good of his children.

Auguſt. in Pſal. 61.

Auguſt. in Pſal. 77.

Auguſt. ibid.

Auguſt. cont. Epiſt. Secund. Cap. 10.

Auguſt. in Pſal. 77.

From hence may bee inferred two concluſions: firſt, that righteous and faithfull men are not altogether freed from the aſſaults and invaſions of Satan: as S. Paul felt in himſelfe the pricke of the fleſh, the meſſenger of Satan, ſent to buffet him, 2. Cor. 12. And as hee may trie them with ſpirituall tentations, ſo he may, if God permit, torment them with corporall vexations, as Iobs example ſheweth: and to this purpoſe Auguſtine concludeth well: Contra multiformes damonum incurſus, quis ſua innocentia fidit, & cui infantia ſua innocentior? Lib. 22. De civit. Dei c. 22.

The other concluſion is, that although Satan may ſet upon the members of Chriſt, yet hee cannot hurt them: he may enter into the liſts with them, but not overcome them: the Serpent may bite the heele, but Chriſt hath broken his head: and as our bleſſed Saviour ſaith of himſelfe, The Prince of this world commeth and hath nought in me, Ioh. 14.30. So neither by Gods grace hath he any part in us, that are the members of Chriſt. Auguſtine doth notably touch this point in this manner: Fortior quis eſt aut corpore, quo may be ſaid to be ſtronger either in body, as an horſe is ſtronger than a man; or in minde, as the reaſonable creatures than the unreaſonable; and in affection and diſpoſition, as the juſt man more than the unjuſt; or in power and authority, as the Captaine ſtronger than the ſouldier: by the firſt of theſe wayes, poteſtas dabitur deterioribus, ut meliores, the worſe may have power given them over the better, for the proofe of their patience: and ſo he concludeth: Principes illi in re inferiore ſuperant, in potentiore ſuperantur: fideles enim ſi minores ſunt, infirmiores corpore: Theſe principalities (he meaneth the ſpirituall powers) are ſuperiour to us in things inferiour, but they are in things ſuperiour weaker; the faithfull are ſtronger in minde and ſtronger in body. Auguſt. Lib. cont. Secund.

Quest. XIV. Whether the Devill by his owne power can raise thunder and lightning.

Hitherto it hath beene shewed what Satan is able to doe in that immediate action of moving and transporting himselfe and other creatures from place to place: it followeth to shew what power he hath in the other mediate action, which is done by the meanes and instrument of the creatures. But here ariseth a question fit to bee discussed, whether the Devill by his owne power can raise tempests, winds, thunder, lightning, as Pererius thinketh he can by warrant of the story of Iob, where Satan brought downe lightning upon Iobs sheepe and raised winde, whereby the house was overwhelmed upon Iobs children. Perer. in 4. disput. in cap. 7. Num. 34. But herein I must needs dissent from Pererius, though I finde that Augustine inclineth to the same opinion: for thus he writeth: In libro fidelissimo legimus diabolum potuisse ignem de cœlo demittere: We reade in a most faithfull booke that the Devill could bring downe fire from heaven. But how is it then called the fire of God, if it were of Satans sending? therefore the text is flat against that opinion: some take it to bee called a fire of God, that is, a great and most vehement lightning, as things of excellencie are so called, as the wrestlings of God. Gen.30.8. and the mountaines of God Psal.36.7. Iunius. But this sense in that place seemeth to be improper: for as here the lightning is called the fire of God, so Psal.29. thunder is called the voice of God: I thinke that it will not be said, that hailestones also it is so called because the thunder giveth a mighty voice, for this is there beside expressed, The voice of the Lord is mighty: but there the reason is shewed why it is called the voice of the Lord: because the God of glorie maketh it to thunder, vers. 3. Againe, every where the Scripture maketh God the author of thunder and lightning and windes, as Psal. 107.25. Hee commandeth and raiseth the stormie winde: and Psal.147.15. Hee sendeth forth his commandement upon the earth, and his word runneth very swiftly: he giveth snow like wooll. Psal.148.7,8. Praise the Lord &c. fire, and haile, snow, and stormy winde which execute his word: they execute Gods word and commandement onely: but if they might bee raised by the power of Satan, then should they execute his word. Further, the Lord saith, Iob.38.25. Who hath divided the spoutes for the raine, or the way for the lightning of the thunders? and vers. 28. the Lord is said to be the father of raine, and so consequently of the other meteors: If the Devill can cause raine, thunder, lightning, then he might be said to bee the father of it. Hence it is that the people of God have used to pray unto him, as the only author and giver of raine, and weather: as Samuel saith, Is it not wheate harvest, I will call unto the Lord and he shall send thunder and raine, 1. Sam. 12. 17. So Ambrose saith: Quia pluvia expectetur ab omnibus, quidam dixit neomenia dabit eam, &c. When raine was desired of all, and the new Moone will bring raine, although we were very greedy of raine, yet I would not suffer it to be true, yea and I was much delighted that no raine was powred: donec precibus ecclesia data, non de initiis lunæ sperandum esse, sed providentia & misericordia creatoris: untill it being given by the prayers of the Church, did manifestly shew, that raine is not to be hoped for by the renewing of the Moone, but by the providence and mercy of the Creator.

Some thinke that the fire which came upon Iobs flocke did not come downe from heaven, but was otherwise kindled by Satan: but that the Devill made as though it came from Heaven, the more to terrifie Iob, when hee should see that even the heavens and God himselfe were set against him: Of this opinion seemeth to bee the author of the Commentary upon Iob under Origens name. Non de cœlo venit ignis ille, sed ita finxit nequissimus, &c. Non à Deo missus est sed tua iniquitate miserrime omnium [illegible] succensus est: That fire came not downe from heaven, but so the wicked one fained: it was not sent of God, but kindled by thy wicked meanes, O thou Devill of all most miserable. And afterward hee sheweth that Satan cannot bring fire from heaven: Dic ergo infœlix tunc super oves Iob ignem de cœlo potuisti adducere, cur non potuisti revocare illum ignem, quem advocavit Helias? Say then, couldest thou, O wretched one, bring fire upon Iobs sheepe, and why couldest thou not then keepe backe the fire which Helias called for from the fifties, for they were thy ministers and servants? This authors judgement in this latter point we willingly imbrace, but his first conceit seemeth not to bee agreeable to the text, which saith it was the fire of God, then not kindled by Satan.

Neither yet is it to be thought, that Satan had no hand in it, but that it was wholly Gods worke: for so God should be Satans Minister, in serving his turne and not Satan his. Wherefore my opinion holds that this tempest of fire and winde were in respect of the naturall generation of them of the working and sending of the Creator. But Satan was Minister dejecti ignis: the minister of the fire cast downe, as Iunius saith, not the author, but the minister, yet not Gods minister in the originall worke, which proceeded of naturall causes, but in the execution: God caused the fire, but Satan brought it upon Iobs flocke: God raised the winde, but Satan drave it upon the foure corners of the house: for this we doubt not, but that thunder and lightning and winde being once raised, that Satan hath power by God's ordinance to carry and transport it from place to place: if the winde blow one way, he can turne it to another: but of himselfe by his spirituall power I deny that he can raise windes and tempests where none are, for the reasons before alleaged. And therefore we may hold that to bee a fable, which Philostratus reporteth how Apollonius saw two tunnes among the Indians, which being opened did send out the winds, and being shut they were restrained. So I conclude this place with that decree of the Councell, Si quis credit, quòd diabolus venire nubes, fulgura, tempestates, siccitates sua authoritate facere, sicut Priscillianus docet, anathema sit: If any man beleeve, that the Devill by his owne authority can make thunder, lightning, tempests, drought, as Priscillianus holdeth, let him be accursed.

Quest. XV. Of the power of spirits in naturall workes.

NOw concerning the other actions of spirits, which is called mediate, they by applying, tempering and qualifying naturall causes, may bring forth strange effects: for the vertues and properties of herbes, plants, precious stones, mettals, minerals, are exactly knowne unto them, and but in part unto us. 1. As we see man by art, by composing things together, can effect rare and strange workes, as is evident in the setting and incision of trees, in distilling of waters, compounding of medicines: so much more can they by apportioning and applying divers naturall causes together, produce strange things. 2. Againe, as we see the excellencie of the artificer or workeman, addeth to the perfection of the worke beyond the vertue of the instrument: as an axe serveth but to cut, but the cunning workeman can therewith doe more than cut, as frame a bed, or table, and such like: so these spirituall powers by their great skill, can use naturall instruments and meanes, bring forth more excellent and strange works, than their naturall power reacheth unto, because they are the instruments of Angels and spirits. Sic Thom. Aqui. com. Gent. c. Augustine giveth instance of divers strange and admirable workes in nature, as the naturall burning of certaine mountaines, as of Ætna in Cicilia, Vesuvius in Campania. It is found by experience, that some things putrifie not, as the flesh of a Peacoke, as Augustine saith, and coales, upon the which for the same cause Cherisiphron founded the temple of Diana: lime boyleth with water and is quenched with oile: the adamant is so hard, that it cannot bee broken upon a smithes anvill: the Agrigentine salt melteth in the fire, and sparkleth in the water: there is said to bee a fountaine among the Garamants, that is hot in the night and freezeth in the day: the stone Asbestus burneth continually, being once set on fire, and is never extinct: the wood of a certaine figge tree in Egypt, sinketh in the water: in the Isle Tylos the trees cast no leaves: in the Temple of Venus, there was a lampe that no tempest could put out: and Ludovicus Vives there reporteth, that a certaine lampe was found in a grave, that had burned above 1500 yeares. At Alexandria in the Temple of Serapis, a certaine image of iron did hang in the top by vertue of a certaine loadstone, which was incloſed in the roofe. These and other such like strange things as Augustine remembreth. Some wee have knowledge of, but many secrets of nature are hid and unknowne unto the spirits who by this meanes doe worke wonders, only producing extraordinary effects of nature. 4. Augustine further in another place sheweth the reason thereof in this manner: Sunt occulta quadam semina, arborum, plantarum, &c. in elementis, &c. There are certaine hid seeds, lying hid in the elements: for as there are visible seeds, so there are hid seeds, which give unto the visible seeds their vertue: like as then the husbandman doth not create corne, but bringeth it out by his labour, so the evill Angels do not create things but only doe draw forth those seeds which are unknowne to us, but well knowne to them: As Iacob did not create that variety of colour in the sheep, but by applying of particoloured rods brought it forth: sicut ergo matres gravidæ sunt fœtibus, ita mundus gravidus est causis & seminibus. Thus as mothers that are great with child, so the world is full of such seeds and causes of the beginning of things, which causes they better knowing then we, doe worke wonders: yea wee see that men, by the vertue of certaine herbes, and by such like meanes can cause wormes and other like small creatures to breed. To this purpose Augustine.

Divers strange and admirable workes in nature.

Augustin. lib. 3. de Trin. cap. 8. ad cap. 10.

Quest. XVI. What workes in naturall things are forbidden unto spirits to doe.

Followeth now to shew, as wee have seene what things are possible to bee done by spirits, so what things are out of their reach, and beyond their power. 1. Touching the immediate action of spirits, which is by locall motion, the Devill cannot destroy the world, or any principall part thereof, nor subvert the order and course of nature: he cannot change the course of the heavens, or put the starres out of their place, neither although he may work some alteration in some part of the earth, the whole he cannot remove: these and such great workes he cannot doe: Perer. ex Aquinat. the reason is this, because this were to resist the Creator, who by his providence, as by his power hee created the world, and all that is therein, so he preserveth the same, in that order which he hath appointed: as the Psalmist saith, The earth is the Lords and all that therein is: hee hath founded it upon the sea, and established it upon the floods, Psal. 24. 1. 2.

Secondly, concerning the other mediate action of spirits by the instrument and mediation of the creatures: these things are denied unto spirits. 1. They cannot create any thing of nothing, for that argueth infinite power, and is peculiar unto God. 2. The Devill being himselfe spirituall and without a bodie, cannot immediatly change or transforme any materiall or corporall substance, without some naturall cause comming betweene. 3. Neither can these spirits change any naturall thing, into an other naturall thing immediatly, without that subordination of nature, and preparation and disposition of matter, which is observed in the generation of things: therefore hee cannot bring forth a beast of seed, nor a perfect beast all at once, because naturally both the generation of such things is by degrees, and they receive their increase and growth not all at once, but by degrees and in time: therefore, when by the operation of Satan, lions and beares and such like creatures have beene made to appeare, either they were but phantasies, and no such things indeed, or were transported from some other place; for this reason he cannot restore dead bodies to life, because the body being void of naturall heat and moisture is not fit to entertaine the soule. 4. Neither can Satan hinder the operation of naturall things, if they be wanting, which is necessary for their working: And generally whatsoever alteration may be made by naturall causes, as wormes, and frogs and such like may come of putrefaction, these things may be ordered and compassed by spirits: but such changes and transmutations, as cannot be done by naturall rall meanes, as to turne a man into a beast, are not within the limits of Devils power. But when such things seeme to be done, they are in shew rather than truth, which may be done two wayes: either by so binding and blinding the inward phantasie and sense, as that may seeme to be which is not: or by fashioning some such shape and forme outwardly, and objecting it to the sense. Perer. Ex Aquinat.

Satan two wayes maketh things to appeare that are not.

Quest. XVII. Whether Satan can raise the spirits and soules of the dead.

AMong other things which exceed the power of spirits, it is affirmed before, that they cannot raise the soules of men departed, as Necromancers doe take upon them to talke with the dead. 1. Let us see the vaine opinion of the heathen of this deviliſh Necromancy. Porphyrius writeth that the soules of wicked men are turned into Devils, and doe appeare in divers shapes, and the soules of them that want buriall doe wander about their bodies, and sometimes are compelled to resume their bodies: Likewise Hosthanes did professe and promise to raise what dead soever, and to bring them to talke with the living: as Plinie writeth, lib. 30. cap. 2. who in the same place reporteth a farre more strange, or rather fabulous thing, that Appion the Grammarian should tell of a certaine herb called Cynocephalia, and of the Egyptians Osirites, which hath power to raise the dead, and that thereby he called Homers ghost, to inquire of him touching his countrie and parents. There were among the Gentiles certaine places famous for Necromancie where they received oracles from the dead, as they were made to beleeve: such was the Cymmerian oracle at the lake Avernam in Campania; such was Erictho the Thessalian that raised up the dead to declare to Sextus Pompeius, the successe of the Pharsaliam battell. Tertullian writeth that the Nasomanna and Celta used to consult with the dead at the tumbes of their parents, and of warlike men, lib. de anima. Such was the vaine opinion which the heathen had of this magicall art: which Plinie himselfe derideth as vaine and fooliſh, because Nero that wicked and bestiall Emperour, who was given over to all lewdnesse, yet could not be induced by Tyridates (whom he greatly advanced and gave him a Kingdome) solliciting him thereunto, and bringing Magitians unto him, to give any credite unto Necromancie, Plin. lib. 30. cap. 2.

Fabulous reportes of the heathen of the imagined force of Necromancie.

Reasons against Necromancie.

2. Now this vaine, or rather prophane profession of summoning of the dead and consulting with them, may evidently be convinced, to be nothing else but the Devils sophistry and forgery, for first the soule being separated from the body, hath no power to move or exercise any body, but that which it did give life unto, being the forme thereof: which being now dead, is an unapt organ or instrument for the soule: and therefore such soule being once departed from the body, can neither assume it, nor any other body. Secondly, the soules that are departed, are either in heaven at rest: and over the soules of the holy and righteous, which are in the hands of God, the Devill hath no command: or they are in hell, and from thence there is no returning againe; as is manifest in the parable of the rich man and Lazarus, where it was denied unto the rich man, that any could goe from thence to be a messenger to the living.

In what cases the dead have beene raised and appeared.

3. True it is, that the Lord by his power hath called againe into the bodies, and caused to appeare some that were departed: of the which we finde three sorts, some were restored to life, and their soules joyned againe to their bodies, as the daughter of Iairus, the widdow of Nains sonne, and Lazarus: others appeared in their true bodies, and came out of the graves, yet not to converse among the living, but to be witnesses of the resurrection of Christ, Matth. 27. 53. And yet wee reade of a more strange apparition of Moses and Helias in mount Tabor, where our blessed Saviour was transfigured, who appeared not out of their graves, but from heaven in their glorious persons. We deny not but that God hath and can at his pleasure cause the Saints departed to appeare unto men: but not out of purgatory, as Pererius imagineth, or to the end to bee patrons and helpers to his Church, for wee have alwayes the presence of Christ and of his Angels: neither yet can we beleeve, that so many Martyrs have appeared at their Tombes, as some Ecclesiasticall histories make mention: for as Christ is gone out of the world not to returne, till the day of judgement; so because he saith, where I am, there shall my minister bee, Iah. 12. 26. so wee cannot but thinke, that the Saints departed attending upon Christ, are not now to bee seene in the world. This then being granted, that the Lord hath power over the soules of men departed to command them to their bodies for a time, for some speciall service, and to send them into the world at his pleasure; yet this is no warrant at all to thinke, that Satan or his ministers can doe the like: for seeing this is as great a miracle for the spirits of the dead to appeare, as to raise the dead, to cause the borne blinde to see, or to doe any such great worke: and God being the only worker of miracles, this cannot fall under Satans jurisdiction. Such visions then and apparitions, when dead men appeare in their bodily shape, though not with their bodies, and in their wonted apparell, counterfeiting their voice and behaviour while they lived, are to be held meere illusions of Satan, that can transforme himselfe into an Angell of light: so I conclude this point with that saying of Tertullian: Etsi quosdam revocavit Dei virtus in documentum juris sui, non idcirco communicabitur fidei & audacia Magorum, & falacia somniorum, & licentia Poetarum, &c. Although the power of God hath called some againe, to shew his dominion, yet this power is not communicated to the confidence and boldnesse of Magicians, to the deceitfulnesse of dreames, or to the libertie of Poets.

Tertullian. lib. de anima.

Quest. XVIII. Why Satan doth counterfeit the spirits of the dead.

THe Devils then doe counterfeit the spirits and soules of the dead, as Chrysostome sheweth, Hom. 3 in Matth. and August. lib. 10. de civit. Dei cap. 12. for these causes: 1. By this meanes the Devill more strongly deceiveth, seeing men are ready to heare their parents and friends departed. 2. By this subtilty the Devill perswadeth men, that hell is not so fearfull a place, nor so enclosed, but that there may be a respite and going forth. 3. Thus that opinion is nourished of the passing of soules from one body to another number, as Pythagoras taught. 4. And it commeth also to passe, that the living are afraid of the dead, whom they imagine doe appeare unto them, and so to please and reconcile them, they superstitiously worship them, and offer unto them. Ex Perer. 5. Tertullian addeth further, that these apparitions bred a conceit that all wicked men goe not to hell, but their spirits wander up and downe. 6. Et judicii & resurrectionis fidem turbant: And they doe hinder the faith of the last judgement and of the resurrection: if they could assume their bodies being dead, which the Christian faith holdeth to sleepe in the grave untill the resurrection.

Quest. XIX. Of the divers kindes of miracles.

Now to proceed and draw neere to the principall question in hand concerning these wonders wrought by the Egyptian Magicians, two things in generall are briefly to be touched: first concerning the divers kindes of miracles, then of the difference betweene true miracles and false. Concerning the first: A miracle is taken three wayes, first simply and absolutely in respect of any nature whatsoever: so there is no miracle: for unto God the author and framer of nature, to whom all things are possible, there is nothing strange or miraculous: that is called a miracle, which either excelleth ones power or understanding: but God both knoweth all things and can doe all things. 2. A miracle is called in respect of men those things which are unusuall, and whose causes they are ignorant of, men use to wonder at: and in this sense, not only spirits, and their ministers the Sorcerers, but wise and cunning men may doe wonderous and strange workes. 3. But properly that is a miracle which exceedeth the nature and power of things created, and is beside the ordinary course of naturall things.

And this kinde of miracle last spoken of is effected three wayes: 1. The miracle is either in the thing, that is made or done, which nature can by no meanes bring forth: as for the body of man to bee made immortall, and to remaine in the heavens: and this is the highest degree of miracles. 2. Or else the miracle is in that, out of the which a thing is made or brought forth, as to make a thing of nothing, to give sight unto a man that is borne blind, and such like: and this is the next degree of miracles. 3. Or the miracle is in the manner: as a Physitian may heale a man, but not of a sudden, or without medicine: so the spirits may bring forth Serpents, or other vermine out of wood, but not immediatly. Now the wonders wrought by Magicians are not properly of any of these sorts of miracles: but they are either couzening and counterfeit trickes, or procured by naturall meanes. Ex Perer.

Quest. XX. Of the difference betweene true miracles and false.

For the second: true miracles differ from false these five wayes: 1. In respect of the power whereby they are wrought, for true miracles are wrought by the power of God, in whose name the Prophets and Apostles and other servants of God did shew forth signes: but Magicians doe bring forth their wonders either by the force of naturall things, or by the helpe of Satan. 2. They differ in the qualitie of their persons that are the agents and ministers: for they which worke in Gods name are holy and vertuous men, and if any of them doe sometime effect any miraculous thing, they doe it for the confirming of the faith, or to some other good end: but Magicians and Sorcerers are most wicked and impure men. 3. The chiefe difference is in the worke it selfe: for the signes and wonders of Magicians, are either counterfeit, or unprofitable, but true miracles are done in truth and upon great necessity and utility. 4. They differ in the manner of working: for true miracles are done by lawfull, holy and godly meanes, as by fasting, prayer, invocation of the name of God: but Magicians worke by inchantment, by words and charmes and other superstitious rites. 5. The end also is divers: for Sorcerers worke wonders, either for their profit and honour, to make the people seeke unto them, as Simon Magus did in Samaria, Acts 8. or to confirme the people in errour and superstition: but the end of true miracles is to seeke the glory of God, the edifying of his Church, and the propagation of the faith. Ex Perer. 6. Hereunto may be added the sentence and judgement of Augustine: Aliter miracula faciunt magi, aliter boni Christiani, aliter mali Christiani: Magi per privatos quosdam contractus, boni Christiani per publicam justitiam, mali Christiani per signa publica justitiæ, &c. Magicians doe worke miracles one way, good Christians another, and evill Christians another: Magicians by private contracts (with the spirits) good Christians by publike prayer (that is, by the power and authority of God) evill Christians, by the signes of publike justice: As did one that followed not Christ, nor yet beleeved in him, yet in the name of Christ wrought miracles: as a rash and disordered and discarded souldiers may use the ensignes and banner of the Captaine to terrifie their enemies. August. lib. 38. quæst. 79.

Quest. XXI. Whether the sorcerers brought forth true serpents.

It followeth now to shew, whether these serpents, which the Magicians made, were true serpents, or only counterfeited for the time: 1. Some thinke that it was a true and reall conversion of the Magicians rods into serpents, and that it was done by the power of God, and that Satan did craftily challenge the title of false Gods worke: Simler. but the text is against this conjecture: they are said to doe the like by their inchantments, vers. 11. but the power of God giveth no place to enchantments. 2. Others affirme that they were true serpents so converted by the power of Satan: so August. lib. 3. de Trinitat. and in other places: and Theodoret quæst. 18. in Exod. Thom. Aquin. Lyranus, Thostatus, Burgens. &c: of the same opinion seemeth Philo to be, lib. de vita Moses: their reasons are these: 1. Because the Magicians are said to doe in like manner with their rods, and in the same phrase their rods are said to be turned into serpents, as Aarons rod is. 2. And againe, afterward the Sorcerers could not bring out out lice, as they had ſerpents and frogs before: their impotencie was not, in not ſhewing ſhapes or ſhewes, but in not being able to bring forth the things themſelves. ſic Cajetan: and Moſes ſerpents devoured their ſerpents, they were therefore true ſerpents; if they had beene otherwiſe, it is like Moſes would have diſcovered their counterfeit dealing: ſic Perer.

Contra. 1. They did the like in outward ſhew and appearance: and the ſame phraſe is uſed of both, becauſe to the ſight and view they were ſo changed: and the Scripture uſeth to ſpeake of things as they appeare, not as they are: as he that appeared unto the witch at Endor is called Samuel, yet being the Devill in his likeneſſe and habit, 1. Sam. 28. and Daniel ſaith, the man Gabriel, chap. 9. becauſe hee appeared in the ſhape of a man. 2. The Sorcerers were reſtrained in their counterfeit dealing, that they ſhould not be able any more to deceive by their phantaſticall and imaginary ſhapes. 3. Rupertus doth gather the contrary, that the devouring of the Sorcerers ſerpents by Aarons ſerpent, ſheweth that they were but counterfeit: devorari ergo & devorare non potuerunt: becauſe they could not devoure, but were devoured. 4. And in this ſufficiently Moſes diſcovereth their ſleights, in that his ſerpent devoureth theirs.

God only can transforme and change one ſubſtance into another.

Now further againſt this opinion, this ſpeciall argument may be urged, that God only hath power to change and convert one ſubſtance into another, eſpecially a dead thing into a living body, a peece of wood into a ſerpent: as it was decreed in the Avanſicane Councell, in this manner; Quiſquis credit aliquid poſſe fieri, aut aliam creaturam in melius aut deterius mutari aut transformari in aliam ſpeciem vel ſimilitudinem, niſi ab ipſo creatore, qui omnia fecit, proculdubio infidelis eſt & pagano deterior: Whoſoever believeth that any thing can be made, or any creature to be changed into the better or worſe, or transformed into any ſhape or likeneſſe, but by the creator, which hath made all things, is undoubtedly an infidell, and worſe than a Pagan. To this argument divers anſwers are framed. 1. Cajetane ſaith that the Devill might uſe ſome naturall meanes ſecretly, by the which ſerpents might be made out of thoſe rods, and all the time, while the Sorcerers were called together, Satan made a way for that worke and prepared the matter. Contra. There is no naturall meanes to make a rod a ſerpent immediatly, and eſpecially to bring forth ſerpents at once, of perfect bigneſſe, neither was there any ſuch preparation of matter, for they were rods in the Sorcerers hands, not changed into any other preparative matter fit to engender ſerpents. 2. Cajetan anſwereth againe, that although the rod of it ſelfe was no fit matter for ſuch a worke, yet by the excellencie of the agent and worker, which were the ſpirits, it might bring forth ſerpents of a ſudden. Contra. The excellency of the agent, doth adde to the manner of the worke, as to doe it ſooner, or better, it addeth not to the matter: Angels working by naturall meanes doe it more admirably, than nature can worke it of it ſelfe, but beyond the ſtrength of nature, or againſt the courſe of nature they can doe nothing. 3. Pererius miſliking both theſe anſwers of Cajetane, yet conſenting to his opinion, for the truth of this miracle, addeth a third: that Satan fetched thoſe ſerpents, and ſuddenly tranſported them into this place and ſubborned them in ſtead of the rods. Cont. But the text ſaith the rods were turned into ſerpents, the ſerpents then were not brought from any other place, but there changed, or ſeemed ſo to be. Againe, as there they turne their rods into ſerpents, ſo afterward did they change water into bloud, but that was not by tranſportation: for from whence could Satan convey ſuch abundance of true lively bloud which is not but gendred but in the body, neither have they power to alter ſubſtances: it was therefore done by collusion, and ſo was this. 3. Wherefore the ſounder opinion is, that thoſe ſerpents which the Egyptian Sorcerers brought forth, were only ſuch in ſhew not indeed, or in truth: ſo Ioſephus writeth, that the Magicians ſerpents, In ſpeciem ac ſimilitudinem verorum ſerpentium reptaſſe, did creepe in ſhew and likeneſſe of true ſerpents, lib. 2. antiquit. cap. 15. And Iuſtinus Martyr, Thoſe things which the Magicians did by the helpe of the Devill, ſpectantium oculis praſtigias effundebant: did dazle and deceive, and as it were caſt a miſt before the eyes of the beholders. quæſt. Orthodox. 16. Tertullian, Moſis veritas mendacium Magorum devoravit, Moſes trueth devoured their lie. lib. de anima. Gregor. Nyſſenus ſaith, they were viſu decepti ſerpentes: ſerpentes onely in the miſtaking of the ſight. Ambroſe calleth it, commentitiam emulationem a fained emulation, in cap. 2. 2. Epiſt. ad Timoth. Hierome ſaith, imitabantur ſigna quæ faciebat Moſes, ſed non erant in veritate. They did imitate the ſignes which Moſes did, but they were not in truth. lib. 2. adver. Iovin. The reaſons of this opinion before alleaged are theſe; 1. becauſe ſolius divinæ poteſtatis eſt: It belongeth onely to the power of God, to convert a dead ſubſtance into a living creature: Rupert. 2. Moſes true ſerpents devoureth the other, which Ioſephus and Ferus urge as an argument that they were imaginary. 3. Other ſignes which they did, were only imaginary, as the turning of water into bloud, as before ſhewed, and ſo this alſo.

Quest. XXII. By what meanes Satan deluded Pharaoh with a ſhew of ſerpents.

THis being then thus reſolved upon, that thoſe were but ſerpents in ſhew, and to the outward ſenſe this counterfeit ſigne might be wrought two wayes by the operation of Satan: 1. Either by confounding the inward ſenſe and phantaſie of the beholders, that they imagined to ſee that which was not, as ſicke men of phrenſie doe conceive they ſee ſtrange ſights: and there is no queſtion, but that the Devill can effect, whatſoever by diſeaſes or other naturall meanes may be wrought. 2. Or elſe, which is more like, Satan did forme ſuch a ſhape and ſhew of ſpirits: as before is ſhewed, that the Devill hath power by illuſions, apparations and phantaſies to deceive: as the Apoſtles ſeeing Chriſt walking upon the ſeas, ſuppoſed it had beene a ſpirit, Phantaſma, that is, a phantaſticall apparition, Mark. 6. 49. which ſheweth that ſuch illuſions were uſuall.

Quæſt.

Quest. XXIII. Why the Lord ſuffered the Sorcerers of Egypt to ſhew ſuch contrary ſignes.

NOw the Lord ſuffered the Magitians thus by their lying ſignes to contend with Moſes, for divers weighty cauſes. 1. That by this meanes Moſes the faithfull ſervant of God, and true Prophet, might be the better knowne, as darkeneſſe maketh the light more glorious, and ſickneſſe health: Chryſoſtome. So Saint Paul ſaith, There muſt bee Hereſies, that they which are approved among you might bee knowne, 1.Cor.11.19. 2. That Moſes might be freed from the imputation of being a Sorcerer, which thing ſome have not bene affraid to object: and a difference might appeare betweene his working by the power, and in the name of God, and of the Sorcerers working by the power of Satan: Ruperti. 3. That thereby it might be made manifeſt, how the truth hath alwayes gainſayers, and is never without contradictions and oppoſitions, as Lucifer oppoſed himſelfe to God in heaven, Cain to Abel in earth, Iſmael was againſt Iſaac: the true Prophets were moleſted by the falſe. Thus Saint Paul collecteth that as Iannes and Iambres withſtood Moſes, ſo theſe alſo reſiſt the truth, 2.*Tim.*3.8. Perer. 4. Hereby alſo it is manifeſt, how according to the common ſaying, the Devill is Gods ape; that he taketh upon him to imitate and counterfeit Gods workes: that therefore wee ſhould examine ſuch workes and ſignes, whether they be of God, that we be not deceived, and as the Apoſtle ſaith, try every ſpirit, 1.*Ioh.*4.1. 5. Another reaſon is, that ſeeing the Devill by his miniſters can doe ſuch ſtrange things; that the ſervants of God bee not offended, when they ſee wonders and ſignes to be done in the falſe Church by Heretikes, or Idolaters, the inſtruments of Satan. 6. This was permitted for the triall of the faith and conſtancie of Moſes and Aaron, and the reſt of the Hebrewes, whether becauſe of the contrary ſignes, they would doubt of the truth of Gods promiſes: Perer. 7. And for the further hardning of Pharaohs heart, as hee had deſerved by his former ſinnes, that God might take occaſion thereby to worke all his wonders in Egypt: Simler. Ferus, Borrh.

Quest. XXIV. Whether Pharaoh being deceived by the Magicians falſe ſignes, be thereby excuſable.

But ſeeing theſe Magicians by their Satanicall craft, doe ſo ſtrongly deceive, whether is Pharaoh to be excuſed, that he doth not acknowledge Moſes to be the Miniſter and Prophet of God? To this the anſwer is, that this notwithſtanding Pharaoh is not to be held excuſable, becauſe there are evident ſignes to have diſcerned betweene the working of the one, and of the other, ſo that Pharaoh could not plead ignorance. To omit the differences before noted, Queſt. 20. how that true miracles differ from falſe, in the power of working, in the quality of perſons that worke, the worke it ſelfe, the manner and the end: which differences are not ſo eaſie to be diſcerned of all; there were beſides moſt notorious workes that diſcovered the hypocriſie and weakneſſe of thoſe Sorcerers. 1. Moſes ſerpent devoured theirs, which reſtored a greater power. 2. They could counterfeit the like plagues, but they could not remove the true plagues, as Moſes did. 3. They faile in their working, they could not bring forth lice, nor counterfeit any of the plagues following. 4. The plagues doe fall upon the Sorcerers themſelves, *chap.*9.11. 5. Laſtly they themſelves doe give way, and confeſſe it was the finger of God. By all theſe arguments Pharaoh might well have perceived, that they were but counterfeit workers: and that Moſes onely was the true Prophet, and they impoſters and deceivers Perer. In the next place, the plagues which were ſent upon Egypt come to be handled, and firſt certaine generall queſtions are to be premitted.

Certaine generall queſtions concerning the plagues of Egypt.

Quest. XXV. Of the number of the plagues of Egypt.

Firſt for the number of theſe plagues: it is certaine they were theſe ten, the turning of the water into blood, the bringing of frogs, of lice, of ſwarmes of noyſome flies, the murrane of cattell, biles and botches, thunder, haile and lightning, graſhoppers, the thicke darkneſſe, the ſlaughter of the firſt borne. Theſe plagues in other places of Scripture, are neither rehearſed in the ſame number, nor order; as Pſal.78. there are omitted the third of lice, the ſixth of botches, the ninth of darkneſſe; and in the 115. Pſal. two are paſſed over in ſilence, the firſt of the murrane of cattell, and the ſixt of the botches. 3. Hence it is evident, that Auſten is deceived, who thinketh that there were more than ten plagues: becauſe according to the Septuagint, whom the vulgar Latine followeth, it is ſaid, Pſal. 78.46. He gave their fruits to the wilde worme, & cætera; and *verſ.*47. He killed their wild fig-trees with the hoary froſt; and *verſ.*48. Hee gave their poſſeſſion to the fire. But theſe three doe belong to the other plagues, for in the firſt plague according to the originall, we muſt reade, He gave their fruits to the caterpiller, for the word is chaſil: In the ſecond, the word chanamal ſignifieth haileſtones; ſo this is referred to the ſeventh plague of lightning and haile; as the other to the eight plague of locuſts: and in the third place, the beſt reading is, Hee gave their cattell lareſhaphim, to burning coales, that is, to the thunderbolts, which was part of the ſeventh plague.

Quest. XXVI. The greatneſſe of the plagues of Egypt, how the Egyptians were every way puniſhed.

Further let it be obſerved, that the Egyptians were every way plagued. Philo noteth that the number ten ſignifieth perfection, and ſo their plagues were perfect and abſolute. True it is that their puniſhment niſhment was indeed abſolute: howſoever the obſervation of the number ſeemeth ſomewhat curious: 1. they were puniſhed by all kind of creatures, as by the elements, the earth, the water, ayre, fire: by living creatures, as frogges, lice, caterpillars, flies: by the ſtarres, in that the light was reſtrained: they were puniſhed by men, as Moſes and Aaron that were inſtruments of the plagues: And by the Angels the Miniſters of the plagues, Pſalm 78. 44. 2. They were puniſhed in all things wherein they delighted, in all manner of fruit, in their cattell, in their bodies, in their children. 3. They were puniſhed in all their ſenſes, in their ſight by that thicke darkeneſſe, and the horrible ſights which appeared, as it is noted, Wiſdom. 17. 6, 7. in their taſte, by the waters turned into bloud, and their thirſt: in their ſmelling, by the ſtinch of the frogges, and of their ulcers: in their feeling, by the griefe of their ulcers, and the biting of flies and vermin: in their hearing, by the terrible thunder: in their inward-ſenſe, by feare and terror. And to make up the full meaſure of their puniſhments, they were overthrowne and drowned in the red ſea. Ex Perer.

Quest. XXVII. Where the plagues of Egypt and to what place they were firſt ſent.

COncerning the place: 1. all Egypt generally was ſmitten, chap. 3. 20. which is called the land of Cham, Pſalm 105. becauſe Mizraim, which was the father of the Egyptians, (and in Hebrew Egypt is ſo called, Mizraim) was one of Chams ſonnes, Gen. 10. But whereas it is ſaid, Pſalm 78. 12. He did marvellous things in the land of Zohan, which the Septuagints call Tanis, there was the Kings ſeat, and there firſt the plagues began: the head is firſt ſmitten, then the members, and from thence the plagues paſſed over all Egypt. And it is ſaid in the fields of Zohan, becauſe all Egypt was as a plaine. Ex Pere.

Quest. XXVIII. At what time the plagues were ſent upon Egypt.

FOr the time when the plagues were ſent: 1. Iulius Africanus is deceived, who thinketh that Egypt was plagued at the ſame time, when Ogyges floud was: but that cannot be, for he maketh that floud 1020. yeeres before the Olympiades, which began in the eighth yeere of Achaz King of Judah: unto which time, from the plagues of Egypt there are not above 763. yeeres. 2. Paulus Oroſius commeth neerer the truth. lib. 1. 9. 10. that theſe plagues came upon Egypt in the time of Deucalions floud, when moſt part of the inhabitants of Theſſalia were deſtroyed, a few eſcaping unto the hill Parnaſſus, where Deucalion raigned. About the ſame time the Sunne parched the world with burning heate, not onely in Æthiopia and other hill countries, but in Scythia, and others under cold climates: which gave occaſion unto the Poets fabulous fiction of Phaeton. 3. Theſe plagues were from the beginning of the world 2483. yeeres; from Noahs floud 797. before the battell of Troy, which happened in the time of Sampſon or Heli, 356. yeeres; before the firſt Olympiade 763. yeeres, before the building of Rome 789. yeeres. Ex Pererio.

Quest. XXIX. In what time all the plagues were finiſhed.

FOr the time how long the ten plagues continued, and in what ſpace they were finiſhed: 1. The Hebrewes thinke, whom Genebrard followeth, that theſe plagues were all ſent upon Egypt, not in leſſe time than of twelve moneths, with ſome reſpite betweene every plague. 2. Some thinke that the plagues continued the ſpace of ten moneths, taking beginning when the Sunne entred into Cancer, the twelfth of June, and ending in the vernall equinoctiall, about the fourteenth of March, when the firſt borne were ſlaine: the firſt miracle in the turning of the waters they would have done, when Nilus beginneth to increaſe, which is when the Sunne entreth into Cancer, and ſo Nilus continueth in his increaſing forty dayes, and forty dayes more it decreaſeth: eighty dayes therefore after the firſt plague, when Nilus being abated leaveth a great ſlime behind, they thinke the ſecond plague of frogges was ſent. But theſe conjectures are very uncertaine and improable: for firſt, whereas during the firſt plague they are ſaid to have digged round about the river, chap. 7. 17. this could they not have done in the overflowing of Nilus. 2. Though the ſlime had beene a fit matter naturally for the procreation of frogs, yet the plagues were extraordinary and beyond the worke of nature: and the text ſheweth that the frogs came not out of the ſlime, but out of the river, chap. 8. 3. 3. Beſide, if there had beene ſuch reſpite given to Pharaoh betweene plague and plague, the hand of God had not beene ſo ſtrong upon Pharaoh, as now they followed one in the necke of another. 3. Pererius bringeth them all within the compaſſe of dayes, or about a moneth, which hee doth thus collect: the firſt plague of converting the waters to bloud, continued ſeven dayes, chap. 7. 25. then upon the eight day came the frogs, and the next day after chap. 8. 9. which was the ninth, they were taken away: upon the tenth day the lice were ſent: upon the eleventh day, the ſwarmes of noiſome flies are threatned; upon the next day being the twelfth, they are ſent, and the morrow after they are taken away, chap. 8. 29. which was the 13. day: the 14. the fifth plague of the murrane of cattell is threatned, the morrow after it is ſent, chap. 9. 6. which was the 15. day: upon the 16. day, the ſixt plague of botches and ſores followeth: the 17. day the plague of haile is threatned, ſent the next day, chap. 9. 18. which was the 18. day, and taken away the next day, which was the 19. day: on the 20. day the 8. plague of graſhoppers is threatned, ſent the 21. day, and removed the 22. day: the three dayes following the thicke darkneſſe came, chap. 10. 22. the 23. 24. and 25. day: and upon the 26. day Pharaoh expelled Moſes from his preſence, and about midnight following, the beginning of the 28. day, the firſt borne were ſlaine. So that from the firſt plague to the laſt, there was not a moneth: the laſt plague then of the ſlaughter of the firſt borne falling upon the 14. day of Niſan, laſt moneth of the Hebrewes, the firſt began about the middle of Adar, the laſt moneth, which anſwereth to our February, as Niſon doth unto March. Pererius. And that it is more likely, that all theſe plagues came together in the ſpace of one moneth, rather than of twelve moneths, it may thus appeare: firſt, becauſe the plagues following one immediatly upon another, without any pauſe or reſpite, they were ſo much the more grievous, and this was the ſtrong hand of God, whereby Pharaoh was conſtrained to let Iſrael goe, chap. 6. 1. Secondly, the plagues were ſuch as Egypt never ſaw, nor felt before, chap. 9. 24. and 10. 14. and if they had continued long, the Egyptians could not have endured. Thirdly, whereas the Iſraelites ſpent full forty yeeres in the wilderneſſe, Ioſh. 5. 6. and Moſes was 80. yeere old, chap. 7. 7. before any of the plagues began, and 120. yeere old, in the end of the 40. yeeres travell in the wilderneſſe, Deut. 34. much time could not bee ſpent in Egypt after the hand of God, by the miniſtry of Moſes, began to worke upon them.

Quest. XXX. Whether the good Angels or bad were the miniſters of the Egyptian plagues.

Concerning the author of theſe plagues, there is no queſtion, but that they came from God, who thereby did moſt juſtly puniſh the Egyptians, for the unjuſt vexation of his people: for ſo the Lord ſaith, I will ſmite Egypt with all his wonders, chap. 3. 20. But there ariſeth a greater doubt, who were the miniſters of theſe plagues, whether the good angels, or evill. 1. Genebrard thinketh becauſe it is ſaid, Pſal. 78. 49. By the ſending of evill Angels, that the evill ſpirits were executioners of theſe plagues. But Auguſtines reaſon is very ſtrong againſt this opinion; for in the two firſt plagues, which were counterfeited by the Sorcerers, it is evident, that the evill Angels were doers, by whom the Magicians wrought, they certainly were not the miniſters of the true plagues, for then as he ſaith, Angels mali ex utraq́, parte — Auguſt. in pſal. 77. ſeſe vertunt, the evill Angels ſhould be of both ſides, hinc illos affligentes, inde fallentes: afflicting the Egyptians on the one ſide, and deceiving them on the other: If the evill Angels then were not miniſters of the firſt plagues, neither were they uſed in the reſt: and beſide we have a more evident argument, that when in the third plague the Sorcerers attempted to doe the like they could not: the Lord inhibited and reſtrained the evill ſpirit, that they ſhould worke no longer by their miniſters the Sorcerers. If the Lord reſtrained their power, then he looſed it not, or uſed it. 2. Wherefore they are called evill Angels, not in reſpect of their office but of the effect, becauſe they were meſſengers and miniſters of evill plagues: Perer. 3. But I thinke with Iunius, that it is not neceſſary here to underſtand Angels for thoſe miniſtring ſpirits: but the word malaci, may here ſignifie meſſengers, and is referred to Moſes and Aaron, that were the meſſengers and miniſters of theſe plagues: And this interpretation is confirmed by two reaſons: becauſe in this hiſtorie it is directly expreſſed, that moſt of the plagues were procured by Moſes and Aaron, as the three firſt by Aaron, the ſixt, ſeventh, eight and ninth by Moſes: the fourth and fift, though it be not expreſſed, yet it may bee ſuppoſed to bee done by the ſame inſtruments: and againe that place, Pſalme 105. 26. may helpe to expound this; Hee ſent Moſes his ſervant, and Aaron whom he had choſen, they ſhewed among them the meſſage of his ſignes. The meſſengers then and miniſters of theſe evill plagues, were Moſes and Aaron. 4. Yet I deny not, but that God uſed alſo therein the miniſtry of his Angels: as it is evident in the laſt plague of the deſtruction of the firſt borne, Exod. 12. 3. but the meaning of this place in the Pſalme is more properly referred to Moſes and Aaron. And although God uſeth both the miniſtry of good Angels in puniſhing the wicked, as in the overthrow of Sodom and Gomorrha, and of the evill at ſome time to trie the righteous, as in the temptation of Iob, much more in judging the wicked: yet in this place for the reaſons before alleaged the good Angels are thought rather to have beene uſed than the evill.

Quest. XXXI. For what ends and cauſes the Lord wrought ſuch wonders in Egypt.

The ends wherefore it pleaſed the Lord, thus to judge Egypt, and to ſhew his mighty workes were divers. 1. That the Lord might take juſt revenge of the Egyptians, for the unrighteous vexing and oppreſſing of his people, Exod. 4. 23. 2. That they by this meanes might bee forced to let Iſrael goe, Exod. 5. 3. That Gods power might bee knowne to all the world, which exceedeth the law of nature, or nature of things; and that his juſtice might be made manifeſt in judging the wicked: ſo the Lord ſaith: For this cauſe have I appointed thee, to ſhew my power in thee, and to declare my name throughout all the world, Rom. 9. 16. 4. That the Hebrewes and people of God hereby might perceive the ſingular care and love of God toward them, as Moſes urgeth, Deut. 4. 20. The Lord hath taken you and brought you out of the iron furnace, out of Egypt. 5. That the fame of theſe great workes might keepe other nations in feare and awe of them, by whom they ſhould paſſe, that they ſhould not moleſt or trouble them, neither that the Hebrewes ſhould be affraid of them: ſo Rahab ſaith, Ioſh. 2. 10. We have heard how the Lord dried up the water of the red ſea before you, when yee came out of Egypt. To this purpoſe the Prieſts of the Philiſtims thus ſpeake, Wherefore harden yee your hearts, as the Egyptians and Pharaoh hardned their hearts, when he wrought wonderfully among them? 1. Sam. 6 6. 6. That the Hebrewes by the remembrance of theſe great workes, might be kept in obedience to the law of God, as it is therefore ſet before the ten Commandements, Exod. 20. 2. 7. That the juſt confuſion and ſubverſion of the Egyptians might bee made manifeſt to all men, that hardned their hearts notwithſtanding ſuch grievous plagues. Perer.

Quest. XXXII. Who were exempted from the plagues of Egypt.

FUrther it will be inquired, who were exempted from these plagues in Egypt, whether they were generally upon all. 1. It is certaine, that all the Israelites that dwelt in the land of Goshen were exempted: wherein three things are to be considered: first, that although this exception and reservation be expressed only in five plagues, as in the swarmes of noisome flies and beasts, chap. 8.23. in the murrane of the cattell, chap. 9. 7. in the haile, chap. 9.26. the thicke darkenesse, chap. 20. 23. and in the destruction of the first borne. chap. 12. 23. Yet by the same analogy, it is to be understood, that the Israelites were also freed from the rest of the plagues. Secondly, mention is first made of this privilege in the fourth plague, when the Sorcerers were hindred from working, for this cause, that whereas before they tried their skill in their counterfeit signes in the land of Goshen (for in all Egypt the plagues overspread) and from thence it is like that they had the water which they turned into bloud) now it is insinuated, that they had no longer power to doe any such thing, no not in the land of Goshen, as they had before. Thirdly, not onely the persons of the people of Israel were free, as Exod. 12. 23. from the death of the first borne, but even their cattell, chap. 9. 7. and their ground, the land of Goshen where they dwelt, chap. 8.22.

2. Another sort is likely also to have beene exempted from these plagues: namely such strangers as sojourned of other nations in Egypt: for the story runneth upon the Egyptians, that they were plagued because they only were guilty of the wrong done to the Lords people: the other that were not accessary might either withdraw themselves out of Egypt, seeing the hand of God so heavy upon them, or they might through the mercy of God be spared.

3. Whereas these plagues did most of all light upon Pharaoh, and next upon the Ministers and Officers of his Kingdome, as the chiefe authors of the affliction of the Israelites, and then generally upon all the common sort of people, who executed the Kings cruell edict for the drowning of the Hebrewes children, Exod. 2. 23. yet wee are to thinke, that although in other generall plagues, which came upon Israel, many righteous persons did suffer in the calamity of the City, as in the destruction of Jerusalem, and the Babylonian captivity: yet that in these universall plagues they that feared God of the Egyptians were spared: as is expressly mentioned in the seventh plague, that they which feared the word of the Lord among the servants of Pharaoh, were delivered from it, chap. 9.20. that hereby it might appeare, that the Egyptians were punished for their cruelty towards the Lords people. Perer.

Quest. XXXIII. Whether the Egyptians which inhabited with Israel in the land of Goshen were exempted from the plagues.

BUt it is more doubted of the Egyptians, which dwelt among the Israelites in the land of Goshen, for they were mingled together, as is evident chap. 3. 22. whether they were freed from these generall plagues. 1. Thostatus thinketh that they also tasted of all the plagues, as well as the rest of Egypt, because their hatred was no lesse towards the Lords people. But in some plagues, as in the fourth of the swarmes, and in the seventh of the haile, it is affirmed that there were none in the land of Goshen: If the Country were freed, then the inhabitans also: and though these Egyptians that cohabited were haters of them also, yet the Lord might spare them for his peoples sake: because some plagues should also have touched the Israelites, if they had fallen upon their neighbours, as the haile and lightning. 2. Augustine thinketh that the Egyptians inhabiting Goshen, were free from all the plagues, but the last upon the first borne, because this was upon their persons, the other upon the ground it selfe, wherein Goshen was principal. quest. 44. in Exod. But this is not like neither: for in the fifth plague only the cattell and beasts of Israel are preserved from the murrane, chap. 9. 4. the beasts of the Egyptians, though dwelling among Israel, cannot bee said to bee the cattell of Israel. 3. Wherefore this distinction and difference must be made, that all those plagues which might be inflicted upon the persons, or substance of the Egyptians, without any damage or annoyance to the Israelites, among whom they dwelt, did as well fall upon them as other Egyptians: as such plagues as their persons were smitten with, as the sixth of botches and biles, and the tenth of the first borne: as also which fell upon their cattell, as the fifth plague, likewise the ninth plague of darkenesse come upon the Egyptians also, who, as it is observed, Wisdome 18. 1. did hate the Israelites, but saw them not: even the Egyptians, which were neighbours to the Israelites, felt of this plague also: But from the other plagues, which were an annoyance to the ground it selfe, and to all the inhabitans, even the Egyptians also were freed, that cohabited with them: as from the plague of waters turned into bloud: for herein the Egyptians there dwelling could not be punished, but the harme would likewise redound to the Israelites; such were the plagues of the frogs, lice, swarmes, haile, grashoppers, which were noisome to all the inhabitants where they fell: and in some of these plagues it is expressed directly, that the land of Goshen was free, as chap. 8.22. in the 4. plague of the swarmes, and in the 7. of the haile, chap. 9. 26.

Quest. XXXIV. Of the diversity in the manner of the plagues.

THe last of these generall considerations is, both of the divers manner of inflicting these plagues, and of Pharaohs divers behaviour, that is, for the diversity of the plagues: some of them were hurtfull to their persons, as the 6. 9. and 10. some upon their cattell, as the fifth, some upon their fruits, as the seventh, some upon the water and the earth, as the rest: some continued seven dayes, as the first, some three, as the ninth, most of them but one, as is shewed before, Quest. 29. Some of them are sent with any warning given before, as the third plague, chap. 8. 16. and the sixt, chap. 9. 8. and the ninth, chap. 10. 20. Some plagues are expressly mentioned to have beene removed by the prayer of Moses: as the second of frogs, chap. 8. 9. the fourth of swarmes, chap. 8. 30. the seventh of haile and lightning, chap. 9. 33. the eight of the grashoppers, chap. 10. 19. the other plagues have no such note. But it is like that when a new plague came the former ceased.

Quest. XXXV. Of Pharaohs divers and variable behaviour.

As touching Pharaohs behaviour, it was very variable and divers: at the first comming of Moses, he was at defiance with God, and said hee knew him not, chap. 5. At the first, the third, the fift, and last plague he was nothing at all mollified, but his heart was hardned still: In the second, the fourth, the seventh, the eight and ninth he somewhat yeelded, and made some semblance of repentance: yet all was but in hypocrisie.

In dismissing the people of Israel hee was of divers mindes: first hee would give them leave only to sacrifice in the land of Egypt, chap. 8. 25. then he would grant them to goe into the wildernesse to sacrifice there, but they must not goe farre away, chap. 8. 28. afterward he would let the men only goe, neither the women, nor children, chap. 10. ver. 10. 11. then he giveth leave for the children to goe also, but their sheep and cattell should stay behind, chap. 10. 24. at the last he is content they shall all goe with all they had, chap. 12. Perer.

Quest. XXXVI. Why the Lord sent divers plagues upon Pharaoh not destroying him at once.

NOw it pleased God, whereas he could have destroyed Pharaoh and all the Egyptians at once, yet to multiply his plagues, for these causes, 1. That Gods mercy might appeare in giving unto them time of repentance, and not consuming them together. 2. And by this variety of plagues and judgements the wonderous power of God is set forth. 3. This also addeth to the affliction and misery of the Egyptians, that were not cut off at one blow, but by this diversity of plagues, their punishment was made so much the more grievous.

4. Hereby also Pharaohs obstinacie and hardnesse of heart is made manifest, that could by no meanes relent notwithstanding so many plagues.

Of the first particular plague, of turning the waters into bloud.

Quest. XXXVII. Why Aaron is sometime the minister of the plagues and not Moses.

Vers. 20. HE lifted up the rod. That is, Aaron. 1. Not as the Hebrewes, because it was not meete that Moses, who was saved out of the waters should bring a plague upon the waters: for Aaron was the minister of the other plagues. 2. Neither was it for this (as Ferus) that Moses should not be thought to doe it also by sorcery: for they might have had the like suspition of Aaron. 3. But this was Gods institution and appointment that Moses should speake to Aaron in the name of God: and Aaron should be his Prophet, chap. 7. 1. both to speake unto Pharaoh, and to shew the signes: which both belonged unto Prophets. And therefore whereas verf. 19. Moses is bid to take the rod, it was to deliver unto Aaron: Iun. 4. Beside also this might be some reason thereof: Aaron was minister of the plagues, and of judgement, Moses of mercie: for he specially prayed unto God to remove the plagues, as chap. 8. 12. and 30. chap. 9. 33.

Quest. XXXVIII. Why the first plague beginneth in the water.

IN the water. The first plague beginneth in the water. 1. Philo thinketh because the Egyptians held the water to bee the beginning of all things, therefore the Lord causeth his plagues to begin there. 2. Rather, because they put their confidence in Nilus, and gave divine honour unto it, and superstitiously adored the Crocodile therein, therefore the Lord doth punish them there, where their confidence and supposed strength was: Perer. 3. As also because water is one of the most necessary things, that belong to mans life, and specially Nilus in Egypt, whereby their grounds were watered, the plagues begin there to shew the power and severity of God: Sumler. 4. As also this plague hath some correspondencie with their sinne of cruelty: 1. As they sinned in the water by the murdering of the innocents, so are they punished by water. 2. Because they caused the infants to dye in the water, the fish also dye there. 3. As they persecuted the Israelites, so the waters become horrible and loathsome. 4. As they shed the bloud of innocents, so they are constrained to drinke bloud. Ferus. Unto this story doth the Evangelist allude in the Revelation, where the third Angel powreth out his viall, and crieth: For they shed the blood of thy servants the Prophets, and therefore hast thou given them blood to drinke, chap. 16. 6. 5. This turning of the waters into bloud did also portend the destruction of the Egyptians, which last of all was fulfilled, but first of all threatned, Fer.

Quest. XXXIX. The greatnesse of this first plague.

The greatnesse of this plague appeareth: 1. Because it was generall over all Egypt, only the land of Goshen excepted, where the water was not changed, as Iosephus thinketh: this is more than Satan can do, for he is but in one place at once, and only worketh where he is present, but here the power of God changeth changeth all the water of Egypt at once, whereas Aaron ſtretched out his hand but over one place. Ferus. 2. Philo maketh this corruption of the waters more generall: he thinketh that all Nilus was turned into bloud, even from the firſt head and ſpring thereof: but that is not likely, for Nilus ſpringeth from certaine Mountaines in Æthiopia, and runneth a great way thorow the Æthiopians land: then by this meanes Æthiopia ſhould have beene plagued as well as Egypt, whereas the Scripture onely maketh mention of the land of Egypt to be thus plagued. 3. Beſide, not onely the river, but all lakes and ponders and veſſels, where they uſed to gather the water of Nilus to refine and cleanſe it, and to make it more potable, were corrupted. Sim. 4. The waters were changed into very bloud, ſuch as commeth out of the body, ſo much that many died of thirſt: Philo. And they that dranke of it were exceedingly pained: Ioſephus. 5. Yea, becauſe not bloud, but water is the element of fiſh, they alſo are choked, and by them the water was more putrified, which judgement was ſo much the greater, becauſe the Egyptians doe moſt feede of fiſh. Simler. 5. And this maketh the miracle more ſtrange: that the water of Nilus running cleere along thorow a great part of Æthiopia, when it came to the coaſts of Egypt, it there changed, both his colour and ſubſtance, being turned into bloud. Perer.

Quæſt. XL. Whence the Sorcerers had the water which they alſo turned into bloud.

Verſ. 22. And the Enchanters of Egypt did likewiſe. Whence the Magicians of Egypt ſhould have this water which they turned into bloud, all the waters of Egypt being converted, and altered already, much queſtion there is, and great diverſity of opinion. 1. Yet doe I not thinke with Theodoret, that they had theſe waters out of the ſea, which was not farre off: for that was no potable water, nor for drinke, and thoſe kinds of waters Moſes changed not: they are ſaid to doe the like, therefore in the ſame kind of water. 2. Neither yet is it like, as ſome Hebrewes thinke, as Lyranus ſaith, that beſide the rivers and lakes, which were changed, there were certaine fountaines of water beſide, from whence they might fetch their water: for this is contrary to the text, which includeth all pooles of water: verſ. 9. Some admit here a ſynecdoche, that all is taken for the moſt part: and that we need not underſtand, that all the waters in generall were converted. Borrh. But the generall ſpeeches of Scripture are not ſo to be reſtrained, where no cauſe is. 4. Cajetanus thus reſolveth, that all the waters were not changed at once, but firſt the rivers, then the lakes and pooles, and ſtanding waters, and laſt of all the waters kept in veſſels of ſtone, and of wood: veſſels of mettall are excepted: But what ſhould let, why by the power of God, to make the wonder greater, all the waters ſhould not be changed at once? and by theſe kinds of veſſels named, all other are ſignified, unleſſe it was the manner of the Egyptians to uſe none other veſſels, than of ſtone or wood. 5. Iuſtinus Martyr, to whom conſenteth Oſiander, doth thinke that the Sorcerers had this water out of the pits, which they digged about the river: But it ſeemeth that theſe waters were changed alſo, by the generall words, and that they laboured in vaine: For if the Egyptians could ſo have helped themſelves, they needed not to have wearied themſelves, in aſſaying to drinke of the waters of the river, as it is ſaid, verſ. 8. 6. Some thinke that the Sorcerers turned ſome of the water changed into bloud, as it was before, and then turned it againe into bloud: but this is altogether unlike, that they had power to undo Moſes worke, or to deſtroy his miracle. 7. Ferus thinketh that it was but water in ſhew, as the converſion of it into bloud was but counterfeit likewiſe: but as the Sorcerers rods were very rods, though the converſion of them into ſerpents were but imaginary: ſo the water here, which they uſed, was true water, though their worke were counterfeit. 8. Thoſtat. and Lyranus thinke that the Devill did miniſter unto them water brought from ſome other place, out of the land of Egypt: but in that the text ſaith they did the like, it muſt be underſtood of the waters of Egypt, wherein they did like unto Moſes. 9. Auguſtine hath two ſolutions: the firſt, that the Sorcerers might ſtay ſeven dayes, till the waters returned to their firſt nature, and then they ſhewed their cunning alſo. But it is not like that they ſtayed ſo long, for then their power ſhould have ſeemed to be ſmall, and Pharaohs heart was hardned, before the ſeven dayes were expired upon this practice of the Sorcerers. 10. His other ſolution is, that the Sorcerers tooke this water from the land of Goſhen, where the Iſraelites dwelt, for there the water was not changed, as Ioſephus will conjectureth: and this is moſt like: ſo alſo Iunius, Simler. But Pererius thinketh, that even the waters in the land of Goſhen were alſo turned into bloud, and that to the Egyptians they were noiſome, to the Iſraelites they were pleaſant and ſweet as before. Contra. Seeing in other plagues the land of Goſhen, and the Iſraelites were excepted, as in the fourth, fifth, ſeventh and ninth plague, it is not to be doubted, but that they were privileged in the reſt: and ſeeing the ſubſtance of the water was changed, and became very bloud, a ſecond miracle muſt be admitted to make it ſweet, and pleaſant to the Iſraelites: beſide this would have extenuated the miracle, that it had beene but a deceit, if the one could drinke of it, and not the other. Wherefore it is moſt like, that the waters which the Iſraelites uſed, were not become bloud, but that they had an exemption both from this, and from the other plagues.

Quæſt. XLI. What ſhift the Egyptians made for water during the continuance of the firſt plague.

Verſ. 25. And ſeven dayes were fulfilled. What ſhift then did the Egyptians make all this while for drinke? 1. Euſebius Ceſarenſis thinketh, that this plague of bloudy waters laſted but one day, and the ſpace of ſeven dayes is ſet betweene the firſt and the ſecond miracle: but if this had beene ſo, the Egyptians, if they had wanted water but one day, ſhould not ſo greatly have beene diſtreſſed, much needed they to have toiled themſelves in digging of wels. 2. Iuſtinus Martyr reſpon. ad quæſt. Orth.

thinketh, that the Egyptians dranke of the water of the pits which they digged: but it is more like that they digged in vaine for water, as Ferus judgeth: for neither could the plague sent of God, by humane wit or labour be prevented, & if the Egyptians could thus have helped themselves, their distresse & necessity had not beene so great. 3. Thostatus thinketh that they found water in the pits which they digged, not altogether pure, neither yet wholly bloudy, but yet by the veines and pipes of the earth somewhat refined from the thicke bloudy grossenesse, as we see that salt sea water is strained and clensed by putting the same into certaine vessels: and with this water the Egyptians (necessity so compelling them) contented themselves. Contra. There is not the like reason of naturall things and supernaturall: this turning of water into bloud being supernaturall, how is it like, that it could by naturall meanes be qualified? 4. Therefore I thinke rather, that the Egyptians were driven to drinke of the water of the river, they had no other shift, and therefore it is said, vers. 18. That they should be weary, or labour (as the word signifieth) to drinke of the river, which they needed not to have done, if there had beene any other shift. And as Philo writeth, it is like that many in the space of these seven dayes, some died of thirst, some were poisoned by the stinking water, so that they lay dead on heapes, and the living scarce sufficed to bury them.

Quest. XLII. Whether the raine that fell was turned into bloud, as the Latine translator readeth.

Like whereas Psalme 78. 44. the Septuagint reade ὐμβρήματα, and the Latine translator following them, interpreteth imbres, that he turned their raine or showers into bloud; Augustine here moveth a question how this should be, (Moses making no mention of raine water) and resolveth, that the word ὐμβρήματα signifieth as well waters that flow from below, as that fall from above, and so Iansenius deriveth it of ὐμὸν and ῥεῖν, to flow together: but this doubt will easily be removed, if we consult with the originall, where the word is nechalim, which signifieth flouds and rivers, of Nazal to flow; so Vatablus translateth, rivos; Pagnin. and Montan. fluenta: for it is notoriously knowne, that in Egypt falleth no raine, as Philo testifieth, lib. 3. de vita Mosis, and Plinie lib. 6. Mela. lib. 3. cap. 9. and so much the Scripture insinuateth, Deut. 11. 11. where Moses sheweth a difference betweene the land of Canaan and Egypt, where they watered their fields with their feet, as a garden, that is, they conveyed the waters of Nilus by trenches and furrowes to their fields, which overflowing their grounds serveth in steed of raine: and therefore the Egyptians did more honour Nilus than heaven Perer. Psal. 78. 44.

Quest. XLIII. Whether the Sorcerers did turne the waters into true bloud.

Now whether the Sorcerers brought forth true bloud, as Moses did, though it need bee no question, as is before shewed, Quest. 21. yet there are divers opinions about it: 1. Augustine thinketh that the Sorcerers, by the Devils helpe, did change the water into very naturall bloud, lib. 83. quæst 79. But that cannot be, for the Devils have no power to change or transforme one substance into another immediatly, without naturall meanes: and seeing true bloud is not ingendred but in the body, and that not immediatly but by certaine degrees and preparations, Satan could not in truth doe any such thing. 2 Pererius thinketh that this bloud was cunninly conveyed by the Devils helpe from some other place, and not made out of the water. But this is not likely, for it was no small quantity of bloud, which seemed to be changed by the Sorcerers: out of how many bodies could the Devill draw and sucke so much bloud? and if the bloud were brought, what came of the water that must bee conveyed away also? Beside the text saith, that the enchanters did likewise: then as Moses turned water into bloud, they must, to make their worke like, turne water also into bloud, or seeme to doe it. 3. Wherefore I subscribe rather to Iustinus: Sanguinem à Magis exhibitum, non fuisse verum, sed fallacem & præstigiosum: That the bloud brought forth by the Magicians, was not true bloud, but deceitfull and counterfeit: quæst. Orthod. 26. Ferus reason is, because naturas mutare solius Dei est: it only belongeth unto God to change natures. Ostander saith, Videntur ad breve tempus conversæ: The waters seemed to be changed by the Sorcerers, but for a short time: but Moses miracle continued seven dayes, which sheweth that it was a true miracle. So Ambrose concludeth, Si arte sua quis dæmonis astutia aliam creaturam fingat ad horam, sicut finxerunt Iannes & Iambres: If any by his cunning and sleight deceit can faine another creature for a time, as Iannes and Iambres did, &c. Ambros. in 8. cap. ad Rom.

Quest. XLIV. How this first plague was stayed.

Now this plague ceased is not expressed. 1. Philo thinketh, that at the supplication of the Egyptians made to Moses, and his prayer unto God, the waters returned to their first nature. But if it had not so, it is not unlike but that Moses could have expressed so much, as hee doth in the other plagues, were stayed by that meanes. 2. Iosephus writeth, that Pharaoh seeing the miserable state of the Egyptians, did give leave to the Israelites to depart, and so the plague ceased, but presently after hee repented him; but the Scripture seemeth to be contrary, for Pharaohs heart was hardened at the first, and not mollified at all, neither did this plague enter into his heart, vers. 23. 3. Therefore it is most like that this plague contined untill the beginning of the second, which is the end of the first, and so it ceased neither by entreatie of Pharaoh, or the Egyptians, or by the prayer of Moses, but by the will of God. Thostat.

Quest. XLV. Of the application and use of this first plague.

Of the mysticall application of this plague: 1. Augustine comparing the ten plagues of Egypt, and the ten Commandements together, doth referre the first plague to the first Commandement, applying it thus: The water out of the which commeth the generation of many things, ſignifieth God the beginning of all: the turning of this water into bloud, is the corrupting of the divine worſhip by humane and carnall inventions of fleſh and bloud. 2. But I preferre rather Ferus applications; the one prophetical, that this plague did portend, the bloudy end and deſtruction of Pharaoh and the Egyptians: the other morall: that wherein a man ſinneth, thereby in the juſtice of God is he puniſhed: as Adonizek by the cutting off his fingers and toes, as he had ſerved others; Abſalon by his haire which hee was proud of: ſo the Egyptians are puniſhed in the water, wherein they had deſtroyed ſo many innocent babes. Pererius.

4. Places of doctrine.

1. Doct. Of the inſtitution of the princely and prieſtly calling.

Verſ. 1. I Have made thee Pharaohs God, and Aaron thy brother ſhall be thy Prophet. Here we have the inſtitution of two moſt neceſſarie callings among the people of God, the princely power in Moſes, whoſe commiſſion was to give edicts and lawes; and the Eccleſiaſticall in Aaron, to whom it appertained to interprete and expound the Law, as the Prophet ſaith, Aske the Prieſt concerning the law. Bern.

2. Doct. Of the hardning of the heart, how it is ſaid to proceed from God.

Verſ. 3. I will harden Pharaohs heart. Mans heart is hardened two wayes, either by it ſelfe internally, or by ſome externall accident that moveth the inward cauſe or the inſtruments thereof: the externall agents, are either efficients, and ſo the Devill as an efficient and working cauſe moveth the heart of man unto evill, being corrupt of it ſelfe: or they are only diſpoſing and ordering: ſo the Lord is ſaid to harden the heart: which he doth three wayes: 1. By leaving the will of man, being deſtitute of good, to it evill nature and diſpoſition. 2. By ſome occaſion given by the Lord, which in it ſelfe is good, the heart of the wicked becommeth more obſtinate, as by the Lords commandement by Moſes Pharaoh was more hardened: ſo the Apoſtle ſheweth that ſome take occaſion by the law, which is good, to bee more evill, Rom. 7. like as tender and weake eyes, by the brightneſſe of the Sunne, doe dazle the more and become blinder. 3. The Lord ſeeing the will of obſtinate men to be thus hardened and bent upon evill, he in his juſtice alſo driveth them to that end, whither of themſelves they runne headlong: Ius. Like as the primum mobile, in the heavens, the utmoſt ſphere, carrieth all the other inferiour orbes of the planets about, yet every one of them doe keepe their contrary courſe, by the which the eclipſes of the Sunne and Moone fall out: yet ſo as by the firſt overruling motion, they are whirled about and brought to their Eclipſe, which is properly cauſed notwithſtanding by their owne particular motion: ſo there is an overruling power of God, that bringeth every thing to the end appointed: yet the defects and eclipſes of our will doe proceede of our owne corrupt nature. See more of this point how the Lord is ſaid to harden the heart, chap. 4. queſt. 19.

3. Doct. That no man ſinneth of abſolute neceſſitie.

Verſ. 22. HE did not hearken unto them as the Lord had ſaid. It was neceſſary that Pharaoh ſhould not hearken unto Moſes, becauſe the Lord had foretold ſo much, who cannot be deceived, But Pharaoh was not forced or compelled thereunto: there is then an abſolute or violent neceſſity, which forceth and compelleth; there is a conditionall and hypotheticall neceſſity, when a thing is ſaid to be neceſſary another thing preſuppoſed: ſo Pharaohs diſobedience and obſtinacy was the ſecond way neceſſary, upon the preſuppoſall of Gods preſcience; but the firſt way it was not neceſſary; the firſt neceſſity is coactive, but the ſecond is voluntary, the other neither juſtifieth a man if he doe well being forced, nor condemneth him if hee doe evill: but the ſecond hath place in both: both the righteous have praiſe whoſe obedience in reſpect of Gods ordinance is neceſſary and infallible, and the wicked are juſtly condemned, who ſinne willingly, though Gods preſcience conſidered in ſome ſort alſo neceſſarily. Bern.

5. Places of controverſie and confutation.

1. Confut. Againſt thoſe that impugne the deity of Chriſt.

Verſ. 1. I Have made thee Pharaohs God. Hence certaine Heretikes, as Neſtorius, that did ſeparate the humanity of Chriſt from his divine nature, would confirme their hereſie that the man Chriſt was God, no otherwiſe than Moſes is called God, as Eliphandus a Biſhop of Spaine, who held, that the man Chriſt was onely the Sonne of God by adoption. Contra. 1. The name of God in Scripture is given unto men, as Pſal. 80. I ſaid ye are Gods; but that title is given them in reſpect of their office, but it agreeth unto Chriſt by nature: for here the Lord is ſaid to have appointed Moſes God, not to have begotten him as Hilarie well noteth: neither is he ſimply called God, as Chriſt is, but with an addition, Pharaohs God. 2. Not onely the name of Elohim, God, is given unto Chriſt, but Iehovah, which is a name not communicable unto any creature, but peculiar unto God: and if Chriſt were no otherwiſe God, than Moſes was, it were Idolatry to worſhip him. Simler. 3. Hilarie alſo ſheweth that Chriſt is ſaid to be five wayes God, which agree unto none, but him: 1. in name, he is ſimply called God, as Iohn 1. The word was and 1. Epist. Ioh. 5.20. speaking of Jesus Christ, he saith, the same is very God. 2. By his nativity and generation, and so he is called the Sonne of God. 3. By nature hee is one with God: I and the father are one. 4. In power, all power is given me in heaven and in earth. Matth. 20. 5. By his owne profession, he professed himselfe to be the Sonne of God, and therefore the Jewes went about to kill him, because he said that God was his Father, Iohn 5.18. Hilar. lib. 7. de trinitat.

2. Confut. Against transubstantiation.

Vers. 12. Aarons rod devoured their rods. The Papists would establish their transubstantiation by this place, for as Aarons rod, being turned into a serpent, is still called a rod: not because it was so now, but for that it had beene so: so the bread in the Eucharist after it is converted into the body of Christ is called bread still, because it was so before. Contra. 1. If they could shew Scripture to warrant the conversion of the bread into Christs body, as here is an evident text for the turning of the rod into a serpent, they should say somewhat, but untill they can doe that, their error can have no colour from hence. 2. Beside Aarons rod is so called, not only because it had beene a rod before, but it was to returne to be a rod againe: but they will not have the body of Christ returne againe to be bread. Simler.

In the questions before handled, the 27. and 28. concerning the power of Satan in counterfeiting the spirits of the dead: one question of purpose there handled by Pererius, touching the apparition of Samuel raised by the Pythonisse, 1. Sam. 28. I of purpose there omitted, reserving it for this place of confutation.

3. Confut. That Samuel himselfe appeared not to Saul, but the Devill in his likenesse.

1. THe most of that side are of opinion, that it was the very soule of Samuel, not raised up by the witches enchantments, but God interposing himselfe, did prevent her superstitious invocations, and sent Samuel to declare his judgements to Saul. sic Thostatus, Cajetanus, Pererius: and their reasons are these: First, because the Scripture saith, it was Samuel. 2. Hee saith, as the Lord spake by my hand, vers. 17. which was true of Samuel, not of the Devill in the likenesse of Samuel. 3. Hee foretelleth what should happen unto Saul the next day: which the Devill could not doe. 4. In Ecclesiasticus it is written, that Samuel, after his sleepe told of the Kings death, chap. 46.20. Ferer.

Contra. 1. The Scripture speaketh according as the thing appeared, not as it was, as Pharaoh in his dreame is said to have seene kine come out of the river, Gen. 41,2. which were but representations of kine. 2. As the Devill tooke upon him Samuels person, so he also counterfeiteth his speech: it was not true out of the Devils mouth, no more was it true Samuel; such counterfeit speech became a counterfeit Samuel. 3. The Devill might either by certaine conjectures, perceiving in what distresse Saul was, and that God had forsaken him, gesse what the successe of the battell should be: or rather God herein might force him to speake the truth, as did the false Prophet Balaam: Borrh. 4. The authority of the booke of Ecclesiasticus doth not presse us, and Augustine doubteth also thereof, affirming that it was not in Canone Hebraeum: The Hebrewes received it not into the Canon of Scripture, lib. de cura pro mortuis, chap. 18. 5. Neither is there the like reason of Gods preventing the witches enchantments and Balaams divinations: for that God did to his further glorie, to shew his power, in making the false Prophet to be an instrument of the truth: but this had beene contrary to Gods owne law, who forbiddeth that any should aske counsell of the dead, Deut. 18. Borrh.

2. Some doe goe further, and thinke, that the Devill might have power also to bring up Samuels body: as Satan transported Christs body to the top of the pinacle. Contra. 1. There is not the like reason betweene the transporting of the bodies of the living and of the dead, which are asleepe and at rest. 2. Satan had no power over Christs body, but hee yeelded himselfe to Satans temptation, that hee might overcome him in his owne weapon: and this was permitted unto Satan to doe for the glorie of God, the comfort of his members, the confusion and victory over Satan: but if Satan should be suffered to take up the bodies of the Saints, neither God should receive honour by it, nor the Church profit; and beside Satan thereby would strengthen his Kingdome of darkenesse. Borrh.

3. Wherefore the founder judgement is, that it was not the spirit of Samuel, but of Satan, that appeared to Saul: who can transforme himselfe into an Angel of light, much more take upon him the shape of a Prophet. Our reasons are these. 1. Tertullian saith, Absit ut animam cujusquam sancti à daemone exciam credamus: Far be it from us to thinke, that the soule of any holy man can bee brought out by witchcraft, lib. de anima: Pererius answereth that the Witch called not up Samuel, but it was Gods worke to send him, preventing the Witches enchantments. Contra. But this is not to bee admitted; because the Scripture calleth it an abomination to the Lord, to aske of the dead, Deut. 18.12. the Lord would not be accessary to any thing which is an abomination before him. 2. The true Samuel would not have suffered Saul to have worshipped him with a religious worship, as the counterfeit Samuel doth: so reasoneth Augustine. Pererius answereth, that this was not such adoration as is due unto God, but that reverence which may be yeelded to Angels and Saints. Contra. There are but two kindes of adoration, a civill and religious: the religious veneration is onely due unto God, and therefore refused by the Angel, Rev. 22. the civill this was not, as appeareth by Sauls submisse behaviour, and superstitious devotion. 3. This Samuel saith, Why hast thou disquieted me? But Samuels soule being at rest in Abrahams bosome, was out of the Devils reach, he could not disquiet it. Pererius answereth that Saul did disquiet it, mediate, vel aliter, by giving the occasion, not efficaciter, as being the efficient cause thereof. Contra. But if Samuel spake these words, then hee was in truth disquieted: the question is by whom, if not by the Devils practises, occasioned by Saul, than by God; but I thinke, it will not bee confessed that God disquieteth teth the ſoules of his Saints being at reſt. 4. If the Lord vouchſafed not to anſwer Saul, when hee lawfully ſought unto him, neither by his Prieſts, nor his Prophets, how is it like that the Lord ſhould anſwer by his Prophet, and when he uſeth unlawfull meanes? Pererius anſwereth, that God did not vouchſafe to anſwer him by any ſuch meanes, that hee might know that God had forſaken him: but now not ſeeking unto God, but unto a Witch, God doth ſend him a ſorrowfull meſſage, by that Prophet whom hee would not harken unto while hee lived. Contra. Yet is not the objection removed, that God ſhould rather anſwer Saul uſing unlawfull meanes, than when hee uſed lawfull: firſt, if the not anſwering before ſhewed that God had left him, then the anſwering now by a Prophet of Gods ſending, argueth that hee was not altogether forgotten. If it bee ſaid that Saul knew him not to bee ſent of God, but raiſed by a Witch: then it will follow that this Samuel kept him in that error without reproofe, which the good Prophet would not have omitted. Againe, if the heavy anſwer and meſſage of evill tidings, was a ſigne that God neglected him, why then did not the Lord vouchſafe to anſwer him before at all? God would anſwer him neither good nor evill. Thirdly, this Prophet being dead, could bring him no worſe tidings now, then he did when he lived, that his Kingdome was rent from him and given to another. 5. Some adde this as a fifth argument, that Samuel would not have ſaid, To morrow thou ſhalt be with mee, that is, in the ſtate of happineſſe, ſeeing hee knew that the Lord had caſt him off. Pererius thinketh that hee did meane he ſhould deſcend in generall to hell, as all before Chriſts comming did, though not to that region and place of hell, Limbus Patrum, where the Fathers were. Contra. But firſt Pererius muſt ſhew us out of Scripture, that there be divers hels. In the parable of the rich glutton, there are but two places mentioned after this life; Abrahams boſome a place of reſt, whither the Angels carried the ſoule of Lazarus; and a place of torment, where the rich man was. That Abrahams boſome was no part of hell, beſide Auguſtines opinion, who cannot thinke, tam a felicitatis ſinum membrum inferorum, &c. that a place of ſuch great happineſſe was a member or part of hell: the text it ſelfe evidently ſheweth as much, becauſe it was a place of comfort and joy, and of great diſtance from hell, and the Angels of light did miniſter there, who remaine not in the kingdome of darkneſſe. And againe, that the Patriarkes and Prophets before Chriſt, were in heaven, our Saviour teſtifieth: Many ſhall come from the Eaſt and Weſt, and ſit downe with Abraham, Iſaack and Iacob in the Kingdome of heaven Matth.8.11. Abraham, Iſaack and Iacob then were now in the Kingdome of heaven, and yet Chriſt in their opinion had not then harrowed hell, nor yet emptied Limbus Patrum. Some doe expound theſe words, thou ſhalt be with mee, generally of the ſtate of the dead. Iun. But, beſide the opinion of ſome Hebrewes, that doe take theſe words to bee ſpoken of Sauls particular ſtate, that he ſhould be in ſome place of reſt where Samuel was, and hereupon they inferre, that Saul died penitently; (where we receive their interpretation, but refuſe their collection, as being builded upon a falſe ground, the teſtimony of a lying ſpirit) this place is like to that, where David ſaith of his infant departed, I ſhall goe to him, 2.*Sam.*12.23. which words doe not onely ſignifie a generall kinde of departure, but a reſolution in David, that it was well with his child. Like alſo unto this is that phraſe, Gen. 25. that Abraham was gathered to his people; and in the ſame chapter, that Iſmael was gathered to his people: which ſeemeth to inſinuate, that each went unto his people, and that Abraham was aſſociate unto the juſt and righteous departed. See more hereof, *Queſt.*15. upon *Geneſ.*25. And hereunto the Apoſtle ſeemeth to allude, when he ſaith, *Hebr.*12.23. Yee are come, &c. to the congregation of the firſtborn, &c. to the ſpirits of juſt and perfect men, ſhewing the ſociety and communion which we have with the people of God gone out of the world.

6. Places of Morall uſe.

1. Mor. They that humble themſelves ſhall be exalted.

I Have made thee Pharaohs God. Moſes who before ſo abaſed himſelfe, that hee by all meanes would have declined his calling, excuſing him by his inſufficiencie; now the Lord doth exalt him, making him ſuperior to Kings: he ſhould be as a God to Pharaoh; not whom Pharaoh ſhould worſhip, but whom he ſhould feare and ſtand in awe of; he ſhould be as a God to bring plagues and judgements upon him, and his land, and to remove the ſame againe. Thus is that ſaying of our Saviour fulfilled: He that humbleth himſelfe ſhall be exalted.

2. Mor. Gods commandements are ſimply without any exception to be obeyed.

Verſ.6. SO Moſes and Aaron did, as the Lord commanded, ſo did they. This repitition is not needleſſe, but ſheweth that they moſt exactly performed all given them in charge: the commandements of God muſt be obeyed without all exception or limitation. An Emperour of Rome commanded a workman from the navy, of two maſtes of a ſhip to bring the greater to make a battell ramme, and he brought the leſſe, which he thought meeteſt for that worke: whereupon the Emperour commanded him to be beaten, for diſobeying him, ſaying that the Majeſty of the Emperour would ſoone decay, if men might obey as they liſt; much more are Gods precepts (which are moſt juſt and wiſe, and to them can nothing bee added) to bee ſimply obeyed: As David ſaith, Thou haſt commanded to keepe thy precepts diligently, *Pſal.*119.4. Simler.

3. Mor.

3. Mor. There is no fleeing from God.

Vers. 32. Pharaoh returned and went to his house. But even in his house also the judgement of God overtooke him: there is no fleeing from God, as the Prophet saith, Though they dig into hell, thence shall mine hand take them, though they clime up to heaven, thence will I bring them downe. Amos 9. 2.

CHAP. VIII.

1. The Argument and Method.

IN this Chapter three other plagues are described: the second of the frogs, to vers. 16. the third of the lice, to vers 20. the fourth of the swarmes of noisome creatures, to vers. 36. and accordingly this Chapter consisteth of three parts.

The first containeth, 1. the denuntiation of the plague, and the manner thereof, both what the plague shall be, of frogs, vers. 2. whence they shall come, out of the river; the place, they shall spread over all Egypt; the manner, and scrall even into their bedchambers vers. 4. 2. Then followeth the execution, vers. 5. 6. 3. The events are three, the like practice of the Sorcerers, vers. 7. the removing of the plague at Moses prayer, being importuned by Pharaoh, to vers. 15. and the hardning of Pharaohs heart, vers. 16.

In the second part, shewing the third plague, is set downe first the commandement of God to Moses, vers. 16. Secondly, the execution, vers. 17. Thirdly, the event, the confession of the Sorcerers acknowledging Gods power, vers. 20.

In the third part, containing the fourth plague, there is first the denouncing of the plague to Pharaoh: wherein is set forth Moses request to Pharaoh for the people of Israel, vers. 20. then a description of the plague upon his refusall, vers. 21. with a reservation and exemption of the land where the Israelites were, vers. 23. Secondly, the execution followeth, vers. 24. Thirdly, then the events, which are three: first, Pharaoh relenteth to let Israel goe, with certaine reservations, to vers. 28. Secondly, the plague is taken away at Moses prayer, to vers. 32. Lastly Pharaohs heart is againe hardened, vers. 32.

2. The divers readings.

Vers. 3. In the house of thy servants and on thy people. B. G. cum cæter. and of thy people. S. But here the preposition is wanting: and into the house of thy people. I. that is the meaning, but the preposition joyned with the word beyamecha, approveth the first reading, as the next verse sheweth, on thee, and on thy people. B. G. cum cæter.

And into thy kneading troughs. I. C. G. better than, upon thy victuals in store. B. L. or, in thy paste. V. P. or A. Arguion S. misharoth rather signifieth the vessell wherein the dow is kned, than the dow it selfe, as Exod. 12. 34. there is another word joyned with it, that signifieth dow, which they bound up in their kneading vessels, and carried it on their shoulders. I. C. G.

Vers. 5. Stretch forth thine hand over the streames. B. G. C. cum cæter. better than, Against the streames, as Pisc. or, to worke upon the streames. I. to worke is added: the preposition ghal is in the end of the verse taken for over, or upon, cause the frogs to come upon the land of Egypt. B. G. cum cæter.

Vers. 9. Take to thee this honour over me. I. that is, I give thee this honour, to appoint the time, better than, glory herein because of me, B. V. or, glorie upon me, A. P. that is, because I am at hand to pray for thee, and helpe thee: or, appoint thou me the time, S. L. G. for Phaar signifieth to glory or boast, and in hithpael to take unto one glory: so Judg. 7. 2. I.

Vers. 13 Out of the courtyards: I. or courts, A. V. C. out of the villages. L. S. P. G. chatzer signifieth both village, a towne without walles, Levit. 25 31. and a court or court-yard, as 1. King. 7. 4. here the latter better: and so by degrees the frogs went away, first out of their houses, then out of their yards, and courts and enclosed grounds, and last of all out of their open fields and champion grounds. I. A. V.

Vers. 21. Mingled swarmes, I. V. A. not only of noisome flies, but of other venomous beasts, as Scorpiones, Vipers. V. C. all kindes of beasts. P. rather than swarmes of flies. B. G. L. or dog flies. G. gherob signifieth any mixture of divers things: as Exod. 12. 38. it is taken for a mixture of divers sorts of people. I. V. A.

Vers. 22. I will separate the land of Goshen. V. A. P. C. that is, except. I. better than, cause to be wonderfull. G. L. G. Phalah with he signifieth to separate, so it is taken chap. 8. 4. as may appeare by the construction of the preposition ben, betweene, but with aleph it signifieth to be wonderfull. I. V. A. P.

Vers. 23. I will make a deliverance, or redemption. G. V. A. P. C. I will set a signe of redemption betweene. I. The sense of the words: signe is not in the originall; better than, I will put a division betweene. L. B. Phadah signifieth to redeeme.

Vers. 29. Let not Pharaoh mocke any longer. I. deceive, lie, cæter. hatal signifieth both: the first is here better, because Pharaoh mocked, rather than lied, for a lie proceedeth from an intention to deceive: Pharaoh when he promised to let the people goe seemeth so to have intended, but that his heart became afterward to be hardened.

3. The

3. The explanation of difficult questions.

QUEST. I. What kinde of frogs the second plague brought upon Egypt.

Vers. 2. I will smite all thy coasts with frogs. 1. The Hebrewes take Zephardghim, which here signifieth frogges, for a certaine kinde of fish, that come out of Nilus, and devoured men: but here is no mention made, that these Zephardghim should devoure or kill men, but onely annoy them even in their houses, and pastries: they had heard of the Crocodile of Nilus, that useth to destroy men, and so frame their fable according to that report: Pellican. 2. Plinie writeth of two sorts of frogges, beside the common sort, that liveth in the waters; one is called Rubeta, because they keepe among bushes and briers upon the land, which are the greatest among other, and venomous: strange vertues are given to this kinde, that being brought into an assemblie of people, there followeth a generall silence; the bone thereof being cast into seething water cooleth it presently; it allayeth the rage of dogs, Plin. lib. 32. 5. The other sort is called Calamita, because it keepeth among the flags and reedes, it is little and greene, and causeth not an oxe chance to eat it he swelleth presently: the flesh thereof applied to the eyes, doth cleare them and easeth the paine. It seemeth this plague consisted most of the common sort of frogs, because they came out of the waters: yet there might be a mixture also of the other sorts, especially of the Rubeta, to make the plague more grievous. 3. And in this plagüe, this was strange and extraordinary, that the frogs left the waters, their proper element, and scralled upon the land, and entered their houses. Simler.

QUEST. II. Of the greatnesse of this plague frogs.

COncerning the greatnesse of this plague: 1. Philo noteth that those frogs filled the high ways, and their houses, yea crept into their Temples, and did climbe up into their upper chambers, so that they were at their wits end. 2. Iosephus saith, that beside the annoyance which they brought upon the land by leaping upon their meat and drinke, that the waters were corrupted by them, so that it stanke of them, and was putrified and full of corruption: Some Hebrewes write also that they crept into their mouthes when they were asleepe, and entred into their bowels. 3. Thus the Egyptians by this plague were cumbred, and punished in all their senses; in their sight with the number and uglinesse of them; in their hearing, with their croaking; in their taste, by corrupting their victuals; in their smell, with the stinch of them; in their feeling, with their biting and venom: Pererius. 4. This plague was suitable to their sinne: for as they regarded not the pitifull and mournfull cries of the infants which they cast into the water, so now are they vexed with the crying and croaking of frogges. Infants, as Theodoret noteth, are herein resembled to crafling frogs, because they doe so creepe upon their hands and feete, before they are able to goe: Perer. 5. We reade that in time past, whole Cities have beene dispeopled by frogs, that invaded them without any miraculous worke: Plinie out of Varro reporteth of a City in France, where the people were driven away by frogs: Paulus Orosius writeth that the Abderites were chased out of their Country by frogs, and craved of Cassander King of Macedonia, some other place of habitation. Pere. So Artortias of India, and the people inhabiting about Pæonia, and Dardania, were invaded of frogs: for mud also out of the slime thereof, is apt to engender frogs, as Iosephus writeth, and for this cause the land of Egypt is honoured among them, because that kind destroyeth the frogs. But there is a great difference between this miraculous worke, and the other: first in respect of the infinite number of them, and their generall overspreading: secondly, those frogs were ingendred not all at once, but by little and little; here also as Aaron had stretched out his hand, this great army of frogs was raised; thirdly, they all are suddenly destroyed and gathered in heapes: the other as they came not all at once, so neither doe they go away altogether. Simler.

Plinius lib. 8. cap. 9. Orosius lib. 3. cap. ult.

QUEST. III. From whence this great aboundance of frogs came.

THis aboundance of frogs: 1. Came neither out of the slime, as Iosephus thinketh, into the which saith they were resolved againe. 2. Neither yet altogether out of the waters: for though Egypt be full of pooles of water and lakes, yet they sufficed not to fill all Egypt with frogges. 3. Therefore they were brought forth by the power of God: neither did the frogs of any naturall instinct, leave their waters to creepe upon the land: but like as God by the ministry of his Angels, brought all the creatures unto Adam, to receive their names, and afterward unto Noah in the Arke: so were these frogs brought together and sent upon the land. Perer.

QUEST. IV. In what place and how the Sorcerers brought forth frogs.

Vers. 7. The Sorcerers did likewise. 1. They brought not forth true frogs, but counterfeit before the first plague; but the frogs that Aaron caused were frogs indeed, for afterward they were gathered into heapes, and the land stanke of them, that it might appeare to be a true miracle. 2. These Sorcerers though in shew they could bring forth frogs, yet they could not remove the plague of frogs, which was sent upon the land. Osiander. 3. The place where the Sorcerers shewed their skill, was the land of Goshen, which was exempted both from these and the other plagues: for the Lord meant only to bring the frogs upon Pharaoh and his people, vers. 3. Iun. Simler.

Quest. V. Why Pharaoh calleth now for Moses and not before.

Vers. 8. Then Pharaoh called for Moses, &c. Pharaoh called not for Moses to pray for him to remove the first plague, though both Philo and Iosephus so affirme: there being no such thing expressed before, it is hard for any man to imagine that which there is no warrant for. 2. Therefore this may be the cause why Pharaoh is forced now to flee unto Moses, and not before, because this was a more grievous and intolerable plague, which is extended upon Pharaoh and his house: none are exempted from it: in the other plague they might make some shift to helpe themselves, as the richer sort with wine, the poore with the juyce of herbes and such like; but against this plague there is no remedy. Perer. 3. But it seemeth that Pharaoh had a double meaning, he would have the frogs removed first, that afterward hee might call backe his promise for dismissing of the people. Simler.

Quest. VI. Why Moses saith to Pharaoh, take this honour to thee.

Vers. 9. Take this honour over me when I shall pray. 1. Some refer these words to the event: that when the frogs were removed, Pharaoh should have good cause to boast of Moses, and to rejoyce that he was so neere at hand to helpe him: Vatab. 2. Some understand Moses to speake by way of comparison, that he had now no cause to boast of his Sorcerers that could not helpe, but in Moses. Simler. 3. But the meaning seemeth rather to be this, that Moses doth yeeld unto Pharaoh this honour, to appoint a time when the frogs should be taken away, that God might receive greater honour thereby. Iun.

Quest. VII. Whether Moses tempted God in prescribing the time of removing the plagues.

Against time I shall pray for thee. 1. Moses doth not tempt God in appointing a time for this worke, as the Bethulians did, Iudith chap. 7. that limited to themselves the space of five dayes, to expect helpe from God: for they speake doubtfully, but Moses confidently: Simler. 2. Neither herein did Moses presume, but he was assured of Gods assistance, not being so much confirmed by the successe of the miracles hitherto, as building upon Gods promise, who had made him a God unto Pharaoh, both to bind and loose, to doe and undoe. Simler. Borrh. 3. And Moses leaveth it to Pharaohs choice to appoint a time, that he might have bin thought to have wrought by constellation, or other astrologicall meanes. Pellican.

Quest. VIII. Of the use and application of this plague of the frogs.

Concerning the application of this plague: 1. Augustine would hereby understand the Poets of the Gentiles, which as by the crooking of frogs, so by their vaine babling have brought in many impious and deceitful fables. 2. Gregorie Nyssenus maketh these frogs a type and figure of the Epicures and licentious life, which entereth into Pharaohs house, that is, most aboundeth in the houses of Princes and great men. 3. Ferus doth take it in the better part, that hereby the conversion of a sinner is set forth: God sendeth frogs upon the land, when he sheweth a man his owne filthinesse. 4. But that other application of Iun is more ape, who by the crooking of frogs, understandeth Hereticks, that doe open their mouth against the truth, as Revel. 16. 13. the uncleane spirits that came out of the mouth of the Dragon and the false Prophet, are resembled unto frogs, such crauling frogs are the popish Monkes and Friers, that are sent forth from the mouth and spirit of Antichrist, to crooke against the truth. Borrh. 5. Beside, the historicall application of this plague, is this, that these frogs are spued out of Nilus the glorie of Egypt: where their greatest delight was, from thence commeth their confusion. Simler. And as in Nilus they drowned the children, so from thence their punishment taketh beginning: and as they abhorred the sight of the innocents, so they are constrained to indure the ugly sight of deformed frogs and vermin.

Quest. IX. Why Pharaoh appointeth Moses to morrow.

Vers. 10. Then hee said, to morrow. 1. Some understand it of the time, when Pharaoh would let the people go: but it appeareth by Moses offer in the former verse, leaving to Pharaoh the time, when he should pray for him, that Pharaoh accordingly named the next day to that end. 2. Which time refuseth not Moses, as giving him some space for his prayer. Simler. For Pharaoh had no such devotion, to consider what time was meetest for his prayer. 3. But the very cause was this, hee might thinke that Moses offered himselfe at this time, which he saw by some constellation or aspect of the starres to bee fit for his working, and therefore putteth him to another day: or Pharaoh might thinke this to be some naturall worke, and not sent of God, and therefore would stay a while and see, whether the frogs might goe away of themselves without Moses prayer. Pellican. Perer.

Quest. X. Why the Lord did not remove the frogs quite.

Vers. 14. And they gathered them together by heapes. 1. The Egyptians had beene able of themselves to have destroyed these frogs, but that God armed them against them, and their number was such, that they could not resist them; like as the history of the Bishop of Ments is famous, that was devoured of rats and mice, following him into the midst of the river of Rhene, where yet the Rats tower, as it is to bee seene. Simler. And our English Chronicles also doe make mention of a young man, devoured by toades, who could by no meanes bee defended from them, but being hanged in the top of a trunke, they crauled up thither and devoured him. 2. God could either have cast these frogges into the river againe, or caused them to vanish, but it pleased him they should remaine in heapes, as a spectacle spectacle to the Egyptians, both to shew that it was a true miracle, and that the stinke thereof in their noses, might put them in mind of their sinne, that made them stink before God. Ferus.

Quest. XI. The difference of the third plague of lice from the former.

Vers. 17. All the dust of the earth was lice. 1. In this plague there goeth no commination or denouncing before: for because Pharaoh had mocked with God and his Ministers, and had hardened his heart; he was worthy of no admonition. Simler. 2. This plague is brought out of the earth, the two first out of the water: for the Egyptians were worthy to be punished in both, because they shewed their cruelty in both, in destroying the infants in the water, and in oppressing the Israelites working in clay: and therefore out of the clay and dust are they punished. Simler. 3. In the other plagues in the first the Lord sheweth his power in changing the nature of the creatures; in the second, in commanding them; in the third, in using them as instruments of his revenge: the first plague was horrible to the sight, in seeing the bloudy waters; the second was both horrible to the sight, and troublesome: the third was both these, and brought griefe and vexation beside. Ferus.

Quest. XII. Whether the third plague was of lice.

NOw what manner of plague this was, whether of lice or some other, shall briefely bee examined. 1. The Hebrew word is cinnim, which the Latine translateth sciniphes, and the Septuag. reserved with some small change from the Hebrew: Origen whom Augustine followeth, taketh them for certaine small flies with wings that can scarse bee seene as they flie, yet with their stings doe pricke very sharpely. 2. Albertus Magnus saith, that they have the taile of wormes, the head and wings of flies, and are ingendred in fenny places, and doe specially follow and light upon men, Lib. 26. de animalib. this description agreeth to those flies which we call gnats. 3. Suidas taketh it to be a worme that eateth wood. Serarius thinketh it was a new kinde of vermine not knowne before. 5. But I thinke rather with Iosephus that they were lice; so also Pagnin. Vatab. Montan. translate: so R. Salomon understandeth the word cinnim: and they were such lice as did cleave and swarme upon the body, that would not be killed with any oyntment, or other medicine, as Iosephus, but they did gnaw upon their flesh, much like to the lowsie disease, that Sylla and the two Herods died of. Simler. And Philo saith, they did not only sting the flesh, but entred in at the eares and nostrils, and pained the eyes: and though most of them were of this kinde of vermine, of lice, which came of the slime and dust, resembling the same in colour also; Olaster: yet it is like that other vermine, as gnats, and other biting flies and vermine were mingled among them. Borrh.

Orig. in 8. cap. Exod. August. serm. 27. de temper.

Quest. XIII. Why the Lord plagued the Egyptians with lice.

AND whereas God might have turned by his great power, the dust of the earth into Lions and Beares which should have destroyed the people: yet it pleased him for these causes, to punish them with these contemptible vermine: 1. Because the Lord would not consume them all at once, but give them space to come to repentance. Philo. 2. And that by this meanes the haughty pride of the Egyptians might be abated, seeing that God was able to punish them by such contemptible and base creatures: as proud Tyrants are most daunted, when they are quailed by weake and impotent meanes; as Abimelech thought it a dishonour unto him to be killed by a woman, Ferus. 3. This plague also served to keepe them in awe: for if God could punish them by so small a creature, they might thinke, that if God armed the greater creatures against them, they should not endure it. Simler.

Quest. XIV. Why the Lord by the stretching out of Aarons rod brought forth lice.

Vers. 17. Aaron stretched out his hand with his rod. It was not Aarons rod, or hand, that of it self could doe any such thing; God needed not any of these meanes, but thus it pleased him, that the plague should bee wrought: 1. To shew his great power, that is able to doe great things by weake and small meanes. 2. And that not only he hath power in himselfe to doe whatsoever it pleaseth him, but that hee can give power unto his creatures to execute his vengeance: so the Lord is able by himselfe, and by others to bring forth his judgements. 3. This hee did also to shew how much hee setteth by his elect, whom hee giveth such great power: and to countenance the ministry and calling of these his servants. Ferus.

Quest. XV. Why the Sorcerers could not bring forth lice.

Vers. 17. NOw the Enchanters assayed likewise with their enchantments to bring forth lice, &c. 1. The Sorcerers could not bring forth lice, not as the Hebrewes imagine, (as Lyranus and Thomas report of them) because they cannot bring forth any creature lesse than a barly corne: for if they could produce to the sight greater creatures, they might more easily have compassed the lesse, whose generation is not so perfect, but commeth out of corruption. Indeed in artificiall workes it is harder to worke upon small substance: and therefore Plinie commendeth the curious devices of certaine workemen for their smalnesse: as Cicero telleth of the Iliades of Homer written so small that they might bee put into a nutshell. Callicrates made antes of Ivory so little that the partes thereof could not be perceived. Myrmecides made a ship, that a Bee might cover it with her wings. But in naturall workes the reason is contrary: the lesse workes are more easily perfected: for the force of nature worketh from within, but the artificer applieth his instruments without, and cannot therefore worke upon every small substance.

Plin. lib. 7. cap. 21.

2. Rupertus hath this conceit, that the Sorcerers did indeed bring forth lice, as they did frogs before: but because they did not ſting and bite, as the true lice which Aaron cauſed, their fraude was diſcovered: but this is contrarie to the text, which ſaith, they endevoured or wrought to bring forth lice, but could not.

3. Cajetanus thinketh that the Sorcerers did erre in their worke, and did not applie their enchantments aright, and ſo failed: But it proceeded not from any vertue of their enchantments, that they did counterfeit the three ſignes before, but of the will and power of Satan, who is not tied to theſe enchantments, which are but a ſigne and ceremonie of their covenant and league with the devill: & therefore though they had failed in ſome circumſtance, the devill would not have forſaken them, ſeeing they wrought under him, and for him, if it had been in their power.

4. Auguſtine maketh this the reaſon why the Magicians were confounded in this third plague (but it was the fourth ſigne, counting the turning of the rods into ſerpents, for the firſt) to ſignifie, that the heathen Philoſophers, ſome of them had knowledge of the Father and Sonne, but erred concerning the holy Ghoſt. But beſide that ſome of the philoſophers did ſee as in a cloud the myſterie of the Trinitie, as both Cyrillus, Euſebius, & Theodoret witneſſe, & Plato in his writings maketh mention of God the Father, the Word, and the Minde: this is rather a myſticall, than hiſtoricall reaſon: And if to ſeeke the cauſe thereof we needs flie unto myſteries; it rather ſignifieth thus much, that many of the philoſophers did know divers things concerning God, and his creatures; but they were ignorant altogether of the Trinitie. Auguſt. qu. 25. in Exod. Cyrill. lib. 1. cont. Iulian. Euſeb. in lib. de præp. Evang. Theodoret. lib. de curation. Graec. affection.

5. The ſorcerers then were hindred by the power of God, who ſuffered them hitherto to deceive by their Satanicall illuſions, but now by a ſuperiour commaunding power, he controlleth the power of darkenes. Simler. Pererius. Pellican. Cajetan. Ferus. And Satan is hindred in his working two waies, either altogether, that he cannot do what he would, as in this place; or when he is permitted to doe any thing, yet the Lord ſo diſpoſeth, as that he cannot atchieve that end which he intendeth, as appeareth in the temptation of Iob: Borrh. And the Lord confoundeth them in this ſmall and baſe creature, for their greater confuſion, when their myſticall working, by the operation of Satan, is there reſtrained, where they thought moſt eaſily to have prevailed. Ferus.

Quest. XVI. What the ſorcerers underſtand by the finger of God.

Vers. 19. This is the finger of God. 1. Some by finger underſtand the plague it ſelfe, as the Chalde Paraphraſt: as though in effect the ſorcerers ſhould confeſſe thus much, that this plague was of God, and they could not reſiſt it: ſo Iob ſaith, the hand of God hath touched me, cap. 19. 21. 2. Auguſtine by the finger of God underſtandeth the ſpirit of God: whereas Saint Luke ſaith, that Chriſt caſt out devils by the finger of God, cap. 11. Saint Matthew ſaith, by the ſpirit of God: and fitly is the ſpirit compared to the fingers, that as the fingers proceed from the hand and arme, & the arme from the bodie, ſo the ſpirit proceedeth from the Father and the Sonne: and as there are ten fingers upon both the hands, ſo there are divers gifts of the ſpirit, and here are tenne plagues anſwering to the number of the fingers. So alſo Iarom ſaith, that the arme and ſtrength of God is the Sonne, and the Spirit is the fingers, and with his finger did the Lord write the tenne Commandements in the Tables of ſtone. But this collection ſeemeth to be ſomewhat curious: neither is it like that the Sorcerers had any ſuch knowledge of the myſterie of the Trinitie. 3. Therefore Rupertus thinketh, that the ſorcerers did onely meane by this phraſe the power of God, but that unwittingly alſo by a divine inſtinct, they doe give an evident teſtimony of the holy ſpirit, the third perſon of the Trinitie, as Caiphas did ignorantly propheſie of Chriſt. But it ſeemeth that theſe ſorcerers being profeſſed ſervants of Satan and poſſeſſed with his ſpirit, were not fit veſſels to receive any ſuch divine inſtinct. 4. Pererius thinketh that by the finger of God, they underſtand a great & miraculous power, as the Scripture ſaith, the Cedars of God, a man of God, for the tall cedars and for an excellent man. But in this ſenſe they could not denie, but that the other works were alſo excellent, & more admirable than this. 5. Liranus will have them by the finger of God to underſtand the power of ſome ſuperiour devill that ſtaied the working of the inferiors: But this is an inſolent ſpeech, by the name of God to underſtand the devill: and by this meanes Satan ſhould ſtrive againſt Satan, and the kingdome of darkenes ſhould be divided; which argument our Saviour uſeth in the Goſpell to ſhew that he did not caſt out devils by the power of Satan. 6. Wherefore the beſt interpretation is, that by the finger of God, is underſtood the power of God; as the heavens (in the Pſalme) are ſaid to be the worke of his fingers: Theſtanus, Lippoman. So alſo is the hand of God taken, 1 Sam. 6. 9. And hereby is inſinuated the great power of God: if theſe horrible plagues were but the worke of his fingers, that is, an effect of his ſmall power, what are the workes of his arme and handes when hee ſheweth his mightie power? for ſo much which one doth eaſily, or with ſmall labour, he is ſaid to doe with his finger, as the phraſe is uſed of the Phariſes in the Goſpell, that they laid heavy burdens upon others, and would not themſelves move them with their finger. And indeede theſe plagues of Egypt, if they be compared with other greate workes, as the univerſall floud brought upon all the world, the deſtruction of Sodom and Gomorrha, they will appeare to be but workes of Gods fingers, in compariſon of his whole hand. Ferus.

Quest. XVII. Whether the sorcerers had any feeling of Gods power.

But now it will further be inquired, whether these sorcerers thus spake as having any knowledge of God, or feeling of his power. 1. Some thinke that they used this pretence of words to satisfie Pharaoh that was angrie with them, because they could not doe now, as before, and to excuse their want of power: Cajetane. But it seemeth rather, seeing the Sorcerers were indeede hindred and controlled, that they spake as they thought. 2. Lyranus thinketh that they had no thought at all of God, but that they understood the power of some superiour devill: And his reason is, that if they had in truth confessed and acknowledged the power of God, they would not afterward have resisted Moses, as it appeareth they did, for they were smitten with botches and biles in the sixt plague, cap. 9. Contra. But this is a weake argument: for though they had at this present some sense of Gods power, yet they might afterward returne to their former obstinacie: as Pharaoh himselfe would one while seeme to relent, and eftsoone be hardned againe: and Nebuchadnezzar, who upon the interpretation of his dreame by Daniel acknowledged the true God. Dan. 2. yet presently after setteth up Idolatrie: Perer. 3. Some, as is shewed in the former question, did thinke that the Magicians had some knowledge and speciall revelation, not only of the power of God, but of his spirit, and so consequently of the Trinitie: but such a particular knowledge cannot be ascribed unto them. 4. Therefore I thinke rather that for a time they seeing their power hindred, did indeede, and as they thought, acknowledge Gods power, that Pharaoh might thereby be left inexcusable: Ium. but this knowledge was soone againe obscured by the malice and obstinacie of their heart.

Quest. XVIII. By what power Sorcerers do worke.

Now, whereas they confesse that Moses wrought by the finger of God, they therein evidently bewray that they themselves did not worke by God. This therefore shall briefly be made plaine and manifest, that Magicians and Sorcerers doe not worke wonders by any divine, humane, or naturall, or Angelicall power, I meane the good Angels, but Satanicall and Diabolicall. 1. These spirits whom they consecrate with, do require of them divine worship: and that affectation of divine honour, which they began in heaven, and obtained it not, being cast downe from thence, they seeke to compasse in earth: but good Angels refuse to be adored and worshipped, as the Angell that appeared to Iohn, Revel. 22. 2. Sorcerers are men of an impure and wicked life, and they use their enchantments to wicked purposes, as to theft, adulterie, murther: but good Angels do neither favour wicked men, neither will bee assistant in any wicked worke. 3. Magicians use to threaten the spirits, to enjoyne them certaine impossible things, if they come not when they are called: but men can exercise no power, neither can have any command over the good Angels. 4. if it bee objected, that Magicians doe often cast out devils: but Satan doth not cast out Satan, as our Saviour saith, for then his kingdome should be divided, and could not long stand. To this it is answered, that our Saviour speaketh of such casting out of devils, as is done with power when Satan is violently dispossessed, not of such when hee giveth way of himselfe, by some compact and contract with the Conjurer. And, as Augustine saith, our Saviour meaneth the perfect ejection of Satan, when hee is cast both out of the bodie ad soule: But when any seemeth to be cast out by a Satanicall power, he goeth out of the bodie that he may more strongly possesse the soule; which is indeede no casting out. 5. That Sorcerers doe worke by the power of Satan, themselves are the best witnesses: for Porphyrius who was a great Magician, as Eusebius noteth him, doth confesse, that the devils themselves (whom he calleth gods) doe signifie unto men, quibus rebus dij cogantur, & quæ illis offerenda sint, &c. what things the devils are forced, and what is to be offered unto them, what daies they should chuse, what sort of images they should make, and such like. And Eusebius further setteth downe to the same purpose an epistle written by Porphyrius to Anebonus the Egyptian: wherein he propoundeth nine inexplicable doubts, as he calleth them, about Magicall practices: 1. How Magicians doe invocate the spirits as superiours; when they command them, as their inferiours. 2. Why the spirits of Magicians bid men to be just, when as they being called upon and sent, doe many wicked things. 3. They will not have the Conjurer unlesse hee abstaine from venerie; and yet they being sent doe inflame to venerie, and to full lust. 4. They prescribe their disciples, when they are about invocation, to abstaine from eating of flesh; and yet themselves delight in the smell and bloud of sacrifices. 5. They will not have him that hath touched any dead thing to use any Magicall practice; and yet many magicall enchantments are performed with dead things, both beasts and men. 6. They doe terrifie the spirits in their invocations, with threats, as if they answere not, they will reveale the mysteries of Isis, and deliver Osiris members to Typhon: but how can spirits be feared with threats? 7. They use ridiculous invocations, as thus they call upon the spirits: Thou which camest forth of the slime of the earth, which hast thy seate in the lake, which changest thy shape every houre: which kind of prayers spirits should seeme not to regard. 8. They use barbarous and strange words, as though the spirits understood only the Scythian, or some other barbarous tongue. 9. Seeing spirits are insensible and incorporeall, how then can they be allured with sensible and corporeall things? These are Porphyries doubts: by the which it is evident that Sorcerers work by the devil, and that from him they have their directions. And Augustine also confirmeth the same: Neque potuit ex his ipsis docentibus disci quid quisq; illorum appetat, quid exhorreat; Neither could it be learned, but by their teaching, what everie one of them desireth, and what they abhorre.

Quest. XIX. Why ſpirits preſcribe conſtellations to be obſerved, and delight in corporall and externall uſages.

But yet concerning ſome of thoſe doubts, a ſolution may be found out: As why the devils will not come being called, but under certaine conſtellations, the reaſon thereof may be to make men beleeve, that there is ſome divine vertue in the ſtarres, and ſo they ſhould be brought to adore and worſhip them: or becauſe they many times worke by naturall cauſes, it may be they are helped by ſuch obſervations: and ſometime they concurre in their worke with the planets, as Lunatickes are moſt vexed in the increaſe of the moone, that men might lay the imputation upon the ſtarres, as though they were evill. Againe, why ſpirits being of no bodily ſubſtance yet are allured, with hearbes, and ſtones, and perfumes and ſuch like; Auguſtine giveth the reaſon hereof, becauſe theſe things are offered unto them, as ſignes of the divine honour, which is given unto them, and therefore they delight in them. Ex Peter. Auguſt. ibid.

Quest. XX. Whether it be ordinary for lice to breede out of the ſlime of Nilus.

But concerning this third plague of lice, it will be objected, that it is an ordinary thing in Egypt, after the inundation of Nilus, that divers ſmall creatures, as lice, frogs, and ſuch like, do breed in great abundance out of the ſlime of the earth, which Nilus leaveth behind, as Herodotus, Diodorus Siculus, and Solinus do write: how then was this ſuch a miraculous worke? The anſwere is this: that there is great difference betweene this ſwarming of lice, and that annuall breed of vermine in Egypt. 1. They come of the ſlime of the earth, theſe out of the duſt. 2. They by the overflowing of Nilus, theſe at the ſtretching forth of Aarons rod. 3. Thoſe ſwarmes are of divers ſorts of ſmall vermine, theſe were lice. 4. They are not bred in the ſignes of Aquarius or Piſces as theſe were, but after the ſunne is entred into Virgo: for under the ſigne Leo, Nilus increaſeth, and in the ſigne Virgo, it abateth and returneth. Sic Iun. The ſunne entreth into Leo about the middeſt of Iune, and into Virgo, about the middle of July, and into the ſigne Aquarius in Ianuarie, and into Piſces in Februarie, which was about a moneth before the Iſraelites went out of Egypt, as is before ſhewed, queſt. 29. in cap. 7.

Quest. XXI. Why Moſes is bid to meete Pharoah by the water.

Verſ. 20. Stand before Pharaoh, he will come forth to the water. 1. Becauſe Moſes had no acceſſe unto Pharaohs preſence in his palace, he is bid to watch him at his comming forth, and ſo he that refuſed to heare Moſes privatly, is forced to heare to his ſhame abroad. Ferus. 2. Pharaoh uſed in the morning to come forth to the water, either for his health, as in the morning it is wholeſome, to go forth unto rivers; or rather of a ſuperſtitious minde, becauſe they attributed divine honour unto Nilus. Simler.

Quest. XXII. Why there is no mention made in this miracle of Moſes rod.

In this fourth wonder, no mention is made of Moſes rod, as in the former, nor of any other thing uſed as ashes in the ſixth plague. God ſometime uſeth ſuch meanes, to ſhew that all things are directed by his will, and by theſe props to raiſe us up to conſider of an higher power than can be in ſuch weake inſtruments to effect ſuch great things. Sometime he worketh without any ſuch meanes, to teach vs, that he needeth not any ſuch inſtruments. The like difference of working is obſerved in the miracles of our Saviour Chriſt in the Goſpell, who ſometime uſed externall and viſible ſignes, as when he tempered clay to heale the blind man: ſometime he uſed no ſuch, but only healed by his Word. Simler.

Quest. XXIII. What manner of ſwarmes were ſent in the fourth plague.

Verſ. 21. I will ſend mingled ſwarmes. 1. Not κυνομυῖαν, as the Septuagint, the dogge flie, which Philo would have ſo called, becauſe this kind of flie doth boldly light upon men and beaſts (as the dog is noted to be among other beaſts, moſt hardie and bold) and cannot be chaſed away, till he hath fetched blood: ſome call it a dog flie, becauſe it lighteth moſt upon dogs about the eares and noſe, and draweth blood: but the word ghereb ſignifying a mingled companie, ſheweth, that there was more than of one ſort. 2. Hieron therefore would have it read κοινομυῖαν, all kind of flies, as Aquilas alſo readeth πανμυῖαν: and the Latine muſcam omnis generis, flies of all ſorts. But it ſeemeth they were not only flies, for the earth was not only corrupted by them, verſ. 24. but the Egyptians alſo themſelves devoured and conſumed, Pſalm. 78. 3. Neither yet is it like that there were no flies at all in theſe ſwarmes, as Cajetane thinketh, becauſe the Scripture maketh not any mention of any hurt they did to any man, but only annoyed their grounds, and houſes, but flies are moſt noyſome unto men: but herein Cajetane is deceived, for it is ſaid in the Pſalme before alleaged, that they devoured them, that is, the Egyptians. 4. Some thinke they were kind of wild beaſts, as Lions, Beares, Tigres, and ſuch like; unto which opinion Ioſephus ſeemeth to incline, and Aben Ezra and Pagnin. But becauſe it is ſaid that their houſes ſhould bee full of theſe beaſts, it is not like they were thoſe huge wild beaſts: and if they had been aſſaulted in their houſes by ravenous beaſts, none of them ſhould have eſcaped. And beſide, it ſeemeth that the ground was covered with this kind of vermine: but ſo many wild beaſts, as ſhould cover the earth, would have ſoone devoured all the inhabitans. 5. Therefore it is more like that theſe ſwarmes were a mixture of divers kinds of ſome creatures, both flying, as hornets, waſpes, and creeping, as vipers, ſcorpions and ſuch like. See Rabbi Salomon: Pellican.

Quest. XXIV. Of the name of Baalzebub the god of flies.

IT may ſeeme probable, that upon this and the like plague of flies and other vermine, the Egyptians, and the Philiſtims following them, as out of whoſe countrey they came, did erect the abominable Idoll of Baalzebub, which ſignifieth the god of flies, he was the God of Accaron, one of the chiefeſt cities of the Philiſtims: firſt, ſome thinke the Idoll was ſo called of the abundance of flies; which were engendred of the bloud of the beaſts which were ſacrificed. Vatab. Or becauſe the Idoll being ſprinkled with much bloud, did ſticke full of flies. Perer. 2. But rather it had the name, becauſe they ſuppoſed this Idoll did deliver them from the plague of flies: as Plinie ſheweth how the Eleans did worſhip their god Myiagrus for chaſing away the flies, which brought the peſtilence: as the Egyptians did honour the bird Ibis, that devoured ſerpents: likewiſe the ſame Author reporteth that in the Olympian games, they uſed to ſacrifice a Bull to the Idoll Myiades, and the clouds of flies preſently vaniſhed. Perer. Iunius alſo alleageth out of Nazianzen, that this Idoll was made in the forme of a flie. 3. Hierome alſo ſaith that the Iewes in derision of the god of the Philiſtims, did give the ſame name to the Prince and chiefe of the devils. Perer.

Plin. lib. 10. cap. 28. Plin. lib. 29. cap. 6.

Quest. XXV. Whether the land of Goſhen were exempted from the former plagues.

Verſ. 22. BUt the land of Goſhen will I ſeparate. 1. This immunitie of Iſrael from the plagues, and the differences made betweene them and the Egyptians, no doubt was ſeene in the former plagues: Ioſephus. Iun. for otherwiſe if the people of God had beene in like manner afflicted, they would have murmured againſt Moſes. 2. And this ſeparation the Lord made betweene them, both to ſhew the watchfull care, which hee had over his people, as alſo to increaſe the griefe and ſorrow of the Egyptians that beheld how the Iſraelites were ſpared, while they were plagued. Ferus. 3. This exemption is now firſt of all mentioned, becauſe Pharaoh did not know it before now: Simler. As alſo becauſe the ſorcerers before had no place, to trie their ſophiſtrie but in the land of Goſhen, mention is made of this exemption to ſhew that the Magitians were excluded from working their feates there, as they did before. Iun.

Quest. XXVI. What were the things that were an abomination to the Egyptians.

Verſ. 26. FOr then ſhould we offer unto the Lord, that which is an abomination to the Egyptians, &c. or the abomination of the Egyptians. 1. Some underſtand in the firſt the idolatrous ſacrifices of the Egyptians, which were an abomination unto God: for the heathen offered uncleane beaſts, as an Hog to Ceres, a Gooſe to Venus, an Aſſe to Priapus, a Dog to Diana, a Horſe to Phœbus: Perer. Then their meaning is, if we ſacrifice in Egypt, if we doe it after their rites and faſhions we ſhall be an abomination to Iehovah: Ferus. But ſeeing the ſame word, the abomination of the Egyptians, in the next clauſe is taken for that which is an abomination to the Epyptians, it ſeemeth ſo to be taken here alſo. 2. Rupertus will not have this underſtood of any externall ſacrifice, for as the Prophet Ieremie ſaith, the Lord gave them no charge, when he brought them out of Egypt, concerning any ſacrifice, Ier. 7. 23. And therefore he underſtandeth it of the inward vertues of the minde, as of righteouſnes, piety, humilitie, which they ſhould ſacrifice to God, being things hated and deſpiſed of the Egyptians. But it is evident that Moſes ſpeaketh of an externall ſacrifice which they ſhould offer before the eyes of the Egyptians. And indeed God had ſaid hitherto nothing to Moſes all this while what they ſhould ſacrifice: but he had received it by traditions from the fathers, what ſacrifices were to be offered, and from Abrahams example, who offered cleane beaſts, Gen. 15. an Heifer, a Goate, & a Ramme: Perer. Or rather the Prophet here ſpeaketh by way of compariſon, that they were not the externall rites and ſacrifices which the Lord ſo much required at their hands, as feare and obedience, as Gen. 32. 28. the Angell ſaith to Iacob, that he ſhould no more be called Iacob (that is, not onely or chiefly) but Iſrael: Iun. 3. Therefore the meaning is this, that whereas the Egyptians adored ſheep and bullocks, as they worſhipped a certaine pide bull called Apis, the Iſraelites could not offer any of theſe things in Egypt becauſe the Egyptians would never have endured it: Iun. Borrh. Ferus.

Quest. XXVII. Whether Moſes were ignorant what kindes of beaſtes they ſhould ſacrifice unto God in the deſert.

BUt it will be demaunded how Moſes did know what ſacrifices they ſhould offer unto God, ſeeing he had yet ſpoken nothing thereof unto him. 1. I neither thinke that Moſes was altogether ignorant thereof, & therefore, as is ſhewed in the queſtion before, he referreth the text to the inward and ſpirituall ſacrifices. 2. Neither with Pererius, that Moſes had any ſpeciall revelation what they ſhould ſacrifice: ſo hee confeſſeth himſelfe, cap. 10. 27. that he knew not wherewith to ſerve the Lord, before they came thither. 3. Neither yet with Iunius that Moſes ſpeaketh here doubtfully, inſerting into the text the words Fortaſſis, it may be we ſhall ſacrifice: for Moſes was not ignorant of the kindes of beaſts in generall, which he had learned from the example of the fathers, which were to be ſacrificed unto Iehovah, all which kindes (which were but three, bullockes, ſheepe and goates) the Egyptians counted a thing abominable to kill either to eate, or to ſacrifice. 4. Therefore whereas Moſes ſaith, Neither doe wee know wherewith we ſhall ſerve the Lord, till wee come thither, cap. 10. 27. he ſpeaketh of the particular kind, as of bullockes, goates, and ſheepe, and of the number: for that they were to ſacrifice of their cleane cattell in generall he certainelie knew, as he ſaith in the ſame place: Our cattell ſhall goe with us, for thereof muſt we take to ſerve the Lord our God.

4. Plac

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. What manner of knowledge the wicked have of God.

Vers.11. That thou maist know that there is none like unto the Lord. The wicked have a certaine knowledge of God, but not like unto the godly: they may bee said to know, and not to know, for they are forced, will they, nill they, to confesse there is a God, but this knowledge maketh them but inexcusable, it helpeth not them unto salvation: Simler. As the Apostle sheweth, that the knowledge which the Gentiles had of God tended but to make them without excuse, Rom. 2. 20.

2. Doct. No man can mollifie his owne heart.

Vers. 15. When Pharaoh saw that he had rest given him he hardned his heart. Pharaoh neither by plagues, nor yet by blessings can be wonne; whereby we see that such is the naturall pravitie and evilnesse of mans heart, that unlesse the Lord doe mollifie it, it will never be brought under in obedience: Piscat. As our Saviour saith, that none can come unto him, unlesse his Father draw him, Ioh. 6.

3. Doct. God must be worshipped as himselfe hath prescribed.

Vers. 26. Then we should offer unto the Lord God the abomination. Moses here sheweth, that they were not to sacrifice unto God in any other manner than he himselfe had prescribed: for as God onely is to worshipped, so he onely is to prescribe how he will be worshipped: Ferus. Therefore all will worship is here condemned, as the Apostle calleth it, Coloss. 2. 23. God will not be worshipped according to the fancies of men.

5. Places of controversie.

1. Conf. Against diffidence or doubtfulnesse in prayer.

Vers. 9. Take to thee this honour over me, what time I shall pray for thee to destroy the frogs. Moses promiseth to pray confidently, being assured that the Lord would heare him: for the faithfull are sure that the Lord heareth them: Ferus. Who herein crosseth the judgement of the Romanists, who doe call the assurance of faith presumption. But our Saviour Christ giveth this rule, that Whatsoever yee aske in prayer, if ye beleeve ye shall have it, it shall be done unto you, Matth. 11. 14.

2. Conf. Against praying for the dead.

BEsides, as here Pharaoh entreateth Moses, and Moses promiseth to entreate God for him: so we find in other places of Scripture, that the living have prayed for the living, and have been prayed to pray for brothers: but for the dead to be prayed unto to pray for the living, we have no example in Scripture: Pelarg. For they are not present to heare our prayers, and succour our necessities, neither doe know our hearts: and wee have one sufficient advocate and Mediatour, our blessed Redeemer, 1. Ioh. 3. 1. and therefore neither neede we the mediation of any other, neither will they assume unto themselves any part of Christs office.

3. Conf. Against repentance which proceedeth only of feare.

Vers. 15. When Pharaoh saw he had respite given him he hardened his heart. Then Pharaohs former repentance was but in hypocrisie, and proceeded only from feare of punishment: such sorrow then and repentance, which onely is caused by the feare of punishment, is no true repentance, neither continueth long: yet this slauish feare of hell is much advanced and extolled by the Romanists, as being a fruite of true obedience: against whom I will urge the testimonie of Ferus in this place, one of their owne preachers: Pœnitentia ex solo timore pœnæ proveniens, non diu durat; quæ autem ex amore iustitiæ oritur, hæc perseverat: Repentance proceeding only from the feare of punishment cannot endure long, but that which springeth of the love of righteousnes, the same persevereth. So the Apostle saith, that feare hath painfulnes, and he that feareth is not perfect in love, 1. Ioh. 4. 18.

6. Places of Morall use.

1. Observ. God can arme his smallest creatures against the wicked.

Vers. 2. I will smite all thy countrie with frogs. The Lord can arme his smallest creatures to take revenge of the wicked: as he with the sand keepeth in the sea, Ierem. 5. 22. so with his smallest armies can checke and daunt the haughtie spirit of Tyrants, as here Pharaoh is punished with frogs: therefore feare ye not me saith the Lord, Iere. 5. 22. This should make us to stand in awe & feare of God, whose creatures are alwayes readie to punish the disobedient. Ferus.

2. Observ. To pray for our enemies.

Vers. 9. What time I shall pray for thee. Moses by this example teacheth us to pray for our enemies, according to Christs rule, Matth. 5. So S. Paul would have prayer & supplication made for Princes, 1. Tim. 2. 2. & even then Nero that beastly Tyrant was Emperour. If it bee objected that Pharaoh sinned sinned unto death, and therefore Moses should not have prayed for him, as the Apostle teacheth that such sinners are not to be prayed for, 1. Ioh. 5. 16. The answere is, first, that though Moses saw that Pharaohs heart was hardned, yet he did not know whether the same might be mollified afterward. Secondly, he prayeth not for everlasting salvation, but onely for a temporall blessing. Thirdly, and not so much for Pharaoh, as because it should be a benefit to the whole land. Simler.

Reconciliation.

3. Observ. The Devils power nor his ministers is to be feared.

Vers. 18. They assaied to bring forth lice, but they could not. Therefore not the Devill, but God is to be feared: for the Devill hath no power, unlesse God permit, to invade man or beast: he could not runne upon the uncleane swine, till Christ had given leave: Perer. If the Devill be not to be feared, much lesse his ministers, as Sorcerers, Conjurers, Witches: God bridleth both them and their master, that without the will of our heavenly father he cannot touch a haire of our head.

4. Observ. God will not have his servants tempted above their strength.

AGaine, whereas it was a great triall and temptation to the Israelites to see these wicked Sorcerers to contend with Moses, in working of wonders; the Lord will not trie them beyond their strength but at the length confoundeth the Sorcerers, lest his servants might have stumbled and fell. Perer. as the Apostle saith, God is faithfull and will not suffer you to be tempted above that you are able, 1. Cor. 10. 13.

Chap. IX.

1. The Argument and method.

IN this Chapter three other plagues are described: the fift, of the murrane of cattell, to vers. 8. the sixt, of the botches and sores, to vers. 13, the seventh, of the thunder, haile and lightning, to the end of the Chapter.

In the first part, containing a description of the first plague, we have first the denouncing of the plague, with the occasion thereof, if Pharaoh refuse to let Israel goe, vers. 1. 2. the manner thereof, vers. 3. the limitation thereof, the Israelites are exempted, vers. 4. the time is appointed, vers. 5. Secondly, the execution followeth, vers. 6. 3. The events are two; Pharaoh sendeth to see how it fared with the Israelites cattell, and his heart is hardned, vers. 7.

In the second part, containing the sixth plague, there is the commandement of God to Moses and Aaron, prescribing the signe of the plague, in taking the ashes, vers. 8. and the effect, vers. 9. secondly, the execution, vers. 10. thirdly, the events which are two, the plague of biles overtaketh the Sorcerers themselves, vers. 11. yet Pharaohs heart is hardned, vers. 12.

In the third part, where the seventh plague is described, there is 1. The commandement of God to denounce the plague: in which denuntiation, wee have first the occasion of this plague, Pharaohs refusall to let the people go, vers. 13. then a description of the plague in generall, vers. 14. and the end why God had not consumed them with the pestilence, and other plagues, that God might shew his power, vers. 15. 16. then a particular designing of the plague, vers. 18. with advice and counsell given, how to escape the plague, vers. 19. and the successe of that counsell, vers. 20. 21.

2. The execution followeth, where God commanded Moses, vers. 22. Moses obeyeth, vers. 23. the effect followeth, set forth by way of comparison, vers. 24.

3. The events are these: first, what hurt the haile and storme did, vers. 25. the preservation of Isra. vers. 26. the relenting of Pharaoh, and his request to Moses. vers. 27. 28. Moses admonition, set to Pharaoh, vers. 29. (with a parenthesis, what things were smitten with the tempest, what not, vers. 31.) Moses prayer with the effect. vers. 33. the hardning of Pharaohs heart, vers. 34. 35.

2. The Argument and Method.

1. Vers. 3. Upon the cattell & the sheepe: with a very great plague. I. better than, upon the cattel & sheepe shall be a very great plague. B. G. cum cater, for the perfect distinction athnah, over sheep, divideth
1. it from the clause following: the Septuagint reade, a verie great death: but the word is deber, a plague.

Vers. 15. For now when I stretch out mine hand. I. or rather, I had stretched out my hand, and might have smitten thee &c. and so thou shouldest have perished from the earth. I. A reason is given, why the Lord did smite only the cattell with the pestilence, whereas he might have smitten the Egyptians also, and cut them off at once: this sense the Chalde expresseth, it was very neere mee, to send a plague to smite thee and thy people: better than for now I have stretcht my hand, that I may smite thee. V. A. P. L. S. for no such plague was now sent: or, I will stretch my hand, that I may smite thee &c. and thou shalt perish from the earth. B. G. for neither do we reade this to have been done.

I. A. P. Vers. 16. I have caused thee to remaine. I. or, caused thee to stand. A. P. H. or, I have sustained to keep thee. G. or, thou art reserved hamiddm. S. better than, I have appointed thee. L. V. B. G.

To shew my power in thee. I. B. S. L. better than, to shew thee my power. C. A. P. G. V. that the preposition in, is to be supplied, appeareth. cap. 14. 18. the Lord is said to get honour upon Pharaoh: and so the Apostle readeth, Rom. 9. 17.

B. G. cum cater. Vers. 27. Then Pharaoh sent and called B. G. cum cater. Then Pharaoh sent them that should observe and called. I. Though it may bee referred to Pharaohs sending to see in the Land of Goshen: yet it is not safe to adde unto the text.

Vers. 31

Vers. 30. I know that thou & thy ſervants will not yet feare. I.P.B.C.L.S. better than, I know afore I pray, that you will feare. V.A.G. terem better ſignifieth here nondum, not yet, than antequam, before, as the ſenſe giveth. I. 8. cum cæter.

3. The explanation of difficult queſtions.

QUEST. I. Why Pharaoh is ſo often ſent unto, whom the Lord did foreſee, that he would not heare.

Vers. 1. GO to Pharoh and tell him. 1. Though God knew that Pharaoh would not heare, yet he ſendeth unto him againe both that his malice & obſtinacie might be made manifeſt, & that the iudgements alſo of God upon him, hereby might appeare to bee moſt juſt. Simler. 2. And though it was not in Pharaohs power to mollifie his heart, yet hee is puniſhed becauſe neither would he, though it had beene in his power. Simler. The neceſſitie of Gods decree, doth not take away the freeneſſe of the will to evill, neither is compulſive, but only maketh the event evitable: Pharaoh then is puniſhed, not for the neceſſitie that lay upon him, but for the malice and unwillingneſſe, and diſobedience of his heart. Borrh.

QUEST. II. Why Moſes in bringing the plagues doth not alwaies uſe Aarons rod.

Vers. 3. BEhold the hand of the Lord is &c. This plague is not brought by the lifting up of Aarons rod, as the other. 1. For, if Aaron ſhould have alwayes uſed his rod, it might have been thought that there was vertue in the rod. Cajetan. 2. God therefore ſo wiſely diſpoſeth in the ſending of theſe plagues, that no exception could be taken. If Moſes had done all, they might have ſuſpected him to bee a Sorcerer, and therefore moſt of theſe plagues are brought by the miniſtrie of Aaron. And if they two ſhould have done all, they might have been taken for gods, as Paul and Barnabas was, Act. 14. If they had alwayes uſed the rod, they might have aſcribed vertue unto it: If God had by his immediate hand, ſent all the plagues without any meanes, it had not bin ſo admirable: for who doubteth, but that God of himſelfe can do all things? Ferus.

QUEST. III. Why the Lord puniſheth the Egyptians in their cattell.

Vers. 3. VPon thy flocke which is in the field &c. 1. The Lord never ſendeth any great plague upon the world, but he giveth warning of it before: ſo he did forewarne the old world of the floud by Noah: the Sodomites of their deſtruction by Lot: the Egyptians were admoniſhed here by Moſes: the Iſraelites by Ieremie, of the captivitie of Babylon. 2. The cattell heere are puniſhed for the ſinne of their maſters: God beginneth with ſmaller puniſhments, before he proceed to greater, Oſiander. 3. This plague was leſſe troubleſome than the former, but more diſcommodious, for by the deſtruction of their horſe and oxen, their tillage was hindred, and they ſhould want their ſheepe for cloathing, their aſſes and horſes for burden: Simler. 4. And this plague was moſt juſt: for as they had oppreſſed the Iſraelites before, in taking their oxen to plow, their horſes and aſſes to carrie burdens; ſo the Lord doth worthily puniſh them in their cattel. Perer. As the fiſh were deſtroyed before in the water, ſo now the beaſts upon land: to let them know that they were worthie to poſſeſſe nothing, God might juſtly deprive them of all. Borrh. 5. The Latine tranſlator readeth, as though the hand of God ſhould be, not onlie upon their cattell, but upon their very fields and grounds, which ſhould be firſt poiſoned and infected: but he leaveth out the Hebrew pronoune, aſher, which ſhall be in the fields: for it is evident by the text, that the cattell onely were infected.

QUEST. IV. Why the Lord doth not alwayes exempt his people from temporall calamities.

Vers. 4. I will make ſeparation betweene the cattell of Iſrael &c. Though it pleaſed God in this and other plagues, for his great glory ſake, to exempt his people from theſe publike calamities; yet alwayes the Lord doth not ſo deale with his ſervants, for the true Prophets ſuffered famine under Achab, as well as the reſt; Ieremie was taken with the Citie; Daniel carried into captivitie; which the Lord doth for theſe cauſes: 1. To purge out the corruption and infirmities which are in his owne ſervants. 2. To make triall of their patience, that God thereby might be glorified. Simler. 3. And the Lord doth chaſtiſe them in the ſmall afflictions of this life, making a ſeparation betweene the righteous and the wicked in the great judgements of the next world, as the Lord ſaith by his Prophet: In a little have I forſaken thee, but with great compaſſions will I gather thee, Iſay. 54. 7. Ferus.

QUEST. V. In what ſenſe all the cattell of Egypt are ſaid to have died.

Vers. 6. ALl the cattell of Egypt died. All the cattell in generall died not, for many died afterward being ſmitten with the haile and tempeſt, vers. 27. 1. Some therefore doe thus expound it, that no cattell died but the Egyptians and all that died were theirs: Cajetan. 2. But it ſeemeth rather to be taken according to the phraſe of Scripture, all died, that is, the greateſt part. Iun. Perer. Simler.

QUEST. VI. Whether Pharaoh ſent into Goſhen in the other plagues.

Vers. 7. THen Pharaoh ſent, and behold. 1. Some thinke that Pharaoh ſent before, when the other plagues were; but the Scripture maketh no mention of it: as many matters of fact are omitted beſide: but Thoſtatus refuſeth this conjecture: for why ſhould this bee onely here expreſſed that Pharaoh ſent, if he had done it at other times? 2. Some thinke that the other plagues all but the firſt, as of frogges, the lice, and ſwarmes were ſuch as Pharaoh could not ſend, and in the plagues following, but in the firſt Pharaoh did not then bethinke himſelfe of any ſuch thing: Perer. 3. But it is more likely that

Pharaoh

Pharaoh, though now twice he had been told so much by Moses, did neglect to trie whether the Israelites were exempted from these plagues or no. Simler.

Quest. VII. Why Pharaoh called not to Moses to pray.

PHaraoh entreated not Moses at this time to pray to God to remove this plague, partly through envie and griefe, to see the privilege and freedome of the Israelites which was an occasion of the hardning of his heart: partly because the other plagues continued sometime, and so might be remooved. But this plague of mortalitie and murraine came all at once, and suddenly swept the cattell away, so that no remedie was left, neither was there place for prayer to remoove it, after this plague had suddenly smitten their cattell in all their coasts. Pererius.

Quest. VIII. Whether this plague were naturall or supernaturall.

COncerning the kind of this plague: 1. It is evident that it was no naturall plague but supernatural, for the text saith, the hand of God should be upon their cattell, that is, should smite them immediately, no meanes being used at all: not so much as Aarons rod, whereby other plagues were called for. And beside it was not infectious as other naturall plagues are: for the cattell of the Israelites feeding among the Egyptians cattell (they dwelling in the middest of them) were not smitten at all with this plague. Simler. 2. Yet there might be some preparation unto this plague by the former, as it is mentioned, cap. 8. 14. that the land stunke of the dead frogges, and so both the aire and ground were corrupted, apt to breed putrefaction: Perer. But this was not the cause of the plague: for if the earth, and aire generally had been corrupted, the men had died as well as the beasts.

Quest. IX. Why Moses is the minister of the sixt plague.

Vers. 10. AND Moses sprinkled them toward heaven. 1. They both tooke the ashes out of the fornace, but Moses sprinkled them toward heaven. Philo saith, that Aaron was the Minister of those plagues, wherewith the earth and water were smitten; and Moses of those which came from heaven & out of the aire. Augustine giveth this reason, because Aarons office was to speake to the people, he worketh upon the earth and water; because Moses was in the things that belonged to God, hee is the minister of those plagues which came from above. But these are curious observations. The reason rather was this: they stood both before Pharaoh, and therefore Moses as the chiefe whom the Lord had made as Pharaohs God, he is the minister of this wonder: Ferus. 2. As the two first signes were of the water, the two next on the earth; so this is wrought in the aire: Simler rather than the element of fire, as Ferus.

Quest. X. Of the sixt plague of boyles, and of the manner thereof.

Vers. 10. AND there came boyles breaking out. First the handfull of ashes being cast into the aire, there was raised as a cloud of white dust like unto the ashes of the fornace over all Egypt: which dust could not be engendred of that handfull: but upon the sprinkling of the ashes, the Lord by his great power, caused that cloud of dust in the aire over al Egypt. 2. The matter which is here used is somewhat answerable to the effect, for as Moses taketh of the white ashes of the fornace, so they falling upon man & beast caused burning boyles, which at the first swelled & hoved the flesh, & then brake forth into sores: the word here used for blisters is derived of bagnah, which signifieth to boyle up as the water doth at the fire. Borrh. Perer. Philo. thinketh that these sores or boiles were over al their bodie, & grew into one being most grievous to behold. 3. This plague is answerable to the Egyptians sinne, for as they oppresse the Israelites with fornace work, in the burning of brick, so they are punished with burning sores which came of the ashes taken out of the fornace. Perer.

Quest. XI. Why the Egyptians are smitten with vlcers.

Vers. 11. AND the boyles are upon the enchanters. 1. This sheweth that the Magitians, though before they had confessed the power of God, yet doe persist still in their malice against Moses: Simler. Hereupon Cajetane thinketh that they did not acknowledge the power of God before, but rather some superiour power of the spirits: but this followeth not, because they resist Moses still, that they did not confesse the power of God before: for like as the same aire that is illuminate by the sunne is darkened when the sunne is gone away, so no marvell, if the minds of the wicked after they have received some light be darkned againe. Perer. 2. This is the third time that these sorcerers are confounded: first when Aarons serpent eat up theirs: secondly, when their power was restrained in the third plague: and now because they will not yet give over, they are punished. 3. Like unto these sorcerers are all unfaithfull counsellers to princes, whom the Lord in like manner will plague: Borrh. And thus the Magitians of that Pharaoh of Rome are smitten with exulcerate consciences, which swelling with pride and hypocrisie doe bring forth most vile ulcers of impietie. Simlerus.

Quest. XII. Of the hardning of Pharaohs heart.

Vers. 12. AND the Lord hardned Pharaohs heart. 1. The word signifieth to obstirme or strengthen chazak, because it was a signe of strength, or rather stubbornenes to stand against God: Simler. is another word used to signifie the same thing, cabadh, to make heavie, as cap. 8. 15. Pharaoh first by his owne corrupt mind, hardning or making his heart heavie, the Lord as by casting a heavie weight upo it maketh it heavier: Iun. 2. Origen well noteth how sometime Pharaoh is said to harden his owne heart, &c. sometime ſometime the Lord as in this place: the firſt kinde of hardning is declared by the Apoſtle, how it commeth when men by their impenitencie abuſe the lenitie and longanimitie of God, Rom. 2. 5. But the ſame Apoſtle making mention of the other hardning by the Lord, Rom. 9. he paſſeth it over, and it may be thought to bee one of thoſe high matters, which Paul heard being taken up into paradiſe and is not to bee uttered. Thus Origen counteth this a great ſecret, how God is ſaid to harden the heart. And ſo it is, yet not ſuch a ſecret, but that we find the ſame opened in ſcripture: how the Lord by giving wicked men over to themſelves, and withdrawing his grace doth as a moſt juſt Judge puniſh their voluntary obſtinacie with a further degree of induration. See more hereof before, Doct. 2. in 7. cap. 3. But here God is to be conſidered not as in his bare preſcience only foreſeeing the obſtinacie & hardneſſe of mens hearts, but as a juſt Judge in leaving of them to themſelves. Simler. 4. And this Auguſtine doth worthily wonder at, that Pharaoh is hardned by thoſe meanes which in all likelihood ſhould have mollified him. For if the Iſraelites cattell had died aſwell as the Egyptians, and if the ſorcerers had prevailed ſtill, hee might have had ſome colour: but ſeeing all things doe fall out contrarie, the Iſraelites to be preſerved, and his ſorcerers to be foiled, he being ſtill hardned, bewraieth a moſt obſtinate heart that could no way be mollified.

Quest. XIII. What plague the Lord threatned to deſtroy Pharaoh with.

Verſ. 15. For now I had ſtretched forth my hand. 1. Some doe underſtand this generallie of the plagues following, ſhewing that the plagues to come were greater than theſe which were alreadie paſt, and that the Egyptians had felt nothing to that which they were like to feele: Ferus. But here mention is made of the plague of peſtilence which both Pharaoh and his people ſhould be ſmitten with, yet none ſuch came. 2. Some do referre it to the plague of the firſt borne, and the full accompliſhment of this threatning, they ſay, was in the red Sea: Oſiander. But neither Pharaoh nor his people periſhed by the plague. 3. It is better underſtood of the plague, which was alreadie paſt: that God might as well have deſtroyed them with the peſtilence ſent upon the cattell, but that he ſpared them for another end: ſic Iun. Borrh. Perer. This ſenſe beſt agreeth to that which followeth, verſ. 16. For this cauſe have I kept thee &c. The Chalde Paraphraſt alſo expreſſeth the ſame ſenſe: as is before ſhewed in the divers readings.

Quest. XIIII. In what ſenſe the Lord ſaith, I have kept thee.

Verſ. 16. For this cauſe have I kept thee &c. 1. Not that God made Pharaoh obſtinate of purpoſe, to ſhew his power on him, & thereby to get glorie to himſelfe: for God needeth not mans malice for the ſetting forth of his glorie. Ferus. And like as the Apoſtle giveth this rule, not to doe evill, that good may come of it, ſo neither doth the Lord give conſent unto evill, that ſome good thing may be wrought thereby. 2. Some referre it to Gods permiſſion: that he ſuffered Pharaoh to be hardened to this end, that hee might get glorie by him: but neither can this be ſaid of God, that he ſuffereth any evill to bee done, as it is evill: and to ſuffer one to be hardned, is the greateſt puniſhment of ſin that can be: and it is uſually inflicted for great ſinnes that were committed before: therefore, before Pharaoh had grievouſly ſinned, he cannot be ſaid to be permitted and ſuffered to bee hardned. Perer. 3. Some do underſtand it of Gods ordinance, that Pharaoh being hardned and become obſtinate by his owne corrupt will, is ordained of God for the further ſetting forth of his glorie. Perer. 4. But though this expoſition be ſound, yet it ſeemeth not to be ſo fit and proper in this place: this verſe then depending of the other, ſheweth the reaſon why the Lord had ſaved and reſerved Pharaoh out of the peſtilence, that he might ſhew his power in him. Simler. Borrh. Iun. This then is the ſenſe, though Pharaoh, being wickedly bent and obſtinate, had deſerved to have been cut off by the former plagues, yet the Lord was patient to him-ward, and ſuffered him yet to continue, that the Lord might get greater glorie by him. Ferus. 5. The Apoſtle indeed, in ſetting forth this example, hath relation to Gods eternall decree, Rom. 9. yet it may very well ſtand alſo with this application to the preſent time of Pharaohs preſervation: for that which God doth preſently, he alſo decreed before in his eternall counſell to be done. Simler. Reconciliation Quest. XV. The plague of haile ſupernaturall.

Verſ. 18. I will cauſe to raine a mightie great haile. 1 Although haile, thunder, lightning, are for the moſt part procured by naturall cauſes: yet this was a ſupernaturall and extraordinarie tem- for theſe reaſons: in Egypt there are no tempeſtes, or winter weather, but only in places neere the in the time of winter there fall ſome thinne ſhowers, but above Memphis there falleth no raine at all, Philo. This tempeſt then of haile was unuſuall in Egypt: ſecondly, it was generally over all Egypt as uſe not to be: thirdly, it came at a certaine time prefixed. Simler. And this was admirable in it, the fire and haile being mingled together, the fire did not melt the haile ſtones, nor the haile quench fire, as Philo alſo noteth, and it is ſet forth, Wiſdom. 16. 2. In this plague three elements together their force, the aire in the thunder, the water in the haile, the fire in the lightning. Perer. 3. Whe- the Grecians and Egyptians, and other heathen did imagine, ſome gods to be of the aire, of the water, ſome of the land, the Lord therefore ſendeth of all ſorts of plagues upon Egyptians, in the aire, the water, in the earth, in the fire, to ſhew himſelfe to bee Lord the elements, and of all creatures. Theodoret quæſt. 21. 4. Concerning the application of this plague, underſtandeth the thunder, haile and lightning, of the Word of God, the voice thereof inſtructeth, downe ſin, as haile, & as fire burneth up the ſtubble of our affections. Auguſtine, whom Ferus fol- compareth it with the eight Commandement, Thou ſhalt not ſteale: for as heere the fruit which the trees beare, are beaten off with haile, ſo, whatſoever gaine is gotten deceitfully it periſheth, and Gods curſe is upon it. But ſuch myſticall applications are more curious than profitable, every man according to his own conceit, may find out wittie conveiances. But this obſervation is more proper, which Ferus noteth, that this plague hath alſo a fit correſpondencie with the crueltie of the Egyptians: for as they did cauſe the Iſraelites to wander up and downe their fields to gather ſtraw, ſo now the Lord ſendeth haile and lightning, which deſtroyeth the fruit in their fields.

the

QUEST. 16. Whether there uſeth to be no rayne and hayle in Egypt.

Verſ. 18. SVch as was not in Egypt ſince the foundation thereof. Theſe words do give occaſion to inquire, whether raine, haile and thunder are uſuall in Egypt, or not at all, as ſome affirme. 1. Ioſephus thus writeth, that in this plague there came haile, never ſeene in Egypt before, and bigger than uſeth to bee in other countries in the time of winter. 2. Philo alſo writeth, that Ægyptus ſola inter regiones in mediano tractu hyemem ignoret: that Egypt alone of all the South countries hath no winter. And conſequently, no winter weather, as raine, haile and ſuch like: and he giveth three reaſons thereof becauſe it is neere unto Torrida Zona, the hot & partching climate, which drieth up the clouds: aut inundans fluvius nubes abſumit, or Nilus overflowing doth waſte the clouds: and ſeeing their grounds become fruitfull by the inundation of Nilus, natura non ſolet in vanum operari, vt pluvias terræ non indigenti largiatur: nature worketh not in vaine to give raine to a ground that needeth it not. 3. So Plinie ſhewing the reaſon, why lightning is rare in winter, or ſummer, becauſe in the one the cold vapors extinguiſh what fiery matter is drawne up, in the other becauſe the heate drieth up the exhalation, giveth inſtance for the firſt in Scythia a cold countrie, for the other in Egypt a hot countrey, that thunder and lightning are not there to bee ſeene or heard. But in temperate countries they are uſuall, as in Italy: Plin. lib. 2. cap. 50. 4 Beſide the Scripture ſeemeth ſo to affirme, that it raineth not in Egypt, but they watred their fields with their feete, as one doth a garden, Deut. 11. 10. See alſo Zach. 14. 13. 5. But againſt this it may bee objected, that if there uſed to bee no haile, nor thunder in Egypt, to what purpoſe is this compariſon made, that there was none ſuch in Egypt ſince the foundation thereof? Therefore this muſt needs be affirmed, that Egypt is not altogether without haile and raine, but as is before alleaged out of Philo, in the northerly parts thereof toward the ſea, they uſe to have ſome thinne ſhewers: but yet generally, for the greateſt part of Egypt they have none. Perer.

QUEST. XVII. What is the meaning of theſe words ſince the foundation of Egypt.

SInce the foundation of Egypt was laid. 1. Not from the foundation of the world, from whence unto the 80. yeere of Moſes, are yeeres 2453. for the text afterward evidentlie ſpeaketh of the time ſince Egypt was a nation, verſ. 24. 2. Neither is it to be underſtood, ſince Egypt was ſo called: for Egyptus brother of Danaus, ſon of the Egyptian Belus gave that name unto it: who was about the time of Ioſuah, as Auguſtine thinketh, following the computation of Euſebius which was 800. yeeres after the floud. But as Ioſephus alleageth out of Manethon the Egyptian Chronicle, Danaus lived after the Hebrewes departed out of Egypt 300. yeeres: Then it is evident, that in Moſes time, nor many yeeres after, Egypt had not that name. 3. The meaning then is, that ſince Egypt began firſt to bee inhabited, which was about 100. yeeres after the floud, at the diviſion of tongues, at the building of the tower of Babel: for then Noahs ſonnes were diſperſed into the world, and Mizraim the ſonne of Cham was the founder of this nation, of whom it is in Scripture uſually ſo called: from thence untill this time are 697. yeeres. 4. Hence manifeſt both the error of Gerardus Mercator, that the Egyptians do fetch their petigree from beyond Noahs floud; as alſo that fabulous fiction of the Egyptians, that before Amaſis, who was King of Egypt in the time of Cyrus, affirme that there reigned in Egypt above 330. Kings: and they do boaſt of Chronicles of 13, thouſand yeeres. Pompon. Mela. lib. 1. de ſitu orbis. Perer.

Auguſt. lib. 18. de civit. dei, cap. 11.

QUEST. XVIII. Of the greatneſſe of this tempeſt of hayle.

Verſ. 28. THat there be no more thunders of God, and haile. That is ſuch grievous and terrible thunders. 1. The greatnes of theſe thunders is ſet forth by theſe foure arguments: the efficient, God was the author of them beyond the ordinarie worke of nature; the matter there was fire and haile mingled together; the effects, they killed both man and beaſt that were abroad, and blaſted all the corne that was above the ground, verſ. 31. and by way of compariſon, there was never ſuch haile in Egypt before, verſ. 24. Ferus. 2. Wonderful are the effects of thunder and lightning, they make the ſtrong to calve, and other cattell to caſt their young: and therefore becauſe of the terror and power of them, they are called the voices of God, Pſal. 29. Borrh. 3, In this haile, this is admirable, that although it rained throughout all the land of Egypt, yet the land of Goſhen was exempted: as the great haileſtones which fell upon Ioſhuas enemies and killed them, touched not the hoaſt of Iſrael Iohoua 10. 4. Thus the haile and lightning deſtroyed all abroad, the haile the more ſofter and tender things, the lightning ſuch things as were ſturdie and ſtrong, renting and breaking aſunder what ſoever reſiſted. The Chronicles make mention of a moſt grievous haile in France, under the reigne of Lodovicus ſonne to Charles the Great, about the yeere of the Lord 821. which was of ſuch bignes that it ſlew both man and beaſt: and in this time a peece of yce of 12. foote long fell with the haile out of the aire. Perer. 11.

Quest. XXI. How Moses knew that Pharaoh dissembled.

Vers. 30. I know that yee will not yet feare. 1. Some make this the sense (expounding the word terem for priusquam, afore) I know that now, before the plague is removed at my prayer, that yee will make a semblance and shew of feare, but when I have prayed, and you are delivered, then you will returne to your former hardnes of heart. Vatab. But beside that to make up this sense, much must be understood and supplied, that is not in the text, the word terem rather signifieth here nondum, not yet, as it is taken, Gen. 19. 4. and cap. 10. 7. and thus both the Septuagint and Chalde Paraphrast interpret it negatively, as is shewed before in the divers readings. 2. Although Moses saw some present fruits of sorrow and feare, yet he knew, that they were far from true fruits, because Pharaoh only humbled himselfe for the time, to be delivered from this plague: and Moses had experience alreadie of his hypocrisie and dissimulation: and further, he knew that Pharaoh was given over of God to hardnes of heart, and therefore no sound fruits of repentance could come from him.

Quest. X. What kind of graine was not smitten with the hayle.

Vers. 32. The wheate and the rie were not smitten. 1. That which we here translate rie, is in the Hebrew, eusemeth, which Hierome sometime translateth vicia, a kind of fetches or tares, sometime far: some take it for a kinde of beare barley, others take it for spelta, a kinde of wheate so called, well known in Italie and Pannonio: so Mouan. and Pagnin: but it is rather that kinde of graine which is called in Greeke ὄλυρα, all one with ὄλυρα, as the Septuagint reade, a middle kind of graine betweene wheate and barley such as rie is. Dioscorides saith that ὄλυρα is of the kinde of ζειὰ. lib. 2. cap. 15. so also saith Herodotus that they used that kinde called ὄλυρα for bread, which some call ζειὰ, which is well translated rie, for it is a kinde of breade corne, therefore neither fetches nor barley, and a middle sort betweene wheate and barley, 2. Now in that the barley was smitten, and not the wheate and rie, the reason is given, because the one was eared, and the other was hid, the word is aphiloth, obscure, not hid in the hose, as Pellicanus hid in the ground: Iun. 3. the Septuagint reade ὄψιμα, the Latine serotina, because the wheates and rie were late sowne: but it is not like that wheat and rie were sowne after their barley, which sooner commeth up and is sooner ripe: but though they were sowne together, yet the barley lieth not so long hid in the ground, as the wheate and rie: the reason then of this difference was, the barley was growne of and laugh out of the ground, and so was blasted and smitten, the other not yet appearing out of the ground, but lying hid. 4. But with us the use is contrarie, for our wheate and rie, which wee call winter corne, are out of the ground before the barley is sowne. Some thinke that the Egyptians doe sow all their graine together in the slime and soile that Nilus leaveth behinde, about the Autumne, and then plow it in November, and sow it againe in Aprill: Borrh. in cap. 7. but that is not like: for both the moistnes of the ground, after the overflowing of Nilus, and the warmth of the aire, which in winter time in Egypt is temperate, would have brought forth the wheate and rie sooner, that it could not have lien so long hid, as toward the spring, when it is supposed this tempest of haile came. And againe, the use of husbandmen is not first to sow their ground and then to plow it: but first they make it plaine and readie, and then cast in their seede, as the Prophet sheweth, Esay. 28. 25. Therefore it seemeth more like, that the Egyptians sow no corne at all, but toward the spring, as the like use is in some parts of England, as Cumberland, as I have been informed, where they sow not their wheate and rie before winter, as in other countries but toward the rising of the yeere, and so all these kindes being sowne much about one time, the barley might sooner appeare above the ground. 5. Now by this it may be conjectured at what time of the yeere these plagues came, the corne doth begin to eare but toward the spring, when all things as it were revive and begin to flourish. But the spring in those countries is forwarder, then it is with us: for they had ripe corne in mid March when they kept the Passeover: this plague then of haile might be sent about the end of Februarie, and so all the rest within the compasse of a moneth, or in a very short time, as is shewed before, quest. 29. in cap. 7.

4. Places of doctrine.

1. Doct. The pestilence is sent of God.

Vers. 3. Behold the hand of the Lord is upon the flocke. This sheweth that the plague and pestilence commeth not by chance, nor by naturall meanes onely, but it is sent of God: so the Prophet saith, Shall there be evill in the citie, and the Lord hath not done it? Amos 3. 6. Ferus.

2. Doct. Why the Lord suffereth the wicked and is patient toward them.

Vers. 16. Therefore have I kept thee. The Lord useth great patience and longanimitie toward the wicked and obstinate, as heere to ward Pharaoh, which the Lord doth for divers ends: thereby it appeareth how great an evil the hardnes of the heart is, which can neither be wonne by benefits, nor mollified by punishments. 2. That the wicked and impenitent may bee inexcusable, having so long time of repentance given them. 3. That Gods goodnesse & mercie might appeare in sufferiag so long the vessels of his wrath. 4. That God thereby may have occasion to shew his judgements in the world, and to publish his glorie: which is the reason here touched why the Lord spared Pharaoh. Perer. 3. disput. 9.

3. Doct.

3. Doct. How the Lord puniſheth ſinne with ſinne.

Verſ. 12. THe Lord hardned the heart of Pharaoh. Thus God in his juſtice doth puniſh ſin with ſin. Pharaohs former obſtinacie and hardnes of heart, is puniſhed with a greater meaſure and degree of obſtinacie. Piſcator. So Saul was puniſhed with deſertion, and being left unto himſelfe, after he had committed moſt grievous ſinnes of hypocriſie, preſumption, diſobedience, crueltie. Thus the Lord puniſhed the Gentiles, by giving them over to their hearts luſts, Rom. 1. 24. The hardning then of the heart, as it is evill, proceedeth of man, as it is a puniſhment, it is diſpoſed and inflicted of God.

4. Doct. Of the force of the law of nature.

Verſ. 27. PHaraoh ſaid I have now ſinned. Heere wee ſee the force of the law of nature, which inforceth Pharaohs conſcience, that he had ſinned and done amiſſe: So the Apoſtle teacheth, That the Gentiles did ſhew the effect of the law written in their hearts, their conſciences bearing witnes, and their thoughts accuſing one another, or excuſing, Rom. 2. 15. Hence alſo it is evident, how the Law differeth from the Goſpell: the Law worketh terror, and revealeth ſinne, but the Goſpell worketh comfort in the remiſſion and forgivenes of ſinne, Borrh.

5. Places of confutation.

1. Conf. That God hardneth the heart otherwiſe than by permiſſion.

Verſ. 12. THe Lord hardned the heart of Pharaoh. Bellarmine, and generally the Romaniſts do hold that God doth no otherwiſe blind the mind, and harden the heart, than permittendo & deſerendo, by permiſſion onely and deſertion, or forſaking, negative, non poſitive, negatively only, not poſitively, that is by denying and withholding his grace, not by acting or doing any thing. lib. 2. de amiſſ. gratiæ cap. 14. obſer. 4.

But this text evidently doth convince him. The Lord is here ſaid to harden Pharaohs heart, which heweth an action in God, not a connivence or permiſſion only. And three waies God is an agent in hardning of mans heart, and yet he is free from all touch or ſuſpition of evill. 1. God is to be conſidered as the Creator of all, from whom both the righteous and unrighteous receive al their naturall powers & faculties, whereby they live, move, worke or doe any thing, In him we move, live and have our being. Act. 17. 28. So Auguſtine ſaith, Non peccati cujuſquam author eſt deus, ſed naturæ creator: God is not the author of any ſin, but the Creator of nature, which when it had power not to offend, yet treſpaſſed of it owne accord. 2. Though the Lord willeth not ſinne to bee done, neither approoveth it when it is done, yet he diſpoſeth and diſpoſeth it being done, and directeth it to ſuch ende as himſelfe pleaſeth: ſo it is ſaid in the Pſalme, whatſoever it pleaſed God that did hee in heaven and in earth, Pſal. 135. 6. God would never ſuffer ſin to be committed in the world, but that he knoweth how to turne it to good, as here he uſeth Pharaohs hardned heart to his owne glorie. Auguſtine ſaith, Aliud Deus fecit & ordinavit, aliud non fecit, ſed ordinavit. Some things God both doth & ordaineth, ſome things he doth not, yet ordaineth: that is, diſpoſeth of them to ſome good end. 3. God is to be conſidered in the action of the hardning of the heart as a juſt judge that puniſheth ſinne by ſinne: ſo is he alſo an agent, and not a patient or ſufferer onely. Their owne maſter of the ſentences doubteth not to ſay, that concupiſcentia in quantum pœna eſt peccati, Deum habet autorem, that concupiſcence as it is the puniſhment of ſinne hath God the author thereof. lib. 2. diſtinct. 23. So likewiſe may it be ſaid, that the hardning of the heart, as it is a puniſhment of ſinne proceedeth from God, and his reaſon is, becauſe all puniſhments are juſt. Therefore as God is a Creator giving power and life to all, as hee diſpoſeth and ordereth evill actions unto good, as he is a juſt Judge and puniſher of ſinne, ſo he an agent, in hardning of the heart, therein ſhewing his power, wiſedom and juſtice: but the ſinne and evill therein committed is only of man, who properly hardneth his owne heart.

2. Conf. Againſt the toleration of any contrarie religion.

Verſ. 29. AS ſoone as I am out of the Citie. Moſes will not pray in the Citie which was given to ſuperſtition and Idolatrie, he will ſeparate himſelf from the companie and preſence of the ſuperſtitious and unbeleevers, that he may give himſelfe to fervent and zealous praier. And for this cauſe ſaid before, that the people could not ſacrifice unto God in Egypt: Simler. By this then we ſee, that God cannot be purely ſerved in the middeſt of Idolaters. They which will worſhip God aright muſt ſeparate themſelves from among ſuch. It is therefore a dangerous thing that any toleration of a contrarie religion ſhould be admitted, God will have as the whole heart in man, ſo the whole worſhip in his Church: where Gods arke is, there Dagon ſhall be thruſt out of his place: for there is no fellowſhip betweene light and darkenes, Chriſt & Belial, 2. Cor. 6. 14. 15. 3. Conf. Of aſſurance and confidence in prayer.

S. Iames ſaith, let him aske in faith and waver not, neither let that man thinke (that is, he which wavereth) that hee ſhall receive any thing of the Lord, cap. 1. 6. 7. How then are not the Romaniſts aſhamed thus to affirme, non requiri in oratione fidem qua certo credamus Deum abſolute facturum quod petimus, that faith is not requiſite in prayer, to beleeve certainly that God will abſolutely do that for us which we aſke. Bellarmin de bon. operib. in particul. cap. 9.

Indeed there is a double kind of ſuch aſſurance, one is extraordinarie, which proceedeth of ſome ſpeciall revelation, as here Moſes building upon Gods particular promiſes made unto him, was ſure his prayer ſhould take effect; the other is an ordinarie aſſurance, which is alſo of two ſorts, either when we pray for things ſpirituall concerning eternall life, where the faithfull have an abſolute aſſurance to bee heard: or for things temporall, where our aſſurance is but conditionall, that God will grant us ſuch things ſo farre forth as they are expedient. And even in praying for things temporall there is alſo an aſſurance particular and determinate, which is ſomewhat rare, yet often found in the children of God, when they have a faithfull and conſtant perſwaſion, that God will heare them for their temporall bleſſing which they pray for: and God therein never faileth them: as Iacob was aſſured, that God would keepe him in his journey, and give him bread to eat and clothes to put on, *Gen.*28. And of this aſſurance S. Iames ſpeaketh that the prayer of faith ſhall ſave the ſicke, Iam. 5. they which pray with confidence and aſſurance, for the health of the bodie, even ſhall be heard therein: they which are not heard have not that faith, and God giveth them not that faith and aſſurance, becauſe he ſeeth ſuch health not to be good for them. There is beſide this a generall aſſurance, which every one of Gods children feeleth in their prayer: as to be fully perſwaded, that either God will give them that particular temporall bleſſing, which they pray for, or ſome other gift, which God ſeeth to be more neceſſary for them. As Paul was not in particular aſſured that the pricke of the fleſh ſhould be taken from him, yet he knew that his prayer ſhould obtaine either that, or a more pretious gift: as the Lord ſaid, my grace is ſufficient for thee: he received the grace and ſtrength of God, to reſiſt and overcome that temptation, though it were not altogether taken from him. Auguſtine concerning this difference of aſſurance betweene prayer for things temporall, and for things ſpirituall hath this excellent ſentence: Sanitatem quis petit, cum ægrotat, & forte ei adhuc ægrotare utile eſt; poteſt fieri ut hic non exaudiatur: at vero cum illud petis, ut det tibi Deus vitam æternam, ſecurus eſto, accipies: A man asketh health when he is ſicke, and yet it may bee good for him to be ſicke; it may bee then thou ſhalt not be heard here: but when thou asketh of God to give thee eternall life, be out of doubt thou ſhalt receive it.

6. Places of morall uſe.

1. Obſerv. Sinne the cauſe of extraordinary ſickneſſe.

Verſ.10. There came boiles breaking out into bliſters. As Pharaoh here and his people were ſmitten with boiles and ulcers for their ſins, which they had committed againſt God and his people; ſo often the Lord ſendeth ſtrange diſeaſes and ſickneſſes into the world, wee muſt take them as ſignes of the wrath and indignation of God, Simler. As the Apoſtle ſheweth that the Corinthians for certaine abuſes, which they were guiltie of, in receiving the Lords Supper, were chaſtiſed, ſome with ſickneſſe, ſome with death, 1 *Cor.*11.30.

2. Obſerv. Gods judgements tempered with mercy.

Verſ.19. Send therefore now and gather thy cattell &c. The Lord remembreth mercie in the middeſt of his judgements: though the Lord had certainly determined to bring this plague of haile upon Egypt: yet together Moſes giveth advice, how both they and their cattell ſhould be preſerved from it: thus ſaith the Pſalmiſt, Mercy and truth are met, righteouſneſſe and peace ſhall kiſſe one another, *Pſal.*85.10. Gods truth and juſtice is accompanied with mercy, truth and favour, Pellican.

3. Obſerv. Confeſſion of ſins which proceedeth onely from the feare of Gods judgements is no true or right confeſſion.

Verſ.27. Pharaoh ſaid unto them, I have now ſinned. This was no true confeſſion, but Pharaoh was forced thereunto by this grievous plague of haile and lightning, that was upon him and his people: and beſide, he ſimply confeſſeth not his ſinne, but now, that is, in this, or at this time, I have ſinned: ſo hypocrites doe not truly confeſſe their ſins, but thoſe onely they ſometimes will ſeeme to acknowledge, that are notorious, and wherein they are manifeſtly convicted, Ferus. Here we have all the parts of popiſh penance, contrition, confeſſion and ſatisfaction, for he is content to let the people goe: but yet it was far from true or ſound repentance: ſo in Iudas there was all three, contrition, confeſſion, and ſatisfaction in reſtoring the money, which he had taken to betray Chriſt: but he wanted the fruits of true repentance, the peace of the conſcience, and cleering thereof before God by remiſſion of ſinnes, as the Apoſtle ſheweth, Rom.5.1, and 1 *Cor.*7.11. Simler.

4. Obſerv. To hope the beſt of men while they live.

Verſ.29. As ſoone as I am out of the Citie I will ſpread mine hands, &c. Though Pharaoh had deceived Moſes divers times before, yet he refuſed not ſtill to pray for him: he hoped the beſt of him, as the Apoſtle ſaith, that charitie hopeth all things, 1 *Cor.*13.7. which teacheth us that we ſhould be wanting unto none in our prayers but hope the beſt of them while they live, Ferus.

Chap. X.

1. The method and Argument.

His Chapter hath two parts according unto the two plagues therein described, the eight of Locusts, to *vers.*21. and the ninth of the three dayes darkneſſe, to the end of the Chapter.

In the firſt part, there is, 1. the denouncing or threatning of the plague, to *vers.*11. wherein we have, firſt Gods Commandement unto Moſes to goe unto Pharaoh, with two reaſons, that God might worke his great miracles, vers. 1. and that he might declare them to their poſteritie, vers. 2. then Moſes obedience in the execution of his charge: where he beginneth with the reprehenſion of Pharaoh, for his obſtinacy, *vers.*3. then he names what plague the Lord will ſend, *vers.*4. and the effects thereof, both in devouring the fruits of the earth, *vers.*5. and filling their houſes, *vers.*6. Thirdly, the event: Pharaohs ſervants move the King, *vers.*7. who cauſeth Moſes and Aaron to be called, vers. 8. they propound their requeſt, *vers.*9. But Pharaoh yeelds not unto it but in part, vers. 10, 11.

2. Then followeth the execution of the judgement before denounced, where the ſigne, the ſtretching forth of Moſes hand with the rod is expreſſed, then the inſtrument all cauſe, the Eaſt wind, *vers.*13. the plague it ſelfe, *vers.*14. and the effects thereof, *vers.*15.

3. The events are theſe three, Pharaohs confeſſion of his ſinne, with his ſupplication to Moſes to pray unto God, *vers.*16.17. Moſes prayer, with the effect thereof, vers. 18. the third is the hardning of Pharaohs heart, *vers.*23.

In the ſecond part, which containeth a deſcription of the ninth plague of darkneſſe, 1. The Commandement of God is premiſed, ſhewing Moſes what he ſhould doe, ſtretch out his hand toward heaven; and to what end, that there may be darkneſſe; and what darkneſſe, ſuch as might be felt, *vers.*21. 2. The execution followeth: ſhewing Moſes obedience, he ſtretched out his hand, *vers.*22. the ſequell thereof, in bringing darkneſſe, which is deſcribed by the circumſtance of the time, it continueth three daies, *vers.*23. by the effects, none could ſtirre from his place; by the contrary, there was light with the people of Iſrael.

Thirdly, the events in Pharaoh: 1. He ſeemeth to relent in promiſing to let the people goe, with ſome limitation and exception of their cattell, vers. 24. Secondly his obſtinacie and hardneſſe of heart in refuſing to let them goe upon Moſes replie, *vers.*25,26,27. Thirdly, Pharaohs threatning of Moſes, and charge that he ſhould ſee his face no more, *vers.*28. with Moſes anſwer, *vers.*29.

2. The divers readings.

A.P.I. Vers.2. That I may ſhew theſe my ſignes in the middeſt thereof. A.P.H. 1. In the middeſt of Egypt, L. of his Kingdome. V. G. better than, before him. B. or in him. L. or, in the middeſt of them. C. or, in them, upon them. S. It is better referred to the land it ſelfe, than either to Pharaoh or the Egyptians, as the words ſhew in the originall.

I.P.B. Vers.7. How long ſhall he be a ſnare unto us? I.P.B. rather than, an offence or ſcandall. A.V.C.L. ſuppoſe Moſes had beene an inſtrument of ſuch grievous plagues, that they feared him, even as the bird the ſnare: the word mokeſh ſignifieth both, but the firſt rather here, as likewiſe *Dent.*7.16.

I.B.L.&c. Doeſt thou not yet know that all Egypt is deſtroyed? I. B. C. L. better than, wilt thou know firſt that, A.P.V.G. or, wilt thou know that Egypt is deſtroyed? Here the particle terem is omitted, which ſignifies both nondum, not yet, and antequam, before: the firſt is more fitting here: ſee before *chap.*9. 30.

I C. Vers.10. See to it, for evill is before your face. I.A.P. that is, he threatneth them if they will not ceaſe to be troubleſome to him, as *vers.*28. better than, yee have ſome miſchiefe in hand. B. ſo alſo L.S.V. the firſt ſenſe is more agreeable, becauſe of that watchword ſet before, ſee, as *vers.*28. take heed to thy ſelfe: the Chalde putteth both theſe ſenſes together: See the evill which you intend to do, ſtandeth againſt your ſoules.

A.P.V.I. Vers.11. He caſt them out of Pharaohs preſence. A.P.V.C. i. Pharaoh caſt them out from his face. I. better than, were thruſt or caſt out of Pharaohs preſence. B. G.L. S. for the word jegaresh is in the paſſive number.

B.G. cum cater. Vers.13. He ſtretched his rod over the land of Egypt. B. or, upon. G. cum cater, againſt. I. ghal more ſimply and properly ſignifieth upon, as *chap.*8.5.

I. cum cat. Vers.14. Locuſts. I. cum cater: better than, graſhoppers. B. G. Arbeh is the locuſt, and chagab the graſhopper, *Eccleſ.*12.5.

I.V. A.P. Vers.19. The reedie ſea. I.V. the ſea Suph. A.P. rather than, the red ſea. L. S. C. B. G. Suph ſignifieth a reed: and that ſea is ſo called becauſe of the abundance of reed there growing, Plin. lib. 11. cap. 6. the ſame is alſo called the red ſea, for that it ſeemeth to be red, becauſe of the reed or the ſand.

I.B. C. cum cater. Vers.26. We doe not know with what we ſhall ſerve the Lord. B.G.I.P. better than, how wee ſhall ſerve, C. or what we ſhall ſerve. S. for that is an improper phraſe, or what wee ſhall ſacrifice. L. V. the ſame but uſe the words ghabadh to ſerve.

3. The

3. The explanation of difficult and doubtfull questions.

QUEST. I. Why Moses is bid to goe to Pharaoh, notwithstanding his heart was hardned.

Vers.1. GOe to Pharaoh, for I have hardned his heart, and the hearts of his servants, &c. 1. Moses is bid to goe still to Pharaoh, because hitherto he hath prevailed nothing: and though the servants of Pharaoh, before time were obstinate as their master was, yet now they should be humbled, as it followeth, vers.7. Iun. 2. Though Moses is told before, that Pharaoh shall not heare, yet he is sent againe to make him inexcusable, as in the Gospell Christ sendeth the leper to the Priest to be a testimonie against them: Ferus. 3. The hardnesse of Pharaohs heart, is not the effect of the signes and wonders, but the occasion of them: for if Pharaoh had yeelded at the first, then the Lord should not have needed to have contended with him by multiplying of his signes: Simler. This hardnesse of Pharaohs heart, proceeded from his owne corruption, and the Lord as a just Judge further punisheth him with his owne sinne, but disposeth of it to his glory: so then God, in respect of the immediate act of hardning Pharaohs heart, is said to harden it not positively by making his heart hard, but negatively, in not mollifying it, but leaving of him to himselfe: but as the hardnesse of heart is a punishment of Pharaoh, and as it is referred and disposed of to Gods glorie, the Lord also worketh positively, and actively. 4. So then this is the order of the causes here propounded, the end of the hardning of Pharaohs heart, is, that God may shew his signes; the end thereof, that Gods works may be knowne in Israel, and declared to their children: and the chiefe end of all, is, That ye may know that I am the Lord: Iunius.

QUEST. II. How Moses is said to be a snare to the Egyptians.

Vers.7. HOw long shall he be a snare unto us? 1. The Septuagint put the article in the neuter Gender: How long shall this thing be an offence: but it is better understood of Moses: he was as a Snare and trappe unto them in respect of these grievous plagues and afflictions, which he was the minister of: Simler. And therefore they are afraid of him as the bird is of the snare: Iun. 2. They use three reasons to perswade Pharaoh. first, in respect of themselves, they all smarted for one mans obstinacie; in respect of Moses and the Israelites, their request was reasonable, they did but aske leave to goe to serve their God: thirdly in regard of the whole land of Egypt, which was almost destroyed: Ferus. 3. Though Pharaohs servants seeme for the time to be touched, yet they were farre off true repentance and conversion unto God: and they doe not leave for all this their superstition and Idolatry, Simler. and afterward their hearts were hardned againe, when they with Pharaoh pursued after Israel to the red sea.

QUEST. III. Of Pharaohs wish, Let the Lord be so with you, &c.

Vers.10. SO let the Lord be with you as I let you goe. 1. Some doe interpret these words as plainly spoken, that Pharaoh wisheth indeed that God were no more mercifull unto them, then they should finde him: Genevens. But this though it bewraieth an uncharitable minde in Pharaoh, yet it sheweth that he had a reverend opinion of the divine assistance, which he wisheth to be as farre from them, as his affection was. But Pharaoh had no such opinion of the God of Israel. 2. Therefore it seemeth that these words are uttered with a kind of derision: as if hee should say, you boast much, that you serve a mightie and great God, well, let him deliver you, for I will not; and so in effect he saith, as he did at the first, I know not the Lord, chap.5. Ferus. 3. And yet unwittingly Pharaoh wisheth unto them the assistance of God indeed: for he afterwards himselfe did let Israel goe, and he wisheth God even so to be with them as he would let them goe, which indeed came so to passe, God was with them and so overruled Pharohs heart, that he was content to dismisse them, Iun.

Of the eight plague.

QUEST. IV. Of the nature of Locusts, and whether this plague were extraordinary.

Vers.13. IN the morning the East wind brought the Locusts. 1. Plinie writeth strange things of these Locusts, as how the female dieth of a certaine worme that choketh her breeding betweene the wings, as soone as she hath brought forth her young: that in India there are of them three foot long: they are taken up with the wind and flie over the seas, and fetch a great compasse to seeke food; they are such multitudes, that they shadow the sunne: where they light, they seare the grasse by touching it, and devoure up all, yea they doe eat through the roofe of the houses. They often flie over out of Africa into Italie, In the region Cyrene, there is a law thrice in the yeere to fight against them. First in destroying their egges; then the young; and after when they are growne. In the Isle Lemnis every one is appointed a certaine measure of Locusts which they shall kill and bring to the magistrate: and they doe nourish birds of purpose to take their flight against them, and so to destroy them. In Necare and Syria they emploie themselves against them. Thus much Plini, lib. 11. cap. 29. Ex Perer. 2. But although these kinds of Locusts in those parts of the South and East countries are usuall, yet this plague was extraordinarie both in respect of the divers kinds, as Caterpillers, Grashoppers, Psalm. 78.46. and their multitude, for they covered the face of the earth, vers. 5. and as the Chalde Paraphrast expoundeth, they darkened the beames and light of the sunne: beside, otherwise then Locusts use to doe, they did not onely consume and eat up the fields, but filled also their houses: Further these Locusts come at the time appointed, To morrow I will bring Locusts upon thy coastes, vers. 4. In so short a time for such a multitude a multitude of Locusts to be gathered, it was admirable, Simler. And lastly for them at that time of the yeere to come, in the spring, which is the breeding time, whereas they usually doe strike over into other countries in harvest, when the fruits of the earth begin to be ripe, to seeke for food, as Plinie writeth of them: Propter famem externa pabula petere sciunt: The inhabitants know that they seeke forren food for hunger: immensos tractus permeant diræ messibus contegunt nube: they goe over divers countries and cover them with a cloud hurtfull to the harvest, Plin. ibid.

QUEST. V. Of the greatnesse of this plague of Locusts.

NOw the greatnesse of this judgement appeareth diversly. 1. These Locusts came upon Egypt, as the Lords royall host, and so are they called, Ioel. 2. 25. the Lords great host: not in comparison of the superiour spirituall powers, but in respect of weake men, against whom the Lord can arme the least of his creatures: Rupert. and Pharaoh could better have resisted an hundred thousand men than these Locusts, Ferus. 2. The Locusts consumed all the herbes, fruits of trees, and every greene thing, whatsoever the haile had left, vers. 15. 3. They filled their houses, vers. 6. as the frogges did before, and went into every roome and chamber, their amberies, victuals, storehouses were pestered with them: for so it may be gathered by the like annoyance in the frogges. 4. And not onely so, but with their venemous teeth, they did bite and destroy men, and therefore Pharaoh desireth, vers. 17. that God would take away that death onely; and so we read, Wisd. 16. 9. that the biting of Locusts and flies killed them.

QUEST. VI. Why sometime Aaron, sometime Moses stretched out the rod.

Vers. 13. NOw Moses stretched forth his rod, &c. 1. This is to bee observed, that in the bringing of some plagues, Moses commandeth, and Aaron stretched out the rod, as in the three first plagues, of the bloudie waters, frogges, and lice; in the two next of the swarmes and murrane Moses and Aaron doe nothing; in the three following Moses is the instrument to bring the botches, the haile and Locusts. 2. The reason of this difference the Hebrewes ascribe to the dignitie of Moses, who brought the plagues that came from above, out of the aire and skie, and Aaron those, which were wrought below. And herein is fulfilled the promise of God to Moses, that he had made him Pharaohs God: for so Moses commandeth the aire, fire and water, and all the elements as a terrene God. 3. Yet Moses doth not anything by his owne power, neither is there any vertue in his rod: Moses indeed stretcheth out his rod: but is said, that the Lord brought the East wind, Simler.

QUEST. VII. What kinde of wind it was which brought the Locusts.

THe Lord brought an East wind. 1. God useth the Ministrie of the wind, not as having any need of it, but that we might know, that when any wind or weather is sent, God is the author of them. 2. This was not a southerly wind, as the Septuag. read; and Philo, to whom Pererius subscribeth, affirmeth the same: but beside that the word kedem signifieth the East, it is evident by the contrarie wind, which cast them into the red sea, called the West wind, vers. 19. that the East wind brought them, Thostatus. And the Latine interpreter, though missing of the sense of the word, calleth it urentem ventum, a searing wind, which best agreeth to the East wind, which is well knowne to seare and wither fruit, and to breed caterpillers and wormes. 3. Though it be usuall in those parts for Locusts to be brought with the wind, yet such an infinite number of them, and in so short a time to bee brought, was miraculous and extraordinarie, Simler.

QUEST. VIII. Whether this plague of Locusts were incomparable and not to be matched.

Vers. 14. SO grievous Locusts like to these, were never before, neither after them shall be such. How this agreeth that place of the Prophet Ioel with this, where he speaking of the like plague of Locusts saith, There was none like it from the beginning, neither shall be any more after it? Ioel. 2. 2. It may be answered that it is here meant of Egypt, that in that land there were never any such Locusts neither should be, as it is said of the haile: so grievous as there was none throughout all the land of Egypt, since it was a nation, chap. 9. 24. 2. But because the words here are generall, no mention being made of Egypt, it may rather be answered: that these Locusts came all at once: but in that plague which Ioel speaketh of, these foure kinds, the Palmer worme, the Grashopper, Canker worme and Caterpiller did one succeed another and one devoured that which the other left, Ioel. 1. 2. And in that respect it is said to bee so grievous as none was before it: Simler. 3. Or rather it is said to be incomparable, for the continuance of it, which was certaine yeeres: whereas these Locusts indured not many daies.

Reconciliation.

QUEST. IX. In what sense it is said the Locusts devoured that which the haile left.

Vers. 15. THey did eat all which the haile had left. And yet it is said before that the haile did smite all the herbes of the field, chap. 9. 25. then there was nothing for the Locusts to devoure. Some answere, that the haile onely touched the corne, as rie, wheate, barlie, flax, but not the grasse, then the Locusts came and devoured herbe, grasse and all: Pellican. But the text it selfe admitteth not this: for the haile is said to smite all the herbes of the fields: and so the Locusts did also eat all the herbes of the field, vers. 15. 2. Some thinke, that there was some respite betweene the haile and the comming of the Locusts, and that in the meane time the corne and other fruits, which the haile and lightning had smitten did grow againe, and then the Locusts came and devoured it: Simler. But beside that it is shewed before that this plague of Locusts followed the other within two or three daies, quest. 9. in chap. 7. in which time there could be little renewing of the fruits by a ſecond growth and ſpring; the text favoureth not this conceit: becauſe the Locuſts are ſaid, to eat that which the haile left, but that which was then not growne, cannot be ſaid to be left. 3. Therefore it may be better anſwered, that where the haile is ſaid to have ſmitten all the herbes of the field, it muſt be underſtood for the greateſt and moſt part, as it was ſaid before, chap.9.6. that all the cattell of Egypt died: whereas ſome remained for the other plagues, as for the haile, chap.9.25. Simler. 4. But neither are we forced in this place ſo to reſtraine the generalitie of theſe words: but this may be ſaid, that where the haile and lightning did ſmite, though all the herbes and fruits were touched, yet not the whole: there might be ſome greene thing remaining after the haile and lightning played the part, as wee ſee in the ſearing and blaſting of corne, that ſome eſcapeth: ſo that which this tempeſt had not blaſted and ſeared, the Locuſts devoured.

Quest. X. Why the plague of Locuſts is called a death.

Vers.17. That he may take away from me this death onely: 1. Some thinke that he ſo called this plague, as if he ſhould ſay, this deſtruction, becauſe it brought a decay and conſumption upon all things: Vatab. but death properly is underſtood of living creatures, as cattell and men. 2. Some referre it to the event, which Pharaoh might feare, leſt that the people being offended with Pharaoh who was the cauſe of theſe plagues, might make ſome mutinous inſurrection, whereof ſlaughter and death might follow: Simler. But he ſpeaketh of death and mortalitie alreadie begun, and not feared onely. 3. Therefore ſome thinke that the Locuſts with their biting, killed men, as it is collected, Wiſd.16.9. and that therefore it is called a death: Perer. but this is not all, for he ſaith, this death onely: his meaning is not, that the men in their houſes ſhould be delivered from the biting of Locuſts, but generally that the land might be rid of them. 4. Therefore it is beſt to underſtand death here generally, both of the mortalitie of men, and the deſtruction of the fruit, and ſo to comprehend them both: Iun. And ſo Pharaoh deſireth for this once to be ſpared, that if he keepe not promiſe with them afterward, then he will deſire no favour.

Quest. XI. Of the myſticall application of this plague of Locuſts.

Of the myſticall application of this plague of Locuſts, firſt, Origen thereby would have ſignified obſtinate and diſobedient men, that cannot indure the government of God their King over them: as the Locuſts are ſaid to have no King, Prov.30. 2. Auguſtine making a reſemblance betweene this ninth plague, and the ninth Commandement, doth by Locuſts that hurt by biting, underſtand the falſe witneſſe and the ſlanderous tongue: and as the Locuſts cannot flie of themſelves, but are carried by the wind, ſo the falſe tongue is ruled by the ſpirit of Satan. 3. Gregorie findeth out other applications, as one while he thereby underſtandeth the people of the Jewes, that like Locuſts would leape forward, that is, make great profeſſion of obedience, but fall againe to the ground: againe by the Locuſts he underſtandeth the Gentiles that gathering in troupes, as Locuſts, doe fight for the faith: Likewiſe hee doth referre it to Chriſt, that like as a Locuſt leaped out of the hands of his enemies, and by his reſurrection eſcaped out of the bands of death. 4. In theſe applications we may obſerve three things, firſt the varietie, how one differeth from another in their conceits, whereas Scripture is alway conſonant. Secondly the multiplicity of ſenſe, which is coined by one and the ſame man; but the ſenſe of Scripture is one. Thirdly, they accommodate the ſame Scripture, to ſignifie contrary things, as both good and evill; whereas the Scripture, as a fountaine doth not at one place ſend forth ſweet and bitter. 5. Therefore for the myſticall application (leaving theſe fantaſies and devices of men) wee will have recourſe to the Scripture it ſelfe; which by biting flies and Locuſts underſtandeth both the violent enemies of the Church, ſuch as by tyrannie and cruelty oppreſſe it: as the Lord ſaith, he will hiſſe for the Flie of Egypt and the Bee of Aſſur; and they ſhall come and light upon the valleies, Iſa.7.19. as alſo the ſpirituall enemies, as falſe teachers, Heretikes, Seducers, which are compared to Locuſts that riſe out of the ſmoke of the bottomleſſe pit, Apoc.9.4. Rupert. Simler.

Gregor. lib 30. moral. cap.20.

Quest. XII. How Moſes turned himſelfe going out from Pharaoh.

Vers.18. Then he went out from Pharaoh. 1. Moſes is here underſtood, though not expreſſed, becauſe he was the more principall: and he at other times had removed the other plagues. 2. This may ſerve to expound that other place, verſ.6. that Moſes turned himſelfe and went out from Pharaoh, which ſome doe interpret according to the uſe and faſhions of the Eaſt countries, as it is obſerved in Turkey at this day, that when they depart from the King, for ſigne of reverence they goe backward, and ſo they thinke that Moſes did here: But if Moſes had gone backward, then he had not turned himſelfe at all, and the word here uſed, phanah, ſignifieth to looke backe, or turne the face: Num.16.42. They turned their face and looked toward the Tabernacle: if Moſes then departing from Pharaoh turned his face, then was his backe toward the King. 3. Wherefore the meaning of it is, that Moſes either went out in haſte, to diſpatch that thing which he had foretold: Simler. Or hee went away in great indignation, as diſdaining any longer to talke with ſuch a wicked man; as alſo by this his ſuddaine departing, ſignifying that the Lord would deale no more with him by meſſages, Ferus.

Of the ninth plague, of the three dayes darkneſſe.

Quest. XIII. Of the cauſe of the darkneſſe of Egypt.

The ninth plague.

Verſ.21. Stretch out thine hand, that there may be darkneſſe &c. Concerning the cauſe of this darkneſſe 1. Neither was it cauſed by an eclipſe of the ſunne, as Philo: For though the ſunne had been eclipſed, yet other ſtarres might have given light, but they had none at all: and the eclipſe of the ſunne is generall; this darkneſſe was onely in Egypt: neither doth the ſunne continue many houres in the eclipſe much leſſe three dayes. 2. Neither was this darkneſſe in blinding of the eyes of the Egyptians, as the Sodomites were blinded: for to what purpoſe then ſhould it bee ſaid, that it was palpable darkneſſe that might be felt? 3. Neither was this darkneſſe onely a privation of the light of the ſunne, as Gloſ. interlinear. but there was ſome impediment in the aire, becauſe it is ſaid, it was a thicke and palpable darkneſſe. 4. Neither yet was the cauſe of this darkneſſe onely in the aire, which was incraſſate and thickned with darke miſts. Paul. Burgenſ. Perer. For the ſtretching of Moſes hand toward heaven, ſheweth that the beginning of this darkneſſe came from thence: and that as at Ioſuahs bidding the ſunne was ſtayed in his motion, ſo here by the power of God, in the ſtretching out of Moſes hand, the ſunne withdrew his light as he did in the paſſion of Chriſt. 5. So that two cauſes here concurred: both the celeſtiall lights above were hindred from ſhining upon Egypt, and the aire alſo was thickned with darke miſts: like as the cloud which went before Iſrael, on the one ſide gave light to Iſrael, and on the other it was darkneſſe to the Egyptians Lyranus, Thoſtatus, Cajetan. Simler. And unto this miracle, the Prophet Amos ſeemeth to allude, *chap.*8.9. In theſe dayes I will cauſe the ſunne to goe downe at noone, and I will darken the earth in the cleare day, Ferus. Two reaſons are yeelded of the darkneſſe, the ſuppreſſing of the light of the ſunne, the privative cauſe, and the bringing of darkneſſe upon the aire, the poſitive cauſe.

Quest. XIV. How it is ſaid the darkneſſe was felt.

Verſ.21. Even darkneſſe that may be felt. 1. The Chalde expoundeth the word maſhaſh for receſſit, the darkneſſe of the night departed, that is, the darkneſſe of the night was obſcured by this darkneſſe: but the word properly ſignifieth to feele, as *Gen.*27.12. and ſo the Septuagint and Latine doe here read: Pagnin. Montan. Vatabl. with the reſt. 2. Philo taketh this to be ſpoken in reſpect of the effect: becauſe it was ſo darke that they were faine to goe feeling up and downe: but ſeeing they ſtirred not out of their places, it ſeemeth that little feeling ſerved their turne. 3. Others thinke that it is an hyperbole, onely to ſhew the greatneſſe of the darkneſſe, Pellican. But where the words admit a plaine ſenſe of themſelves, wee need not runne unto figures. 4. Some thinke they were therefore called palpable, not in reſpect of the darkneſſe, which is properly the object of the ſight, not of the feeling, and ſo cannot be felt, but of the aire the ſubject of the darkneſſe, which was thickned with groſſe miſts and vapours, ſo that they might be felt, Perer. And it was ſo thicke, that it hindred the light of the fire, and of other artificiall lights, Iunius.

Quest. XV. How the Iſraelites had light in their dwellings.

Verſ.23. But all the children of Iſrael had light where they dwelt. The Hebrewes imagine that the light followed the Iſraelites, whether they went, yea though they pierced into the darkneſſe of the Egyptians, it went with them: but the text will not beare ſo much: They had light in their habitations where they dwelt: but I doubt whether they could carrie it to the habitations of the Egyptians: I preferre rather the opinion of the author of the booke of Wiſdome, *chap.*18.1. who ſaith, that the Egyptians heard the voice of the Iſraelites, but ſaw not their image: but if the Iſraelites had brought light with them where they came, the Egyptians ſhould both have ſeene them, and heard them. 2. But this may truly affirmed, that not onely the land of Goſhen had light, but even theſe particular habitations, where the Iſraelites dwelt, being intermingled with the Egyptians, had this light which was kept from the Egyptians, though dwelling by them, Simler.

Quest. XVI. Whether the Egyptians uſed in the time of this darkneſſe any candle or fire light.

NOw concerning fire and candle light, whether the Egyptians had any helpe or comfort by them while this darkneſſe continued: 1. Neither is Cajetans opinion ſound, that barreth the Egyptians onely of the light of the ſunne, and ſtars, and alloweth them candle and fire light: for beſide that, this is contrarie to the text, that in affirming, that there was light to the Iſraelites, denieth all light to the Egyptians: by this meanes, this plague of darkneſſe, which was of all the moſt grievous, ſhould have been no great burden unto them, if they could have helped themſelves with other lights. 2. Some thinke that the fire of the Egyptians was put out, and extinguiſhed with ſome tempeſt that came with the darkneſſe, Thoſtatus. Which opinion the Septuagint favour, adding that there was darkneſſe and θύελλα, tempeſt: but there being no ſuch thing here ſpoken of, it is but their imagination: and beſide it is unlike, for the tempeſt and wind would have helped to diſperſe the thicke miſts which darkened the aire, and to have attenuated it. 3. Wherefore it is moſt like that the aire was ſo thicke, and the darkneſſe cauſed thereby ſo great, that the light of fire and candle could not pierce it: ſo Philo and Paulus Burgenſ. Iun. Hereunto alſo agreeth that collection, *Wiſdom.*17.5. No power of fire might give light.

Quest.

Quest. XVII. How it is ſaid no man roſe vp from his place.

Vers. 23. NO man ſaw another, neither roſe from the place. 1. Not that the thickneſſe of the aire was ſuch, that it hindered their going, or moving, as Paul. Burgenſ. For if the aire had beene ſo thicke, it would rather have hindered their breathing, than their moving. 2. Nor yet is it the meaning, that they did not move themſelves by the benefit of any celeſtiall or externall lights, but by the meanes of ſuch lights, as they uſed in their houſes: for the Scripture abſolutely ſaith, that they did not riſe up from their place, that is, at all. 3. Some thinke the meaning to be this, that they did not goe out of their houſes, their labour abroad, and all other kind of buſineſſes ceaſed, and were intermitted, becauſe of the want of light: but yet they might ſtirre up and downe in their houſes, Simler. But ſeeing the text ſaith, that they ſaw not one another, if they were deprived of all ſight, it is very like that they had no liſt to move or ſtir up and downe. 4. Wherefore it is more probable, that the Egyptians did not move out of the place where they ſate, (the word is mittachtan from that which is under them) but as it is in the booke of Wiſdome, They were all bound with one chaine of darkneſſe, chap. 17. 17. And in the ſame place two reaſons are given thereof, Sometimes they were troubled with monſtrous viſions, and ſometime they ſwooned, verſ. 14. That is, either they were afraid to move from their place, becauſe of the monſtrous viſions and ſhapes which they feared to ſee, even in the darke, or their owne perplexed conſcience made them afraid. And ſo as Philo ſaith, Per ſilentium fame cruciabantur: they in ſilence were pinched with famine three dayes together: one not being able to helpe another: But they ſate ſtill mourning and complaining without comfort, Sic Iun. Thoſtatus. Perer.

Quest. XVIII. When Pharaoh ſent for Moſes, whether after the darkneſſe was removed or afore.

Vers. 24. THen Pharaoh called for Moſes. Here the doubt is, how Pharaoh could ſend for Moſes, there being ſuch a great darkneſſe that none moved from his place. 1. This doubt were eaſily removed, if Cajetans conceit be admitted, that they had the uſe of fire and candle light: but that is refuted before. 2. Some thinke, that they moved and ſtirred not to any ordinarie buſineſſe, but upon ſuch neceſſarie occaſion they might ſtirre, Simler. But this were to limit and reſtraine the Scripture, where no reſtraint is, which ſaith, that none (that is, upon what occaſion ſoever) moved from his place: and if Moſes had come to Pharaoh, while this darkneſſe continued, he had alſo brought light with him. But Pharaoh and all the reſt ſaw no light for three dayes. 3. Wherefore it is more like, that Moſes was not ſent for to Pharaoh till the three dayes darkneſſe was over; whereof this is ſome probabilitie, becauſe he intreateth not Moſes, as afore, to pray to remove the darkneſſe, which he would not have omitted to do being in ſuch great perplexitie. And he ſendeth for Moſes, though the darkneſſe were over, becauſe he knew that Moſes would not leave him, but he feared that one plague would ſtill follow another, Iun. Perer.

Quest. XIX. Of the greatneſſe of this puniſhment of three dayes darkneſſe.

THis plague of darkneſſe then was a moſt grievous puniſhment to the Egyptians. Cicero maketh mention of a great darkneſſe for two dayes in Sicilia, about the hill Ætna, by reaſon of the breaking out of the flames thereof, ſo that one could not ſee another: lib. 2. de natur. deor. But this farre exceeded. 1. They were bound with this darkneſſe, as with a chaine every man to his place, the husband man, the ſhepheard, the artificer, or whereſoever any was either in the field or in the houſe, ſo they continued, as it is noted, Wiſd. 17. 2. They had no uſe either of ſunne light or fire light to ſolace and comfort themſelves with. 3. They were pinched and pined with famine, not being one able to helpe another. 4. They were terrified with monſtrous ſhapes and viſions, which might appeare unto them in the midſt of the darkneſſe: for Satan was not behind to play his part with them, being under his Kingdome of darkneſſe both of bodie and mind. 5. They were perplexed in conſcience, and were readie to feare upon every occaſion. 6. This darkneſſe did ſhew the ſpirituall darkneſſe of their ſoules, and was a forerunner of the everlaſting darkneſſe of hell which waited for them: Ferus.

Of the myſticall application of the Egyptian darkneſſe.

For the myſticall application of this Egyptian darkneſſe: 1. Origen doth expound it of the unſearchable and impenetrable depth of the divine providence. Auguſtine doth accommodate and applie it to the tenth Commandement, Thou ſhalt not covet thy neighbours wife: for ſuch (he ſaith) are palpably blinded even as the Egyptians were. 2. But more fitly doth the ſame Origen applie it, to ſignifie the blindneſſe of the Egyptians, and the darkneſſe of their ſuperſtitious minde that were ignorant of the true knowledge and worſhip of God, giving themſelves to moſt filthie Idolatrie: and it betokeneth alſo the darkneſſe wherein the Gentiles were buried, before they were called to the knowledge of the Meſſias: all the world was then in darkneſſe, onely in Iſrael was light and the knowledge of God. But contrarie, in the paſſion of Chriſt it was darke among the Jewes and light elſewhere, which ſignified that light was ſprung up to the Gentiles, and blindneſſe fallen upon the Jewes.

4. Places of doctrine.

1. Doct. The law is to be preached to the obſtinate.

If thou refuſe to let them goe, behold to morrow I will bring Locuſts. Moſes to Pharaoh being an obſtinate and impenitent man, preacheth nothing but the law and judgement: the Goſpell is not here preached to ſuch, but onely to the broken hearted: as Chriſt ſaith, That the ſpirit of God was *upon him to preach the Goſpell to the poore, Luk.*4. 18. This was a ſigne betweene the true Prophets and falſe: that theſe alwayes cried to the people peace peace, but the other told the people of their ſinnes, Ferus.

upon

2. Doct. The difference betweene the children of God and the children of the world.

Verſ. 23. All the children of Iſrael had light where they dwelt. In this difference betweene the children of Iſrael and the Egyptians, is ſhadowed forth the divers eſtate, betweene the children of God and the children of this world: the one are lightned with the knowledge of grace, the other ſit downe in the region of darkneſſe and ſhadow of death, as the Apoſtle ſaith, Yee are all the children of the light, and the children of the day, we are not of the night nor of darkneſſe, 1 *Theſſ.*5. 5. Borrh.

5. Places of confutation.

1. Conf. That children are the members of the Church, againſt the Anabaptiſts.

Verſ. 9. We will goe with our young and with our old, with our ſonnes and with our daughters. Both young and old belonged unto Iſrael and to the Church of God: which maketh againſt the Anabaptiſts that count infants no members of the Church, and therefore denie them to be baptiſed. But the Pſalmiſt exhorteth not onely the ancient to praiſe God, but the young alſo: Young men and maidens, old men and children, Pſalm. 48. 12. Ferus.

2. Conf. Ignorance and darkneſſe not to be found in the Church of Chriſt, but among the Egyptians.

Verſ. 23. But all the children of Iſrael had light where they dwelt. This externall light betokeneth the ſpirituall light of knowledge, that the true Iſrael hath the light and knowledge of God. It hath beene held as a principle among the Romaniſts, and their practice ſheweth them to bee of the ſame mind ſtill, that ignorance is the mother of devotion. And great hath beene the ignorance and darkneſſe which reigned many yeeres under the Kingdome of Antichriſt: Borrh. And out of the darke ſmoke of the bottomleſſe pit, this miſtie darkneſſe, have come forth all thoſe ſwarmes of Locuſts, Monkes, Friers, Maſſe-Prieſts, Seminaries, whoſe endevour is to ſow error among the people, and to ſettle them in ignorance of the truth; to which purpoſe they forbid the Scriptures to be read, or prayers to be ſaid but in the Latin tongue; they permit them not to read any books, which may inſtruct them in the truth; to ſing Pſalmes, to conferre or reaſon of their faith: All this ſheweth that they would ſtill keepe them in the Egyptian darkneſſe. But thanks be unto God, that hath cauſed the light of the Goſpell of his Sonne to ſhine upon his Iſrael in this land: that now that propheſie may be verified againe of this land which is alſo by the way of the Sea; The people that ſate in darkneſſe have ſeene great light, and to them that ſate in the region and ſhadow of death light is raiſed up, Matth. 4. 15, 16.

6. Places of morall uſe.

1. Mor. Of the neceſſity of good education.

Verſ. 3. That thou mayſt declare in the eares of thy ſonne. Hence appeareth the neceſſitie of the good education of children, that they ſhould be inſtructed in the feare of the Lord in their youth: and ſo will they not forget it when they are old, Ferus. This is the Apoſtles counſell, that the fathers ſhould bring up their children in the inſtruction and information of the Lord, *Epheſ.*6. 3. The want of good inſtruction in the youth is the cauſe of the licentiouſneſſe and unthriftineſſe of the young men of this age.

2. Mor. The departure of the Miniſters of God dangerous.

Verſ. 6. So he turned him and went out from Pharaoh. This ſudden departure of Moſes from Pharaoh and with indignation, did foreſhew the fearefull condition of Pharaoh, whom the Miniſters and Prophets of God forſake. It was an evident argument of deſtruction at hand. So their caſe is hard that are left deſtitute of the Miniſters of Gods word. Worldly men conſider not this, nay, they many times wiſh in their hearts that there were not a Miniſter to ſpeake unto them. But like as the Jewes ſtate was deſperate when the Apoſtles left them, and ſhooke off the duſt of their feet againſt them, Act. 13. 51. ſo it goeth with thoſe that are deprived of the preſence of Gods Miniſters, Ferus.

3. Mor. The office and part of good counſellers.

Verſ. 7. Then Pharaohs ſervants ſaid unto him. It is the part of good counſellers to perſwade Kings and Princes to deale well with the ſervants of God, and to move them to the good of the Church and common-wealth: Piſcator. Not to flatter the Prince, to make themſelves great, or to deale unfaithfully, and onely to ſeeke themſelves: as Shebna did, *Iſai.*22. but to be like the faithfull Eliakim, and as Ebedmelech that obtained favour for Ieremie.

4. Mor. Not one jot of Gods word to be omitted.

Verſ. 26. There ſhall not be an hoofe left. In thoſe things which God hath preſcribed and commanded, the leaſt thing is to be omitted. Moſes was charged to make all things belonging to the Tabernacle even to the ſnuffers and aſhpans, according to the paterne which the Lord ſhewed him in the mount, *Exod.*25. 9. Simler. So not one jot of the word of God muſt be left undone: but it muſt be kept exactly to an haires breadth, as wee ſay.

CHA

CHAP. XI.

1. The method and Argument.

IN this Chapter, there is a continuation of the narration of Moses laſt appearing before Pharaoh, to verſ.9. then a concluſion of the whole hiſtorie of theſe plagues.

1. In the continuation, there is ſet forth, firſt the Lords ſpeech with Moſes, both revealing unto him that one plague was behind, verſ.1. and repeating the firſt promiſe of inriching the Iſraelites by the Egyptians, verſ.2. where Moſes inſerteth the reaſon why this ſhould bee effected, becauſe both the people in generall, and Moſes ſpecially ſhould bee gratious, in the ſight of Pharaoh and his people, verſ.3. And all this the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, before his laſt entrance to Pharaoh, for after that hee ſaw not his face. Then followeth the ſpeech that Moſes had with Pharaoh, verſ.4. to verſ.9. where Moſes in the name of God foretelleth, firſt, the laſt plague of the death of the firſt borne: expreſſing the time, about midnight, and of whom the deſtruction ſhall bee, of all the firſt borne of men from the higheſt to the loweſt, and of beaſts; and by whom, The Lord ſhall goe out, &c. verſ.4.5. Secondly, the events are three, firſt the lamentation and ſorrow of the Egyptians, verſ.6. then the privilege and immunitie of the Iſraelites, verſ.7. and the entreatie and ſupplication of the Egyptians to Moſes, to be gone with his people, verſ.8.

2. In the concluſion of this hiſtorie there is firſt a repetition of that which God foretold Moſes, that Pharaoh would not heare him; with the end thereof, that Gods wonders might bee multiplied in Egypt, verſ.9. then the declaration of Moſes obedience, verſ.10. and of the event, that Pharaohs heart was hardened, as the Lord had ſaid; and of the effects and fruits thereof, the not letting of the people goe, verſ.10.

2. The divers readings.

Verſ.1. When he ſendeth you away, he will at once ſpeedily drive you hence. I. altogether drive you hence. C.S.V. or, at once drive you hence. G But this expreſſeth not the emphaſis of the Hebrew phraſe, in driving drive you out; that is, ſpeedily: when he ſhall let you go quite, he ſhall utterly drive you hence. B. but the word Calah, altogether, belongeth to the latter clauſe, as may appeare by the diſtinction.

Verſ.2. That every man require of his companion. A. P. or, neighbour. L. S. V. B. G. rather than, friend, the word reah, ſignifieth both: but becauſe the Egyptians were neighbours rather than friends: and another word is uſed, chap. 3. 22. ſhechenath, which ſignifieth a neighbour or neere dweller, I preferre the firſt. A. P.

Verſ.3. Alſo the man Moſes was very great. A. P. C. S. V. I. better than, Moſes was a very great man. B. for the word iſh, man, is ſet before Moſes; or, alſo Moſes was very great. G. for here man is altogether omitted. A. P. I. cum cater.

Verſ.5. From the firſt borne of Pharaoh, that ſhould ſit upon his throne. I. C. rather than, which ſitteth upon his throne: cater. for he was the heire onely of the Kingdome, he did not yet ſit upon the throne, Pharaoh being living: the word is ioſheb, ſitting, a participle of the preſent tenſe, which hath alſo the ſignification of the future: as *Gen.*19. 14. Lot ſpake to his ſonnes in law, which were marrying his daughters, that is, were to marie them.

3. The explanation of difficult queſtions.

QUEST. I. When the Lord ſpake theſe words to Moſes.

Verſ.1. NOw the Lord had ſaid to Moſes, yet will I bring, &c. 1. Some referre this to the firſt viſion, which Moſes ſaw in the buſh, but that cannot be; for when the Lord thus ſpake to Moſes, the plagues were paſt, and there was but one to come. 2. Neither did the Lord thus ſpeake to Moſes, after he was come out from Pharaoh: for after that he ſaw Pharaohs face no more, *chap.*10.29. and yet here, verſ.8. it is ſaid he went from Pharaoh very angry. 3. Therefore the meſſage, which Moſes delivereth in this Chapter to Pharaoh concerning the deſtruction of the firſt borne, was done at his laſt appearing before Pharaoh, when he ſent for him after the darkneſſe; and immediatly before his going to Pharaoh, the Lord thus ſaid to Moſes. Iunius.

QUEST. II. Why the overthrow of Pharaoh in the red ſea was counted none of the plagues.

I will bring one plague more, &c. 1. Thus the Lord doth all things in number, weight, and meaſure; the Lord ſendeth tenne plagues upon Egypt, not fewer, becauſe he would ſhew his power; nor more, for they were ſufficient: Ferus. 2. Beſide, this laſt plague of the firſt borne, there followed the overthrow of Pharaoh and his hoſt in the red ſea: but this is counted none of the plagues of Egypt, becauſe it was after the Iſraelites were gone out of Egypt, Simler. As alſo theſe plagues were not a finall deſtruction of the Egyptians, as the other was, but probations, and temptations, Pellican.

Of

Of the tenth plague.

Quest. III. Whether God used the ministry of good or bad Angels in the slaughter of the first borne.

The tenth plague.

Vers. 4. About midnight will I goe out into the middest of Egypt. That God was the author of this plague in the slaughter of the first borne, it is no question: but the doubt is whether the Angels good or bad were the Lords ministers in it. 1. In this life it is certaine that God sometime useth the good Angels to punish the wicked, as in the destruction of Sodome; and the evill Angels some time to chastise his owne children, as Satan tempted and afflicted Iob. 2. In the next world, who shall be the ministers of the torments in hell it is not so certaine. Pererius thinketh that the evill Angels shall be the executioners of those torments: because of that text: goe into everlasting fire which is prepared for the devill and his Angels. But the contrarie rather may bee inferred out of this text, that because the Devill and his Angels also are ordained for torment; it seemeth that he shall not be a tormenter of others, who is to be tormented himselfe. Therefore it is rather to be thought, that seeing the chiefe use of the ministrie of Angels is for the benefit and comfort of the elect in this world, till they be gathered together in the Kingdome of God, Heb. 1. 14. that in the next world there shall not be such imployment of the ministring spirits, especially of the reprobate Angels. And how the torments of hell shall be continued, the Prophet Isa. sheweth: Tophet is prepared of old, &c. the burning thereof is fire and much wood: the breath of the Lord like a river of brimstone doth kindle it, chap. 30. 33. The Lord of himselfe by his owne power, in shewing the severitie of his justice shall hold the wicked in everlasting torment. 3. But concerning this judgement in smiting the first borne: some thinke that the evill Angels were used in this service; Thostatus, Lyran. Because it is said, Psalm. 78. 49. Hee cast upon them the fiercenesse of his wrath, by sending evill Angels. But this place is answered before, quest. 30. in chap. 7. that either it may be understood of Moses and Aaron, who were Gods messengers, for so Angell signifieth; or else they are called Angels of evill i. of pœnal, not morall evill, rather than evill Angels. And though they would seeme to gather by those words, chap. 12. 23. The Lord will not suffer the destroyer to come into your houses, that this Angell of himselfe had a desire to invade the people of God, and therefore was not a good Angell: yet that followeth not, but the words rather shew thus much, that the Angell being sent forth by the Lord, was to doe all things according to his direction, to strike where God bid him strike, and to forbeare where the Lord purposed to spare. 4. Wherefore as the good Angels were the ministers of the former plagues, as is shewed before, quest. 30. in chap. 7. so they are to be held to be the Lords instrument in this, Perer.

What Angels shal be the ministers of hell torments.

Quest. IV. Whether one Angell or many were used in this destruction.

And for the number of these destroying Angels: 1. Though it be said in the singular number, chap. 12. 23. the destroyer, yet it followeth not, that one Angell should be the minister: for it is usuall in Scripture, to put the singular for the plurall. 2. Therefore it is more probable, that many Angels were imployed in this service, not in respect of the multitude that were slaine, for in the host of Senacherib one Angell slew 180. thousand: nor of the distance of place, for one Angell in Davids time smote 70000 in three dayes space from Dan to Beersheba: but in regard of the time, because all the first borne of Egypt were slaine at midnight, about the same time, it is like that many Angels in divers places of Egypt were sent of God to strike the first borne: Perer. Cajetan.

Quest. V. Upon whom this plague in the smiting of the first borne was executed.

Vers. 5. All the first borne in the land of Egypt shall die. All the first borne of every house, as the chiefe and principall were smitten with death: even from the Kings throne unto the sonne of the poore servant, that ground at the mill, which they used in the day to doe such servile works, and in the night time kept them in hold: and therefore it is said, chap. 12. 29. unto the first borne of the captive, that was in prison. So Samson did grind at the mill being in prison, Iudg. 16. 2. Beside, all the first borne of their beasts were slaine, that is of their domesticall cattell: for wilde beasts must be here excepted, which were not in their power, and such cattell as bring forth many at once, where there is no difference betweene the firstlings and the rest: Perer. 3. The third effect of this plague was, that God did execute his judgements upon the gods and Idols of Egypt, chap. 12. 12.

Quest. VI. Whether in every house the first borne were slaine.

But here this doubt ariseth concerning the first borne, because it is said afterward, chap. 12. 30. that there was no house wherein there was not one dead: whether in every house there were a first borne? 1. Ab. Ezra thinketh all to be understood for the greater part. 2. Simler. for the houses of every sort both of high and low, as the King and captive are named. 3. Hugo S. Victor, doth thus interpret it, that in every house, where was any first borne, there was one slaine. But it seemeth, that no house at all was excepted, because all the Israelites were commanded to strike the bloud upon the posts of their doores, to escape the plague. 4. Therefore Augustine thinketh that God so disposed at this time by his divine providence, that every house of the Egyptians had one first borne, quest. 44. in Exod. But we need not runne unto miracles, where another exposition may be found. 5. Thostatus thinketh that the first borne is to be taken, for the first borne of the feminine sex, as well as of the males, whether their parents were alive or dead, whether they were the first borne by the husband or wife. But the name of first borne is not ken in ſcripture ; neither yet is it like that any females died, but males, as it may appeare by the law of the firſt borne, that are made holy unto God, upon this occaſion, becauſe the Lord for Iſraels ſake killed the firſt borne of Egypt, there onely the males that firſt open the wombe are ſet apart, chap. 13. 12. Therefore of all the reſt I preferre the expoſition of Iunius, that in every houſe, either the firſt, or if there were no firſt borne, the next principall man was taken in ſtead of the firſt borne : ſo alſo Cajetane.

Quest. VII. Why the Lord deſtroyeth the firſt borne.

Now the firſt borne were ſlaine : 1. Becauſe they oppreſſed Iſrael, whom the Lord calleth his firſt borne, Exod. 4. Theodoret. 2. Rather becauſe they put to death the firſt borne children of Iſrael, yea males, therefore the Lord doth worthily puniſh them in their firſt borne : Ferus. 3. And this plague remained for them, more grievous than all the reſt, (for what can come neerer a man, than the death of firſt borne, which alſo may bee his onely borne ; as Abraham could not have a greater triall, than when he was commanded to ſacrifice his onely ſonne Iſaack) that the Egyptians ſhould be forced by this moſt greateſt plague to let Iſrael goe : Perer. 4. Neither was this unjuſt in God, to take away the life of them, who are not innocent before God, and the Lord that gave them life may take it away, if it more tend to his glory. And the parents alſo that had ſinned, were puniſhed herein by the death of their firſt children, being themſelves reſerved for a greater deſtruction, Simler.

Quest. VIII. Why the firſt borne of the cattell alſo are deſtroyed.

The Egyptians cattell alſo are killed : 1. becauſe this loſſe alſo was a puniſhment unto the Egyptians, for whoſe uſe they ſerved : Simler. 2. And much of their ſubſtance alſo conſiſted in cattell : Perer. Thus both they loſt part of their ſubſtance, and wanted the uſe of them. 3. Beſide, the Egyptians oppreſſed the Iſraelites, and wronged them in their cattell : Ferus. 4. The Hebrewes alſo thinke this was a ſpeciall cauſe for that the Egyptians did ſuperſtitiouſly adore divers kinds of cattell, and therefore for confutation of their Idolatrie the cattell are puniſhed.

Quest. IX. How the Gods of the Egyptians were judged.

Now what gods of Egypt were judged is diverſly ſcanned : 1. Some thinke that by gods the Magiſtrates and Judges are underſtood : Oſiander. But this was ſaid before, that the firſt borne ſhould be ſlaine, even from the Princes throne ; this was a puniſhment to Pharaoh and all his great men to have their firſt borne cut off. 2. Some thinke that the Egyptian gods were judged, in that their worſhippers were puniſhed : Beroh. 3. Others, that the Temples of the Idols were caſt downe : Hierom : and their Idols throwne downe : and beaten to duſt, as the Hebrewes. 4. Some, that herein they were judged, that is, declared to bee vaine, becauſe they were not able to defend their worſhippers : Iun. 5. And becauſe the Egyptians worſhipped certaine beaſts above the reſt, as Apis or Serapis, which was a pide Oxe : that kinde was ſpecially puniſhed : Perer. As the laſt ſenſe but one is very agreeable, ſo I thinke, that beſide ſome viſible accident befell the Egyptian gods and Idols, as there did unto Dagon the Philiſtims Idoll, in the preſence of the Arke.

Quest. X. How the Iſraelites eſcaped this deſtruction of the firſt borne.

Now the Iſraelites though they were intermingled with the Hebrewes, were exempt and freed from this judgement after this manner : 1. They were commanded to ſtrike off the bloud of the Lambe upon the two ſide poſts, whereupon the doore hanged, and upon the upper doore poſt : becauſe in this it was more conſpicuous and in ſight : and in the other rather than upon the doore, which was moueable, and ſometime open and ſometime ſhut. 2. This bloud was a ſigne not ſo much for the Angell, to paſſe by their houſes, for the Angell could have told in whoſe houſes the paſchall Lambe was killed, without ſeeing of the bloud : but it was a ſigne to the Hebrewes, both preſently to confirme them in the hope of their deliverance, and to be a type and figure of the bloud of the Meſſiah, the onely unſpotted Lambe, whoſe bloud ſprinkled, on the poſts of our hearts by faith, wee are ſaved from everlaſting deſtruction. Now whereas ſome of the Iſraelites were ſo poore and few, that they were not ſufficient for the eating of a Lambe, they joyned themſelves to other families, and returned not unto their owne houſes that night, but their houſes where no Lambe was killed, were not ſprinkled, and marked with bloud, they ſtood emptie that night : and ſuch Hebrewes as ſojourned in the Egyptians houſes, left their houſes, and went into houſes of the Hebrewes : for it is not like, that the Egyptians would have ſuffered any Hebrew to keep a Lambe in their houſes, which thing they counted an abomination, Perer.

Quest. XI. The myſticall application of this laſt plague upon the firſt borne.

For the myſticall application of this laſt plague : 1. Origen by the firſt borne of the Egyptians that are ſlaine, underſtandeth the devill and his angels, the principalities of this world, whom Chriſt ſubdued at his comming, likewiſe Heretikes and inventers of ſtrange doctrines, which are overcome by the truth. Theophilus maketh a reſemblance betweene this tenth plague, and the tenth Commandement. For as much as men covet their neighbours goods, doe deſire them to inrich their heires and poſteritie : ſo the Lord puniſh their covetouſneſſe and oppreſſion in their heires and firſt borne. 3. Rupertus by the firſt borne of Egypt, underſtandeth the originall ſinne of the world, which is taken away by the death and paſſion of Chriſt. 4. But leaving mens uncertaine and inconſtant fanſies, which are as divers, as the heads where they are hatched ; the Scripture thus applieth this ſigne of the Paſſeover : that we are by the ſprinkling of the bloud of Christ delivered from eternall death, as the Israelites were by the bloud of the Lambe fro a temporall: and that as onely those houses were exempted that were marked with the bloud of t Lambe, so onely in the Church is salvation to be found, where the bloud of Christ is apprehended faith: Simler.

Quest. XII. Of the generall application of these tenne plagues.

NOw for the generall application of all these tenne plagues of the Egyptians. 1. We have seene fore how Augustine forceth a kind of resemblance and comparison betweene the tenne plagues Egypt, and the tenne transgressions of the tenne Commandements: as the turning of the water into bl he would have to signifie the corrupting of the true worship of God, with the inventions of flesh bloud; by the frogges, the blasphemies of the heathen against the name of God: the plague of the signifie such as have a gnawing, and restlesse conscience, as the Sabbath betokeneth the rest of the min And so in the rest. But by these we may judge, that these allegories are but the superfluitie of mens and as every mans conceit is, so he findeth an allegorie. 2. Yet Ferus application is more apt, who these ten plagues, setteth forth the ten torments and paines of hell. 1. There water shall bee turned bloud, all things shall bee turned to the destruction of the ungodly. 2. Their frogges are horror of co science. 3. Their lice a restlesse and unquiet minde. 4. By the flies is signified, that they shall be destitu of all helpe. 5. By the murrane of beasts, the perpetuall punishment of their bodies. 6. By the boiles anguish of minde. 7. By the haile, continuall terror. 8. By the Locusts the want of every good thing. 9. the darkenesse, their depriving of the favour of God. 10. And everlasting death, by the death of the borne. But neither is this allegoricall application simply to be approved: for how can any man number plagues of hell which are endlesse, infinit, and without number? and to make the comparison hold, he constrained to inculcate the same thing twice or thrice. 3. Wherefore somewhat to content them wh delight in such curious applications: these ten plagues which the Egyptians indured, may seeme to decipher those ten mercies, & principall benefits, which God vouchsafed unto the Israelites being delivered out Egypt. 1. As one had water turned into bloud, so the other was blessed in their water: they received out of the rock; and whereas it was bitter it became sweet, Exod. 17. 2. As they had their rivers fields crawling full of frogges, so the other saw the red Sea full of the Egyptians bodies floting in the wa ter, and rose up upon the land. 3. Their dust was turned into lice: and the Israelites had Manna, that in stead of dust upon the ground. 4. They had swarmes of noysome flies, and serpents: the other we healed from the biting of serpents. 5. And as the Egyptians lost their cattell by the murrane: so the othe were increased and inriched with the cattell of their enemies: as from the Midianites onely they took 675000. sheepe, 72000. beeves, 61000. asses, Numb. 31, 32, 33, 34. 6. In stead of the Egyptians sore and botches, their feet swelled not in all their journey. 7. They were terrified with lightning and thun der, the other received the law in thunder and lightning in mount Sinai. 8. For the Egyptians Locu the Israelites had quailes. 9. In stead of darkenesse, they had a piller of fire to guide them in the night Gods glorious presence in the Tabernacle. 10. And as they were punished with the death of their borne: so the first borne of Israel are made holy and consecrate unto God, Exod. 13.

The tenne plagues of Egypt compared with the tenne benefits which the Israelites received in the wilderneſſe.

Vers. 10. The Lord hardned Pharaohs heart. For the evident and full discussing of this question h the Lord is said to harden mans heart, divers profitable questions come now in order to be handled: seeing the Lord is here divers times said to harden Pharaohs heart: as chap. 4. 21. chap. 7. 3. chap. 9. chap. 10. vers. 10. and 20. and 27. chap. 11. 10. chap. 14. vers. 14. and 8. even nine times in all, it seeme that Moses of purpose useth this significant phrase, and doth inculcate it often that we should well wei and consider it.

Quest. XIII. What the hardnesse of heart is.

FIrst, then it is requisite to be knowne, what this hardnesse of heart is. 1. It may first be described gatively, by the unaptnesse of an hard heart to any thing that is good, it is neither passive, active prehensive of any good thing: not the first, nec movetur precibus, nec cedit minis: It is neither mo prayers, nor giveth way to threats, as Bernard saith. For the next, he saith it is ingratum ad beneficia, ad filia infidum, it is unthankfull for benefits, unfaithfull in counsell, unshamefast in evill things, &c. There activitie in it to any goodnesse. And for the third; praeter solas injurias nihil non praterit, it remembreth thing that is past, but wrongs, nor hath any forecast for the time to come, unlesse it be to seeke revenge. may be described also by the perpetuall companion thereof, the blindnesse of the mind: for as ignor blindeth the understanding, so hardnesse of heart blindeth the will and affection. As the Apostle saith, king of the Gentiles having their cogitation darkned through the ignorance that is in them because of hardnesse of their heart, Ephes. 4. 18. Both these concurred in Pharaoh, he shewed his blindnesse, in say I know not Iehovah; his hardnesse of heart, in adding, Neither will I let Israel goe, Exod. 5. 2.

Bernard lib. 1. de considerat.

3. The propertie of hardnesse of heart is this, that it is not onely a great and grievous sinne, but the punishment of sinne: that it is a sinne, the Apostle sheweth, Heb. 3. 12. Take heed brethren lest be at any time in any of you an evil heart to depart from the living God. And that it is a punishment of sin Paul also testifieth, Rom. 1. 21. Because when they knew God, they did not glorifie him as God, &c. T followeth, vers. 24. God gave them up to their owne hearts lusts, &c. 4. Now the qualities and parable adjuncts of hardnesse of heart are these. 1. Blindnesse of the judgement and understanding, 6. 10. Make the heart of this people fat, make their eares heavie, and shut their eyes, lest they see with eyes, heare with their eares, and understand with their hearts. 2. They are obstinate and wilfull, and be admonished and instructed: Who say unto God, depart from us, we desire not the knowledge of thy wayes, Iob 21.14. 3. Such are rejected and cast out of the presence of God, and left unto themselves: such an one was Saul, of whom it is said, That the spirit of the Lord departed from Saul, and an evill spirit from the Lord troubled him, 1. Sam. 16.14. 4. They delight in doing of evill and make a sport of sinne. Prov. 2.14. Which rejoyce in doing of evill and delight in the frowardnesse of the wicked. 5. They regard not to doe things indeed in the sight of men, but contemne and despise all others: Prov. 18. 3. When the wicked commeth, then commeth contempt. 6. They are incorrigible, and past all hope of amendment: Prov. 1.30. They would none of my counsell, but despised all my correction. 7. They are not ashamed of most vile sinnes, Jerem. 3.3. Thou hadst a whores forehead, thou wouldest not be ashamed. 8. When the Lord smiteth them they feele it not, neither feare they any sense of Gods judgements, whom the wise man compareth to those that sleepe in the midst of a ship, and as drunken men that are stricken but know it not, Prov. 23.34, 35. 9. They are growne to such an evill custome of sinning, that they can doe none other, as the Prophet saith, can the Aethiop change his skinne, or the Leopard his spots? then may yee also doe good that are accustomed to doe evill. Jerem. 13.23. 10. So that the sinnes of such seeme to be inexpiable and indeleble, as the same Prophet saith, that the sinne of Iudah were written with a penne of iron, and with the point of a Diamond, chap. 17.1. They wax daily worse and worse: of whom it is said, Revel. 22.11. He that is filthy let him be filthy still. 12. And as they increase in sinne, so they doe treasure up Gods judgements against themselves, and heape unto themselves wrath against the day of wrath, Rom. 2.5.

Quest. XIV. Whether God be the efficient and working cause of hardnesse of heart.

Now in the next place, concerning the efficient cause of the hardnesse of heart. 1. That it cannot be imputed to God, as the worker and Author thereof, it may appeare by these reasons. First, the hardnesse of the heart is a great sinne, as is proved in the former question; but God is no wayes the Author of sinne, seeing he neither tempteth or perswadeth unto it, for God tempteth no man, Iam. 1.13. neither hath he commanded it, but hath forbidden it by his Law: nor yet worketh with them that doe evill: for all goodnesse is of God, and so there is none good but God, Mark. 10.19. Neither doth the Lord approve any thing done, Psal. 5.4. Thou art not a God that lovest wickednesse. If then God neither move to sinne, nor commends it, nor yet assisteth the committers of it, or approveth it, he is no way the Author of sinne. Secondly, if God causeth sinne, then every man should sinne of necessity, and so his punishment should bee unjust, being forced to sinne. But as Augustine saith, Deus nemini per hoc quod falli non potest, aut necessitatem aut voluntatem imulit delinquendi: God by this, that he cannot be deceived, hath not brought upon any either a necessity or willingnesse of sinning. Thirdly, Augustine useth another excellent reason: Fieri non potest ut per quem à peccatis surgitur, per eum in peccata decidatur: It cannot be, that by whom men rise from sinne, by him they should fall into sinne. Fourthly, Plato thus reasoneth, Deus qui bonus est, malorum causa dici non potest. Or, God that is good, cannot be said to be the cause of evill, for then hee should be contrary to himselfe. Lastly, if God any way should be the Author of sinne, then it should be no sinne, for whatsoever God doth is good: Nay, not to doe that which the Lord willeth should be sinne: Peter. 2. Yet seeing God is in Scripture to harden the heart, which betokeneth an action: and likewise in other termes God is said to give some over to vile affections, Rom. 1.26. and to send upon some strange delusions that they should not beleeve the truth, 2. Thess. 2.11. and to make the heart fat, the eares heavy, and to shut the eyes, Esay 6.10. all which phrases doe imply an action and operation: it is evident that God some wayes concurreth, either directly or indirectly, negatively or positively, by way of working, or giving occasion in the hardning of the heart.

August. lib. cont. articul. sibi falsò impos.

Quest. XV. God otherwise hardeneth then by way of manifestation.

Not yet God doth more than by way of manifestation harden the heart: as some doe expound it, that the Lord hardned Pharaohs heart (which interpretation Augustine toucheth, qu. 18. in Exod.) that by his plagues and judgements declared how hard it was. 1. For in this sense God might bee said to harden any other sinnes, when he doth manifest them and bring them to light. 2. And though this exposition might serve here, yet it faileth in other places, as Deut. 2. it is said, that God hardned the heart of Sihon King of the Amorites; and Iosh. 10. that God hardned the hearts of the Canaanites; and Rom. 9. that hath mercie on whom he will, and whom hee will hee hardneth. In these places it cannot be so expounded, that God hardned, that is, declared their hearts to be hard.

Quest. XVI. God hardeneth the heart not only by permission.

Some doe expound it by way of permission, because those that are hardned, God depriveth of his grace, and leaveth them to themselves. So Damascen: Ista non ut Deo agente accipienda sunt, sed ut Deo permittente: these sayings, as God shut up all in unbeleefe, and God gave them the spirit of slumber, eyes, that they should not see, are not to be taken, as though God did them but permitted them. So likewise the Glosse in 4. Exod. Indurabo cor Pharaonis, i. indurari permittam: I will harden the heart of Pharaoh, i. suffer it to be hardned. So also Chrysostome, Tradidit in reprobum sensum, nihil aliud est quam Reliquit: He gave them up to a reprobate sense, it is nothing else than that hee permitted it: as a Captaine leaves his souldiers in the midst of the battell, may be said to deliver them into their enemies hands: in like sort Roman. Cajetanus to confirme this interpretation sheweth how sometime in Scripture, that is called an act which is permitted, as when Matthew said, chap. 19.8. Moses for the hardnesse of your heart suffered you to put away your wives: Marke hath, Moses for the hardnesse of your heart wrote this pre- cept unto you: chap. 10. But although this be most true, that God suffereth such to continue in their hardnesse of heart, yet this is not all. 1. For so the Lord suffereth also other sinnes to be done: for there is nothing done in the world, nisi omnipotens fieri velit, vel sinendo ne fiat, vel ipse faciendo; unlesse he omnipotent God will have it done, either by suffering it to be done, or doing it himselfe. Then if this were all, other Lords might be said as well to steale, and such like, because he suffereth them to be done. 2. Wherefore Augustines judgement is rather here to be received: Deum ad indurationem cordis concurrere non modo secundum permissionem vel secundum patientiam, sed etiam secundum actionem & potentiam, non solum permittendo durities ipsius cordis, sed per quem multa fiant, & quibus peccator vitio suo quotidie patitur durities cordis. That the Lord doth concurre in the hardning of the heart, not only by permission, or suffering, but also by his power and action, not by the which immediately the hardnesse of the heart is made, but whereby many things are done, by the which a sinner by his owne corruption doth conceive the hardnesse of heart. 3. And concerning the place alleaged out of Marke, a precept is not there strictly taken for a commandement, but any order or decree that is written.

Damasc. lib. 4. de fide orthodox. cap. 20.

QUEST. XVII. Whether hardnesse of heart be of God as it is a punishment of sinne.

SOme doe hold, because the induration of the heart is two wayes to be considered, as it is a sinne, and punishment of sinne; in the first God hath no part: but as thereby God punisheth former sinnes, so as a just Judge inflicteth hardnesse of heart as a punishment; as the Apostle sheweth, Rom. 2. 28. As they regarded not to know God, so God delivered them up to a reprobate mind. And 2. Thess. 2 11. Because they received not the love of the truth, God shall send them strong delusions that they should beleeve lies. In these places the Apostle sheweth how the Lord punisheth them with blindnesse and hardnesse of heart, because of their former sinnes. This distinction is approved by Augustine, lib. 5. cont. Iulianum. Isidorus includeth the same point: Facit Deus quosdam peccatores, sed in quibus talia jam peccata præcesserunt judicio ejus merentur in deterius ire: Therefore God maketh some sinners, but in whom such sinnes went before, that by the just judgement of God they deserve to become worse and worse. So Cajetane upon these words, 2. Sam. 12. Behold I will raise evill upon thee out of thine owne house, which was verified in Absolon that rose up against his father. thus resolveth, Deus non est author peccati, ut sic, sed ut est pœna peccati. God is not the author of sinne, as it is sinne but as it is the punishment of sinne. The same judgement he giveth of Shemei, whom David saith the Lord bid curse David, that God wrought that Shemei cursed David. Non quatenus erat peccatum, sed quatenus erat pœna peccati Davidis: Not as it was sinne, but as it was punishment of the sinne of David. So Iansenius: Illa Deo tribuuntur non quatenus peccata sunt, sed quatenus pœna peccati: they are ascribed to God, not as they are sinnes, but as they are the punishment of sinne. Isidor. lib. 2. de summ. bon. cap. 19. Ecclesiastic. But Pererius misliking this opinion, thus reasoneth against it. 1. If God be said to be the author of the induration of the heart, as it is a punishment of sinne, then he may aswell be said to be the author of the other sinnes, when as a man falleth into them as a punishment of his former sinnes. Contra. though all such sinnes doe not proceede from the hardnesse of the heart that confirmeth and setteth the sinner in his wickednesse: therefore God is not said to be the cause of these sinnes, but of the hardnesse of heart, which is the cause of those sins: Man by continuing in sin hath his heart hardned by the just judgment of God, and then out of the hardnesse of his owne heart he bringeth forth other sinnes of himself.

2. The hardnesse of heart, as it is a great and horrible sinne, so it is a punishment of former sinnes: God then doe cause it to be a punishment, he also causeth it as it is a sinne.

Contra. In this argument there are ambiguous termes, or, in the first clause, this note of similitude (as) is taken for the being of the thing: hardnesse of heart as it is sinne, so it is a punishment of sinne: that is, could not be a punishment of sinne unlesse it were sinne: this we grant. In the next part, the same word (as) signifieth the manner of being; therefore if the first be taken in the same sense, for one and the same manner of being, wee deny that hardnesse of heart in the same respect, is both sinne and the punishment of sinne. It is both in respect of the subject, and being, but not both in the same quality, affection, or manner of being.

Pererius refuted, that misliketh Augustines distinction: that hardnesse of heart not as sinne, but as a punishment of sinne proceedeth of God.

3. Hee thus proceedeth: All punishments of sinne, because they are just stand with the will of God: hardnesse of heart being a sinne, if it should stand with the will of God, then it would follow, that it should stand with the will of God.

Contr. 1. If sinne no way stand with the will of God, then sinne should not be committed in the world: for against his will can nothing be done. 2. Here then wee must admit a distinction of Gods will, that is his will of approbation, and the will of his providence: by the first he willeth not sinne, but by the second he willeth it to be in the world, because he knoweth how to dispose of sinne even unto good. Origen hath the like distinction: Multa sine voluntate Dei geruntur, nihil sine providentia: providentia est, qua disponit & providet, voluntas qua vult vel non vult aliquid: Many things are done without Gods will, nothing without his providence: providence is that whereby he dispenseth, and provideth; his will, whereby he willeth or nilleth any thing. The master of the sentences saith: Mala fieri bonum est, it is good that evill should be done. because thereby Gods power and goodnesse is seene in turning evill unto good. Thom. 1. quæst. If God then did not see how to turne evill unto a good end, he would not suffer evill to be done in the world. 3. So then retaining the former distinction, still hardnesse of heart as it is a sinne God willeth it not, but as it is a punishment of sinne, it standeth very well with the will and justice of God.

4. And further concerning the former testimonies of their owne Writers: Pererius would have them speake of such sinnes, which are also punishments of sins in divers subjects: as that the doing of it should be a sinne in one, and the suffering a punishment in the other: as the rebellion of Absolon, and in respect of themselves they were sinne, but in regard of Dauid, they were a chastisement upon his sinne, and so they were sent of God. But in other things, where the sinne and punishment are diuerse, as in the hardnesse of heart, that distinction hath no place.

Cont. But Peronius by his leaue cannot fasten upon them a sense contrary to their words: for thus he writeth, as Melchior Canus citeth him: Deus non est author peccati, ut sic, sed quatenus est pœna vel alterius: God is the author of sinne, not as it is sinne, but as it is a punishment in him that sinneth, or in any other. And Canus thereupon collecteth thus: Agnoscit Cajetanus maledictionem Shemei, quatenus sibi procedere a Deo. Cajetane acknowledgeth, that the cursing of Shemei, as it was penall to him, did proceed from God. His meaning then is that even in him that sinneth, hardnesse of heart is a punishment of sinne, and not only in another. Their owne master of sentences also saith, as I cited him before: Concupiscentia in quantum pœna est peccati Deum habet authorem: Concupiscence, as it is a punishment, hath God the author thereof. lib. 2. distinct. 32. But concupiscence is a punishment in him, that hath it, not in another.

Wherefore notwithstanding these contrary objections, because of those places of Scripture alleaged, and the testimonies of other Writers: I approue this distinction as sound, that hardnes of heart, as it is sinne, but as it is inflicted as a punishment of sinne is of God: and in this sense God is said to harden the heart: as Augustine well concludeth, Deus indurabit per justum judicium, Pharaoh per liberum: God did harden Pharaohs heart by his iust iudgement, and Pharaoh by his owne free will: de lib. arb. cap. 23.

Quest. XVIII. How God is said to harden the heart by patience and long suffering.

Another way, whereby God is said to haue hardned Pharaohs heart, is by his patience and long suffering, because the Lord doth suspend his iudgements, and not presently punish the wicked, whereby abusing Gods patience and long suffring are hardned. This exposition they ground upon that of the Apostle, Rom. 2. 4. Despisest thou the riches of his bountifulnesse, and patience, and long suffering, not knowing that the bountifulnesse of God leadeth thee to repentance? But thou after thine hardnesse, and heart that cannot repent, heapest unto thy selfe wrath against the day of wrath. This exposition followeth Origen; Deus indurare corda hominum nisi patienter eos tolerando: that God doth not otherwise harden mens hearts, then by patient forbearing them. And he maketh it a figurative locution, like as a master should say to his seruant, that abuseth his gentlenesse: a lewd seruant, it is I that haue made thee thus, because I did not punish thee otherwise. Basil; Obstinavit Deus Pharaonem per longanimitatem: God made Pharaoh obstinate by his long patience. So also Hierom; Patientia Dei induravit Pharaonem: Gods patience did harden Pharaoh. And he sheweth it by this similitude; as the same Sun hardneth the clay, and mollifieth the wax: Ita & Deus eosdem indurat, vasa misericordiæ fovit: So the goodnesse of God hardens the vessels of wrath, and mollifieth the vessels of mercie. To the same purpose also Theodoret quæst. 12. in Exod. Augustine also in the same manner saith: Pharaonem non divina potentia, sed divina patientia credenda est Deum induxisse: Not the divine power but the divine patience is thought to haue hardned Pharaoh. This is true which is auouched by these ancient fathers, that men by abusing the patience and long suffering of God are hardned: yet this is not all; this phrase, that God hardned Pharaohs heart, sheweth that God hath a further hand in the hardning of their hearts than by connivence and long suffering toward them.

Quest. XIX. Wherefore the Lord useth patience and long suffering toward the wicked.

It is not true that God useth great patience and longanimity towards sinners, and that for these reasons. 1. That thereby Gods goodnesse and mercy may appeare, and the great malice and frowardnesse of mans heart that cannot be drawne to repentance, by the Lords rich and bountifull mercy. 2. By the same also Gods iudgements appeare to be most just, when he punisheth the hard hearted and incorrigible, as is evident in the example of Pharaoh. 3. God also teacheth men by his example to be patient in long suffering one toward another. 4. This patience of God, though some abuse it, yet other profit and their hard hearts are mollified; as though Pharaoh by Gods sparing of him, became more obstinate, yet Nebuchadnezzar at the length, by the Lords lenity and goodnesse, and fatherly correction was brought to know himselfe, and to confesse the true God. 5. And though the evill and wicked should reape no profit by the Lords wonderfull patience, yet the elect and such as are ordained to salvation, are thereby effectually brought unto grace, as S. Paul sheweth of himselfe: For this cause was I received to mercy, that Christ should first shew on me all long suffering, unto the ensample of them, which in time to come should beleeue on him, 1. Tim. 1. 16.

Quest. XX. How God is said to harden by the subtraction of his grace.

Beside, there is another way, whereby the ancient fathers understood God to be said to harden mans heart: namely, by the subtraction and withdrawing of his grace: as Chrysostome: God is said to give a reprobate sense, to harden, to blind and such like: Non quòd hæc a Deo fiunt, quippe cum à propria malitia proveniant, sed quia Deo justè homines deserente, hæc illis contingunt: Not because these things are done by God, which proceed of mans malice; but because while God doth justly forsake men, these things come unto them. So also Augustine; Indurare dicitur Deus, quem mollire noluerit: God is said to harden, he will not mollifie, & excæcare dicitur quem illuminare noluerit: And he is said to blind him whom he will not illuminate. Gregorie also upon these words of the Lord to Moses, I will harden Pharaohs heart, thus saith: Obdurat Deus per justitiam dicitur, quando cor reprobum per gratiam non emollit: God is said by his Chrysost. homil. 67. in Evang. Iohan.

August. Epist. 105.

Gregor. lib. 31. Moral. cap. 11.

iustice to harden the heart, when he doth not by his grace mollifie a reprobate heart. So Thomas Aquinas E... excæcatio & obduratio duo important, &c. The blinding and hardning of the heart implieth two things; one the internall act of the minde, adhering unto evill, and being adverse from God; and so God is not the cause of the hardnesse of the heart: The other is the subtraction of grace, whereby it commeth to passe, that the mind is not illuminate to see God, &c. and in this respect God is the cause of induration. This exposition also is true, but it expresseth not all that seemeth to be contained in this phrase, that God is said to harden Pharaohs heart.

Quest. XXI. How God is said occasionaliter, by ministring the occasion which the wicked abuseth to harden the heart.

THere is then a sixt way of interpreting these words: God is said to harden mans heart occasionally by way of occasion, when the wicked take occasion by such things as fall out and are done by God providence to be more hardned and confirmed in their sinne. 1. For as all things, as prosperity, adversity, life, death, fulnesse, want and whatsoever else doe worke together unto good to those that feare God, as the Apostle saith, Rom. 8. So on the contrary all things fall out for the worst unto the wicked and impenitent: so the wonders which God wrought in Egypt, served to confirme the Hebrewes in their faith, but Pharaoh through his owne malice was thereby hardned. 2. The things which the Lord doth, whereby the wicked take occasion to be hardned are of three sorts, either inwardly in the mind, as by stirring their affections, as of anger, feare, hope, desire, which they by their corruption turne unto evill: or else such things as are done about them, as admonitions, corrections, mercies, benefits, which they also ungratiously abuse: or they are things externall or without them, as the objects of pleasure, honour, and such like, whereby their hard heart is puffed up and swelleth. And all these things being good of themselves, they through the hardnesse of their heart pervert unto their destruction: as S. Peter speaketh of some which through ignorance and unbeleefe doe pervert the Scriptures, 2. Pet. 3. 16. And S. Paul sheweth, that sinne tooke occasion by the commandement, and wrought in him all manner of concupiscence, Rom. 7. 8. 3. Thus Pharaoh was hardned by occasion of Gods workes, the plagues and wonders which were shewed in Egypt: by the wonders, because he saw his Magitians could doe the like: by the plagues, because they touched not him, but happened without, they came not all at once but with some respite betweene, and because he saw that they continued not long, but were soone removed. 4. To this purpose Augustine, Vt taceam hoc loco Pharaoh, quòd patientia Dei non moveretur ad pietatem, propriæ sunt vitio; quòd verò falsa sunt ea, quibus ei suggestio jam malignum divinis jussionibus resisteret, &c. dispensationis fuit divinæ: In that Pharaoh had such an heart, which could not be moved, by the patience of God unto piety, it was his owne fault; but that such things were done, whereby his heart being evill of it selfe did resist the commandement of God, it was of the divine dispensation: quæst. 18. in Exod. This exposition also of Augustine may bee received; but yet there is somewhat further to be considered in Gods concurring in the hardning of Pharaohs heart.

Quest. XXII. God is said to harden the heart as the event is taken for the cause.

THere is further a seventh exposition: for in the Scripture that is often taken for the cause of a thing which is but the event of it: as Chrysostome noteth upon these words, Ioh. 17. None of them perished but the child of perdition, that the Scriptures might be fulfilled: here the Scripture, Quæ eventum sæpe pro causa ponit: putteth that for the cause which was the event: for Iudas did not perish to that end that the Scripture should be fulfilled: but it so fell out, that the Scripture in Iudas perishing was fulfilled. Damascen giveth the like instance in the 51. Psalme, Against thee only have I sinned and done evill in thy sight, that thou maist be justified in thy sayings, and cleere when thou art judged. But David did not sinne to that end, that God might be justified, God had no need of his sinne to set forth his glory. So it fell out that God justified David, and by his mercy overcame his sinne; yet hee sinned not to that end: like as when a man is at worke, and one commeth and so he breaketh off, he should say, my friend came to day to hinder my worke, whereas his friend had no such end in his comming. So Iacob said to his sonnes, Wherefore dealt you so with me, as to tell the man, whether yee had yet a brother or no? Gen. 43. 6. Iacobs sonnes in so telling intended no evill, or hurt to their father, but it so fell out. The wicked are said to hate their owne soules, and procure unto themselves eternall death: whereas simply they hate not their soules, neither would be hated: but upon their committing of sinne it so falleth out that their soules perish by their means, as they hated them: unruly patients that will not obey their Physitians, whereupon followeth death, are said to seeke their owne death, and yet they desire to live: but upon their unruly and disordered behaviour death followeth. So God is said to harden Pharaohs heart, by the like figurative speech, because the hardning of their heart ensueth upon the abuse of those things, which God intendeth not to that end, but to pervert them to their owne hurt. Ex Peter. All this may safely bee received, and acknowledged; and somewhat more is to be added, as shall afterward appeare.

Quest. XXIII. How diversly in Scripture these termes of blinding and hardning are taken.

BUt by the way this word, to blind, to harden, though it signifie an action proceeding from him that hardneth, yet is it not alwayes so taken: therefore we shall find that foure-wayes in Scripture a thing is said to blinde and consequently to harden: 1. Gifts are said to blind the eyes. Deut. 16. Not that a gift being a dead thing, can corrupt the judgement, but mans corrupt heart taketh occasion, and is thereby tieed to pervert justice. 2. The Devill is said to blinde the mindes of the wicked, 2. Cor. 4. 4.

of mans owne heart it ſaid to blinde and harden, as Pharaoh hardned his owne heart. 4. God is ſaid to blind the eyes, Eſay 6. 10. and to harden Pharaohs heart: gifts doe blinde occaſionaliter, by way of occaſion; the malice of mans heart blindeth meritorie, by way of deſert, and meritoriouſly, becauſe it deſerveth to be further blinded and hardned: the Devill blindeth incitando, by inciting and provoking unto ſin. And God as is before ſhewed, by withdrawing his grace and inflicting the puniſhment of induration upon them.

When God is ſaid to harden mans hart in his diverſe leaving and forſaking of them. 1. Hee ſuffereth them to follow their owne luſts and deſires, not giving them power or grace to reſtraine them, as if he gave them up to their hearts luſts. 2. He giveth them eaſe, abundance, proſperity, whereby they are entangled: therefore the Prophet prayeth, Give me not riches, leſt I be full and forget thee: Prov. 3. He denieth them the benefit, of wholſome corrections and afflictions, whereby they ſhould learne to know themſelves, as the Apoſtle ſaith, the Lord receiveth no child, whom hee doth not chaſtiſe. 4. God forbiddeth his ſervants to pray for ſuch, and ſo they want the benefit of their prayers, as Jeremie is forbidden to pray for the people, chap. 7. 16. 5. God in his juſtice depriveth them of ſuch as ſhould travell for their ſoules and bring them unto God: as the Apoſtles left the obſtinate and wilfull Jewes and ſhooke off the duſt of their feet againſt them, Acts 13. 6. God taketh away from them the preaching and knowledge of his word, as the Lord threatneth by his Prophet Amos, to ſend upon them a famine, not of bread or water, but of hearing his word, Amos 8. 11. 7. God ſuffereth them to be deceived by flatterers and unfaithfull counſellers, as Rehoboam was by his young men. 8. And the more ſtrongly to delude them, the Lord permitteth ſometimes falſe Prophets to ſhew ſignes and wonders, as the Apoſtle ſaith of the falſe Prophet Antichriſt, whoſe comming is by the working of Satan, with all power and ſignes, and lying wonders, 2. Theſſ. 2. 9. 9. The Lord permitteth Satan to invade them, and to worke upon them at his pleaſure: the evill ſpirit was ſent of the Lord upon Saul, and a lying ſpirit was in the mouth of Baals falſe Prophets to deceive Ahab. 10. God taketh away from them all helpes, whereby they ſhould be defended againſt the aſſaults of Satan, as the Lord threatneth to doe to his unfruitfull vineyard: I will take away the hedge thereof and it ſhall be eaten up. I will breake downe the wall thereof and it ſhall be troden downe. Eſay 5. 11. But the Lord doth not thus forſake any till they have firſt forſaken God: as Chryſoſtome: Quod autem Deus non derelinquat nos, niſi fuerimus à nobis derelicti, aperte oſtendit Iſaias; That God doth not at all times leave us, unleſſe we have forſaken him, Iſay ſheweth, chap. 59. 2. Your iniquities have ſeparated betweene you and your God. Ex Petav.

Quest. XXV. God hardneth otherwiſe than by foreſeeing.

Thus have I given interpretations of the hardning of Pharaohs heart by the Lord which I have abridged out of Pareus: there are three other which I will briefly ſet downe: firſt ſome thinke that this, that God is ſaid to harden Pharaohs heart) is to be underſtood of Gods preſcience, that he is ſaid to doe it, becauſe he foreſaw it ſhould be hardned by their owne malice. This ſeemeth ſometime to be the meaning of Auguſtine: in that God is ſaid to harden Pharaohs heart, Non ad operationem Dei, ſed ad præſcientiam ejus monſtratur: it is ſhewed to appertaine not to Gods operation or working, but to his preſcience. Auguſt. de præd. lib. 1. cap. 6. This cannot be the meaning, for by this reaſon, whereas God foreſeeth all the ſinnes of men, which are committed in the world, God might be ſaid himſelfe, to kill, ſteale, doe wrong, becauſe he foreſeeth, that ſuch things ſhall be done in the world.

Quest. XXVI. Whether God may be ſaid to doe theſe things which he diſpoſeth of to a good end.

Secondly, God may be ſaid to harden Pharaohs heart, becauſe he diſpoſeth thereof, and directeth it to ſuch an end as he himſelfe propounded: becauſe thereby the Lord did take occaſion to worke his miracles: he ſaith to Moſes, I have hardned Pharaohs heart, that I might worke theſe my miracles, Exod. 10. 1. as God ordained the end, he may be ſaid alſo in ſome ſort, to doe thoſe things which helpe unto it. Act. 2. 23. Chriſt is ſaid to bee delivered by the determinate counſell of God: yet was hee betrayed and delivered by Judas: whoſe act is ſaid in ſome reſpect, to be the Lords, becauſe God diſpoſed of it, and accompliſh his glorious counſell in redeeming the world by the death of his Sonne. But thus can this be ſafely affirmed, that the Lord ſhould be ſaid to doe thoſe things, which hee ordereth and diſpoſeth: for God ſo diſpoſed of that ſpirituall combate which S. Paul found in his fleſh, that it tended to Gods glory and the manifeſtation of his power: as the Lord ſaith, My grace is ſufficient for thee, for it is made perfect through meakneſſe: yet God was not the worker of that temptation, but the ſuffereth it to Satan. 2. Cor. 12. 7. And like as in the creation God made light, but made not darkneſſe, but onely made a ſeparation betweene the light and the darkneſſe, Gen. 14. Whereupon Auguſtine ſpeaketh this diſtinction: Aliud fecit Deus & ordinavit, aliud non fecit ſed ordinavit: God made ſome things and ordered them alſo: ſome things he made not, but ordered: as he giveth inſtance of the darkneſſe: the workes of darkneſſe God cannot be ſaid to have made, but only he diſpoſeth and ordereth them. Auguſtin. Pſal. 7.

Quest. XXVII. God otherwiſe hardneth then as a generall mover of the heart.

Some referre that worke of God which he ſheweth in the hardning of the heart to that generall worke which he giveth unto the creature, in whom all things move, live, and have their being, Act.

Act. 17. 28. So that the hardning of the heart as it is an action or worke, is of God; but as it is evill it Zuingl. de provid. cap. 5. proceedeth from man. So Zuinglius: Quatenus est Dei Creatoris, opus est, crimen non est; quatenus autem hominis, crimen est, scelus est: As it is of God the Creator, it is a worke, it is no fault; but as it is of man, it is a fault, it is a sinne. The Master of the sentences hath the like saying: Actus mali in quantum actus sunt, boni sunt & à Deo authore: Evill acts as they are acts are good, and (proceed) of God the Author, lib. 2. distinct. 35.

But this solution doth not take away the doubt: for as God is the Creator, and so generall worker, he only giveth power to move the heart: this moving being the generall action, is divided into two parts, for there are good motions, of the heart, and evill, the mollifying of the heart, and the hardning: in the good motions God concurreth two wayes, as a generall mover by his creating power, and as a particular directer by his regenerating grace: but in the other motions he only hath a stroke as a generall mover, in the patticular action of hardning as it is evill hee concurreth not. Therefore according to that generall power the Lord is said only to be a mover, not an hardner of the heart. Some other way therefore yet must be found out, whereby the Lord is said to harden the heart.

Quest. XXVIII. How the Lord is said indeed to harden the heart.

TO conclude then this question, of all these wayes before rehearsed, which are ten in all, I make choice of these three, which may fully satisfie every doubt, namely the third in the 17. quest. before, the fifth in the 20. quest. and the sixt in the 21. The first is, that God is said to harden the heart, by leaving it to it selfe, and depriving it of his necessary grace, as God is said to have given over the unbeleeving Gentiles to their hearts lusts, Rom. 1. 24. The second, that beside this, God causeth many things to be done, which are not in themselves causes of the hardning of the heart, yet the wicked take occasion thereby further to be indurate and hardned: as S. Paul sheweth how the wicked abuse the patience and long suffering of God thereby to be further hardned. Thirdly, God by his just judgement, Cum sumus in malum, quo ipse abutitur ampliùs ad finem usque impellit, doth force him to his owne hurt, whither hee runneth headlong himselfe, even unto the end: Iun. Analys. in 7. cap. Exod. God as a just Judge, seeing a mans heart to bee bent upon wickednesse, doth as a just Judge, inflict upon him the spirituall punishment of induration. To this purpose Augustine handling that place, Rom. 1. how the Lord gave up the Gentiles to their owne lusts, useth this distinction: that some things there rehearsed are sinnes and no punishment, as the pride and vanity

August. in Psal. 57. of their mindes, vers. 21. They were not thankefull but became vaine in their imagination: Some a punishment and no sinne, as eternall death which they were worthy of, vers. 31. the rest that came betweene, are both sinnes and punishments. By this distinction Augustine in another place answereth this objection of the Pelagians: God, say they, should not take such punishment of sinne, Ut peccator per vindictam plura committeret: That the sinners thereby commit more sinne: Augustine answereth to this effect: Sic ostenditur esse peccata, sic etiam pœnæ sint peccatorum: he sheweth these so to be sinnes, as that they are also punishments of sinnes; as the Apostle there saith, vers. 27. Man with man wrought filthinesse and received to themselves such recompence of their error as was meet. So the meaning of Augustine is, that God did not send them upon the Gentiles, as they were sinnes, but they are to be considered as punishments of their sinnes, as God hath an hand therein. Likewise, whereas Iulian the Pelagian objected, that Per patientiam divinam suis, non per potentiam desiderijs traditi: That they were delivered over to their lusts, not by the power but by the patience of God: Augustine to shew the contrarie giveth instance of that place, Exech. 14. 9. When it is said, If the Prophet be deceived I have deceived him: Patientia an potentia est? Is it the patience or the power of God that doth this? And concerning the hardning of Pharaohs heart Augustine concludeth thus: Deus ejus voluntatem proprio suo vitio malam, in hoc peccatum judicio suo justo & occulto inclinavit: God did incline his will being evill by it owne fault, into this sinne, by his just, yet secret judgement: If God did incline it, he did more than suffer it, or minister the occasion only, whereby it was inclined. Hierome expresseth as much by this similitude: Unus est solis calor, & secundum essentias subjacentes, alia liquefacit, alia induratur: liquor unguenti, induratur lutum: there is but one kinde of heate in the Sunne, and according to the matter which it worketh upon, some things it melteth, some things it hardneth; the wax is melted, the clay hardned. Origen also useth the same similitude, and applieth it thus: Sic indurasse dicitur Deus cor Pharaonis, quia cor ejus tale erat, qualem cogitabat, luteum & limosum erat: So God (as the Sunne hardneth the clay) is said to have hardned Pharaohs heart, because his heart according to those things, which he thought, was earthly and muddy. And another place he bringeth in this Simile: Ut eodem opere pluviæ terra diligenter exculta afferat bonos, inculta tribulos: as by the same worke of the raine, the earth being well tilled bringeth forth good fruit, and the untilled thistles. Like as then the Sun hardneth the clay, the raine bringeth forth weedes, not of it selfe but by reason of the nature of the thing concurring, whereupon it worketh; so by the working of God, after a most secret and hid manner, the hearts of the wicked are hardned, but the cause thereof in themselves. And thus much shall suffice of this question: see it handled before, 2. Dist. chap. 7. and 8. quest. 12. and const. 1.

Orig. hom. 8. in Exod.

Periarch. lib. 3. cap. 1.

4. Places of doctrine.

1. Doct. God overruleth mens affections.

Vers. 3. THe Lord gave the people favour in the sight of the Egyptians. Hereby wee learne, that God hath the ruling and turning of mens affections: he can worke them either to favour or disfavour. Piscat. So the Wiseman saith: As the rivers of waters, the Kings heart is in the hand of the Lord, he turneth whither soever it pleaseth him, Prov. 21.1. Like as the husband man maketh furrowes in his ground, and deriveth the water which way it pleaseth him; and as the sterne man in the vessell doth move it which way he listeth: so can the Lord order and governe the streames of mens affections.

2. Doct. Godly men have their passions and affections.

Vers. So he went out from Pharaoh very angry. Even wise and godly men have their affections: it is not as the Stoikes taught, that there is a vacuity and absence of them in wise and perfect men. They are not without affections, but they rule them by reason, and their reason is sanctified by grace. The Apostle saith, be angry, but sinne not, Ephes. 4.26. He alloweth to be angry, but not to sinne in anger: Christ the most perfect man that ever was, had his affections, as of anger, Marke 3.5. He looked round about him of joy, Luk. 10.21. Iesus rejoyced in spirit: of sorrow, Matth. 26.38. My soule is heavy unto death: of love, as Iob. 13.23. The disciple whom Iesus loved.

5. Places of confutation.

1. Confut. Against Purgatory.

BEfore in the third question where it is disputed what Angels God used in bringing the last plague of death of the first borne upon Egypt; Pererius sheweth the difference betweene the ministry of the Angels in this life, and in the next, falling to make mention of purgatory (for they cannot doe otherwise under lives, but upon every occasion broach their owne fansies) leaveth it as uncertaine and undiscussed, whether the good Angels or the bad should be ministers of purgatory: he thinketh not the bad, that they should exercise power over them, which in their life time did conquere the Devill; neither yet will hee have them to be the good: It is an unmeet thing, saith he, that they which shortly should become the fellowes and partakers of the blessed Angels in heaven, should bee punished by them: Perer. 1. disput. in cap. 11.

Cens. 1. Let any reasonable man judge, whether it be not like, that purgatory should be a meere fansie, where there is supposed to bee torments, and yet no tormentor. In that hee thinketh, that neither good Angels nor bad, are the ministers of those torments, I condescend to him: who then? not Christ I am sure, for he hath redeemed them; nor yet God himselfe, for the Apostle saith, Who shall lay any thing to the charge of Gods chosen? it is God that justifieth, who shall condemne? Rom. 8.33.34. God hath justified them by faith in Christ, and being justified there is nothing further to be laid to their charge. If then there be no tormenter in purgatory, there is no torment in purgatory, and so purgatory fire is quite quenched and put out.

2. Beside this uncertainty, who should be the tormenters, there be other maine points not yet resolved of among them concerning purgatory: as of the place, where it is; of the fire, what it is, corporall or spirituall; of the time, how long it shall last, whether hundred yeeres or thousands; of the greatnesse of the paine, whether it exceed all the torments and punishments of this life. These articles are not yet decided and determined among them, as Bellarmine sheweth lib. de purgat. from chap. 6. to chap. 14. Therefore we will leave them to their uncertainties, and as they make question of the circumstances of purgatory: so we will not onely make question of purgatory it selfe, but are most sure, that it is but an invention of their owne; for all they which dye in the Lord (that is, in the faith of Christ) are pronounced blessed, and rest from their labours, and their workes follow them, Revel. 14.13. Here are three arguments against purgatory. They which dye in the faith of Christ are blessed; but they which are in hell torments (for purgatory they make part of hell) are not blessed. They doe rest from their labours; but they which are in purgatory, are in labour and paine. Their workes follow them for their reward; but they which are tormented and punished are not rewarded: Therefore wee acknowledge no other purgatory but in the blood of Christ, perfect purgation of our sinnes in Christ, Heb. 12.3. and an imperfect, which is by the fiery probation of affliction: as S. Peter calleth it: Thinke it not strange concerning the fiery triall, which is among you (or by you) 1. Pet. 4.12.

2. Confut. Against the Manichees which reject the old Testament.

BVt the Lord hardned Pharaohs heart. Hence the Manichees tooke occasion to utter their blasphemies against the God of the old Testament, and to reject the Scriptures themselves of the Testament, as proceeding from a God that was a worker of evill, in hardning mens hearts. These Augustine confuteth at large, hom. 88. de tempore, shewing how God is said to harden the heart, without any cause of sinne: for thus he writeth, Non Pharaonem Dei violentia sed propria impietas obdurauit: Not any violence from God but Pharaohs owne impiety did harden him. And these words, I will harden Pharaohs heart, he expoundeth thus; Cum abfuerit ei gratia mea, obduret illum malitia sua: when my grace is from him his owne wickednesse shall harden him. 2. Then he doth illustrate it by this similitude; as the water is frozen, till the Sun shine upon it, then it resolveth, and so soone as the Sunne is departed, it is bound with yce againe: the Sun is not the cause of the freezing of the water, but the coldnesse of the water bindeth it: so properly God causeth not the heart to be hardned, but by the absence of his grace it is hardned. And if the question bee asked, why the Lord suffereth any to be hardned; he maketh this answer: Aut enim ipsi qui obdurari merentur adscribendum aut occulto Dei judicio referendum, quæ plena semper æquitate, nunquam autem injusta: This must either be ascribed to their iniquity, which deserve to be hardned, or it must be referred to the judgements of God, which are often hid but never unjust. It sufficeth us to know and beleeve, as the Apostle saith, Rom. 9. Is there iniquity with God?

to

3. Confut. Against Pererius that thinketh none in this life to be without hope of grace and repentance.

NOw further whereas Pererius in the treatise of induration moveth this disputation, whether any man can be so hardned in this life, as that he become altogether impenitent and incorrigible, and without hope of grace; and resolveth upon the negative part, that none in this life are in such desperate state; it shall not be amisse, first, to examine his reasons, and then to confirme the truth.

1. He urgeth these and such like places, That God would have all men to be saved and come to the knowledge of the truth: And, I will not the death of a sinner. If mercy be offered to all, then the way is open for all to returne unto God.

Contra. 1. God indeed offereth himselfe unto all, and denieth not the externall meanes to any, if they had grace to apprehend them. The Gospell hath beene preached to all the world, and is many times to the impenitent and reprobate; so God offereth grace to all, but all will not receive it. Augustine hereof thus writeth: Correctio medecinabiliter omnibus adhibenda est, etiamsi salus egrotantis sit incerta, &c. The wholesome medicine of admonition must be ministred to all, though the health of the sicke be uncertaine: that if he which is admonished belong to the predestinate, it is unto him a wholesome medecine; if he doe not, it is a penall torment. 2. The argument then followeth not; God calleth all to repentance, therefore all may have grace to repent: The Scripture saith, many are called, but few are chosen. Ambrose saith, In alio prevalisse gratiam, in aliis refiluisse naturam: That grace prevaileth in some, in others their obstinate nature resisteth.

August. de Correct. & grat. cap. 13.

Ambros. lib. 3. de vocat. gentium, cap. 8.

2. So long as men are in this life, they are in the way, and are not deprived of all grace, nor utterly forsaken till they come into hell.

Contr. Everlasting punishment in hell is the end and execution of damnation, but men in this life may be in the state of damnation, and be utterly forsaken of Gods grace, as Saul and Iudas, and they whom the Apostle saith, God gave them over to a reprobate sense: Rom. 1. 28.

3. If any had beene in this life wholly excluded from grace, Pharaoh of all other was most like; yet his state was not desperate, seeing he was in the same case with Nebuchadnezzar, who repented and confessed God.

Contr. 1. He reasoneth flatly against the Apostle, who propounderh Pharaoh as a vessell of wrath prepared to destruction, Rom. 9. Now if there be hope for the vessels of wrath to come to grace, then there was hope for Pharaoh. The Apostle maketh these two distinct things, God hath mercy on whom he will, and whom he will he hardneth, Rom. 9. 18. As God hardneth not those on whom he hath mercy, so neither sheweth he mercy on those whom he hardneth. 2. Nebachadnezzar and Pharaoh were most unlike, for the one had not so many wonders shewed, as had the other, neither so often dallied and made shew of repentance, as did the other: this sheweth their state to be most differing, for if Pharaoh had beene no more hardned than Nebuchadnezzar was, he would likewise have repented.

4. We are to despaire of none in this life, therefore it is possible for all to repent.

Contr. 1. Such as wee see and know commit a sinne unto death, which is the irremissible sinne against the holy Ghost (which I confesse is a rare thing now to be discerned) such wee may despaire of, because the Apostle forbiddeth us to pray for them, 1. Ioh. 5. 16. And those for whom the Lord did forbid Ieremy to pray, chap. 7. 16. what hope, I pray you, was there of them? 2. Though wee in charity are to hope the best, even of the greatest sinners, yet this followeth not, that all of them may have grace to repent: we judge according to that we see: but the Lord seeth the heart and knoweth from the beginning who are his, and who are not.

But on the contrary side: that some in this life are so hard hearted that they cannot repent, and so are incorrigible and without hope of remission of sinnes, it is proved thus:

1. Sinne against the holy Ghost is irremissible, as our Saviour saith, He that blasphemeth against the holy Ghost shall never have forgiveneſſe, Mark. 3. 29. Therefore there are some in this life that cannot repent, neither can have their sinnes forgiven them. And because Bellarmine and Pererius, and the rest how answer, that the sinne against the holy Ghost is said to be irremissible, not because it cannot at all be forgiven, but because it is hardly forgiven: therefore to prevent this objection, that place of the Apostle is also urged: that it is impossible for such to be renued by repentance, Heb. 6. 6. that which is impossible is not only hardly done, but not at all.

2. The foreknowledge and decree of God concerning the rejection of some is unchangeable and cannot be altered: but God hath foreseene some to be damned, and decreed them to bee rejected, and to be called the childe of perdition, Ioh. 17. therefore it is not possible for such to come to repentance and be saved: therefore Gregory saith well, Quos non sunt praedestinata obtineri non possunt: Those things which hath not predestinate cannot be obtained. But God hath not decreed repentance for them that are impenitent and reprobate.

Gregorius ut citatur caus. 23. qu. 4. c. 21.

3. There is no hope of forgiveneſſe for that sinne for the which it is not lawfull to pray, but there is a sinne unto death, for the which we are forbidden to pray, 1. Ioh. 5. 16. Ergo, &c. Pererius answereth, that by sinne unto death is meant that sinne, wherein a man continueth unto death, and so dying that he is not afterward to be prayed for. Contr. 1. It would follow by this reason, that no sinne at any time bee prayed for while hee liveth, for how doth any know whether a man may continue in a sinne to his dying day? 2. The Apostle speaketh of such sinnes, which a man seeth his brother to sinne,

…es are onely seene to be done in this life: neither is a mans repentance knowne which God may give …in his very passage out of the world. 3. Let them shew us any place, in all the Scriptures, that autho… …eth prayer for the dead if they can: wherefore they are not to give a sense of Scripture that cannot be …rmed by Scripture. 4. The Apostle therefore calleth it a sinne unto death; for the which there is no …ssitie, and so is there no sinne but blasphemy against the holy Spirit. And thus Ambrose expoundeth …Nequeat ibi exoratio esse venia, ubi sacrilegii est plenitudo: there can be no interceding of pardon, where …is fulnesse of Sacrilege.

4. Where there can bee no repentance, there can be no remission of sinnes: but some have such hard …that they cannot repent, Rom. 2. 4. therefore the sinnes of such are irremissible.

5. Hereunto may be added the testimonies of Cyprian: Non posse in Ecclesia ei remitti, qui in Deum de… …: that he can find no forgiveneſſe in the Church that sinneth against God, lib. 3. de Quirinum cap. 28. …Ambrose: Cassa erat proditoris pœnitentia, qui peccavit in spiritum sanctum: The traitors repentance …in vaine, having sinned against the spirit of God in Luc. 22. Of Hierome: Nihil ita repugnat Deo quam …impœnitentia; solum crimen est, quod veniam consequi non potest: Nothing is so against God, as an impeni… …tent: it is the only sinne that cannot attaine pardon.

6. Places of morall use.

1. Obs. By the suddennesse of Gods judgements we are taught to watch.

Vers. 29. About midnight will I goe forth into the middest of Egypt. God smiteth the Egyptians at mid… …night, when they were most secure: and the Apostle sheweth that the comming of Christ …ld be sudden, even like the comming of a theefe in the night, 1. Thess. 5. 2. And therefore this doth …nish us alwayes to be watchfull, as our Saviour said to his Apostles: These things that I say unto you, I …y unto all, watch, Mark. 13. 37. Ferus.

2. Obs. To be zealous in Gods cause.

Vers. 31. So he went from Pharaoh very angry. God would have us to be zealous in his cause, and not to …doe the worke of God negligently: Simler. The Wiseman saith, that hee which is slothfull in …works, is the brother of him that is a great waster, Prov. 18. 9. And the Lord threatneth the Laodiceans …cause they were luke warme, to spue them out of his mouth, Revel. 3.

3. Obs. The heart of the wicked is hardened to set forth Gods glory.

Vers. 9. Pharaoh shall not heare you, that my wonders may be multiplied. God hardeneth the heart of the …reprobate, that his glory thereby might be the more set forth, as the Apostle saith, Rom. 9. 17. …this same purpose have I stirred thee up, that I might shew my power in thee, and that my name might bee …declared through all the earth. Genevens.

4. Obs. God foreshewth his servants of their troubles that they should not be offended.

Vers. 12. And he suffered not the children of Israel to goe. Like as the Lord had foretold unto Moses, so …it commeth to passe: and this the Lord did, that Moses being forewarned before, should not …be offended, to see the malicious obstinacy of Pharaoh. So our Saviour saith unto his Apostles, These …things have I said unto you that you should not be offended, Ioh. 16. 1. The Lord acquainteth his servants with …their troubles and afflictions aforehand, that when they come they should be prepared for them.

CHAP. XII.

1. The method and Argument.

IN this Chapter, containing the deliverance of the children of Israel out of Egypt, with the signe and assurance thereof the institution of the Passeover, there are three things principally handled: The institution of the Passeover, to vers. 29. then the manner of the deliverance and departure of Israel out of Egypt, to vers. 41. Lastly, the perpetuall Law of the Passeover repeated, to vers. 51.

1. In the first part: first there is the commandement of God to Moses concerning the Passeover, to vers. 21. then the relation thereof by Moses to the people, to vers. 29. …he commandement is either concerning the Passeover to be solemnized and kept at that time, to vers. …the perpetuall observation thereof, to vers. 21.

…the first there is prescribed, 1. the preparation of the Passeover, both when, in the first moneth, vers. 1. …the tenth day. 2. By whom the preparation shall be made, vers. 3, 4. and what: a lambe without blemish …here old, vers. 5. 2. The killing and eating of the lambe: to the killing belongeth the description of …at even, vers. 6. and what they shall doe with the bloud, strike it upon the dore-posts, vers. 7. To …eating belongeth, both how it shall be eaten, with unleavened bread and sower herbes, vers. 8, how it should should be dressed, rosted with fire, vers. 9. what they should eat, even all, reserving nothing, vers. 10. and in what manner and habit, vers. 11.

3. The use, to be a signe upon their houses of their deliverance, where is shewed, what shall befall the Egyptians that night, vers. 12. and how the Israelites shall escape the plague, vers. 13.

In the commandement for the perpetuall observation: 1. The solemnity of the time is prescribed, of the first day, vers. 14. of seven dayes to be kept with unleavened bread, vers. 15. and of the first and seventh day in abstaining from all kinde of worke, with an exception of the labour about their meat and drinke, vers. 16. and the reason of this solemnity, their deliverance, vers. 17.

2. The manner of keeping it with unleavened bread is more fully described, both how long they shall eat it, vers. 18. the danger, in not observing this ceremony, vers. 19. and it must bee kept generally of all, vers. 20.

In the relation of Moses to the people; 1. he repeateth the manner, where and how they shall strike the blood, vers. 22. 2. To what end, because by this meanes the Angel of God will passe by their houses. 3. The celebration of the day is commanded, with the end, for a perpetuall commemoration thereof to their children, vers. 27. 4. The obedience of the people is shewed, vers. 28.

2. In this second part, which containeth the history of the peoples deliverance and departure; 1. The occasion is set forth, which shewed how the Lord destroyed the first borne in Egypt, vers. 29. then Pharaoh in haste called for Moses and Aaron, and bad them goe with all they had, vers. 31. 32. and the Egyptians forced them, vers. 33. 2. The manner of their going forth is described, they went in haste with dowtrusted upon their shoulders, vers. 34. 35. and they went out richly, having received jewels of gold and silver of the Egyptians, vers. 35. then the reason thereof is shewed, the Lord gave them favour, vers. 36.

3. The circumstances belonging to their departure are expressed. First, of the place from whence and whither they went. Secondly, of the persons, by their numbers, vers. 37. and divers kindes, vers. 38. Thirdly, the time, after the space of 430. yeeres.

3. In the 3. part concerning the law of the Passeover, there is the prescription, then the execution, and in the prescription three things are described: 1. Of the persons that shall be admitted to eat thereof, or not admitted, vers. 44, 45. 2. Of the place where it shall be eaten, vers. 46. 3. The manner required in the thing, a bone must not be broken, vers. 47. in the persons, they must be circumcised that eat thereof, vers. 48, 49. then followeth the execution by the people, vers. 50.

2. The divers readings.

I.V. Vers. 3. A small beast. I.V. rather than a Lamb. B.G. cum cater. sheb signifieth either a Lambe or a Kid, for they might take of either, vers. 5. they could not take a Lambe of Kids or Goats.

V.I.C. Vers. 4. Both he himselfe shall take, and his neighbour. I. C. better than, he shall take his neighbour. B. G. cum cater. for here the conjunction (and) his neighbour is omitted, and the distinction over (his) himselfe doth sever it from the clause following: the meaning is that hee and his neighbour should joyne together to take a Lamb: the word lachak used before, vers. 3. shall take unto him a Lambe, is here better referred to the Lambe, which is understood to be taken, than to his neighbour.

B.I.V. Vers. 6. Shall kill it in the twilight. B. betweene the two eventides. I.V.A.P. better than, at eventide. G.L. S.C. for the word ghereb in the singular is put for the eventide, vers. 18. but here it is in the dual number, and is taken for the twilight betweene the setting of the Sunne and the beginning of the night.

I.S.P.V. Vers. 11. It is the Lords pasch. I.S.P.V. the Lords Passeover: cater. Pesach. H. which signifieth the passeover; but the originall word is better retained, as the Apostle saith: Christ our pasch is sacrificed for us, 1 Cor. 5. 7.

S.V.I. Vers. 13. When I shall smite in the land of Egypt. S.V.A. that is, smite the first borne in the land of Egypt. I. Slay in the land of Egypt. C. better than, smite the land of Egypt. B.G.L.P. for then the preposition in should be superfluous.

V.C.S.I. Vers. 16. Notwithstanding, that which every one must eat, only shall be done of you. V.C.S.A.P. or prepared for you: better than, excepted those things which every one must eat. L. for the last clause shall be done of you is here wanting: or save about that which every one must eat, that only may yee doe. B.G. for the verbe is in the passive, that shall be done.

I.G. cum cater. Vers. 23. He will not suffer the destroyer to come into your houses to smite. I.C. cum cater. that is, to smite the first borne, V. to plague you B.G. but the word (nagaph) signifieth to smite.

I.V.C. Vers. 25. And it shall bee when yee are come into the land. I.V.C.A. P. rather than, when yee shall come into the land. B.G.L.S. for here the word vehajah is wanting.

I.C.A. Vers. 26. What meaneth this your service. I. what is this service to you. C.A.P. rather than, what manner of service is this yee doe. B.G. so also L.S. for they aske rather the meaning, than manner of it, as the next verse sheweth.

I.A.P. Vers. 28. They bowed themselves. I. or humbled. A. P. rather than worshipped. B. G. cum cater. shacah signifieth to bow downe: it is a signe of adoration, but properly it doth not signifie to adore or worship.

I.V. Vers. 32. Take your flockes and your droves, or heards. I. V. rather than sheepe and cattell. B.G. and flocks and heards. L. or sheepe and oxen. C.S. Tzon and baccher are here rather names collectives, and are taken for the heards of small and great cattell: for they had flockes of goates as well as of sheepe.

I.C. Vers. 34. Their kneading troughes bound to their cloathes. I.C. rather than, their dow bound. G.S. or they fetch the flure. B. L. V. mishereth rather signifieth the kneading vessell, than the kneading: see before robbed the Egyptians. B. natzal signifieth to spoile.

Vers 38. A great mingled company went up. I. great mixture. A.P. rather than many strangers. C. or a great I. A. P.
mixt multitude of people. L.S. or a great multitude of sundry other nations. B. G. Much is here inserted to make the sense full.

Vers 39. They shall not breake a bone in it. I.A.C.P.V. rather than from it. S. or thereof. B.G. the Hebrew pre- I. A. C. position signifieth (in) cum eeter.

Vers 41. And so it was the same day Iehovah brought &c. A. P. C. S. rather than, the selfe same day did A.P.C.S.
the Lord bring, for the word vajehi, (it was) is omitted; or, And this was the same day wherein Iehovah brought &c. that is, the Passeover was kept that day. I. for (wherein) is added.

3. The explanation of difficult questions.

Quest. I. When the Lord thus spake to Moses.

Vers. 1. And Iehovah had said to Moses. Not as it is usually read, Then the Lord spake to Moses; for it is evident, in that the lambe for the Passeover was prepared upon the tenth day of the moneth and eaten the 14. day, that the Lord thus spake unto Moses foure dayes before the Passeover was come, which might bee upon the tenth day, then followed the three dayes darkenesse, the 10. 11. and 12. dayes, upon the 13. Moses appeared the last time before Pharaoh, and upon the 14. day they eat the Passeover: So then the history is here transposed, because Moses would not interrupt the former story of the plagues: and for the better evidence and perspicuity of the institution of the Passeover, he setteth downe both the preparation and the institution thereof together. Iun. in Analys.

Quest. II. Whether this were a new institution for the beginning of the yeere or the old renued.

Vers. 2. This moneth shall be unto you the beginning of moneths. 1. Simplicius in his Commentary upon Aristotles Physicks, sheweth how diversly the account was taken of sundry nations for the beginning of the yeere. The Athenians began their yeere from Midsommer, the Romans from the midst of winter: the Asians from the Autumne; the Arabians and they of Damascus from the spring. The Egyptians also accounted the beginning of the yeere from the Autumne, because then Nilus was returned within his bankes, and so tillage and seed time began. Iun. 2. Some thinke that this was a new institution to make this moneth, which was in the spring, answering for the most part unto our March the first of the yeere, and that the Hebrewes alwayes before this time, held the seventh moneth to bee the first moneth, as they did afterwards for the computation of Jubile, and for other civill matters: so Iosephus to whom consenteth Pererius: Simler. But this is not like: Indeed the Israelites, while they were in Egypt followed the custome of the Egyptians, that began their yeere in the Autumne; but before they accounted their yeere from the spring, as the Persians and Chaldeans did: and at that time of the yeere it is held that the world was made, as more at large is proved, Quest. 16. upon the 1. of Genes. 3. Therefore this rather was a renovation of the former account of the moneths which the Hebrewes had discontinued in Egypt: both to make a difference betweene them and the Egyptians, and to call to their remembrance the benefit of the creation: Iun. And this may be the occasion thereof, because that moneth of the Autumne from whence they accounted the beginning of the new yeere, and the end of the old, Exod. 34. 22. Pererius is neither not the first but the seventh moneth, Levit. 25. 27. Whereas Moses then in the story of the flood maketh mention of the first and the second, the seventh and the tenth moneth, hee must be understood to recken from the first moneth in the spring: unlesse they will say that the seventh moneth is twice called there after one account, and in Leviticus after another: which cannot bee: the seventh moneth shall be the seventh still.

Quest. III. How it is said to be the beginning of moneths.

The first moneth of the yeere. 1. Not only the principall and chiefe moneth as Vatablus: but the first in order from whence all the rest should be numbred. 2. Divers nations have had a divers custome in the accompt of their yeeres: the Egyptians in their Hieroglyphikes counted every moneth a yeere; the Asians three moneths, as from the spring to the Autumne, from thence to midwinter. The Acarnanians counted six moneths to a yeere, as from the spring to the Autumne: the Romanes and the Hebrewes reckoned twelve moneths, and so is the yeere to bee taken here. 3. It was the first moneth, for yeres ecclesiasticall, and belonging to religion: But the civill yeere began in the seventh moneth, Exod. 23. 16. As the Egyptians began their ecclesiasticall yeere from Midsummer, and their civill from Autumne: Iun. From thence also they began their Jubile, and the account of the seventh yeere of rest: for if it had begun in the spring, they should have wanted two yeeres fruits: for the seventh yeere of rest and Jubile should begin before they had reaped the fruits sowne in the sixt yeere: and in the seventh it was not lawfull for them either to sow or reape. 4. As it was the first moneth of the yeere, so it is the chiefe and most famous: in respect of the deliverance of the Israelites: and in this moneth they went over Jordane and came into the land of Canaan, the 10. day of the first moneth, Iosh. 4. 19.

Perer.

Perer. And now all things began to flouriſh and reviue in the ſpring, ſo that the earth did alſo as it were ſeeme to rejoyce for the liberty of the people of God: Ferus. From hence the Iſraelites, for the remembrance of ſo glorious a deliverance had great cauſe to begin the computation of their yeere, as Chriſtians now doe from the nativity of our Lord for a commemoration of their ſpirituall deliverance. Perer.

Quest. IV. Of the name of this firſt moneth called of the Hebrewes Abib, of the Chaldees Niſan.

THe name of this firſt moneth is not here expreſſed, but *chap.*13.4. it is called the moneth Abib, ſo called, becauſe in that moneth corne began to be ripe. 1. But here I cannot ſubſcribe unto the opinion of Pererius, therein following Paulus Burgenſis, that the Hebrewes had no names for their moneths before the captivity of Babylon, but by their number, as the firſt, ſecond, third, and after the captivity they borrowed the names of the moneths of the Medes and Perſians and chiefly of the Chaldeans, as it is to be found in the bookes of Nehemia, Eſther, and the propheſie of Zacharie, and the bookes of the Maccabees. 2. But this appeareth to be otherwiſe, for in divers places of Scripture, wee finde the names of ſome of the moneths after the calling of the Hebrewes before the captivity of Babylon, as the ſecond moneth Zif, 1. *King.*6.1. and the 7. moneth Ethanim, 1. *King.*8.2. Pererius ſaith, that theſe were not the proper names of theſe moneths, but onely appellatives, ſignifying the properties of thoſe moneths: as the firſt was called Zif of the opening, becauſe the flowers began then to open and ſhew: the other ſignifie ſtrong, becauſe in that moneth fruits were gathered whereby mans heart was comforted and made ſtrong: Vnde. Or becauſe they were of ſtrong conſtitution, which reſiſted and overcame the diſeaſes incident to that ſeaſon of the yeere about the fall of the leafe: Cajetane. Contra. 1. This is no good argument, theſe names have ſome ſpeciall ſignification, therefore they were not the proper names of the moneths: Abib ſignifieth an eare of corne, Levit. 2.14. Was it not therefore a name of the firſt moneth which was ſo called becauſe the corne then eared and began to be ripe? So Bul was the name of the eighth moneth, 1. *King.*6.38. ſo called of the inundation of waters which fall in that moneth. 2. It is very probable, that thoſe Chalde names of the moneths, as Adar, Ciſleu, Elul, were not taken up of the Hebrewes till after the captivity: as the firſt is mentioned, *Nehem.*6.19. the ſecond, *Zachar.*7.1. the third 1. Maccabab. 14.27. But the Hebrew names were in uſe before, as appeareth by theſe already given in inſtance.

3. Now the proper names of the moneths, as they were uſed after the Captivity were theſe; the firſt Niſan, anſwering to our March, the ſecond Tiar, anſwering to Aprill, the third Siuan, which is our May, the fourth Tamuz, our June, the fifth Ab, which we call July: then Elul, agreeable to Auguſt, the ſeventh Tiſri, ſorting to our September, the eight Marcheſuan, with us October, the ninth Ciſlea, our November, the tenth Tebeth, the ſame with December, the eleventh Sebath, named with us January, the twelfth Adar, which is correſpondent to our February: Ex Pererio.

Quest. V. When the firſt moneth of the Hebrewes tooke beginning.

NOw to know when to beginne the firſt moneth of the yeere: 1. Some give this rule, that whereas the Hebrewes alwayes count their moneths from the new Moone as Pſalme 81.3. Blow up the trumpet in the new Moone: they will have that to be the firſt moneth, whoſe full Moone is neereſt to the equinoctiall. But this rule ſometime faileth, for it may fall out that two full Moones are equally diſtant from the equinoctiall, and then it would be uncertaine, which Moone to take. 2. Some ſay that was the firſt moneth with the Hebrewes, whoſe new Moone was neereſt to the equinoctiall, whether it were before or after: Ferus. But this rule doth not hold neither: for it may bee that one new Moone falleth out as upon the 7. day of March, another upon the fifth of Aprill, and ſo further off from the equinoctiall (that is, when the night and day is of equall length) and yet this ſhall rather be the firſt Moone than the other. 3. Therefore this is a more certaine obſervation, that the firſt moneth ſhould be that, whoſe fourteenth day, falleth out either upon the Equinoctiall, or preſently after it, and ſo the new Moone of the firſt moneth will fall out, neither before the eight day of March nor after the fifth day of Aprill. Whence it is evident, that the firſt moneth of the Hebrewes is never all within March; it may ſometimes be all without March, though not all without Aprill; as when the Hebrewes every third yeere put in a moneth to make the yeere to agree with the courſe of the Sunne, ſo that they had two Adars, as it might be two Februaries together: then the latter Adar being menſis intercalaris, the moneth put between, concurring with March, the firſt moneth began with April, but for the moſt part their firſt moneth was part of March and part of April.

Quest. VI. Why the Lambe was commanded to be prepared foure dayes before.

Verſ.3. IN the tenth of this moneth, let every man take unto him a lambe, &c. They were commanded to ſet apart the paſchall lambe foure dayes afore for theſe cauſes. 1. Leſt that if they had delayed it till the inſtant of their departure, they might by reaſon of other buſineſſe have forgotten it. 2. That in this while they might ſee whether there were any blemiſh or defect in the lambe. 3. That they might by the ſight of the lambe be ſtirred up to a thankfull remembrance of their deliverance expected, to confirme them in the aſſured confidence of Gods aſſiſtance, againſt the Egyptians, that whereas they abhorred all theſe which did kill ſheepe, either for meat or ſacrifice, or any other cattell which they ſuperſtitiouſly adored, yet the Iſraelites did foure dayes ſet apart their paſchall lambes, to that end, without danger, or hurt intended by the Egyptians: Petrarius. Ferus. 2. This preparation of the lambe foure dayes before was peculiar only for this time and firſt paſſeover: becauſe afterward the cauſe was taken neither was there feare leſt they ſhould forget to take a Lambe for the Paſſeover; and beſide they had no time to examine the wants and defects of the Lambe, being experienced by their daily ſacrifices, how to make choice of the fitteſt beaſts: therefore where the law of the Paſſeover is repeated, as Levit. 23. Deut. 16. the rite of preparing the Lambe foure dayes before is omitted. 3. Ioſephus is here found to be in an error, that ſaith the lambe was to be prepared upon the 13. day againſt the 14. when as it is manifeſtly expreſſed, that it was to be ſet apart upon the tenth day: Perer.

Quest. VII. Whether a Lambe were killed in every houſe, and how many went to the eating of a Lambe.

Every man according to the houſe of the fathers, &c. 1. This name of houſe in Scripture is diverſly taken: ſometime it ſignifieth all the nation of Iſrael, which is called the houſe of Iacob, Pſal. 114. ſometime for a whole tribe, as the houſe of Iudah, the houſe of Levi. But here it is taken more ſtrictly, for every family contained in their ſeverall houſes, as appeareth, verſ. 4. where one houſhold or family is too little for the eating of a lambe, there two neighbours were to joyne together. 2. Every particular man is not charged to provide a lambe, but the maſters of the families onely: Ferus. 3. Yet not every maſter did provide a lambe, as where the houſhold was too little, for in that caſe they were to joyne with their neighbours; which was done in two reſpects, both in regard of the povertie of ſuch as were not able to provide a lambe; and leſt that if in every ſmall family, they ſhould kill a lambe, ſomewhat thereof muſt remaine untouched, which was againſt the law of the Paſſeover: neither were there more than one lambe killed in any one houſe. 4. What number was allowed to the eating of a lambe is uncertaine: The Hebrewes thinke that tenne were allotted to a lambe; but that ſeemeth not to be generally obſerved: for families were not all of one bigneſſe, nor every mans ſtomacke and eating alike: yet Ioſephus ſeemeth to confirme this opinion of the Hebrewes, who writeth, that Ceſtius the Governour of Judea being deſirous to certifie Nero of the number of the Jewes, dealt with the high Prieſt, who by the number of the paſchall lambes which were killed, amounting unto two hundred fiftie and ſix thouſand, and counting ten to every lambe, he gathered the whole ſumme of thirtie hundred thouſand, and ſeventie thouſand, that were gathered together at the celebration of the Paſſeover, Ioſeph. lib. 7. de bello Iud. cap. 17.

Quest. VIII. Whether beſide the paſchall lambe there were any other ſolemne ſacrifices.

NOw whether beſide theſe particular lambes which were ſlaine in every houſe, there was beſide ſome publike ſolemne ſacrifice, it may be queſtioned. But it is not like that there was any ſuch at this time, becauſe Moſes did ſo propound his requeſt unto Pharaoh, that they might goe three dayes journey to offer ſacrifice unto God in the wilderneſſe: therefore it is not like that they kept any publike ſolemne ſervice of God in Egypt: afterward in the time of Hezekiah and Ioſias there were many ſolemne ſacrifices offered at the Paſſeover, but they muſt be diſtinguiſhed from the Paſſeover it ſelfe, which was eaten on the firſt day at night; but theſe ſolemne ſacrifices were offered on the 15. day, the firſt ſolemne day of the feaſt, Sanctor.

Quest. IX. Of the divers acceptations of the word evening.

And they ſhall kill it in the twilight, or betweene the evenings. It is to be conſidered, that the word veſpera, evening, is taken two wayes: 1. properly for the ſpace betweene the Sun ſet and the ſhutting in of the day light altogether, as Iudg. 19 9. it is called the lodging of the day, and verſ. 14. the going downe of the Sunne: and this may appeare both by the derivation of the Latine word veſpera, which is derived of veſper, which is Venus ſtarre, and both goeth before the Sunne riſe, thereof called Lucifer the day ſtarre, and followeth immediatly his ſetting, and is alſo called Veſper, or Heſperus, after the Greeke: beſide, the Hebrew word ghereb ſignifieth a commixtion, when as the day light and the darkneſſe ſeeme to be mingled together: ſo that properly the evening ſignifieth the twilight: which at Jeruſalem where the pole is elevated almoſt 32. degrees, continueth about the ſpace of an houre and 25. minutes. The evening is taken more generally, and ſo ſometime it ſignifieth all the time from the declining of the Sunne in the afternoone, till the ſetting thereof: ſometime it ſignifieth the whole night, as Gen. 1. 5. The evening and morning were of the firſt day; the beginning of the day and the night are taken for the whole: Thoſtat. Iun. It ſignifieth alſo ſometime the latter part of the night toward the morning, as when it is ſaid, Matth. 28. 1. that in the evening, ὀψὲ, of the Sabbath when the firſt day of the weeke began to dawne, Mary Magdalene and the other Mary came to ſee the Sepulchre; Marke readeth, that they came very early in the morning.

Perer. taketh exception here to Thoſtatus, affirming that in the firſt place the evening is taken for the day, being the end thereof, and the morning for the night, being the end alſo thereof: and in the ſame place the word ἐπιφωσκουσα, dawning, ſignifieth the beginning of the next day, which the Jewes did alſo reckon from the evening: as Luke 23. 54. the ſame word is uſed where the Evangeliſt ſaith: And that day was the preparation and the Sabbath appeared or dawned, ἐπέφωσκεν.

Ferus. 1. The evening is rather taken for the night, both becauſe there was darkneſſe before there was light, and ſo the night was firſt and then the day; as alſo becauſe in Scripture the civill day is counted from evening to evening: Iun. and the beginning of a thing is more properly taken for the whole then the end. 2. It is not denied, but that the word dawning is ſometime taken for approching or drawing neere: but ſeeing S. Marke expoundeth S. Matthewes ὀψὲ, evening, by the word πρωΐ, morning, it cannot be avoided, but that S. Matthew meaneth the morning; and till the morning of the third d Christ was not risen: therefore Pererius without cause findeth fault here with Thostatus: yet notwi standing in this place, the eventide or twilight is not taken any of these three waies, but properly for t shutting in of the day.

QUEST. X. Of the time when the Passeover should be killed, betweene the two evenings.

BUt what should be here meant by the two evenings, there are divers opinions. 1. Some take these t evenings for the two twilights of the evening and morning: Lippoman. But that cannot be, for so alloweth the whole night for the killing of the paschall lambe, which was to bee counted with the f teenth day following, whereas they are commanded to kill the Passeover on the 14. day at even. 2. M sius in 5. Iosua, reporteth this to be the opinion of most of the Hebrewes, that the evening is to be tak from the first declining of the sunne in the afternoone untill it set: and they are the two evenings, t first when the sunne beginneth to turne in the afternoone, the other when it is in the setting; so al Rabbi Salomon. But this seemeth to be somewhat hard to take halfe the day for the evening: for after t sunne beginneth to decline, there is much day behind, as it is called *Gen.*29.7. (haiom gadol) which c not be said to be any part of the evening. 3. Some doe take these two evenings, the one to begin at t sunne set, the other when it beginneth to be night, and the space betweene which we call the twilight be those two evenings: Aben Ezra, Oleaster, Borrh. Which space they define to containe about houre and a third part: Pelican. But this interpretation cannot hold, for after the sunne set, began t 15. day to be counted, when they were first to eat unleavened bread, Levit. 29.9. which was upon the e of the fourteenth day, chap. 12.18. that is, presently following the 14. day: but they were to kill t paschall lambe upon the 14. day, before the 15. day came, so the times must be distinguished betwee the killing of the lambe, which was betweene the two eventides upon the 14. day, and the eating there with unleavened bread, which was in the evening following after the sunne set: Perer. 4. Wherefo there remaineth a fourth exposition, which is this: They divided the naturall day, from sun to sun int foure parts, which each of them containeth three houres, and the first part was from the breake of day, f the three first houres, and was called of the last houre, tertia, the third houre, the second part, sexta, t sixth houre, the third nona, the ninth houre; and the fourth from thence unto night, and was called e spera. the evening: the first evening was toward the sunne set, some two houres before, Cæsarum, or three and the other at the sun set: in this space they were to kill the paschall lambe: of this opinion is Iosephus a most expert aud skilfull man in the Jewish rites and observations: who writeth that the Priests used t kill the paschall sacrifice, from the ninth houre to the eleventh, *lib.*7.*de bel. Iud.c.*17. and it seemeth that i the twelfth houre, which was the last, they did rost and dresse the lambe, and after sun set eat it. And thi interpretation may be thus further confirmed: 1. Because they were to kill the paschall lambe on the 1 day; but after the sunne was set the fifteenth day began: Perer. 2. If they should not have killed t lambe till the sunne set, they should not seeme to have sufficient time, the night then comming upon them to kill the lambe dresse and prepare it. 3. The example of our Saviour doth warrant it, who sent his Dis ples before the evening to prepare the Passeover, and when even was come he sate downe with the twe to eat it, Matth. 26.14. The Passeover was killed and made readie before the evening came: Mat 4. Beside, the phrase of Scripture doth also approve and justifie this interpretation; for when as our S viour fed the five thousand, before they sat downe, it is said, the even was come, *Matth.*14.11. when the was not yet set: for the time would not then have served to have placed them all upon the ground and g ven them all bread, there being so few servitors, none but Christs Disciples; and beside S. Marke saith t was done when the day was farre spent, ὄψιας πολλῆς γενομένης, *chap.*6.35. This then was one evening when t sunne began to draw low: then afterward it is said, When the evening was come, Christ was in the taine alone, *Matth.*14.23. this was the other evening when the sunne was set: Perer. Iun. Simler.

QUEST. XI. Whether the Passeover was killed in the first evening when the foureteenth day began or the latter.

BUt whereas the Hebrewes counted the dayes, and so observed their Feasts, from evening to eve so that every day civill had two evenings, the one where it began, the other where it ended, the q stion is, whether the paschall lambe were to be killed on the evening, when the 14. day began, or wh ended. But it doth evidently appeare, that was to be killed in the end of the 14. day, and so in the l evening, and not in the first. 1. Because they were commanded to eat unleavened bread in the end of 14. day at even, *chap.*12.18. when the fifteenth day began, for they were not to eat unleavened brea the fifteenth day, *Levit.*13.6. But if they were to take the first evening, when the fourteenth day be then they were to eat unleavened bread all the 14. day. 2. Againe, it is said that they should eat the the same night with unleavened bread: that is, the same night after they killed the Passeover, but if killed it the evening before, when the 14. day began, then they did eat unleavened bread upon the day, and so eight dayes in all: for from the evening before the 14 day, till the evening after the 21. are eight dayes: but they were commanded onely to eat unleavened bread seven dayes, from the 14. e till the 21. day at even, *chap.*12.18. 3. Beside, the practice of our Saviour Christ sheweth how the P over was to bee kept according to the law: hee did eat the Passeover the same night wherein he was traied, 1 *Cor.*11.23. and the next day he suffered, which was the 15. day of the moneth: for it is the g rall received opinion that Christ suffered upon the 15. day of the first moneth, insomuch that Bede Beda lib. de ra-tion. temp. Nulli licet dubitare Christiano: No Christian ought to doubt thereof: it must be then of all confessed Christ in all respects observed the law: if he suffered upon the 15. day, and the eve before eat the Passeover, being immediately before prepared and made readie for him, then the Passeover was killed, not on the eve that began the fourteenth day, but on the evening that ended it. This onely doubt there is in our Saviours example, that the Passeover is said to be prepared for him upon the first day of unleavened bread, which was the 15. day, Matth.26.17. which if it were so, then did he not eat the Passeover upon the 14. day. But heere the answer is, that because the same night began the Feast of unleavened bread when they killed the Passeover, and the Romans used to count the night with the day before going, it is therefore according to that common account, then in use among the Jewes, called the first day of unleavened bread, beginning at the evening following: Brent.

QUEST. XII. Whether it were not indifferent to use a Lambe or a goate for the Passeover.

Vers. 5. YE shall take it of the lambs, or of the kids. 1. Some thinke that it was lawfull to offer not onely lambs and goates for the pasch, but calves also and bullocks, as it is prescribed, Deut. 16. 2. Thou shalt offer the Passeover unto the Lord thy God of thy sheepe and bullocks; and they give this reason because some families might be so great, that one lambe would not suffice them, and therefore they would chuse a beast according to their eating, Cont. 1. If any other beast beside a lambe or goate had been permitted, the Lord would not in the institution of the Passeover, which is commanded in respect so precisely to bee kept, have omitted it. 2. In the place, Deut.16. he meaneth not the Passeover lambe, but other sacrifices, which they offered during that solemnitie, that they might take them of sheepe or bullocks. 3. Though the familie were never so great, one lambe might suffice for every particular part: it was not provided to fill their bellies, it was lawfull for them afterwards to eat other flesh: but it was prescribed to be used as a sacramentall commemoration of their deliverance, and so to profit rather for their soules than their bodies. 2. Paulus Burgensis is of opinion, that it was not lawfull for the Hebrewes at any time, neither then nor after to take a goate for their Passeover, but onely a lambe. 1. For in that moneth, the sun being in that signe Aries, the Lord by slaying of an hee or ram lambe would signifie that he would therein judge the Egyptian gods, who superstitiously worshipped rammes and sheepe. 2. This also better shadowed forth Christ, who is called the lambe that tooke away the sinne of the world, not the goate. 3. Therefore the meaning of the words is, that they shall take a lambe from the flocke, where there were mingled together both sheepe and goats, to signifie that Christ tooke his flesh both from righteous and unrighteous progenitors, that no man should despaire of forgivenesse. Cont. 1. If that were the reason, why a lambe was appointed, a ramme had beene fitter, that was knowne, to shew the judgement of God upon the rams the Egyptian gods, than a lambe. 2. Christ is called the lambe, because of his innocencie, and for that, though at this time, he that had not a lambe might take a goat, yet afterward they did altogether use lambs for the Passeover. 3. And to what end should sheepe and goats bee mingled together in one flocke? what if the lambe were taken out of a flocke, where no goates were, was it therefore unfit for the Passeover. 4. Against this conceit of Burgen. are all the Hebrew and Latin expositors, and which is most of all, the Scripture it selfe, which willeth the lambe to be taken either from the lambs, or of the kids, vers. 5. there are three several words here set, which generally signifieth a small beast either lambe or kid; then eleph, the proper name for a lambe, and ez a goat: If the meaning were, that a lambe should be taken onely, what needed any mention of the use of goats at all?

3. Some were of opinion, that both a lambe and a kid were killed, the one in every private familie the fourteenth day, the other generally of the whole congregation upon the 14. day. But this is contrary to the text, which prescribeth, that every man should take unto him a lambe, sheh, in the singular, not two, but one, and that it should bee kept untill the 14. day at even, neither at this time was there any other sacrifice, as is shewed before, quest. 8.

4. The opinion of the most then is, that it was simple indifferent, in every Feast of the Passeover, for the Hebrewes to take a lambe, if they had it, or for want thereof a kid: Lyran. Thostat. Perer. Pet. Martyr. This libertie seemeth not to have beene generall for every Passeover: for Christ who was the substance of the Sacrament is in the new Testament called ἀμνὸς, ἀρνίον, the lambe, as John 1.29. 1 Pet. 2.19. Apocal. which sheweth that the type answering to the bodie and substance was ordinarily of a lambe.

Wherefore I thinke rather and therein subscribe unto Junius, that this was a libertie onely at that time in that confused estate: but that afterward they used onely to kill a lambe for the Passeover; and generally is agreed upon among the Jewes themselves. There were divers other rites here prescribed: not peculiar onely to this first Passeover, as the preparing of the lambe 4. dayes before, the striking of blood upon the doore posts, the eating thereof with their loynes girt, and their staves in their hand, neither are these rites prescribed in the repetition of the Passeover, vers. 14. and Numb. 9. and our Saviour did not use these rites at the eating of the Passeover, who in every respect would have observed the rites, if they had beene perpetuall: sic Iun. in Matt. 26.

QUEST. XIII. Why it is added vers. 5. a male.

A male beast without blemish, a male. But whereas the usuall reading is, a lambe, &c. a male: August. qu. 42. in Exod.
Agnus, masculus, as the Latine: Augustine moveth a doubt, why that terme, masculus a male, seeing the Latine terme agnus is of the Masculine gender. 1. To this question Augustine frameth answers: First he saith that the Septuagint read πρόβατον, a sheepe, which is in the Neuter gender, and the rest will agree; but if it be translated vox a sheepe, which is of the feminine, the same doubt remaineth ſtill: Secondly, he ſaith it might be read pecus which is in the Neuter gender; but then ſaith he, Aliud intelligeretur nec ſervaretur ſacramentum; Another thing ſhould be underſtood, and ſo the Sacrament or type would not hold: becauſe a lambe beſt reſembleth Chriſt. Thirdly, he ſaith that it is expreſſed a male for the more full ſignification, all things being referred to Chriſt; and this anſwer may be well received becauſe the male ſignifieth ſtrength and perfection, which fitly agree unto Chriſt.

2. Some other ſay, that agnus doth not here ſignifie the ſex but the kind, as many times we ſay, a man hath oves and vaccas, ſheepe and kine, both which words are of the Feminine Gender, and yet our meaning is, that he hath of both ſexes: Thoſtatus. 3. But all this queſtion is moved without cauſe: for the Hebrew word ſheh, ſignifieth not agnus, a lambe, either male or female, but pecus a ſmall beaſt, noting not the ſex but the kind: and ſo Vatab. and Iun. tranſlate.

Quest. XIV. The generall ſignification of the rites of the Paſſeover.

Verſ. 8. They ſhall eat the fleſh the ſame night. The rites and ceremonies of the paſchall lambe did betoken theſe things in generall: 1. The great haſte and ſpeed that they were to make, which was ſignified both by the meat which they did eat, it muſt be roſt with fire, which was ſooner done than to be boyled or ſodden in water: they muſt eat their bread unleavened, becauſe they had no time to leaven it: neither were they to breake a bone of it, they ſhould have no time to picke the bones, and ſuck the marrow. As alſo by their manner of eating, with their ſtaves in their hand, and ſhoes on their feet, ready for their journie; neither were they to carrie any thing forth of the doores, verſ. 46. the time would not ſerve them one to viſit another, and to ſend part thereof to their neighbours. 2. The other thing generally ſignified, was that hard ſervitude, which they had endured in Egypt, which is inſinuated by the ſowre herbs and unſavory leavened bread, and the roſting of the lambe. 3. So then the celebrating of the Paſſeover, did put them in minde of two great benefits, which they had received, of their deliverance from the plague, when the firſt borne of Egypt were ſmitten, and of their freedome from the bondage in Egypt: which later as being the more principall is oftner ſpoken of in Scripture: and as ſome have obſerved is mentioned 50. ſeverall times: Perer.

Quest. XV. The particular application of the rites and ceremonies of the paſchall lambe.

1. Of the eating of the fleſh.

FOr the particular application of theſe rites: 1. They were to eat the fleſh the ſame night, not the fleſh without the ſinewes, as ſome Hebrewes have ſtrictly taken the word, but whatſoever was apt and fit to be eaten, thoſe parts excepted which becauſe of their uncleanneſſe, and unaptneſſe for nourishment uſe to be caſt away, as the guts and entrals; and they were to eat it the ſame night, after the ſupper was ſet, which was the the beginning of the 15. day.

2. It muſt be eaten rawe.

2. It muſt not be eaten rawe: 1. That is, not throughly dreſſed or prepared, as Rab. Salomon ſaith they needed not to be admoniſhed, not to eat raw fleſh. 2. Oleaſter hath here a conceit by himſelfe, that nau, which is here tranſlated of all raw, ſhould ſignifie rather broken or cut, of the word nava, and the meaning to be, that they ſhould not cut it in peeces to be boyled. But beſide that, both the Chalde and Septuagint doe interpret rawe and all other interpreters, and Oleaſter hath this conceit alone by himſelfe, this is expreſſed afterward, that it ſhould bee dreſſed whole, with the head, feet and purtenance, and neither were they divided into peeces, but as they did eat it, after it was roſted, for they were forbidden to carrie any of the fleſh out of the houſe, verſ. 46. Iun. 3. And for two reaſons were they commanded to roſt it rather than to boile it, both becauſe of more haſte, and roſted meat is held to bee ſtronger: for in the boyling much of the moiſture and ſubſtance of the meat goeth out into the water; and they were not to eat it, not thorowly dreſſed, leſt they might in the eating caſt it forth againe, Perer. 3. They muſt eat it alſo with unleavened bread: 1. Becauſe it was ſooner prepared, as Abraham in haſte, caused unleavened cakes to be made, Gen. 18. and ſo did Lot likewiſe, Gen. 19. to entertaine the Angels. 2. this was ſignified, that they ſhould leave and forſake all the Egyptian ſuperſtitions and corruptions, which are underſtood by leaven, as in the ſame ſenſe our Saviour biddeth his Diſciples to take heed of the leaven of the Phariſies. 3. It is to be conſidered, that in this firſt Paſſeover they were not commanded to eat unleavened bread ſeven dayes, neither did they intend ſo much: but they carried their dow forth unleavened, not for any religion in abſtaining from leavened bread; but for their haſte, as it is expreſſed, verſ. 39. Therefore that preſcription to abſtaine from leavened bread ſeven dayes, verſ. 14. belonged to the perpetuall obſervation of the paſch: but all the other rites preſcribed unto verſ. 14. appertained to the firſt Paſſeover: Ioſephus thinketh that they did eat unleavened bread 30. dayes for want of other, and that they had all that time no more ſuſtenance, than they brought out of Egypt: and eat thereof very ſparingly only for neceſſitie: and in remembrance of their penurie and want, they keepe the Feaſt of unleavened bread eight dayes, lib. 2. antiquit. cap. 5.

3. Of the unleavened bread.

In the which ſpeech of Ioſephus ſome things are very probable, as that they lived of the proviſion they brought out of Egypt thirtie dayes, untill Manna fell, which was upon the ſixteenth day of the firſt moneth; for in the fifteenth day they came to the wilderneſſe of Sin, where they murmured for meat, and the next day in the morning the Manna was ſent, chap. 16. 1. and 8. It is alſo very like that their bread was unleavened all this while, becauſe they made it of that unleavened maſſe which they brought out of Egypt, verſ. 39. But it is not like that they kept the Feaſt of unleavened bread, in remembrance of that penurie and want, for then they ſhould have kept it thirtie dayes; but rather it was kept for a commemoration of a benefit, which they received in their deliverance out of Egypt upon the fifteenth day, and the overthrow of the Egyptians in the red Sea the one and twentieth day, ſeven dayes after, which was the reaſon of the obſervation ſeruation of the Feaſt of unleavened bread ſeven dayes; and beſide they are not commanded to keepe ſeven dayes, but onely ſeven.

With ſower herbs ſhall they eat it. 1. The Latine tranſlator readeth lactucis agreſtibus, with ſo alſo Rab. Salomon. 2. The Septuagint ὀξυμέλιτι, which are a certaine kind of bitter herbe, Theophraſtus writeth, hiſtor. plant. lib. 7. cap. 12. and Plinie, lib. 19. cap. 8. Theodorus Gaza doth interpret it endyes, ſometime wild lettice. 3. But it ſeemeth rather generally to be underſtood of ſower herbe, not of any ſpeciall kind: Lyranus, as the Chalde alſo readeth; ſo alſo Rabbi. Ion. in reſpect of their bitter affliction in Egypt. 4. The Hebrew word is merorim, bitternes, which is ſometimes taken for the bitter ſorrow of the mind, as Lament. 3. 15. and ſo Oleaſter taketh it to be meant here, becauſe of the word before going with unleavened bread, it ſeemeth rather to be underſtood of ſome ſower or bitter thing, to bee eaten with the fleſh: Iun. Perer.

4. Of the ſowre and bitter herbs.

Verſ. 9. Both his head and his feet and his purtenance. 1. That is, the whole ſhould be roſted together, all the parts thereof, for it was not lawfull afterward when it was roſted to carue it by peecemeale out of the pot. 2. Then this was the order, they firſt killed the lambe, and did ſtrike the poſts of the doore with blood, then pulled off the skinne and tooke out the inward parts and waſhed them, and put them in, and ſo roſted the lambe whole: Theodor. Which is more like than Cajetane thinketh, that they pulled out the gall and the entrals, but waſht not the inwards at all. 3. So this manner of roſting the paſchall lambe was unuſuall and unlike all other, for they uſually neither roſt the feet, with the purtenance them off, leſt they ſhould bee parched and ſcorched, nor yet the inward parts, as the heart and liuer by themſelves: but this lambe was commanded to be roſted whole becauſe of the haſte, Perer.

5. Of the roſting of the Lambe whole together.

Ye ſhall reſerue nothing to the morning. Of this ceremonie theſe reaſons may be yeelded: 1. Becauſe this was the perpetuall law of the euchariſticall ſacrifices and peace-offerings, of the which this was one, that they ſhould bee eaten the ſame day, and nothing ſhould remaine till the morning, Leuit. 7. 15. Perer. 2. Becauſe the holy fleſh ſhould not be prophaned nor put to another uſe, or leſt any other perſon ſhould eat thereof, it was (whatſoever remained of the ſkin, fleſh or bones) to be burned with fire: Iun. 3. This alſo was preſcribed becauſe of their haſte, that nothing ſhould be an hindrance or impediment unto them in their journey, Perer. 4. To avoyd ſuperſtition, leſt they might make an idol of the reliques of the lambe, as they did of the braſen Serpent: Simler. This ceremonie ſeemeth to pertaine unto this firſt celebration of the Paſſeover, Iun.

6. Of the not reſerving of any thing till the morning.

Thus ſhall ye eat it, your loynes girded, &c. 1. This was commanded, that they ſhould all be in a readineſſe for their journey: for ſo they uſed to gird their loynes, and take a ſtaffe in their hand, when they were in haſte, as Eliſha ſaid to his man Gehezi: Gird thy loynes and take my ſtaffe in thine hand, and go thy way: for they uſed long garments in thoſe countries, which they had need for more ſpeed to truſſe up. 2. They are bid to have their ſhooes on their feet, not as ſome thinke, becauſe they uſed to put off their ſhooes, when they repoſed themſelves to their meat, becauſe they would not ſoile their carpets, and couches whereon they ſat, and from their meat they went to bed, for of old time they uſed to leane upon couches, when they did eat: Calvin. But rather becauſe in Egypt they uſed to ſit downe, rather than to lie at their meat, as may appeare in Ioſephs Feaſt w^ch^ he made to his brethren, Gen. 43. 33. It is rather like that the reſt hood of theſe kind of ſhooes which they uſed for their journy: Perer. And that they uſed divers kinds of ſhooes at home and in their journeys appeareth, in that in one Euangeliſt, the Apoſtles are forbidden to take any ſhooes for their journey (ſuch as travellers carefully provide) Matth. 10. 9. and other permitted to bee ſhod with ſandales, that is, with light kinde of ſhooes, Mark. 6. 9. 3. Theſe ceremonies of girding their loynes and putting on their ſhooes, and taking their ſtaffe in their hand, were peculiar to that time, for they are not repeated afterward, verſ. 14. nor Numb. 9. nor obſerved by our Saviour when he did eat the Paſſeover, Matth. 26. who would in no point have tranſgreſſed the law: 4. But here it is a queſtion, whether they were alſo required to ſtand at the eating of the Paſſeover, Perer. thinketh that this was none of the ceremonies enjoyned, becauſe our Saviour Chriſt did ſit at the Paſſeover, who did moſt exactly keepe the law. Contra. 1. The judgement of Philo is ſomewhat to be conſidered concerning the rites of the Hebrewes, who, as Pererius citeth him, thinketh that they ſtood at the Paſſeover: lib. de ſacrif. Cain & Abel. 2. The other rites doe ſhew as much, the girding of their loynes, and the holding of the ſtaffe in their hands, and the reaſon added, becauſe they did eat in haſte: for he that ſtandeth is more readie to goe, than he that ſitteth, and he which ſitteth hath no need to ſtay himſelfe upon a ſtaffe. 3. Beſide, the Apoſtle ſaying, Stand therefore and your loynes girded about, Epheſ. 6. ſeemeth to allude to this ceremonie. 4. And though our Saviour did ſit at the Paſſeover, this doth not proue that the Hebrewes did not then ſtand, but that it was no perpetuall ceremonie, onely preſcribed for that time, as the reſt belonging to their habite, which were likewiſe omitted by our Saviour. 5. It is the opinion alſo of the Hebrewes, that they were firſt to ſtand in the eating of the Paſſeover, in token of their ſeruitude in Egypt, for ſo ſeruants uſe to eat their meat ſtanding. And Similerus is of opinion, that Chriſt firſt ſtood till the Paſſeover was eaten, and then ſate downe at the reſt of the Supper: it was lawfull after the eating of the Paſſeover to uſe other meats to make an end of the Feaſt, as Chriſt did; and as the Chriſtians uſed afterward after the receiving of the Lords Supper to have their feaſts of loue. But it appeareth to be otherwiſe by the Euangeliſt, that our Saviour did ſit at the eating of the Paſſeover, as Matth 26. 20. When the even was come he ſate downe with the twelue: wherefore otherwiſe to be judged, but that ſtanding at the Paſſeover was a rite onely preſcribed at this time,

7. Of the girding of their loynes.

Reconcil.

Pererius confuted that thinketh the Hebrewes ſtood not in the firſt Paſſeover.

Whether Chriſt ſtood or ſat at the eating of the Paſſeover.

Quest. XVI. Whence the name pasch is derived.

Vers. 11. It is the pasch of Iehovah. 1. This is neither a Chalde word, as Philo thinketh, who erroneously maketh the Hebrew and Chalde all one. 2. Neither is the Hebrew word pascha, as Nazianzen or phasek, as Theodoret, but pasach, which signifieth a passing over. 3. Neither as some thinke doth it come of the Greeke word πάσχειν to suffer, as though the pasch should signifie the passion of Christ; which opinion Augustine confuteth in Psal. 68. which application Nazianzen misliketh not, using these reasons, Quia usus tam vox ejusse &c. assentientibus ipsis auribus, usque sanctiori nomini; Use hath received it, it hath good sound to the eares, and it seemeth a more holy name. Peter. 4. But howsoever the Christians pasch may be very well so called in that sense, yet it is evident that the Septuagint reading πάσχα derived it from the Hebrew pasch, which name is better retained, than the translation thereof, transitus, the Passeover, because the Apostle readeth πάσχα ἡμῶν, our pasch Christ is sacrificed for us, 1 Cor. 6. 7. Iun. Vatab.

Quest. XVII. Wherefore it was called the pasch or passeover.

NOw it was called the Lords pasch. 1. Not because of the passing or going over of the Israelites through the red Sea, as August. seemeth to thinke: quòd tunc primùm pascha celebravit populus Dei ex Egypto fugiendo mare rubrum transiturus, because then first the people of God kept the pasch when they fled out of Egypt, and passed over the red Sea, Tract. 55. in Evang. Iohan. For the people kept the pasch, and it was so called before they came to the red Sea. 2. Neither as Philo thinketh, because it was a festum publica festivitas, a Feast of the publike passage of the Israelites out of Egypt, as Nazianzen also. 3. But the reason is given in this place why it is called the pasch: for I will passe thorow the land of Egypt the same night, and smite all the first borne: it was therefore so called of the passing of the Angell over the houses of the Hebrewes, and sparing them, Peter. 4. But it is here to be noted, that there are two words used that signifie to passe over, pasach and ghabar, but that betokeneth a passing over in mercie to spare, the other a passing over the Egyptians houses in judgement to smite, Simler.

Quest. XVIII. The divers significations of the word pasch.

NOw the word pasch is taken to signifie three things in Scripture. 1. It betokeneth the paschall Lambe it selfe, as 2 Chron. 35. 11. They slew the pasch; and vers. 13. they rosted the pasch at the fire. 2. It is taken for the solemnitie it selfe of the pasch, for the whole seven dayes of unleavened bread, as Act. 3. then were the dayes of unleavened bread, then it followeth vers. 4. intending after the pasch to bring him (1. Peter) forth to the people. 3. It is used also to signifie the very sacrifices, which were offred at the pasch, as Deut. 16. 2. Thou shalt offer the pasch unto the Lord thy God, of thy sheepe and bullocks. Peter. 4. But here it is taken in a divers sense from any of these; it is called the pasch, because it signified and represented unto them the Lords passing over, as the next words do shew in the 12. verse. Genes. 8 circumcision is called the Lords covenant, Genes. 17. 13. My covenant shall be in your flesh, being only a Sacramentall signe and seale thereof.

Quest. XIX. What things are generally commanded concerning the keeping of the day of unleavened bread.

Vers. 15. Seven dayes shall yee eat unleavened bread. 1. The Hebrewes had foure kinds of ceremonious observations, the first their sacrifices wherein they offred bullocks, sheepe, goats, lambs, &c. the second were the holy things, which belonged to the Sanctuary, as the vessels, curtaines, Priestly garments; as also to this sort belonged their festivals and solemnities: the third sort was of their Sacraments which were circumcision and the paschall lambe: the fourth more certaine ceremoniall rites, which belonged to the cleansing and sanctitie of their persons, as in their washings, and legall purgation, in the choice of meats and garments, and such like. This observation of unleavened bread, belonged to the fourth sort, for it was a principall member and part of the paschall solemnitie, Peterius. 2. Foure things are here prescribed, concerning the eating of unleavened bread: First how long they should eate it, for seven dayes: secondly, of the speciall preeminence and solemnitie of two dayes above the rest, the first and the seventh, with the manner how they should keepe them, in abstaining from all worke; saving about their meat: thirdly the danger and punishment of him that should not observe this rite: lastly the cause to put them in mind of their deliverance out of Egypt, Simler.

Quest. XX. Why they were enjoyned to eat unleavened bread.

THe reasons of this observation of unleavened bread were these: 1. They then of necessitie were forced to eat unleavened bread, because they had no time to lay leaven, as is shewed, vers. 39. Calvin. 2. But afterward this ceremonie was injoyned to put them in remembrance of their deliverance out of Egypt, when for haste they could not leaven their bread, Simler. 3. As also to call to their remembrance the great power of God in bringing them out of Egypt, when they had no provision for their journey, for when men are best provided of secundarie meanes, Gods grace is more obscured, Calvin. & Ab. to put them in mind of sodaine deliverance, even before they had thought, that God made such speed to deliver them, that they had no time to provide bread: for God is more readie to bestow his benefits, than we are to aske them: Pellican. 5. This also did put them in mind of their bitter and unpleasant seruitude in Egypt, as unleavened bread is not so pleasant to the taste, as leavened, Calvin. And so God did deliver them from their former sorrow. Vatab. 6. It also did move them to consider of Gods providence, who nourished them 30. dayes (even untill Manna came) with that provision of unleavened bread & dow

...brought out of Egypt: Iosephus. For like as the Manna ceased when they did eat of the fruit of the ... when their provision was done, it is like that Manna came. Perer.

Quest. XXI Why seven dayes are limited for the keeping of the Feast of unleavened bread.

...the why they were commanded to eat unleavened bread seven dayes, the reason is not; 1. Either because a finite number is taken for an indefinite, as the number of seven is sometime used in Scripture; ... these seven dayes did bring to their minde those thirtie dayes wherein they did eat unleavened ... Perer. 2. Neither doe these seven dayes so much signifie, that at all times they should remember their deliverance even all the yeere long. Pelican. 3. But this is more likely to have beene the reason thereof, because there were so many dayes from the going out of Egypt, untill the overthrow of the Egyptians in the red sea, untill when, their deliverance was not perfect, nor they wholly out of danger, for then the Lord is said to have saved or delivered Israel from the hand of the Egyptian, chap. 14. 30. Iun. And that this destruction of the Egyptians in the red sea followed seven dayes after the going of Israel out of Egypt, shall be shewed in the 26. quest.

Quest. XXIII. Whether the 14. or 15. day were the first of the seven.

...concerning the number of these dayes of unleavened bread: 1. Neither is Iosephus opinion to be received, who saith, Festa per octo dies celebramus quos vocamus azymorum: We doe celebrate the Feast ... which we call of unleavened bread: for the direct words of the text are against him, vers. 15. Seven dayes shall yee eat unleavened bread. 2. Nor yet is Rupertus reason any thing worth, because they ... to eat unleavened bread on the 14. day at even, and so from the 14. day till the 21. day, numbring ... day, there are eight dayes: for the 14. day was ended, when at eve after the Sunne set they began ... unleavened bread, and then entred the 15. day: wherefore it is said, Levit. 23. 6. In the 15. day of ... shall be the Feast of unleavened bread, the 15. day then was the first, and not the fourteenth. ... Wherefore according to the words of the text we hold that there were onely seven dayes of unleavened ... kept: as is evident Exod. 12. Levit. 23. Numb. 28. Deut. 26. And whereas Rupertus alleageth this text, the first day shall bee holy unto you, likewise the eight day shall be aquè venerabilis, as well observed, no such ... can be found: but the contrary; in the first day shall be an holy assemblie, likewise in the seventh day, ... 25. 16. So that it is to be wondred at how Rupertus was so much overseene to alleage a text no where ... 4. And as there were not more than seven dayes, so neither was there lesse: For whereas it is said, ... 16. 8. Six dayes shalt thou eat unleavened bread, and the 7. day shall be an holy assemblie: the seventh ... is not excluded, as being none of the seven dayes of unleavened bread, but is named by it selfe as being ... principall and solemne day among the rest. Perer.

Quest. XXIII. Why he which did not eat unleavened bread was to be cut off.

NOw touching the festivall dayes of unleavened bread in particular: first there ariseth a question ... the first day of the seven; whether the 14. or 15. day should be the first. 1. Here we refuse the ... opinion of Rupertus seene before, that they began to eat unleavened bread upon the 14. day of the moneth ... then there should be eight dayes of unleavened bread, and not seven onely, as the Scripture saith: and ... where it is said, vers. 18. In the first moneth, and the fourteenth day of the moneth at even, yee shall eat un... bread: there the even is joyned with the fourteenth day, not as a part thereof, but as immediatly ... following: for then in just account began the fifteenth day, the first of unleavened bread, Levit. 23. 6. ... Neither doe we here receive Thostatus opinion, who thinketh that the even when they began to eat ... bread, was part of the fourteenth day, but because it was but a small part, it may be counted ... the 15. day, and so much was taken out of the 21. day, for before Sunne set they began to eat un... bread. Contra. 1. The evening began after Sunne set, and then the day was ended, that time ... that followed was part of the 15. day, and not of the 14. and that the evening began after the Sunne ... set is evident, because betweene the first evening, which was before the Sunne set, and the latter ... evening, was after the Sunne set the lambe was to be killed, as is shewed before, quest. 10. 2. That be... Sunne set on the 21. day they brought leaven into their houses cannot be shewed, but the contrarie ... is, that till the even of the 21. day, which was after Sunne, they were to eat unleavened bread, till ... the same time when they began. 3. Therefore we thinke, that not the 14. day, but the 15. was the ... of unleavened bread, for these reasons: 1. Because otherwise there should be 8. dayes of unleavened ... bread, and not seven. 2. Iosephus saith, that the Jewes kept no festivall day without burnt offrings, and ... resting from labour: lib. 3. antiquit. cap. 15. but not on the 14. but the 15. day were they commanded to ... rest from worke, vers. 16. 3. The same day when they began to eat unleavened bread the Lord brought ... them out of Egypt, vers. 17. but they went out not upon the 14. day, it was the morrow after the Passe... when they went out, Numb. 33. 3. for upon the 14. day, which ended at Sunne set, they did not goe ... forth about midnight following, the first borne of the Egyptians were slaine before the Israelites de... parted.

Quest. XXIV. In what sense the first day of the seven was called holy.

In the first day shall be an holy assemblie. 1. It is called an holy day, because it was sequestred ... and set apart from all prophane use, and consecrated as peculiar unto God. In which sense, both ... places, as the sanctuarie, and vessels, as they which belonged to the Sanctuarie, and certaine per... the first borne (which were afterward redeemed) were holy and consecrate unto God. 2. This ... holy in three respects: First, because they were not to prophane it with any bodily worke: 2. be... cause there were peculiar sacrifices appointed for this first day of the seven, as two bullocks, one

one ramme, seven lambs of a yeere old, Numb. 23. Thirdly, because upon this day, as likewise on other festivals, they fared better and put on their festivall robes: as Nehemias prescribed to be done in another festivall day, chap. 8. 10. Goe and eat the fat, and drinke the sweet, and send part unto them, for whom nothing is prepared, for this day is holy unto our Lord. 3. But here is to be observed a difference betweene the rest of this day, and of other festivals: upon this day, though all other worke be forbidden, yet it was lawfull to prepare their meat and drinke, and so it was lawfull also upon the Feasts of Pentecost, and of the Feast of Tabernacles, but upon the Sabbath it was not lawfull to doe so much: as they were forbidden to gather Manna upon the Sabbath, chap. 16. 5. 23. 19. and it was not lawfull to kindle a fire upon the Sabbath day for their necessarie use, Exod. 35. 3. Iun. But if this first festivall day did fall out upon the Sabbath then they were to rest therein simply from all labour, Perer. 4. It is also called holy in respect of the holy convocation, because the people were therein to bee called together to attend the service of God, having all other works, Iun.

Quest. XXV. Of the second solemne day of the pasch.

COncerning the second day of the paschall solemnitie, this was peculiar to that day, that therein they brought a sheafe of the first fruit of their harvest unto the Lord; this was the morrow after the Sabbath, Levit. 23. 11. Wherein is to be considered: 1. That then all their harvest was not ripe in Palestine, but onely they culled out certaine principall eares, and out of the forwardest grounds: for these first fruits the Hebrewes hold to have come all out of the tribe of Nepthaly. 2. They were not eares of wheat, which was not ripe till Pentecost, seven weekes after, Exod. 34. 21. but eares of barlie which was first ripe. Whether were they fully ripe and hardned, for they did drie the eares at the fire, and then rubd out the corne, Levit. 2. 14. 4. The word Sabbath doth not here signifie the Sabbath which was the seventh day, but is taken for any festivall day of rest, and may here bee translated, the morrow after the rest: Iun. because upon the first day of the pasch they were commanded to rest. 5. This they did in presenting these first fruits unto God both for remembrance of that time, when they came out of Egypt, which was in the moneth Abib, the moneth of new fruits, as also to stirre them to bee thankfull unto God, and to acknowledge him to be the giver and author of their abundance and plentie, Pererius.

Quest. XXVI. Whether the seventh day were more solemne than the first.

Vers. 16. Also in the seventh day shall bee an holy assemblie. Here the solemnitie of the first and seventh day seeme to be alike. But Levit. 23. 8. the Latine translator readeth thus, Dies septimus erit celebrior & sanctior: The seventh day shall bee more solemne and holy. Unto this objection diverse answers are framed: 1. It is called holier, because this day is by speciall words called a day of restraint or of a solemne assemblie, Deut. 16. 8. Wherein it being the last day of the Feast, there was a great assemblie of the people gathered together to praise God. So in the same sense the last day of the Feast of Tabernacles is called the great day, Ioh. 7. 37. 2. Others answer that it was greater, not in comparison of the first day, but of the other comming betweene: Lyran. 3. But the best answer is, that in the originall there is no degree of comparison: but as it is said of the first day, there shall be therein an holy convocation, so it is said of the seventh; There shall bee an holy assemblie or convocation: Perer. So here a question is moved questionlesse and needlesse. 4. Now the reason why the first and the seventh day were more solemne than the rest, may be this, because on the first day of the Passeover they went out of Egypt, and on the seventh day they passed through the red sea, and these two dayes in remembrance of these two great benefits, they kept with greater solemnitie: this generally is the opinion of the Jewes, and the reasons to confirme it may be these two: first, because as in the first day there was an holy convocation, so also was there on the last, when Moses and all Israel gave solemne thanks unto God, Exod. 15. And beside the manner and order of their travell agreeth thereunto: for on the 15. day they came to Succoth, on the 17. to Etham, Pihahiroth, or the mouth of Chiroth, on the 18. day there they staied, where Pharaoh overtooke them the 20. and the night following they went over the red Sea, Iunius.

Quest. XXVII. Why the seventh day is called a day of restraint, Deut. 16. 8.

BUt whereas it is said, Deut. 16. 8. on the seventh day (of the paschall solemnitie) shall be a restraint or solemne assemblie, where the Latine translator readeth, collecta, there shall be a collection; here arise a question about the meaning of these words: 1. They which defend this translation, some do expound it of the collection, which was made toward the expences of the temple: Thomas. But against this sense both Lyranus his reason may bee urged, because the morrow after the pasch it was lawfull for the people to returne home, Deut. 16. 7. and therefore it is not like that collection was made after their departure: as also Paulus Burgensis sheweth out of the sentence of the Hebrewes, that collection was not to be made for the temple throughout all Palestina upon the first day of the twelfth moneth: Pererius alleageth that place, 2 Chron. 7. 8. that Salomon, Fecit die octava collectam: Made a collection upon the eight day: but (saith he) it is not like that so rich a King as Salomon made any collection of money: Therefore Pererius interpreteth it of the solemne collection and gathering together of the people upon this day, to give God thanks solemnely and publikely for their mightie and glorious deliverance out of Egypt. But this businesse will soone be at an end, if the vulgar Latine interpretation be refused, as not so agreeable to the originall word, which signifieth rather a restraint, as even now shall be shewed.

2. The Septuagint also are as wide, which doe translate the word עצרת, the going out, when then the Feast was at an end: but this is not the meaning of the word, though it be true that then dismissed, as Salomon upon the eight solemne day of the Feast of Tabernacles sent away the Reconciliation. people, 1 *King.*8.66. having kept that day as a time of restraint, 2 *Chron.*7.7. at even he gave them leave to go: so these places are reconciled.

Therefore the meaning rather is, that it was a time of restraint, the people were kept and restrained from worke upon that day: so the word ghatzar signifies to forbid, or restraine: Lyran. Montan. Iun.
Also the first day also were a day of restraint, wherein they were forbidden all worke, save about meate: yet it seemeth that this was the greater day, being the conclusion and determination of the rest: as these two are joyned together, the last and great day of the Feast, *Iohn.*7.37. as is before.

QUEST. XXVIII. Why he which did not eat unleavened bread was to be cut off.

Vers.19. THat soule shall be cut off from the congregation of Israel. 1. Some doe expound this onely of the capitall punishment, that such as neglected or contemned this observation of unleavened bread should be put to death: and so is this phrase taken, *Exod.*30.33. and 31. *vers.*14. and in other places.
But though it be not denied that in some places this phrase to bee cut off from Israel, signifie the taking away of the life of the offender, as in the places given in instance, yet alwayes it is not: for *Genes.*17.14. it signifieth the cutting off from the societie and the communion of the Church in this life and in the next, as may appeare by the reason there given, because he hath transgressed my covenant. 2. Neither is it referred onely to the spirituall punishment, as Oſiander expounded it by that of the Apostle, that he which eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh his owne damnation, 1 *Cor.*11.29. for under the law the punishment of death was used in the like transgressions in contempt of the law: as for violating the Sabbath. 3. Therefore this sentence pronounced against transgressors includeth a penaltie both upon the bodie and the soule: and of this strict severitie two reasons may be given: the one from the authoritie of the law-maker: God that gave us both bodies and soules, and all other good things beside, hath power to make lawes both to binde the bodie and the soule:
the contempt of his Commandements is worthie of capitall punishment: the other reason is taken from the institution it selfe: the eating of unleavened bread did both call to their remembrance the beginning of their deliverance received, and was a type also of their deliverance hoped for in Christ, as the Apostle applieth it, 1 *Cor.*5. The contempt of this rite then did both bewray an unthankfull heart for the benefit received, and an unbeleeving heart for the benefit of salvation expected, and so was a renouncing of God and his religion: Iun. in Analyſ.

QUEST. XXIX. Why none uncircumciſed were admitted to the paſch.

Vers.43. NO ſtranger ſhall eat thereof. 1. Such as either were not of the posteritie of those which were delivered out of Egypt, or were strangers from the faith and religion of Israel: Iun. 2. All that would be circumcised as well servants and bondmen, being strangers, or such as were free strangers, and dwelled among the Israelites, with whom mercenary men and hirelings are joyned, because they were not their free: Iun. 3. These two reasons may be given why none uncircumcised person should bee partaker of the Passeover: because the circumcision was a seale of their profession, which they that were not of Israel had no part nor interest in the mysteries and rites thereof: and seeing the paſch was a commemoration of the deliverance of the circumcised people, they who belonged not to that people, had nothing to doe with the commemoration: Perer. 4. And whereas the stranger is charged to circum-cise all the males that belonged unto him, *vers.*48. this must be understood of such strangers as sojourned among the Hebrewes, and had their families there; otherwise it sufficed for themselves alone to be circumcised: Iunius, 5. Now in that strangers being circumcised were admitted to the paſch, it sheweth that it had a manifest reference to the Messiah: for the stranger for all his circumcision gained no part nor inheritance among the tribes: he was not counted as one of the seed of Abraham: therefore if such received no temporall privilege, they hoped, in being thus joyned to the people of God, to be partakers of spirituall blessings: Calvin. 6. But where it will be objected, that whereas there were none circumcised in the wildernesse for the space of 40. yeeres, *Iosh.*5. and yet the Passeover was there kept, that seemeth, that some that were not circumcised did eat the Passeover: the answer may readily bee made to this objection: that the Passeover was kept but once in the wilderneſſe, in the second yeere of their departure out of Egypt, *Numb.*1.1. and 19. & all that came out of Egypt were circumcised, *Iosh.*5.5. so that the infants of a yeere or two old were uncircumcised, who did not receive the Passeover, Perer.

QUEST. XXX. Whether the ſervant might be compelled to be circumciſed.

Vers.44. Every ſervant that is bought for money, when thou haſt circumciſed him, &c. Here a question is moved, whether the Hebrewes might force the servants against their will to be circumcised.
Perer thinketh they might compell their servants and bondmen to be circumcised, but not the free men: so the text seemeth to make a difference: so also Calvin, But this is not like: for though their masters had power over their bodies, yet could they not force their minde and will: as now no man is to be compelled to bee baptized, so neither then to be circumcised: Perer. The children indeed of bond-men and strangers, which were borne in their house, they were simply to circumcise, *Gen.*17.12. But there was reason for those that were of yeeres of discretion: neither doth the text make any difference in this action, betweene the bond and free stranger: for all strangers there was one law, vers. 49.
Iunius thinketh that whereas there are two things to bee considered in circumcision, the outward signe

signe in the flesh, and the inward profession therein signified, that the servants might bee forced to take upon them the one, but not the other. But as now a man cannot bee forced to take the Sacrament of Baptisme, and leave the profession of Christianitie, for the one dependeth upon the other; so neither could the outward signe be severed from the inward profession. Perer. 3. Cajetane hath yet another answer; he thinketh it was sufficient for the servant, if hee did not resist, but suffered himselfe to be circumcised, but the free stranger was to shew his desire to be circumcised. But no such difference appeareth in the text, it is but his conjecture. 4. Therefore as it is expressed of the free stranger, If he will keep the Passeover of the Lord, let him circumcise: hee must be willing to the one as well as to the other: so is it to be understood of the servant, that if he will eat the Passeover, hee must be willing to bee circumcised: he will must stand to the one as well as to the other: Osiander. Perer.

Quest. XXXI. Why none of the flesh was to be carried out of the house.

Vers. 45. In one house shall it be eaten, thou shalt carry none of the flesh out of the house. 1. Lyranus judgeth this to bee the cause of this precept, for that they were not at leisure one to visit another, by cause of the businesse about their journey: for they did one visit another, when they were commanded the household were too little for a lambe, to take their neighbour. 2. But rather these reasons may be yeelded thereof, to represent unto them the state of the people dispersed before, and now gathered in one: and because they were to roste the lambe whole, no part thereof was to be divided: Iun. As also they were forbidden to carrie any part abroad, lest the flesh should bee prophaned, therefore what remained was to be burned: Perer. 3. This sheweth that without the Church of God is no salvation, as the lambe was to be eaten without the house, Osiander.

Quest. XXXII. Why a bone of the paschall lambe should not be broken.

Vers. 46. Neither shall yee breake a bone thereof. 1. As this shewed their present haste, that their leisure served them not to stay by it, to eat the flesh, and to examine the bones: Cajetan. Lyran. 2. So the speciall signification of it was to be a type of Christ, who had not a bone broken by Gods singular providence, whereas the theeves bones were broken, as the Evangelist applieth it, Joh. 19. 3. But this collection is too curious that doe thus interpret it, that Christs vertue (signified by his bones) decayed not, though we dayly eat his flesh. 4. It may also in some sort be applied to the members of Christ, that though they suffer many troubles in the world, yet their bones are not broken, nothing shall hinder their salvation: as the Apostle saith; We are persecuted but not forsaken; we are cast downe, but perish not, 2 Cor. 4. 19. Osiander.

Quest. XXXIII. What rites of the Passeover might be dispensed with, and what not.

Vers. 24. Yee shall observe for an ordinance. The question is, whether the Hebrewes were strictly tied unto the observation of the pasch, as it is here prescribed: for the solution whereof these things are to be considered. 1. Divers rites were injoyned in the celebration of the first pasch, which were not perpetuall, such was the preparing of the lambe foure dayes before, Perer. And the indifferent choyce of a lambe or kid: Tun. in Analys. Likewise their girding of the loynes, eating with a staffe in their hand, and standing, were onely signes of readinesse for that time: which usages and rites, they did not hold themselves tied unto: insomuch that it was an ancient tradition among them afterward to sit at the Passeover in signe of their deliverance obtained: so that our Saviour sitting at the eating of the pasch is found no transgressor of the law: Iun. in Matth. 26. 20. And so generally the rites of the first Passeover are downe unto the 14. verse of this chapter, and afterward the perpetuall law of the pasch is prescribed. In the perpetuall observation of the pasch, some things might be dispensed withall, some not upon necessary occasion, the generall time of the moneth they might keepe it in the second moneth if any were unclean, or in a long journey, Numb. 9. 10, 11. As it was practised in Hezekiahs time, 2 Chron. 30. 1, 2. He with his Princes consulted to keepe the Passeover upon the 14. day of the second moneth because the Priests were not sanctified, neither were the people gathered together to Jerusalem. But concerning the particular time, namely of the day, it could not be altered, but still they kept the pasch upon the 14. of the moneth, though the moneth were changed, as is evident in these places before recited: therefore the opinion of them hath no probabilitie, that thinke our Saviour Christ did eat his pasch upon the day at even. So likewise the place, where they should keepe the pasch was necessarie, even where the Tabernacle and Sanctuarie was, the place which the Lord should chuse, as Deut. 16. 6. for all their offerings and sacrifices must be brought thither, Levit. 17. 4. and Deut. 12. throughout the chapter. And this is the cause why the Jewes to this day use no sacrifices nor oblations, Perer.

Quest. XXXIV. What ceremonies the Iewes doe hold themselves tied unto at this day.

But here further it will be demanded, what legall observations might be kept out of that place where the Sanctuarie was: 1. Here the Rabbines doe use this distinction, that such legall rites, as had necessarie relation to the place of the Sanctuarie, as their sacrifices, oblations, tithes, offrings, which were to be brought to the place, which the Lord should chuse, such could not be observed in any other place as it is commanded, Deut. 12. 13. Take heed that thou offer not thy burnt offrings in every place that seest, but in the place which the Lord shall chuse in one of thy tribes: And in the same chapter, ver. 17. Thou mayst not eat within thy gates the tithe of thy corne, or of thy wine, nor of thine oyle, nor the first borne of thy kine, nor of thy sheepe, nor any of thy vowes. But such usages & rites, as were not tied unto the place, they where ſoever, and to this day they doe, as the dayes of unleavened bread, circumciſion, abſtinence from certaine meats, faſting, reſting upon the feſtivals, and all their judicials they hold themſelves bound unto, if they had Judges of their owne. So they keepe their feſtivals in part, in reſpect of reſting from worke, but in part they keepe them not, becauſe the ſacrifices and oblations, which were preſcribed upon their Feaſt dayes, are neceſſarily omitted, being limited to a certaine place. 3. Iuſtinus Martyr hereupon very well collecteth, that ſeeing the Lord did tie the legall ſacrifices to the place of his ſanctuarie, which he did foreſee in time ſhould bee deſtroyed, his intent alſo was that all ſuch ſacrifices and ceremonies ſhould ceaſe at the time appointed: Dialog. cum Triphon. And if the Jewes had any grace to conſider this, they might thinke that the wrath of God is upon them, and that they worſhip him not aright, ſeeing that they are deprived both of the Temple, Prieſthood and ſacrifices: ſo that their caſe is harder now than it was in Egypt, where they did eat the Paſſeover, which now it is not lawfull for them to doe.

QUEST. XXXV. Whether the ſprinkle were of Hyſope or Roſemary, or ſome other thing.

Vers. 22. Take a branch of Hyſſope. 1. Some have taken this for moſſe, as Tremelius and Iunius in their firſt edition, becauſe, 1 King. 4. 32. it is ſaid to ſpring out of the wall, and is ſet againſt the cedar the talleſt tree, as the vileſt plant. But Iunius hath reverſed his firſt opinion, and taketh it for Hyſſope becauſe compariſons are not of unlike things, but of the ſame kind: the Cedar as being the higheſt tree that groweth upon a bodie, is ſet againſt the Hyſope, which is one of the ſmalleſt things that riſeth with a ſtalke or ſhaft, as the bodie thereof. 2. Piſcator doth thinke it to be Roſemarie, both becauſe for the many branches it is fitteſt to ſprinkle with, and it delighteth to grow in ſtonie places; and beſide, that which the Evangeliſt calleth Hyſſope, wherewith they reached unto Chriſt the ſponge of vineger, Joh. 19. 29. is in Matth. called a reed, Matth. 27. 48. which beſt agreeth to Roſemarie, which hath a ſtiffe ſtalke like a reed. Contra. All this here alleaged agreeth to the Hyſſope, as well as to Roſemarie: for it hath many ſprigges apt to diſperſe and ſprinkle water; it groweth alſo upon walls, and in thoſe countries it groweth up to great bigneſſe, that the ſtalke thereof might well ſerve to make a reed of to reach up the ſponge: ſo the muſtard ſeed in Paleſtina groweth to a tree: and Herodotus ſaith, that he hath ſeene milium album, which is a kind of wheate in Babylon, of the bigneſſe of a tree: Beza annotat. in Matth. 13. 3. Though it be no great matter, whether it bee taken for Hyſſope or Roſemarie, for the word generally ſignifieth ſuch herbes as are good againſt rheumes and flixes, and ſo it comprehendeth as well Hyſſope as origanum, marjeram, ſaturai, ſavorie, thyme &c. and this libanotis, roſemarie, among the reſt: but I thinke with Iunius, that it moſt properly ſignifieth Hyſſope: both becauſe of the ſimilitude of the name (eſob) the conſent of interpreters, the Chalde, Septuagint with the reſt, and moſt of all, the Apoſtles authoritie, Heb. 9. 19. who calleth it Hyſſope, having relation to the ceremonie, Numb. 19. of ſprinkling blood with Hyſſope.

QUEST. XXXVI. Whence they tooke the bloud which they laid upon the doore poſts.

And dip in the bloud that is in the baſen. Becauſe the Latine tranſlator readeth, in the bloud that is on the threſhold, or by the doore: Auguſtine moveth a queſtion, what bloud that ſhould be. 1. He will have it ſo to be taken, as though the lambe were killed hard by the doore: but that the bloud was kept in ſome veſſell, and ſet by the doore to be there in a readineſſe, to ſprinkle upon the doore, queſt. 48. Lyra hereunto ſubſcribeth Perer. 2. But what need ſo many ſuperfluous queſtions, ſeeing in the originall, it is, in the baſen, not on the threſhold or doore? all this labour might bee ſpared in ſeeking ſuch ſhifts to excuſe the overſights and ſcapes of the vulgar Latine text: what though therein it follow the Septuagint? yet the originall is of more authoritie than both, according to the which all other tranſlations muſt be corrected.

QUEST. XXXVII. Why they are forbidden to goe forth of their doores.

Vers. 22. Let none of you goe out of the doore of his houſe. 1. This was injoyned them, leſt not truſting to Gods promiſes, and being incredulous, they ſhould mingle themſelves with the Egyptians, and ſo periſh with them: Simler. 2. God could have made a ſeparation betweene them as well abroad, as in the houſe, but thus the Lord would have them to thinke, that they ſhould bee preſerved under the ſhield of the bloud of the lambe: but ſeeing the bloud of a beaſt was but a ſimple meane to defend them from Gods wrath, the ſpeciall intendment of this ceremonie was, that they ſhould with the eyes of faith looke unto that unſpotted lambe, the ſhedding of whoſe bloud ſhould make a perfect attonement betweene God and them, Calvin. 3. And thus God in commanding them to keepe the houſe, and ſo to keepe from danger, dealeth with that rude people humano more & modo: after an humane manner: Pellic. And beſide, conſidering that the darkneſſe is the Miniſter of Gods wrath: as Abraham put his enemies to flight in the night, Gen. 14. Sennacheribs hoſt was ſmitten by the Angell in the night; Babylon was delivered into the hand of the Perſians in the night: the Lord would alſo in the night execute his judgements upon the Egyptians: and have his people expect their deliverance in the morning, that they ſhould not need to ſteale away in the night, but to goe forth with an high hand, Borrh.

QUEST. XXXVIII. How the ordinance of the Paſſoover is ſaid to be for ever.

Vers. 24. Ye ſhall obſerve it for an ordinance for ever. But ſeeing that now this paſchall ſolemnitie with all the rites thereof, are now ceaſed and determined, the queſtion is, how they are commanded to keepe them for ever. 1. Auguſtine giveth this ſolution, that the paſch is ſaid to be eternall, not in reſpect of the ſigne and outward ceremonie, but of the thing ſignified, which is Chriſt the paſchall lambe, lambe, whom the elect shall enjoy for ever: quæst. 43. in Exod. But Thostatus against this answere objecteth, that some legall rites are prescribed to be kept for ever, whereunto no thing in the new law is answerable that should make them perpetuall or eternall, as the seven dayes of unleavened bread, the feast of tabernacles, of blowing the trumpets, and such like. 2. Therefore he findeth out this solution: that said to be eternall, which continueth so long, as agreeth to the nature thereof to be kept: now seeing it is against the nature of ceremonies to be kept, when the bodie is come, in this sense they might be said to be perpetuall, though determined in the Messiah. 3. But further he saith that in Scripture the terme of perpetuitie and eternity, is taken sometime not for that time which hath no end, but for a long season: as for the terme of 50. yeeres, untill the Jubile returned: for so the servant whose eare the master boared thorow, is said to serve his master for ever, Exod. 21. 6. So all the time of the servitude of the law may be said to bee for ever, untill the true and perfect Jubile began in Christ. 4. Or it is said to continue for ever, because the Hebrewes should not intermit the pash, or change it by their authoritie; but this eter-nitie or perpetuitie should not prescribe unto God, but that he might change those rites at his pleasure.

Augustin. quæst. 43. 5. Some take the time of eternitie to be understood for an indefinite terme, where of there is no limitation set: and so because those ceremonies were to continue a long time, even five hundred yeeres, untill the comming of the Messiah, it is said to bee an ordinance for ever: Perer. 6. Bu there is another sense of this word, which I preferre before the rest: a thing is said to be eternall in respect of the subject spoken of: as that which continueth all a mans life time is said to be for ever, as the Prophet David saith, I will sing the mercies of God for ever, Psalm. 89. 1. that is, as long as I live. And Anna promised that Samuel should abide before the Lord for ever, 1 Sam. 1. 22. So these ceremonies are said bee an ordinance for ever, in respect of that people who are injoyned to observe them, during the policy and common-wealth, and as long as the sanctuarie should stand: and so in another phrase they are commanded to keepe it through their generations: But now seeing their politicke state is dissolved, their temple destroyed, where these solemnities were to bee kept; that terme of perpetuitie by the comming of the Messiah, who hath brought a new law, is expired. See for Pelican, Oſiand.

Of the mysticall application of the Passeover and the rites thereof.

Quest. XXXIX. Of the divers applications of the sense of Scripture.

WE must first understand, that there are two generall wayes of interpreting Scripture: first, the na-is the simple interpretation, and then the compound sense. The first is of two sorts, either concerning the fact or thing done, and this is called the historicall sense: or the reason or cause thereof, which the fathers termed aitiologia, the shewing of the reason. The compound interpretation or sense is likewise twofold: either in comparing of the words with the thing signified, divers and differing from the words, which is called an allegorie, such are the parables of Christ, as of the sower, where the meaning is not according to the words of one that soweth seed in the ground, but of the spirituall seed of Gods word sowne in the heart: or else in comparing the things historically signified, with the things typically fodowed forth: as the serpent signified Christ, and is called of the fathers the anagogicall sense: Ba- in Analys.

Now concerning the historicall and literall sense of the Passeover, it hath beene hitherto opened:
now I will proceed to the mysticall and allegoricall sense. If this first be observed, that these are not properly divers senses, but divers accommodations and applications of one generall sense: And besides, that it is not lawfull for every Interpreter according to his owne imagination, to draw, or rather wrest Scripture into allegories, but that therein we must follow the direction and warrant of the Spirit. Now
I will descend to the particular mysteries, which are fitly gathered from the paschall lambe, with the rites thereof.

Quest. XL. Of the particular mysticall applications of the paschall Lambe, and the rites thereof.

1. Of the day and moneth.

FIrst concerning the time when this paschall lambe was to be slaine, which was in the first Moneth the 14. day, in the full of the Moone; and at even: these speciall references are made to Christ, true paschall lambe: 1. That as then the light overcommeth darknesse, and the dayes begin to be long-than the night, so then Christ brought light to the world, the light of righteousnesse, which chaseth the darknesse of our sinnes: Rupert. 2. As in March, all things began to revive and spring againe, so Christ brought life and refreshing to the world: Ferus. 3. It was a generall received opinion among the Jewes that the same time that the Israelites were delivered out of Egypt, the deliverance which they expected from the Messiah should be accomplished. Andæ. Masius in 5. Iosh. And so accordingly Christ the true paschall lambe was slaine in the Feast of the Passeover. 4. The fulnesse of the Moone sheweth the fulnesse of time when the Messiah should come: Rupert. 5. The eating at even signifieth that Christ should suffer toward the end of the world, Simler.

2. Of the setting apart of the Lambe upon the tenth day.

Secondly, in the tenth of this moneth let every one take a lambe. Like as the lambe was set apart foure dayes before, upon the tenth day of the moneth; so our Saviour came to Jerusalem upon the tenth day the moneth, five dayes before his Passion: for upon the sixt day before Christ came to Bethanie, Iohn 12.
and the next day he went to Jerusalem, Ferus.

3. The lambe ſignifieth Chriſt, as Iohn Baptiſt calleth him the lambe of God, that taketh away the ſinnes of the world, Ioh.1.29. unto whom all the properties of the lambe doe moſt fully agree: 1. The lambe is taken from the flocke, ſo Chriſt tooke the nature of men, in all things like unto us, ſinne only excepted: Ferus. It was a lambe without blemiſh, ſo was Chriſt without ſinne: Simler. A male, to ſhew his ſtrength: Ferus. of a yeere old (not above, but under it might bee) to ſhew that Chriſt died at a full and perfect age: Ferus. Beſide, Chriſt is reſembled to a Lambe for his patience, he was as a ſheepe before the ſheaver, not opening his mouth: Simler. for his innocencie: Ferus. And as a Lambe cloatheth, ſo are wee cloathed with the garments righteouſneſſe: Hierom. As the Lambe feedeth, ſo are wee nouriſhed ſpiritually by the body and bloud of Chriſt. Simler.

3. How Chriſt is compared to a Lambe.

4. The bloud of the Lambe was a moſt lively type and figure of the bloud of Chriſt: 1. As they were delivered from the temporall death of the plague of the firſt borne, ſo are wee redeemed by the bloud of Chriſt the undefiled Lambe, 1.Pet.1. 19. Iun. 2. The bloud was ſprinkled or ſtricked with hyſſope upon the doore poſtes: ſo the bloud of Chriſt doth not profit us, unleſſe it be ſprinkled upon our hearts by faith: Iohn 3. It was ſtricked upon the doore poſtes, that we ſhould at all times, both going out of our houſes, and entring in, thinke upon the paſſion of Chriſt: and it was laid upon the upper doore poſte, to ſhew that we ſhould not be aſhamed of Chriſt. Pellican.

4 Of the bloud of the Lambe how it reſembleth Chriſts bloud.

5. The Lambe muſt be eaten whole, ſo whole Chriſt muſt be receeived and acknowledged, God Chriſt, man Chriſt, perfect God and perfect man conſiſting of body and ſoule: both the doctrine and life of Chriſt: Pelic. Ferus. The Arrians divided the Lambe that denied his Deity, the Manichies that impugned his humanity, the Apollinariſts denied Chriſt to have a ſoule: or rather it ſignifieth our perfect conjunction with Chriſt: Iun. 2. The eating of unleavened bread ſignifieth the laying aſide of the leaven of malice and wickedneſſe, and that we ſhould keepe our feaſt with the unleavened bread of ſincerity and truth, as the Apoſtle expoundeth it, 1.Cor.6.8. 3. The ſower herbes ſignifie the afflictions that accompany the life of Chriſt. Iun.

5. Of the ſignification of the leaven and ſower herbes.

6. Vers 11. Thus ſhall yee eat it. 1. By the girding of the loynes ſome underſtand the bridling of the affections: Gregor. Pellican. rather it ſheweth we ſhould be ready for the Lords ſervice, as they which are prepared for their journey: Philo: as the Apoſtle ſaith, Stand therefore your loynes girded up, Epheſ.6 12. Bern. 2. The putting on the ſhooes with Gregory ſignifieth the imitating of the examples of the Saints prepared: as the ſhooes are made of dead skinnes: but this is too curious: Pellican would have it to ſignifie our paſſing thorow this world where we have no abiding City: rather it ſheweth, that wee ſhould be girded and prepared to walke through the croſſes of this life, and not to bee offended with the troubles, which follow the Goſpell, but, as the Apoſtle ſaith, wee ſhould bee ſhod with the preparation of the Goſpell of peace: Bern. 3. By the ſtaffe in hand Pellican underſtandeth the enduring of labour, Philo, direction to guide us in the way: Ferus and Iunius better, the word of God, whereby we are both guided and ſtrengthened in the way: Gregory, the paſtorall duty: but the uſe is more generall than to belong to one thing. 4. They are bid to eat it in haſte, which with Gregory ſignifieth, ad ſolemnitatem patriæ cæleſtis anhelare, to long for our heavenly country, as they made haſte to goe to Canaan: as the Apoſtle ſaith, I deſire to be diſſolved and to be with Chriſt. Some underſtand it of that feare, which they are in, which doe eate in haſte: and there it is good, ſemper pavidum eſſe, ne in præſumptione & ſecuritate periclitamur; always to be fearefull, leſt by ſecurity and preſumption we ſhould be indangered: Pellican. Some doe thus apply it: Calvin: relinquendum eſſe Satanæ regnum: that the kingdome of Satan muſt ſpeedily bee left: Borrh. Ferus, beſide the two firſt collections: Feſtinare nos faciant duo, deſiderium & timor: Two things cauſe us to make haſt, deſire and feare: addeth a third, that as they were bid thus to be in readineſſe at what houre of the night ſoever there ſhould be a cry raiſed in Egypt: Sic ſemper parati ſimus, quaſi omni hora nobis exeundum ſit: So we ſhould be alwayes ready at what houre ſoever we are to depart this world. But this ceremony betokeneth generally our readineſſe and promptneſſe to Gods ſervice: violentos eſſe & rapere regnum Dei: that wee ſhould as it were take the Kingdome of God by force, as our Saviour ſheweth, Matth.11. Iun. in Analyſ.

6. Of the eating with the loines girt and the ſhooes on the feete and the ſtaffe in the hand.

Quest. XLI. How Pharaoh is ſaid here to have called unto Moſes.

31. AND he called to Moſes and Aaron. 1. Ferus here well noteth, Impii non evigilant niſi dum judicium Dei ſentiunt: The wicked awake not till they feele the judgements of God. Pharaoh is not ſuch awakened out of his ſleepe, as his hard heart is awakened. 2. Now he granteth whatſoever they had before, making no reſervation or exception of any thing as he had done: Simler. So wee ſee that feare are the invincible weapons of God whereby Tyrants are conſtrained: Pellican. 3. Thus was Pharaohs ſeria animi demiſſio: Thus ſubmiſſion of his minde, though it came at the laſt, it came not in truth: for Pharaoh repented him afterward. 4. Not onely Pharaoh thus called to Moſes and Aaron, but alſo Pharaohs ſervants ſubmitted themſelves and beſought them to be gone, as Moſes had ſaid before, Vers.8. Iun. 5. But whereas Moſes here told Pharaoh, chap.10.29. from hence will I ſee thy face no more: not to be thought that Moſes and Aaron were now called into Pharaohs preſence: he is ſaid to call them, ad imperio ſuo proceres ad eum ablegavit; while hee ſendeth by his commandement his nobles to him. Calvin.

Here follow such questions as concerne the manner of the departure of the Israelites out of Egypt, and first of their spoiling of the Egyptians of their Iewels.

IN this part of the Chapter, which containeth the memorable and famous history of the departure of the Hebrewes out of Egypt, and their mighty deliverance from their long and grievous captivity: there are three things principally to be expounded, first touching that act of the Hebrewes, in demanding of the Egyptians jewels of gold and silver, and detaining of them and carrying them away: Secondly, of the great numbers of the Israelites, and others mingled with them, that went out of Egypt: Thirdly, of the time of their sojourning in Egypt, which is here affirmed to be 430. yeeres, vers. 41.

QUEST. XLII. Whether the Israelites asked to borrow of the Egyptians their jewels.

Vers. 35. AND they asked of the Egyptians, jewels of silver. The first question here, is, whether the Israelites did aske to borrow these things, and in so doing how they can be excused from lying, seeing they did not restore them againe. 1. One answer is, that God only commanded the Israelites to aske these things of the Egyptians, but the manner to aske to borrow, was not prescribed them, but they were permitted so to doe: so Augustine: Fortasse secundùm voluntates suas magis permissi sunt facere quàm jussi: It may be, that according to their owne mindes, they were rather suffered thus to doe, than commanded. And so sometime in the Scripture, a thing is said to be bid to bee done, which is onely permitted: as Christ said unto Iudas, What thou dost, doe quickly: Ioh. 13. which was no commandement or bidding of him to doe it, but a permission onely, and giving of way to his working: Perer. But this answer is not fit in this place, for the Israelites doe here no other thing than Moses bad them, They did according to the saying of Moses, vers. 35. and Moses said none other thing than God commanded him, chap. 11. 2. To speake to the people that every one require or aske of his neighbour &c. they were not bid then to doe one thing, and they did another: and to what end should they aske to borrow, being simply bidden to aske? for they needed not to doubt to have their asking, seeing God gave them favour in the eyes of the Egyptians.

2. Another answer is, that they did but aske to borrow, but afterward when the Egyptians brake their faith and pursued after the Hebrewes, they did not thinke themselves bound to restore them. Perer. But it is evident, that the Israelites when they carried these things out of Egypt, had no minde to restore them againe, for the text saith that even then, when they went out, before the Egyptians set forward after them, they spoiled the Egyptians, vers. 36.

3. Some answer, that the Israelites craving these things to borrow them for the service of God, and to use in their sacrifices, lied not, for afterward a great part of them was converted to the use of the Tabernacle. Calvin. But yet this excuseth not their pretence of borrowing, for howsoever after they were employed, they brake their promise in withholding them still, and not restoring them.

4. Some say further, that in their borrowing this condition must be understood, that they would restore them at their returne, now seeing they returned not, (most of the Egyptians being drowned in the red sea, to whom they should have restored them) they were freed of their promise. Simler. But all this helpeth not the matter, for if they promised to restore them at their returne, and never purposed or thought to come againe into Egypt, as they did, then was it a fraude in them: neither is it like, that those Egyptians of the meaner sort, of whom they borrowed, perished in the sea, and though all had died, yet they had children or friends remaining to whom they might have made restitution.

5. Ferus thinketh that they did not borrow them at that very instant of their departure, but had asked them before, for it is not like that they would have lent them at their going away. But there need no question be made of the Egyptians willingnesse to lend them, seeing the text saith that God gave the people favour; now if they had borrowed them before, which is not like, yet at their going away not to restore them, had beene no faithfull dealing.

6. Therefore to put this matter out of doubt, the Israelites did not aske to borrow of the Egyptians, but simply asked of them to give such things as they required: for both the word here used, shaal, signifieth to aske, not to borrow, or to aske to borrow: and beside whereas the Egyptians, as most doe translate, commodabant eis, are said to have lent unto them: yet the word properly signifieth petitum dare, to give the thing asked, as Vatab. or petentibus dare, to give to them that aske: Iun. And the same word is used 1. Sam. 1. 18. where Annah saith she had given or lent Samuel unto God: she did not give him, to receive him againe, but absolutely bequeathed him unto God during his life Piscator. And so here the Egyptians doe frankly give unto the Hebrewes those things which they demanded.

And say that the Egyptians did purpose but to lend them, yet the Israelites did simply aske them, and they upon their asking gave them. Perer. Beside, whereas it is said, that the Lord gave them favour, this is speciall grace and favour which the Lord wrought for them, is rather seene in franke gifts than in loanes.

QUEST. XLIII. Whether the Israelites did any wrong in spoiling the Egyptians of their jewels.

Vers. 36. SO they spoiled the Egyptians. That the Israelites did no wrong unto the Hebrewes, in carrying away their ornaments and jewels, now it shall be made manifest.

1. If

1. Iosephus thinketh that the Egyptians did voluntarily give these things unto the Israelites unasked, somewhat like Hebrews doubs, they did honour the Hebrewes with these gifts, Some to hasten them to bee gone, some because of their acquaintance and neighbourhood. But the words of Scripture both in this place, and before, chap. 3. and chap. 11. doe shew that the Israelites first required and asked them.

2. Tertullian lib. 2. contra Marcion, maketh mention of a certaine tradition, that after the Hebrewes were gone over the red sea, the Egyptians sent messengers to the Hebrewes, to require of them their jewels and ornaments, which they had lent them: And that Moses with the Elders of Israel returned this answer, that they would so doe, so that the Egyptians would pay and recompence them for all their labour and service in their brick-workes, in building of them houses and Cities: whereupon the Egyptians casting up their account, and finding that their wages, at a very meane rate, would farre exceed the value of their jewels, were contented that the Hebrewes should enjoy them. Now if this were so, then the equity of this fact will easily appeare: but because this tradition is uncertaine, neither is there thereof any mention made in Scripture, it is not to be stood upon, a better satisfaction may be found out.

3. Therefore first of all: this is sufficient to excuse the Israelites, that they did herein as they were commanded: and whatsoever the Lord biddeth it is no sinne to doe, nay it is sinne not to doe it, as Augustine well saith, Quod sane faciendo Moses usq; adeo non peccavit, ut non faciendo peccaret: Moses in doing so was so farre from sinning, that in not doing of it he had sinned: thus also answer Calvin. Simler. Iun. with others.

4. But the equity of this fact may further be evident, though it sufficeth only to stand upon Gods will, which is alwayes just, Et rectissimum est quicquid facit, and it is most right whatsoever hee doth: Calvin. or willeth to be done: yet divers other reasons may bee yeelded, to justifie this fact of the Israelites: before I say the authority of the Lord in commanding, which excuseth the Israelites, who were bound to be obedient in whatsoever was commanded: as Augustine sheweth by this example; like as in a commonwealth the minister or executioner of the Judge in putting him to death that is adjudged to dye, offendeth not, who if he should doe it of himselfe were a man-slayer: so, saith he, Deo jubenti ministerium praebuerunt: they did but yeeld their service and ministry to the commandement of God. Beside this justification, other reasons may be alleaged, both on Gods behalfe and on the peoples.

For on Gods behalfe: 1. He is the supreme and chiefe Lord of all, and may by his imperiall right not only give the substance of one to another, but remove and dispossesse Kings, and transpose Kingdomes from one to another. Simler. And therefore as Calvin saith: Quæ Deo placuit ad suos transferri, aliena eorum esse debent: What God thinketh good to convey over unto his, are not to be counted as belonging to another. 2. The Egyptians abused their gold and other jewels, in serving their idols therewith: and so as Augustine saith, Detrimenta male utentes ad Creatoris injuriam: they wickedly abused the creature to the wrong of the Creator: and therefore the Lord might most justly deprive them of that which they abused to his dishonour. 3. Their intolerable contumacy and disobedience in refusing so often to obey the Lords commandement, to let his people goe, deserved no lesse, than that they should bee punished with the losse of their precious substance: seeing the Lord for the like stubbornenesse and obstinacy of the Cananites, dispossessed them of their country, and gave it to the Israelites. Perer.

Secondly, in respect of the Israelites, these reasons also may be rendred: 1. The Israelites might detaine these things, which the Egyptians gave them as their wages, for their long labour and service in Egypt, as is said, Wisdom. 10. 17. she gave the Saints the reward of their labours: and as Philo further amplifieth: Non par est jactura libertatis & pecuniæ; there is not the like reason of the losse of liberty, and the losse of money: the Israelites lost their liberty, the Egyptians lost but part of their substance. So the Lord promiseth unto Nebuchadnezzar, Egypt, for the wages of his army, for the service they did in subduing of Tyrus, Ezech. 29. 18. Thus Israel had the substance of the Egyptians given them for their service. Iun. 2. Beside the labour and toile of the Israelites in Egypt, they were most cruelly oppressed, their children most pitifully slaine and murdered, therefore this was in stead of some recompence and satisfaction made for the wrongs which they had done them. Perer.

3. Philo addeth this reason also, Ut in bello victores victos bonis spoliaverunt, as being conquerers in battell they spoiled their enemies of their substance: for they were as conquerers of the Egyptians, not by stroke of sword, but by the stroke of the Lords hand, in these mighty miracles, plagues and judgements, whereby the stout and stubborne heart of Pharaoh was subdued. Simler. Phil. lib. 1. de vita Mosis.

4. Irenæus saith further: Debitores erant Hebræi non solùm rerum, sed & vitæ suæ, propter patriarcham qui præcedentem benignitatem: They were debters to the Hebrewes, not only of their substance, but of their life, for the former kindnesse and goodnesse of the patriarke Ioseph shewed unto them: who delivered the Egyptians and their land from perishing by famine, and governed the country 80. yeeres in all justice, peace and tranquillity.

5. But the best reason on the behalfe of the Israelites is, that the Egyptians did voluntarily give them these things as a redemption of their lives, and did wage them thereby to bee gone, as Iosephus saith, they gave them these things, quo celerius discederent, to hasten their departure the sooner: this also may be gathered out of the text, chap. 11. 8. and 12, 13. Iun.

Quest. XLIV. When the Israelites asked the jewels, before the last plague or after.

Another question is, when the Israelites asked these jewels of the Egyptians, at the very instant of their departure, or before: 1. Augustine, and Cajetane consenting with him, Ferus, Pererius, all these are of opinion that this was done before the last plague of the first borne; Augustines reason is this, Quomodo fieri posset, ut in tanto luctu, ex mortibus suorum commodarent ista filiis Israel? How could it be that in so great heavinesse for the death of their children they would lend these things to the Israelites? quæst. 45. in Exod. But this might be a reason to make them willing to let them have what they desired to be rid of them, for they were afraid all of them of their lives, if the Israelites had stayed still, for they said, we dye all. vers. 33.

Cajetane would gather that they had borrowed these things before, (and the Egyptians through grieſe forgetting to demand them againe, the Israelites also being in haſte carried them away) because it is said they ſpoiled the Egyptians, that is, by carrying away the things, which they had formerly borrowed. But theſe words rather make againſt him, for in that the Israelites are ſaid then at their going away to have ſpoiled the Egyptians, it ſheweth, that then they received the things of them, whereof they ſpoiled them, for otherwiſe they had ſpoiled them before, when they received the things, not purpoſing to reſtore them againe.

Ferus reaſon is, becauſe it is not like they would lend the Israelites their jewels, at their going away. But this doubt is removed, becauſe the text ſaith, That God gave them favour in the ſight of the Egyptians, neither did the Israelites borrow theſe things, but they ſimply asked them, and the other freely gave them.

Pererius thinketh, that the Israelites asked theſe things betweene the ninth and the tenth plague, becauſe when there was one plague yet behinde, the Lord bad Moſes to ſpeake to the people to aske of the Egyptians, chap. 11. 2. But in that place only it is ſhewed what the Lord commanded Moſes to doe; but ſpake to the people then to doe it, but it was not acted then: as likewiſe in the ſame place, mention is made how the Lord would goe forth at midnight and ſmite all the firſt borne, which was not done then, but afterward.

2. Wherefore I rather thinke with Calvin and Iunius, that the Israelites asked theſe things of the Egyptians after the laſt plague, immediatly before their departure: the reaſons are theſe: 1. The Egyptians ſeeing their firſt borne ſlaine, were afraid of their owne lives, and therefore in reſpect thereof they regarded not their ſubſtance: Tanquam ſi hoc pretio animas redemiſſent: As if they had redeemed their lives with this price: Iun. And as Calvin: Hinc clamor ille deſperationis index, omnes mortui ſumus, hinc facilitas illa in dando ſupellectile: Hence came that deſperate cry, wee are all dead men: hence that facility in giving their houſe-hold ſtuffe.

2. That this asking of the Egyptians came after all the plagues it is ſhewed chap. 3. 20. I will ſmite Egypt with all my wonders, &c. after that ſhall he let them goe: then it followeth in the next verſe, I will make this people to be favoured of the Egyptians, &c. for every man ſhall aske of his neighbour &c.

3. The text ſaith that they ſhall put the jewels and raiment upon their ſonnes and their daughters: that is, ſhall load them with them and lay them upon their ſhoulders: it is like then they were upon going, when they made their burthens.

4. If they had asked them before, it had beene only to borrow them, not to have them of gift; but it is ſhewed already that they did not borrow them, queſt. 42.

5. They had no colour to borrow their jewels and coſtly rayment before, for they asked them to go forth the ſervice of God which was upon their going, for Pharaoh ſaid, Goe ſerve the Lord, as you have ſaid, verſ. 31.

Quest. XLV. What kind of favour it was which the Lord gave the Israelites in the ſight of the Egyptians.

Verſ. 36. And the Lord gave the people favour, &c. 1. Some thinke that this favour was by reaſon of ſome ſupernaturall grace, and amiable quality, which was given unto the Israelites whereby the Egyptians were allured unto their love, as the booke of Judith ſaith, was given unto Judith, not by ordinary comelineſſe whereby ſhe was commended to all that ſaw her, Judith chap. 10.

2. Another opinion is, that this favour was wrought rather in the hearts of the Egyptians towards the Israelites, that the Lord who overruleth mens hearts did incline the affections of the Egyptians towards his people: and this is the truer opinion: as both may appeare by the uſe of the ſame phraſe elſewhere: as it is ſaid, that Ioſeph found favour in his maſters ſight, Gen. 39. 3. which was not cauſed ſo much by Ioſephs amiable perſon, as by the working of his maſters affection: for the reaſon is there ſhewed of this favour: his maſter ſaw that the Lord was with Ioſeph: ſo that the cauſe of this favour was not the outward all object of Ioſephs perſon, but the internall effect of his maſters affection: likewiſe this is evident to the contrary, for as it is ſaid, He turned their hearts to hate his people, Pſalm. 105. 25. ſo their hearts were turned againe to love and favour his people.

3. Yet was it not ſuch favour as Cajetane ſuppoſeth, that the Egyptians prevented the people with it and forced them to aske, as he would inferre upon the ſignification of the word Vajaſhilum, Hiphil, he ſaith, ſignifieth to cauſe or compell to aske. But neither is the word ſo taken in hiphil, but rather ſignifieth to lend, or give one his asking: as Anna uſing the ſame word, 1. Sam. 1. 28. ſaith, ſhe had lent or lent her ſonne unto the Lord, where hiſhilti in hiphil cannot be tranſlated, Shee had cauſed the Lord to aske. And beſide, what needed that circumſtance, for the Egyptians to have forced the Israelites to aske, and then to have given them their asking? they might at once have given them unasked.

4. Neither was this a worke of regeneration of the Egyptians, whereby they ſuddenly of wolves became lambes, as Maſter Calvin very well noteth, but it was a ſpeciall worke of Gods power onely at this time ...to sway their affections, for they were soone changed againe when they pursued the Israelites with all hostility.

4. And although this inclining of the Egyptians hearts and bending of their affections was Gods speciall worke: yet it pleased the Lord to use some subordinate meanes to procure it, and give occasion thereof, namely these two: the one was the great reputation and estimation which Moses was in both with ... and with his people, which reason is yeelded of this favour, chap. 11. 3. Calvin. The other be... the Egyptians by the death of their first borne, were in such perplexity and feare, that they were glad to give them any thing to redeeme their lives: Thostatus. So it is said in the Psalm. 105. 38. Egypt was glad at their departure.

Quest. XLVI. Why the Lord enriched his people with the Egyptians substance.

Now the reasons wherefore the Lord gave the Israelites such favour, and thereby enriched them were these:

1. To accomplish the promise made to Abraham, Gen. 15. 14. That the people should come out with great substance: Osiander.

2. For the comfort of the Israelites, whom the Egyptians before had stripped of that they had, and di... oppressed: now some amends is made them, by possessing the precious jewels of the Egyp... Ferus.

3. For also by this meanes, the Egyptians were animated to pursue and follow after the Israelites to their owne confusion and destruction. Ferus.

4. And hereby the Israelites were furnished with many rich ornaments, which afterwards served for the adorning and beautifying of the Tabernacle. Ferus.

Quest. XLVII. Of which Egyptians they asked, and who of the Israelites and what.

Vers. 35. They asked of the Egyptians. 1. These were not the Egyptians inhabiting out of the land of Goshen, as some thinke: because it is like if any had inhabited among the Israelites, they should have beene exempted from the plagues of Egypt which is not to be thought. But this followeth not, for such plagues as befell either the persons of the Egyptians, or their proper substance might as well be laid upon the Egyptians dwelling among the Israelites, as upon others, as is shewed before, quest. 33. in ... And that these Egyptians of whom the Israelites asked these things were such as cohabited among them, it is evident, both because every one is bidden to aske of his neighbour, chap. 11. 2. and for that they being in haste could not upon the instant of their departure goe farre to fetch any thing. 2. Neither yet is Oleasters opinion probable, that few of the Israelites had their proper and severall houses and dwellings, but most of them were servants in the Egyptians houses, as the Saracens and Mores are in Spaine, and so they asked jewels of their mistresses, as the use is in Spaine in their festivals, to attire themselves with jewels and other ornaments: and so Oleaster would expound these words (chap. 3. 22. Every woman shall aske of her neighbour, and of the stranger or sojourner of her house) of her, in whose house shee was a stranger, not of the stranger in her house. Contra. 1. It is not unlike but that many Hebrew men and women were servants with the Egyptians, and that they also had favour with their masters and mistresses: but that most of them had their proper houses, it may thus appeare, both because it is said, Gen. 47. 27. that they dwelt in Goshen and had their possessions there: and beside, whereas they were commanded to take a lambe for every house, this could not have beene done conveniently in the Egyptians houses, that would not have suffered them to kill a lambe or goate for sacrifice, which thing they abhorred: and to what purpose served that note of distinction to marke their houses with blood if the Israelites and Egyptians had for the most part cohabited together in one house? 2. The word ger, sojourner of her house, may be either taken for the neighbour or dweller next the house, as the Chalde Paraphrast, and as Augustine taketh it for cohabitation, not in the same house, but in the same ... quest. 39. in Exod. or else it may bee taken for cohabitation in the same house, as the Septuagint ... shall aske of the cohabiter in the house: as the word is taken for an inhabitant, Iob. 28. So that they had two sort of neighbours to aske of, either they which dwelt in the next houses, or ... sojourned with them in the same house. But it cannot be understood of the Hebrewes sojourners ... servants in the Egyptian houses, for mention is made of their sonnes and daughters, whom they should ... with jewels upon: it is not like that being servants, they had sonnes and daughters borne in the E... houses.

Therefore the Egyptians, of whom the Israelites asked these Jewels, were their neighbours chiefly, ... acquaintance, as they are called by the name of reagh, a companion, a friend: yet other Egyptians ... might give them, to hasten them away, as Iosephus sheweth, that the Egyptians bestowed upon them ... two reasons: Alii quo celerius discederent, alii propter vicinitatis consuetudinem: Some that they ... gave the sooner, other because of their neighbourhood and acquaintance.

As they were the Egyptians their neighbours, whom they chiefly asked of, so, they that asked were ... men and women, chap. 11. 2. but the women are only mentioned chap. 3. 22. because the Jewels and ... which they asked specially belonged to the care of women: Simler.

... though jewels of silver and gold, and rayment only be mentioned, yet they had other precious ... beside, as scarlet, purple, silke, fine linnen, precious stones: for whence else should the Israelites have ... which afterward they bestowed upon the Tabernacle? Simler. And they received these precious things in such abundance of the Egyptians, that they did put them upon their sonnes and daughters: that is, not only adorne them therewith, but loaded them: Calvin.

Quest. XLVIII. Of the mysticall application of the Israelites spoiling of the Egyptians.

August. lib. 2. de doctr. Christiana cap. 4.

NOw for the mysticall sense and spirituall application of this enriching of the people of God with the ornaments of Egypt. 1. Augustine understandeth it of the liberall arts, and commendable humane sciences which were invented by the heathen, but taken from them as the spoile of Egypt, and converted to the true service of God, and the setting forth of Christian religion. The idolatrous and superstitious inventions of the heathen, hee resembleth to the lumber, and cumbersome things of Egypt, which the Israelites did not meddle with; the Artes and Sciences to the jewels and ornaments which were conveyed over from the superstitious Egyptians to the people of God. As hee giveth instance, of Lactantius, Victorinus, Hilarius; and before them, of Cyprian, Quanto auro & argento & veste suffarcinatus exiit de Egypto? With how much gold and silver and raiment was he loden when he came out of Egypt? that is, when he was converted from Paganisme to the Christian faith. 2. This Porphyrius, as Eusebius writeth, objected against Origene, that he borrowed of them, to set forth the fables of his religion, as he impiously calleth them: Græcorum doctrinam ad peregrinas & commentitias Iudæorum fabulas confirmandas tempore subsidium sibi comparavit: He tooke as an helpe unto him, the learning of the Grecians, to confirme the forged devised fables of the Iewes. As hee sheweth how he was conversant in the writings of Plato, Numenius, Chronius, Apollophanes, Longinus, Moderatus: that of Nicomachus, and other Pythagoreans, of Chæremon the Stoike, and Cornutus, hee learned to allegorize. Thus hee imputeth that to Origene as a fault, which shewed his great learning and wisdome, that knew how to grace the Christian faith even with the ornaments of such as were adversaries unto it. 3. Hereupon Iulian the Apostate knowing what a benefit unto the Christian religion, the liberall Artes and Sciences did bring, seeing that by cruelty the Gospell of Christ could not be suppressed, did by this subtill practice seeke to hinder it: Sancivit legem (as Socrates writeth) ne Christiani literis humanioribus instituerentur: he made a law that no Christians should be instructed in humane artes: and his reason was, that they should not be able by the helpe of Logicke or other humane learning to defend their faith. 4. Thus wee see at this day, that whereas the Heathen were the first inventers almost of all humane artes: as Socrates, Plato, Aristotle, of Philosophy; Euclides, Archimedes, Ptolomæus, of the Mathematikes; Isocrates, Demosthenes, Cicero, of Rhetoricke; Homer, Pindarus, Virgil, of Poetrie; Herodotus, Thucydides, Livius, of Historie; now none of these professions are to be found among the Pagans and Infidels, but they flourish only among Christians. The learned bookes and writings of Iustinus Martyr, Tertullian, Clemens Alexandrinus, Origene, Arnobius, Lactantius, Cyprian, Hierome, Augustine, with the rest doe evidently shew how the spoiles of Egypt are now possessed onely by the people of God. 5. And not onely these learned Fathers, and teachers of the Church, have made use of the Egyptian ornaments, but even the holy Prophets also and Apostles have taken of those spoiles, as Moses was instructed in all the Egyptian learning: And so was Daniel in the wisdome of the Chaldeans: S. Paul in his Epistles citeth the saying of Aratus, Epimenides, and Menander: Pers.

Quest. XLIX. Of the number of the Israelites that went up out of Egypt.

Vers. 37. About six hundred thousand men of foot. 1. Because the Latine translator readeth sex, sexcenta millia, six hundred thousand, Pererius thinketh that there wanted some of this number: But this is not like: for seeing within one yeere, they were numbred to six hundred thousand, three thousand five hundred and fifty men, Exod. 38. 26. it is like that at their comming out of Egypt, they were not under that number. 2. Neither yet doe I consent unto Thostatus, who thinketh there were about 630000. and odde: for he to justifie this number, alleageth the corrupt Latine text, which readeth, Exod. 32. 28. that there fell of the people, which were slaine of the Levites, viginti tria millia, three and twenty thousand (which number he would have added to this summe here set downe:) whereas in the originall it is made only of three thousand; and so also the Chalde and Septuag. reade: and it must be admitted a great oversight in the Latine interpreter to reade three and twenty thousand, for three thousand: I say that Hierome followed the true Hebrew coppy, which might since be corrupted, and that the Latine is in many places more perfect now than the Hebrew, as Thostatus alleageth, is to ground an uncertaine conceit upon meere imaginations and suppoſals: for is it not like that the Hebrew Scripture should be kept freer from corruption, than the Latine, seeing that the Jewes, which are otherwise adversaries to the Christian faith, have beene most diligent keepers of the old Testament? and if this be admitted, that the fountaines are corrupt and impure, there will be no certainty of the Scriptures. And for that place of the Apostle, 1. Cor. 10. 8. That there fell in one day, three and twenty thousand, doth not helpe Thostatus: for there the Apostle speaketh of those that were slaine for the fornication committed with the daughters of the Midianites at Baal Peor, Numb. 25. where though the number agree not, to shew with the Apostles account; for Moses maketh mention of 24. thousand, the Apostle of three thousand, the right solution is, not to say with Thom. Aquin. that it is the fault of the writer, or with Caietanus and Cajetane, that the number of 24. thousand includeth also 23. thousand, as the greater containeth the lesse: but the Apostle only comprehendeth those, which were slaine with the sword, as Moses putteth together not only them, but those also of the chiefe which were commanded to be hanged, which might bee about a thousand: Iun. 3. Therefore I thinke rather with Iosephus, that there were full out 600. thousand not fewer, but rather more, for as Thostatus therein well collecteth, there numbred not long after, within a yeere and 14. dayes in the first day of the second moneth, 603550. men of warre from 20. yeeres and upward, Numb. 1. 46. in which number the Levites were not counted, who from 30. yeere old to 50. yeere made 8580. Numb. 5. 48. 4. This number also is only of these which were for warre as appeareth in the summes of the people taken afterwards, Exod. 38. 26. and Numb. 1. so that the women and children are excepted out of this number. Now according to the common estimate, they that are fit for warre in any country, are as two first partes of the whole, as forty is to an hundred, then by this proportion as 40. is to an 100. so six is to fifteene; there being then 600. thousand fighting men, the whole summe comprehending women and children will amount to 1500. thousand: besides the great numbers of other people, and strangers among them, which might make the whole number above 2000. thousand. 5. Herein appeareth the wonderfull blessing of God, in increasing seventy persons to such a multitude in the space of 215. yeeres: for so long was it and no longer from the coming in of Iacob into Egypt, unto their going out. And thus the Lord made good his word unto him: I will there make of thee a great nation, Gen. 46. 3. Iun. 6. And further, as God herein abundantly shewed his mercy, in so greatly multiplying the Israelites, so his justice and severity appeared, that of all that great multitude, which came out of Egypt, only two of them, Caleb and Iosua, entred into the land of Canaan, all the rest, because of their idolatry and disobedience, died in the wilderneſſe, as the Lord had sworne, Numb. 14. 7. Hence also appeareth the error of Manethon, and Cheremon, two ancient writers, who affirmed, as Iosephus reporteth, lib. 1. cont. Appionem, that the Israelites at their comming out of Egypt were but 250000. men, whereas they were six hundred thousand, as Moses here writeth.

Reconcil.

Quest. L. Of Rahmesis from whence the Israelites went.

Vers. 37. THen the children of Israel tooke their journey from Rahmesis to Succoth. 1. This Rahmesis is the same which is mentioned Gen. 47. 11. divers from that spoken of Exod. 1. 11. For the first Rahmesis is with shevah under ain, the other Rahmesis with patach under ain; and beside, the first is called the land of Rahmesis, the other the City of Rhamesis. Rahmesis then seemeth to be the name of the whole country from the which the Israelites went, not of a City, for one City could not containe such a multitude. Pelican: and whether that country were capable of them, is uncertaine: it is like the Israelites were dispersed into some other parts of Egypt before, but hearing that they were shortly to goe out of Egypt, they might gather into this country: the other Rahmesis seemeth to have beene a chiefe City of this province: see before quest. 11. v. 1.

Quest. LI. Of Succoth where the Israelites pitched their tents going out of Egypt.

Vers. 37. To Succoth. 1. This Succoth is a divers place from that which Iacob so called when hee came out of Mesopotamia, Gen. 33. 17. Piscator. 2. Yet both that place and this have the same derivation of the name, so called of Boothes and Tents, which Iacob there, and the Israelites here pitched: as Levit. 23. 43. 3. But this place is so named by anticipation, for it was not yet called Succoth, before the Israelites came thither; it afterward had that name given of the rearing of Tents and Tabernacles there: Piscator. 4. It is thought to be a part of the region Troglodytis by the red Sea: Simler. 5. Iosephus calleth it Heliopolis, where he saith Babylon was afterward built, when Cambyses invaded Egypt: Ioseph. lib. 2. Antiq.

Quest. LII. What this mingled company was that went out with the Israelites.

Vers. 37. ANda great mingled company. 1. These were not like to come of those servants which Iacob might bring downe with him into Egypt: for it is like the famine being so great, that had no great number of servants in his family, beside his children: as Abraham had who was able to arme three hundred and eighteene persons of his owne house, Gen. 14. Simler. 2. It is probable this mingled company consisted partly of Egyptians and other nations sojourning in Egypt, that were converted to their religion, partly of their servants: Calvin. 3. This mingling of divers other nations with the people, was a lively type and evident demonstration of the calling of the Gentiles: Borrh. Osiander. 4. Besides, whereas this confused company seemed to consent with the Israelites in their religion, and came out of Egypt with them, yet were they not truly called: for they afterward fell a lusting and murmured, Numb. 11. 4. This sheweth that many are called to the outward society of the Church, but few chosen. Perer.

Quest. LIII. What moved those divers sorts of people to goe out of Egypt with Israel.

This confused company came forth with the Israelites: 1. not so much because of the tyranny and oppression of the land, which being chiefly intended against the Israelites, might be grievous also unto them: nor yet being weary of Egypt, which now in a manner, of a fertile and pleasant countrey became barren and desolate with the late plagues laid upon it. Calvin: as for that they being moved and terrified with those mighty wonders and miracles, which they saw in Egypt, were thereupon resolved to joyne themselves to the people of God: Iun. 2. And it need not seeme strange that the Egyptians were ready to goe out with Israel: for either they through feare and griefe minded it not: or else having long time dwelled among the Israelites, and so skilfull in their language, could hardly be discerned from the Hebrewes. Perer.

Quest.

QUEST. LIV. Whether the Israelites went out of Egypt in the evening, in the night, or in the morning.

Vers.42. This is a night to bee diligently kept unto Iehovah, &c. 1. Sometime the Scripture seemeth to say, that the Israelites went out of Egypt in the night, as in this place: and Deut.16.1. In the moneth of Abib, the Lord thy God brought thee out of Egypt by night: yet did they not goe out in the very night, for they were charged that none should goe forth of their doores till the morning, vers.22. Some thinketh, that Moses gave this charge, not then knowing what time would be spent in the slaughter of the first borne, nor at what houre the Israelites should be bid to goe out: but afterward when the first borne were slaine, and Pharaoh called to Moses in the night to be gone, and the Egyptians hastned them forward, then Moses gave the people liberty not onely to goe out of their houses, but to addresse themselves to depart out of Egypt. Contr. 1. It is not like that Moses, when he gave that charge, was ignorant of the counsell of God: for the time was assigned when the Lord would smite the first borne, about midnight, which worke the Lord would not be long about: neither is it to be thought, that Moses would transgresse the first charge, neither is it safe so to imagine, the Scripture affirming no such thing. 2. Therefore Rupertus solution is rather to be received, that because the night was now spent, and it was toward day when the Israelites set forward out of Egypt, therefore they were bid not to goe forth of their houses untill the morning.

2. Sometime the Scripture seemeth to affirme, that the Israelites went out of Egypt in the evening about the Sunne set, when they killed the Passeover, as Deut. 16.6. There shalt thou offer the Passeover even about the going downe of the Sunne, in the season that thou camest out of Egypt. But this could not be that they departed in the evening, both because they were charged not to goe out of their houses till the morning, and afterward about midnight the first borne were slaine, till which time the Israelites were not dismissed by Pharaoh. And therefore the word (mogned) which signifieth an appointed time or season is not to be restrained to that very instant of the killing of the Passeover, but generally it betokeneth the time of their going out, and so comprehendeth the whole night, in the beginning whereof they ate the Passeover, and in the end thereof they departed. Perer.

3. Therefore the truth is, that it was toward day, the night being well nye spent when the Israelites departed, as it is evident, *Numb.*33.3. where it is said that they departed the morrow after the Passeover and in the sight of the Egyptians, and while they were burying of their dead, which it is like they did not before the day appeared. Beside, the order of the history sheweth as much, for it was midnight before the first borne were slaine, then there was a crie in Egypt, and, as Iosephus writeth, they ranne unto the King's palace unto Pharaoh, and he called to Moses and Aaron, and the Egyptians then hastned them, and gave them their precious jewels, and they trussed them up and laid them upon their sonnes and daughters: while all this was in doing a great part of the night must needs be spent. Further, that the type and shadow may be answerable to the body: as our blessed Saviour arose for our redemption out of the grave before times in the morning, when it was yet darke, *Ioh.*20.1. before the Sunne was risen, Mark. 16.2. so the Israelites did about the same time rise as it were out of the grave and prison of their servitude, and were redeemed about the same time. Pellican. Ferus.

4. Now how the Israelites could bee ready themselves with their cattell and substance upon so short warning, Iosephus well sheweth, that Moses had before willed them to be in a readinesse for their journey, and thereupon they were gathered as neere as they could into one place. Perer.

Of the time of the dwelling of the Israelites in the land of Egypt.

QUEST. LV. Whether the Israelites dwelt in Egypt more than 430. yeeres.

Vers.40. So the dwelling of the children of Israel while they dwelt in Egypt was foure hundred and thirty yeeres. First it will bee questioned whether the Israelites dwelled no longer in Egypt then foure hundred and thirty yeeres, seeing the Lord said unto *Abraham, Thy seede shall be a stranger in a land that is not theirs foure hundred yeeres, and shall serve them, Gen.*15.13. For if the Israelites were in Egypt foure hundred yeeres, which time of their servitude began not untill after Iosephs death, who lived after the comming of Israel into Egypt 71. yeeres, being then 39. yeeres old, and he lived in all an hundred and ten yeeres, then the whole summe will make 471. But this doubt is easily removed: for this promise delivered unto Abraham concerning the hard usage of his seed, consisting of three branches, that he should be a stranger in a land, and shall serve there, and be evill entreated, must be understood, conjunctè, not disjunctè, joyntly together, and not sunderly: that they should not all that time be in servitude, but partly they should while sojourne, and partly be in servitude: Pererius. And so Augustine giveth the solution of this place: Non itaque, quod ajit, in servitutem redigent eos, &c. ad quadringentos annos referendum est, &c. by this is said, they shall hold them in servitude, it must not bee referred to the foure hundred yeeres: as though he kept them in servitude so many yeeres, but the foure hundred yeeres must bee referred to that which is said, thy seede shall be a stranger in a land not theirs. August. quæst. 47 in Exod.

QUEST. LVI. That the Israelites dwelt not 430. yeeres in Egypt only.

Secondly, it is not to be supposed that the Israelites dwelt in Egypt all this space of 430. yeeres, as is the opinion of Genebrard, who thinketh that this terme taketh beginning from the comming of Iacob into Egypt, and expireth with the time of their deliverance and departure thence, this theſe: 1. Becauſe in this place it is ſo affirmed that the Iſraelites dwelt ſo long in Egypt. 2. As alſo, that it is not like that in the ſpace of 215. yeeres, which is the time according to the common opinion of their abode in Egypt, of ſeventy perſons they could increaſe into ſo great a multitude.

Genes. 15. In this place a figurative ſpeech muſt needes be admitted: for wee muſt underſtand not only the time of Iſraels ſojourning in Egypt, but of their fathers alſo in the land of Canaan, as Auguſtine ſaith the words muſt be expounded: Manifeſtum eſt computandum eſſe tempus Patriarcharum Abrahæ, &c. It is manifeſt that the time of the Patriarks, Abraham, Izhak, Iakob, muſt bee accounted when they began to be in the land of Canaan: queſt. 47. in Exod. But of this more afterward. 2. Neither is it impoſſible to be done, even without a miracle, for ſo many thouſands in the ſpace of 215. yeeres, to bee multiplied as is declared before at large queſt. 5. in chap. 1. And Auguſtine giveth two reaſons thereof: Si fœcunditas conſideretur, adjuvante illo, qui illos valde voluit multiplicari, reperietur non eſſe mirum: The fecundity conſidered, God alſo helping, who would have them exceedingly to increaſe, it will bee found not to [illegible] that the Iſraelites could not continue 430. yeeres in Egypt, theſe two arguments doe evidently [illegible]. 1. Whereas Caath was one of thoſe which came with Iacob into Egypt, who lived 133. yeeres, and his ſonne Amram 137. yeeres, and Moſes his ſonne was 80. yeere old at the departure of Iſrael out of Egypt; all theſe yeeres put together make but 350. from which ſumme muſt bee deducted, the yeeres wherein they lived together. Genebrard anſweres, that their yeeres are only reckoned after they begat children: and that ſome may be omitted that came betweene, as S. Matthew leaveth out in his genealogy Ahaziah, Ioas, and Amaſiah. This anſwer of Genebrard may eaſily be taken away; for neither the uſe of Scripture, when it ſetteth downe the yeeres of a mans life, to name onely the yeeres wherein he begate children; and ſeeing in that line from Levi to Moſes no other perſons are elſewhere named to have come betweene beſide Caath and Amram, it is a conjecture without ground to imagine any reaſon for the omiſſion of theſe three in S. Matthewes genealogy, is evident, becauſe wee finde them elſewhere in the ſtories of the Kings to be ſet downe: Perer.

Gal. 3. 17. S. Paul beginneth theſe 430. yeeres from the promiſe and covenant that was made to Abraham, Therefore Iſrael ſtayed not all thoſe yeeres in Egypt. Genebrard here anſwereth, that where the Apoſtle ſaith, the law which was 430. yeeres after, this word after, is not referred to the covenant, but to the law that came 430. yeeres after, that is, from the departure of the Iſraelites.

Genes. But this is a manifeſt wreſting of the Apoſtles words, who of purpoſe maketh a compariſon between the law and the covenant of grace, ſhewing that ſalvation dependeth not of the law, but of the free and promiſe of God, which came 430. yeeres before. And whereas the Apoſtles words, in that order which hee ſet them downe are theſe: This I ſay that the covenant προκεκυρωμένην, confirmed afore of God, the Law made after foure hundred and thirty yeeres could not diſannull: what other ſenſe can be made of theſe words, but that the law was given ſo many yeeres after the promiſe? for after muſt of neceſſity have relation to that which is ſaid to have beene before, which was not the departure of the Iſraelites, but here ſo much as mentioned, but the covenant ſaid to be before ratified and confirmed of God.

Quest. LVII. The Iſraelites dwelt in Egypt 215. yeeres only.

Whether that the Iſraelites neither ſtayed in Egypt under 200. yeeres, as Chryſoſtome thinketh, nor yet 210. only, as the Hebrewes, to whom Lyranus and Cajetanus give conſent, nor yet 230. yeeres, as Calvin, but 215. yeeres only, it may be thus made to appeare:

Firſt from the firſt promiſe made to Abraham, unto the going of Iſrael out of Egypt, are 430. yeeres, according to the Apoſtles account: of this ſumme there were 215. yeeres gone, before Iacob deſcended into Egypt: Abraham at 75. received the promiſe, 25. yeeres after; when Abraham was 100. yeere old, was Iſaac borne; he at 60. begate Iacob: Iacob at 130. went downe into Egypt; theſe yeeres put together, 25. 60. 130. make in all 215. yeeres: there remaineth then the other halfe of the ſumme, 215. yeeres for the ſojourning of Iſrael in Egypt: Thus Auguſtine reckoneth, approving Euſebius accordingly. queſt. 47. in Exod.

Secondly, whereas the yeeres of Caath, Amram and Moſes, when Iſrael came out of Egypt, doe make, as before hath ſhewed, all together 350. yeeres: but from this ſumme muſt be ſubtracted the yeeres wherein they lived together, as from Caaths age of 133. yeeres, who at 65. yeeres begate Amram, as Epiphanius reckoneth, the reſidue, wherein he lived together with Amram, that is, 68. yeeres, muſt bee deducted: and Amrams age of 137. who at 70. yeeres begat Moſes (as Epiphanius) the reſidue muſt likewiſe bee deducted, which are 67. yeeres: adde unto theſe yeeres 65. of Caath, and 70. yeeres of Amram, 80. yeeres of Moſes life, and wee ſhall have the ſaid ſumme of 215. yeeres, all the time of the ſojourning of Iſrael Quest. LVIII. That the Iſraelites were not in bondage and ſervitude in Egypt all the foreſaid terme of 215. yeeres.

Theſe things then made plaine, that the Iſraelites after Iacobs comming downe thither, continued in Egypt 215. yeeres, yet were they not ſo long in ſervitude and bondage. 1. Auguſtine thinketh that they were in Egypt 144. or 145. yeeres, for from the whole ſumme of 215. yeeres hee onely deducteth the yeeres of Iacobs life, after Iſrael came into Egypt, after whoſe death hee thinketh their bondage firſt began. But that cannot bee, for not onely Ioſeph, but all his brethren alſo were firſt dead, Exod.

*Exod.*1.6.of the which Levi being about foure yeere elder than Ioseph, who died at 110.yeere, and Levi at 137.survived Ioseph 23.yeeres: all which time the Israelites were not oppressed with servitude. 2. Pertus thinketh that the Israelites served 144. yeeres after the death of Ioseph, untill the going forth of the Israelites,so recompensing tenfold the 14.yeeres of Iosephs servitude in Egypt,who was 16. yeere old when hee was sold into Egypt by his brethren, and there served till he was 30.yeere old. But Pertus in two things deceived, for Ioseph was not sixteene,as the vulgar Latine corruptly readeth, but 17. yeere old when he was sold into Egypt, Gen. 37. 2. so that hee served but 13. yeeres in Egypt, neither was the time of their servitude so long, as is shewed before. 3. Some thinke that after Levi his death, who lived 23. yeere after Ioseph,their affliction began, which continued 121.yeeres. Neither can this be so, for not onely Levi and the rest of Iosephs brethren, but all that generation also died before their servitude and affliction entred, of which generation Pharez being one, supposed to bee one yeere old, when hee went downe with Iacob into Egypt, and to have lived 130. yeeres according to the usuall age then, it will be found that their affliction indured not an hundred yeeres,if the age of Pharez being supposed to be 1. be deducted from the summe of 215.the full time of the Israelites sojourning in Egypt. See before quest. 12.in *chap.*1.Exod.

Quest. LIX. Moses understandeth all the time of the sojourning of Israel and of their fathers in Egypt and in Canaan.

NOw then for the right understanding of these words of Moses. 1. A double figure called Synecdoche is to be admitted,both in the persons,and in the place, a part being taken for the whole: for not onely the sojourning of the Israelites, but of their fathers also, Abraham, Isaack and Iacob must bee understood, and not only the sojourning in Egypt, but in Canaan also and other places: Thus the Septuagint very well interprete this place: The dwelling, which the children of Israel dwelt in Egypt,and in the land of Canaan,both they and their fathers,was 430.yeeres: so also Augustine expoundeth it, *quæst.*47.in Exod. and *Iosephus lib.*2. de Antiquit. Iudaic. cap. 6. 2. Eugubinus doth disdainfully reject this opinion, with this reason, that if it be taken for the time of their sojourning, not onely in Egypt, but elsewhere, there will be found to be many more yeeres. Contra. 1. It shall even now appeare that in a precise and strict account, there are just so many yeeres, from the first promise made unto Abraham, when hee came out of Chaldea into Canaan,unto the returne of Israel out of Egypt. 2. This figure Synecdoche, to name part for the whole, is not unusuall in Scripture, as Gen. 35. 26. all the sonnes of Iacob, Benjamin being also reckoned among them,are said to have beene borne in Padan Aram, because most of them were there borne. Iunius.

Quest. LX. Why the dwelling only of Israel in Egypt is named,the rest being also understood.

THe reasons why their sojourning and dwelling in Egypt is only mentioned, the other being also understood, are these: 1. Lyranus giveth this reason, because their dwelling in Egypt was the last, and things doe commonly take their denomination from the end. 2.But these reasons rather may be yeelded first because their sojourning did not only end in Egypt, but there it began, for thither Abraham at his first comming into Canaan was constrained to flee in the time of famine,*Gen.*12.2. there was the longest time of their sojourning, the other Patriarkes at divers times sojourned in Canaan 295.yeeres, and lived in Mesopotamia 20. yeeres,but in Egypt Israel continued 215. yeeres. 3. Their habitation in Egypt was more famous than any of the rest,both for the honorable advancement of Ioseph in Egypt,the wonderfull multiplying and increase of the Israelites,and the strange signes and wonders there wrought for their deliverance. Perer.

Some question also there is,when this computation of 430. yeeres should begin. 1. Epiphanius would have them begin,at such time as the Lord told Abraham what should befall his seed,and how hardly they should bee intreated: so also Ferus, Pelican. But that cannot be,for both in that place the Lord names another summe of 400 yeeres. And S. Paul counteth this space of 430.yeeres from the promise made to Abraham, unto the giving of the Law.

Quest. LXI. Where the 430. yeeres must take beginning.

2. Zeiglerus in his Commentaries beginneth this terme of 430. yeeres from the tenth yeere of Abrahams comming into Canaan,when he saith the Lord made a covenant with him. But this computation cannot stand. 1. We doe not find that Abraham received any promise about that time, but then,when he had beene ten yeeres in Canaan,Sarah gave unto him his maid Agar,*Gen.*16.3. And by this account wee shall want ten yeeres of the whole summe of 430. from Abrahams 75. when he first came into Canaan, unto the 80. yeere of Moses when the Israelites went out, are just 430. yeeres, as is shewed before: if then this terme should begin ten yeeres after, in the 85. yeere of Abraham, wee shall want ten yeeres of 430.

3. Beside, Zeiglerus to make this computation good, committeth apparent errors in Chronologie, as that Iacob went downe into Egypt 207. yeeres after the covenant, which was 215. yeeres, and not began 10. yeeres after,as he reckoneth,then it could be but 205.yeeres; further he saith, that Ioseph was 285.yeeres after the covenant, which cannot bee after his owne account, for Ioseph lived 71. yeeres after Iacobs descending into Egypt, being then 39.yeeres old, which two summes of 71. 39. make up the whole age of Ioseph an 110. if then there were but 207. yeeres gone after the covenant made with Abraham, comming into Egypt, then at Iosephs death 71. yeeres after, there were but 278. yeares runne, not 285. as he collecteth; here then he addeth 7. yeeres too much to make his account agree. 3. Procopius, as Pererius collecteth, thinketh that the 430. yeeres should begin at the birth of Isaack. But that cannot bee, for from thence the other summe of 400. yeeres taketh beginning.

4. Genebrard reckoneth them from the time of Iacobs going downe into Egypt, whose opinion is refuted before, quest. 55.

5. Iunius and Borrhaius account these 430. yeeres from the departure of Abraham out of Ur of the Caldes, from whence to the birth of Isaack were thirty yeeres, and Iunius supposed that hee stayed 5. yeeres in Haran. Contra. 1. It is not like that Abraham being called of God to goe out of his country, would stay 5. yeeres in Haran, but that he made all haste to obey the calling of God. 2. If the account of 430. yeeres should begin 30. yeeres before Isaacks birth, we shall have 435. yeeres in all; for from the 75. yeere of Abraham, which was but 25. yeeres before the birth of Isaack, untill the time of Israels departure out of Egypt, are just 430. yeeres, as is shewed before, quest. 56.

6. Wherefore the best computation of all is to begin the 430. yeere from the 75. yeere of Abrahams age when hee came into the land of Canaan: both because, while hee remained with his father and kinsfolke in Haran, he could not be said to sojourne, or be a stranger: and for that, if we begin the account before the 75. yeere of Abrahams age, there will arise more than 430. yeeres. Thus Iosephus reckoneth these 430. yeeres, Postquam Abraham in Canaan venit: After Abraham came into the land of Canaan: so doth Eusebius: A septuagesimo quinto anno Abrahæ usq; ad egressum Hebræorum ex Ægypto supputantur quadringenti triginta: From the seventy five yeere of Abraham, unto the going of the Hebrewes out of Egypt, are counted foure hundred thirty yeeres; and this computation Augustine followeth, quæst. 47. following.

Quest. LXII. When the terme of 430 yeeres ended.

AS we have seene where this terme of 430. yeeres must take beginning, so it is to be considered, when they were to determine and end. 1. Epiphanius hath here a singular conceit by himselfe, who extendeth these 430. yeeres unto the time of the Israelites entring into the land of Canaan, as Pererius thus collecteth. Epiphanius terminat in eo tempore, quo terram promissionis intrarant: Epiphanius doth determine them at that time, when they entred into the land of promise. But this cannot be: for the Israelites continued 40. yeeres in the desert, before they were admitted to the possession of Canaan: (Epiphanius saith they were in the desert 50. yeeres, but he is therin also deceived) if this terme of 40. yeeres be comprehended in the 430. yeeres: it will follow that from Iacobs comming downe into Egypt, untill the Israelites returne from thence, are not above 175. yeeres, which were indeed 215. yeeres, as is shewed before, quest. 56. 2. Therefore these 430. yeeres doe determine and expire, at the very time of the Israelites departure out of Egypt, as Moses here saith: When the 430. yeeres were expired, even the selfe same day departed all the hosts of the Lord out of the land of Egypt. And S. Paul also extendeth these yeeres but unto the giving of the Law in mount Sinai, Gal. 3. 17. Thus Eusebius, and Augustine following him, quæst. 47. in Exod. decline these yeeres; so also Iun. Simler. Osiander, Pererius, Ferus, with others.

Quest. LXIII. How the terme of 400. yeeres foretold to Abraham and Moses summe of 430. yeeres, doe agree together.

NOw whereas the Lord telleth Abraham that his seed should be a stranger in a land not theirs, and be ill entreated 400. yeeres, Gen. 15. 13. and the same is repeated by S. Stephen, Acts 7. 6. that summe of yeeres very well agreeth with this number of 430. for this summe beginneth at Abrahams first comming into Canaan when he was 75. yeeres old, 25. yeeres before the birth of Isaack: for there the Lord declareth of the sojourning and hard usage of his seede: and even then the first manifest affliction of Abrahams seede in Isaack began by Ismael of Agar the Egyptian. 2. But from Isaacks birth unto the going downe of Iacob into Egyt are in precise account 220. yeeres, and so the whole time is 405. yeeres from Isaacks birth unto the going out of Israel from Egypt: for if from Abrahams 75. yeeres there are 430. yeeres from Abrahams 100. yeere when Isaack was borne, are 405. yeeres: to make the summe even, the odd 5. yeeres are omitted: which thing is not unusuall in Scripture: as in one place David is said to have reigned in Hebron 7. yeeres, and 6. moneths, 2. Sam. 5. 5. in another place, the yeeres of his reigne in Hebron, are counted 7. yeere, even, and in Jerusalem 33. yeeres. 40. yeere in all, 1. King. 2. 11. the odde moneths are omitted. Augustine also hereof thus writeth: Non mirum si quadringentos & quinque annos summa solida centum annos voluit appellare scriptura, &c. No marvell if the Scripture call 405. yeeres in one round summe of a hundred yeere, which useth so to set downe the times, that what is over or under the perfect number is not counted, quæst. 47. in Exod. Hence then both Lyranus and Cajetane are found to bee in an error, who therein following some Hebrewes, doe account but 210. yeeres for the time of the Israelites abode in Egypt, reckoning but 400. yeeres strictly from Isaacks birth unto the departure of Israel out of Egypt. 3. But Procopius would thus reconcile these two summes, he would have both the 400. yeeres and the 430. begin together, and that the Lord saith not, that after 400. yeeres expired, the Israelites should returne, but simply after 400. yeeres, so that the other 30. yeeres also may bee included. M. Calvin also somewhat to the same effect saith, Restabant plures anni quàm quadringenti, nempe viginti, vel circiter: There remained more yeeres than foure hundred, as twenty or thereabout: but because the Lord purposed onely to prescribe unto patience, he defineth not a certaine number of yeeres. But herein is their error, they would have these 400. yeeres beyond the time of their deliverance out of Egypt: whereas the Lord setting the end of this time saith: *The nation whom they shall serve will I judge, and afterward shall they come out with great substance, Gen.*15. 14. then immediately after the expiration of these 400. yeeres, the Israelites must come forth of the land of their bondage with great substance.

the

Quest. LXIV. When the 400. yeeres prefixed to Abraham must take their beginning.

NOw concerning the beginning of these 430. yeeres, here commeth to be examined and discussed a singular and private opinion of Zeiglerus, who beginneth the account of these 430. yeeres, from the 10. yeere of Abrahams sojourning in Canaan, 15. yeeres before the birth of Isaac, and he endeth them in the tenth yeere of Moses exile in the land of Midian, where he continued 40. yeeres, when hee saith the captivity of Israel should have ceased: but because Moses would have prevented the time, and delivered Israel ten yeeres before, when he slew the Egyptian, the Lord did punish his presumption with 40. yeeres exile, and deferred the deliverance of Israel 30. yeeres longer, both to fulfill the 40. yeeres of his penance, and because the Lord purposed to appoint no other Captaine of his people, but Moses. Thus we reade that the Lord hath observed this proportion and number of forty at other times, also for the time of penance, as the Israelites wandred 40. yeeres in the wildernesse: it rained 40. dayes upon the old world: 40. dayes are set for the repentance of Niniveh: sic Zeigler.

Contra. 1. This terme of 400. yeeres limited for the sojourning and servitude of Abrahams seede, cannot begin before Abraham had seede, and therefore not 15. yeeres before the birth of Isaac. 2. Gods purpose and determination altereth not, mans infirmity cannot make the counsell of God of none effect: therefore seeing the Lord, who foreseeth all things, did set unto Abraham this terme of 400. yeeres, hee no doubt most faithfully kept his promise, and as he had decreed, so after 400. yeeres expired he delivered his seede from their oppressors. 3. Moses act in killing the Egyptian was an act of faith, not of presumption: as both S. Stephen witnesseth, Acts 7. 25. Hee supposed his brethren would have understood, that God by his hand should give them deliverance: as also the Apostle to the *Heb.*11. 25. By faith Moses when he was come to age refused to be called the sonne of Pharaohs daughter, and chose rather to suffer adversity with the people of God: and againe *vers.*27. By faith he forsooke Egypt, &c. If Moses then of faith shewed himselfe to be the deliverer of his people, as when he killed the Egyptian, and cares not for the favour and honour of Pharaohs court, then was it not a presumptuous act, for the which he should be punished. 4. And how standeth it with Gods justice to punish all the people of Israel with the captivity of 30. yeeres longer for the sinne and presumption of one man, if Moses had offended and trespassed therein? 5. Neither is that observation of forty perpetuall: neither David for his sinne, nor Peter for his deniall of Christ, nor the incestuous young man among the Corinthians were injoyned any such time of penance: and Nebuchadnezzars time of repentance farre exceeded this proportion which continued seven yeeres, Dan. 4. 20. for true repentance is not measured by the number of dayes, but by the weight of the contrition and sorrow of heart: neither is it found in Scripture, that any one man had 40. dayes penance imposed upon him. There was another reason of the 40. yeeres wandring of Israel in the desert: for according to the time wherein the spies searched the land, which was 40. dayes, they have a yeere set for a day for the punishment of the sinne of the spies in raising a slander upon that good land (all but Caleb and Iosuah) and of the people in giving no credit unto them: see *Numb.*14. 34.

Quest. LXV. The time of the Hebrewes departure out of Egypt compared with the Chronology of the Heathen.

NOw in the last place it shall bee declared how this time of the departing of Israel agreeth with the forren computations, according to the Chronology of the Heathen. 1. They therefore observe five notable periods of times, from whence they use to make supputation of their yeeres: from the monarchy of Ninus and Semiramis in Abrahams time: from the floud of Ogyges, and from Inachus, and Thomas about the time of the Patriarke Iacob: from the battell of Troy, which fell out in Samsons dayes, or under Heli the high Priest: from the beginning of the Olympiades which began in the 8. yeere of the reigne of Ahaz: from the building of Rome in the 1. yeere of the seventh Olympiade, which concurreth with the 16. yeere of the reigne of Hesekiah.

2. According then to these divers kindes of computations, there are also divers opinions concerning the time of Israels departure out of Egypt. Apion the Gramarian a professed adversary to the Jewes against whom Iosephus wrote two bookes, will have Moses to bring the Israelites out of Egypt, in the time of the seventh Olympiade when the City Carthage was built by the Tyrians in Africa: this Josephus reporteth the opinion of Apion in his 2. booke. But this to bee apparantly false Iosephus shewes, proving that the Temple of Salomon was built 143. yeeres before Carthage, and the Israelites came out of Egypt 480. yeeres before that, 1. *King.*6. 1. so that their leaving of Egypt was above 600. yeeres before the building of Carthage.

3. As Apion commeth farre short in his computation, so Porphyrius goeth as much beyond: who in the fourth booke of those which hee wrote against the Christians, will have Moses to be before the time of Semiramis, which is a grosse error: for it is without all question, that Abraham was borne under the monarchy of Ninus; and from Abrahams birth untill the deliverance of Israel out of Egypt are 505. yeeres, whereof an 100. are counted from Abrahams birth to Isaacs: and 405. from thence unto Israels redemption, as hath beene shewed.

4. *Lactantius lib.*4. *cap.*5. thinketh that Moses was 900. yeeres before the battell of Troy: which will be found, that he was only 356. yeeres or thereabout elder than those times.

5. Mo-

3. Manethon an ancient Writer of the Egyptian affaires maketh Moses more ancient by 393. yeeres, then when Danaus went to Argos, that is, about a thousand yeeres before the battell of Troy. But that cannot bee, seeing the Trojan warre is held to have beene in the time of Sampson or Heli, not above 356. yeeres after the returne of the Hebrewes out of Egypt.

4. Some Christian Writers thinke that the Hebrewes were delivered out of the Egyptian Captivity in the time of Ogyges floud, as Iustinus Martyr, Clemens Alexandrinus, 1. lib. Stromatum Iulian Africanus. But that is not like, for the same Iulian African. by the testimony of divers Heathen Writers sheweth that Ogyges floud was 1020. yeeres before the beginning of the Olympiades. But from the departure of Israel out of Egypt, untill the Olympiades began, which was in the 8. yeere of the reigne of Ahaz, are counted 764. yeere, or thereabout: so that Moses should bee above two hundred and fifty yeeres after Ogyges floud.

5. This is then the right computation, compared with the Chronology of the Heathen, that the deliverance of Israel out of Egypt was 356. yeere before the Trojan battell: and 764. yeeres before the Olympiades: 788. yeeres before the building of Rome: 910. yeeres before the Captivity of Babylon: 960. yeeres before the reigne of Cyrus: 1200. yeeres before Alexander the Great: 1496. yeeres before Herod, under whose reigne Christ was borne. And according to the sacred Chronologie, this redemption of Israel from the Egyptian bondage was 2453. yeeres after the creation of the world: 797. yeeres after Noahs floud: 505. yeeres after the death of the Patriarke: Ioseph 480. yeeres before the building of Salomons Temple; and 1536. yeeres before the birth of our blessed Lord and Saviour Christ Iesus. Iunius Perer.

4. Places of doctrine.

1. Doct. How the Lords holy dayes should be kept.

Vers. 16. IN the first day shall be an holy convocation. The word is mikra, which also signifieth reading: which sheweth how holy and festivall dayes ought to be spent, in assembling the people together, and in reading and preaching unto them the mercies and benefits of God: Pellican. And this was the use among the people of God, as S. Peter saith: Moses hath of old time, them that preach him in every City, being read in the Synagogues every Sabbath.

2. Doct. A particular application of our redemption by Christs death needfull.

Vers. 21. Chuse out of every of your households a lambe. God would as it were by a speciall application have every private house and family admonished of this singular benefit and mercy: Calvin: whereby we learne, that it sufficeth not onely to have a generall apprehension of our spirituall redemption, but a particular application is necessary: as the Israelites every one in particular eating of the paschall lambe in their private families, had a proper and particular sense and feeling of the benefit, as they severally did eat and taste of the lambe. This particular application of the redemption of Christ, Paul sheweth, saying, I live by the faith of the Sonne of God, who hath loved mee and given himself for me, Galath. 2. 20.

3. Doct. How the paschall Lambe prefigured Christ.

Vers. 21. 22. TAke a lamb and kill the passeover &c. Take a bunch of hyssope and dip it in the bloud, &c. Because Christ was prefigured in the paschall lambe, as is evident Ioh. 9. 36. 1. Cor. 5. 7. the particular resemblances are to be considered, wherein the lambe prefigured Christ. 1. The lambe was without blemish, vers. 5. and Christ was without sinne, and so the unspotted lambe, 1. Pet. 1. 19. 2. The lambe must be killed; so Christ was sacrificed for us, 1. Cor. 5. 7. 3. As the postes of the house must be sprinkled with the bloud of the lambe; so our hearts must bee dipped by faith in Christs bloud to deliver us from spirituall death, as they were from a temporall, Heb. 12. 24. 1. Pet. 1. 2. 4. As the lambe was to be rosted with fire; so Christ did feele the wrath of his father for our sinnes, being made a curse for us, Galath. 3. 13. 5. As they were to eat unleavened bread with the lambe; so wee that eat Christ by faith must study for newnesse of life, 1. Cor. 7. 8. 6. As they were to eat it with sower herbes, so wee must frame our selves to bitter affliction for the faith. 7. As the Lambe should be eaten whole, so wee must receive the whole doctrine of Christ, omitting nothing, Heb. 1. 1, 2, 3, 4. 8. As no stranger was to eat of the lambe, being uncircumcised, so no unbeleever can be partaker of Christ: Piscator.

4. Doct. Divers sorts of men in the visible Church.

Vers. 38. AND a great multitude of sundry sorts of people went out with them. As among the Israelites there were many other people mingled, which were to have no part in the inheritance of God: so there are many hypocrites and carnall men in the visible Church which shall have no part in the kingdome of God: for many bee called but few are chosen. And as there were fewer companies in this multitude; the first of those which were fighting men: the second, of weake persons, as women and children: the third, of strangers: the fourth, of their beasts and cattell: so in the Church of God there are first, such as are strong in the faith: secondly, the weake and fraile: thirdly, Hypocrites, which in shew joyne themselves to the Church, as those strangers did: fourthly, carnall and worldly, which may be compared unto beasts. Ferus

5. Places of confutation.

1. Confut. Against reservation of reliques.

Vers.10. YE shall reserve nothing of it until the morning. This was commanded to take away all occasion of superstition, lest they might have superstitiously abused these reliques of the paschall lambe: which charge given unto the Israelites may reprove the superstition of those professing Christianity, which doe reserve the reliques of Saints, and doe fondly yeeld adoration unto them. So in time past a superstitious use was taken up in reserving part of the Sacrament, and carrying it about unto sicke folkes. The Lord therefore foreseeing what inconvenience might arise by such reservations, forbiddeth any thing at all to be kept of the lambe: Iun. in Analys.

2. Confut. That the bread in the Sacrament is not the body of Christ carnally but only a seale and pledge of it.

Vers.11. FOr it is the Lords Passeover. That is, it did signifie it: for Sacraments are not the things which they represent, but signes and seales of them: Genevens. So in the Gospell the bread is called the body of Christ, being a signe and representation of it: Pellican. So is circumcision called the Lords covenant, *Gen.*17.11. yet was it only a signe and seale thereof. Then as neither the lambe was the Passeover it selfe, nor circumcision the covenant it selfe: so it is but weakely inferred by the Romanists upon these words of our Saviour, that the bread should be the very body of Christ.

3. Confut. Against the carnall or raw eating of Christs flesh in the Sacrament.

Vers.9. EAt not thereof raw. Ferus upon these words hath this note: Crudum comedunt qui tantum id manducant quod viderint, & quia solum panem viderint, solum panem credunt: They eat the lambe raw, which only esteeme that which they see, and because they see nothing but bread, they beleeve nothing but bread. In which words he seemeth to glance at the Protestants, that doe not beleeve the bread to be turned into Christs flesh, and yet they beleeve that there is more present than bread, that the very flesh of Christ is exhibited to the faith of the worthy receiver. But upon this point Pellicans note is more agreeable: Non crudus, id est Christus non est carnaliter, substantialiter vel sensibiliter comedendus: Christ the paschall lambe is not to be eaten raw, that is, carnally, substantially, sensibly. For who may be better said to eat Christ raw, they which deny the carnall presence of Christs body, or they which hold that they doe eat with their mouth and teeth the very flesh, body and bones of Christ? they most properly may bee said to eat Christ raw: both in respect of their owne opinion, of the carnall presence, and for that they come not prepared with a true lively faith to the Sacrament, but with an erroneous perswasion. All they therefore that come unprepared, and so doe eat and drinke unworthily, may be said to eat Christ raw: for raw flesh is offensive to the stomacke, and hee may bee said to eat his owne death: so they that eat and drinke in the Sacrament unworthily, are said by the Apostle to eat and drinke their owne damnation, 1.*Cor.*11.28.

4. Confut. Against the Anabaptists that allow no allegories in the old Testament.

Vers.46. YE shall not breake a bone of him. In that the Apostle, Ioh. 19. applieth this unto Christ, it is evident that he was the true Lambe of God, shadowed and prefigured by the paschall lambe, and therein divers wayes represented and resembled, as is before shewed doct. 3. This therefore maketh against the Anabaptists, which will not have any proofes alleaged out of the old Testament, for confirmation of any thing in the new: and take away the use and explication of the types and figures of the old Testament, allowing no sense of any place, beside the historicall and literall sense: whereas it is evident that Saint Paul doth allegorically apply the histories of the old Testament, as that of Sarah and Hagar, *Galath.*4. and the paschall lambe he maketh a figure of Christ, 1.*Cor.*5.7. Iun. in Analys.

6. Places of morall use.

1. Observ. To cut off the occasion of sinne.

Vers.16. IN any case yee shall put away leaven the first day out of your houses. As they were charged not to eat unleavened bread, so they must also avoid the very occasion, lest they should trespasse unawares. So wee must not only flee from manifest sinnes, but beware of every occasion, as our Saviour bid his Apostles take heed of the leaven of the Pharisies. There is another kind of leaven of corrupt manners, as the Apostle sheweth, 1.*Cor.*5.7. Both these kindes of leavens, we must not only forbeare to eat our selves, but we must cast them out of our houses: wee must both abhorre them in our selves, and remove all occasions which any might stumble at: Simler. and so, as the Apostle saith, abstaine from all appearance of evill, 1.*Thess.*5.22.

2. Obſerv. Favour in the lender toward the borrower commeth of God.

Verſ. 36. AND the Lord gave the people favour. As the Egyptians affections were inclined by the Lord to lend, or rather to give unto the Iſraelites what they asked: ſo when a man is driven to borrow of his neighbour, if he finde favour in his eyes, he is to acknowledge it as a mercie from God: if the Lord doe ſhut up his affection toward him, he muſt thinke, that ſome ſinne of his hath made a barre and hedged the way: Pellican. Thus was the heart of righteous Iob wrought toward the poore: If I reſtrained the poore of their deſire, or cauſed the eyes of the widow to faile, Iob. 31.27.

3. Obſerv. God can turne mens affections to hatred, or favour, as it pleaſeth him.

AGaine, as it is ſaid in the Pſalm. 105.25. He turned their heart, ſo that they hated his people: like as the Lord ſo worketh, that the patience of his ſervants is tried by the diſfavour and hatred of men: ſo he can turne their affections to love and favour. This teacheth us, that wee ſhould depend upon God, and that we ſee the countenance of any to be eſtranged from us, that wee pray unto God, who hath the ruling of all mens hearts, to incline their heart toward us: as Iacob prayeth for his ſonnes, God almighty give you grace in the ſight of the man, Gen. 43.14. Calvin.

4. Obſerv. We muſt be as pilgrims and dwellers in tents in this world.

Verſ. 37. THey tooke their journey from Rameſis to Succoth: Succoth ſignifieth tabernacles: So they that goe out of the Egypt of this world to the heavenly Canaan, muſt dwell in tabernacles &c. Pellican. We muſt be as pilgrimes and ſtrangers in this world, 1. Pet. 2.11. and the Apoſtle ſaith, that here we have no abiding City, Heb. 13.14.

5. Obſerv. No unbeleevers to be admitted to the Sacraments.

Verſ. 43. NO ſtranger ſhall eat thereof. That is, no uncircumciſed perſon, that is a ſtranger from the faith of Iſrael: ſo neither are the myſteries or Sacraments of religion to be given unto Infidels or prophane perſons. Calvin. As our Saviour will not have us to caſt holy things unto dogs, or pearles among ſwine, Matth. 7.2.

6. Obſerv. The Goſpell is to be profeſſed not for lucre or honour ſake, but for love to the truth.

Verſ. 45. A hired ſervant ſhall not eat thereof. As they which ſerved the Iſraelites only for their hire and wages, were not true members of Iſrael, and therefore not fit to bee partakers of their myſteries, for they joyned themſelves unto them, rather for a reward, than for love of their religion: So neither are they true profeſſors of the Goſpell, which doe profeſſe the ſame for any love of lucre or preferment, rather than of conſcience, and good will to the truth. Pellican. Likewiſe, it ſheweth, that neither God is to be ſerved onely for hope of reward, but for love and true filiall affection: for as they which ſerve for feare, are ſervants, and not children; ſo they which doe all for hope of reward, are hirelings and mercenaries, rather than domeſticall: God therefore is to be ſerved and loved for his owne ſake, without any other reſpect.

CHAP. XIII.

1. The Method and Argument.

IN this Chapter, there is a preſcription of certaine ſolemne rites to be obſerved of the people, in remembrance of their deliverance out of Egypt, unto verſe 17. and a deſcription of their manners of proceeding in their journey, to verſe 22.

In the preſcription two things are enjoyned the people; the annuall keeping of the Paſſeover, and the conſecrating of the firſt borne: which are briefely propounded, verſ. 2. and 3. and afterward more at large declared.

In the ample declaration: 1. The Paſſeover is preſcribed: both the place where they ſhould keepe it, in the land of Canaan, verſ. 5. the time, for ſeven dayes, verſ. 6. the manner, with unleavened bread, verſe 7. the uſe, which is double, in reſpect of children, to inſtruct them, verſ. 8. of themſelves, to be a ſigne of remembrance unto them, verſ. 9. the ordinary, they muſt keepe it yeerely.

Concerning the conſecration of the firſt borne: the place is aſſigned where they ſhall ſet them apart, when they are come into the land of Canaan, verſ. 11. what they ſhall ſet apart, all their firſt borne of man and beaſt, verſ. 12. with an exception of two kindes, of the aſſe among the uncleane beaſts, which muſt be redeemed or killed, and the firſt borne of man, which muſt be ſimply redeemed, verſ. 13. then the reaſon of this inſtitution is ſhewed, becauſe the Lord for his peoples ſake killed all the firſt borne in Egypt, verſ. 14, 15. Laſtly, the end of this inſtitution is to call to their remembrance that the Lord brought them out of Egypt, verſ. 16.

Then followeth the ſecond part of the Chapter, ſhewing the proceeding and going forward of the Israelites in their journey: wherein is declared: 1. Which way they went, not by the way of the Philistims, and why but by the way of the wilderneſſe, *verſ.*17,18. 2. How they went out, well appointed, verſ. 18. 3. What they carried with them, Ioſephs bones, verſ. 19. 4. Whither they removed, unto Ethan, *verſ.*20. 5. How thy were guided both by day and night, *verſ.*21.22.

2. The divers readings.

I.V.A.P. Verſ.3. Out of the houſe of bondmen. I.V.A.P. rather than, of bondage. G.S.L.B.G. the word is ghabadim of ſervants: though the ſenſe much differ not in either.

I.A.C.P. Verſ. 5. And it ſhall be when the Lord hath brought thee. I.A.P. C. S. not, when the Lord hath brought thee. B.G. cum cæter. for here vehajah, it ſhall be, is wanting.

A.P. B. G. Verſ. 6. And in the ſeventh day ſhall be a feaſt unto the Lord. A. P. cum cæter. not, and in the ſeventh day being an holy day to the Lord. I. as though the meaning ſhould be, that they ſhould eat unleavened bread upon the ſeventh day alſo: for that is ſaid before, in that they are commanded ſeven dayes to eat unleavened bread: but the ſeventh day rather is enjoyned to bee a principall feaſt day unto the Lord, *chap.*12. 16.

I.V. cum. cæter. Verſ.8. For this cauſe did the Lord this unto me, when he brought me. I.V.C. or, that he brought me out. This is that which the Lord did unto me, where &c. L. but here the word baghabur, for, or, becauſe, is omitted: this is done, becauſe of that which the Lord did. A.P.B.G. This laſt ſeemeth to be the beſt reading, See the 6. queſtion following.

I.V. Verſ. 12. Thou ſhalt ſet over unto the Lord. I.V. cauſe to paſſe. A.P.C.H. ſeparate. L.S. ſet apart. G. offer. B. The firſt rather beſt agreeth: that is, he ſhall deliver it out of his hand unto the Lord, as having now no more power over it.

B. G. cum cæter. Verſ.15. Therefore I doe ſacrifice unto Iehovah. B.G. cum cæter. macte. I doe kill. I. but the other word is more fit, becauſe things holy unto God are rather ſaid to be ſacrificed than killed: Zabach more uſually taken to ſacrifice.

I.A. Verſ.13. Thou ſhalt cut off his necke. I.A. better than kill it. C. L. or, breake his neck. B. G.P.V. gheraph ſignifieth to ſtrike off the necke, as *Deut.*21.4.6.

Verſ.18. The children of Iſrael went up well appointed, or girded, P. not, armed. A.B.G.C.L.V. for whence ſhould they have ſo much armour? nor, in battell order. I. that is, five in a ranke. I. for the word ſignifieth five: they would ſo have taken up a great length of ground: nor, in the fifth generation. S. for that is contrary to the Lords promiſe, *Gen.*15.16. that they ſhould come forth in the fourth generation: the word chamuſhim is derived of chomeſh, taken for the fift ribbe, 2. Sam. 2. 18. The meaning then is, that their loynes were girded up, as they were commanded to eat the Paſſeover, *chap.*12.11. and ſo they went forth as appointed for their journey.

3. The explanation of difficult queſtions.

Quest. I. How the firſt borne were accounted that were conſecrate unto God.

Verſ.2. Sanctifie unto the Lord all the firſt borne. 1. What the Lord meaneth by the firſt borne, is expreſſed in the next words, that which openeth the wombe: ſo that here the firſt borne are not counted in reſpect of the mother, but in the right of the firſt borne there was reſpect had unto the father, as Iacob calleth Ruben the beginning of his ſtrength: for Ioſeph, though he were Rachels firſt borne, yet was he not Iacobs: but here that is called the firſt borne which openeth the wombe of his mother. Chriſt, according to this law, was the firſt borne of Mary: Simler. Though Ioſeph her eſpouſed husband had, as ſome thinke, other children by a former wife; ſo that if a man had divers wives, the firſt borne of every one was holy unto God. 2. It is added, among the children of Iſrael, as well of man as of beaſt: becauſe thoſe beaſts are excluded, which were wilde and not ſerviceable among them. Calvin.

Quest. II. In what ſenſe the firſt borne are ſaid to be the Lords.

Verſ.2. For it is mine. 1. The firſt borne are ſaid to be the Lords, not onely by a common right, as all things are ſaid to be the Lords, the earth and the fulneſſe thereof: 2. Nor yet only becauſe the encreaſe of every thing is thankfully to bee acknowledged to proceed and come of God: Pelarg. 3. But the firſt borne of Iſrael both of man and beaſt were the Lords by a peculiar right, becauſe he preſerved them in Egypt, when all the firſt borne of Egypt were deſtroyed: Iun. in Analyſ. 4. God might have commanded all to be offered unto him, but he would not challenge or expect of them his full right and due, leſt it might have ſeemed grievous unto them, but only hee requireth that, which he had ſpecially preſerved. Ferus.

Quest. III. Why the law of the Paſſeover is repeated.

Verſ.3. Therefore no leavened bread ſhall be eaten. This inſtitution of the paſſeover is now againe repeated, and the caveat concerning leavened bread is often inculcate and urged: 1. Both becauſe mans corrupt and crooked nature had need to be often admoniſhed, being ready to forget the precepts of God, and to wreſt and deprave them. Ferus. 2. As alſo to put them in minde of that, which was ſignified hereby, to take heed both of the leaven of corrupt doctrine, and of corrupt manners:

3. The Hebrewes give this reason of this double institution, because of the double sense of the text, the plaine and open sense, the other, the hid and secret sense: which reason we also approve, but not in their meaning, which wrest the Scripture with fabulous glosses and ridiculous collections: but we affirme, that in the passeover was a double sense, the one concerning that outward ceremony, which belonged to the paschall lambe, the other hath relation unto Christ, the true paschall lambe by whose blood we are redeemed. Simler.

Quest. IV. Whether Abib were the proper name of a moneth.

This day came ye out in the moneth Abib. 1. Some take this to be no proper name of the moneth, but a description of it by the fruit, that began to ripe then, and so they translate, Mense novarum frugum: the moneth of new fruit: so the Chalde, Septuagint, Latine, Pagni. Simler. Pelican. and M. Kimchi giveth this reason, because the Hebrewes had no proper names of their moneths, but such as 2000. yeeres after they borrowed of the Chaldes. Contra. 1. It was not 2000. yeeres untill the Captivity of Babylon, when the Hebrewes borrowed those Chalde names, nor full out 1000. as is shewed before, quest. 4. cap. 12. 2. And further, that other names of the moneths are found in Scripture, beside the Chalde names, as Zif, the second moneth, Ethanim the seventh, Bul the eight, is likewise declared afore, quest. 4. cap. 12. 3. And if Abib were here no proper name, it would bee uncertaine which moneth hee meaneth, the first or the second, for in both there were ripe eares, of barley in the first, and of wheate in the second, for they were to offer of their first fruits also in the feast of weekes; Levit. 23. 20. Numb. 28. 26. Yet they are deceived that tooke this moneth Abib, for the same with the moneth Ab, which answereth to our July, as Pagnine: for it is evident by the keeping of the passeover, on the 14. day of the first moneth, that the Israelites came out in the first moneth.

2. Therefore it is more probable that Abib is here the proper name of the first moneth, so called because that the corne was spindled and began to be eared, for Abib signifieth the spindle with the eare, as Iun. Vatab. Not that the fruit was ripe this moneth, but it began to flower and shew: Calvin. And thus the Hebrewes in all their feasts had relation unto the fruits of the ground: the passeover in the beginning, when the corne eared, Pentecost when it was ripe, and the feast of the Tabernacles in the end of the yeere, when they had gathered in the fruits of the yeere: Simler. And this moneth when all things beginne to revive and spring, was answerable unto the state of the Israelites, who now were revived by their full deliverance from the winter, and boistrous stormes of Egypt. Borrh.

Quest. V. Why the Israelites are charged to keepe the Passeover in the land of Canaan and not before.

And it shall be when the Lord hath brought thee into the land of the Cananites. 1. Hence it is evident, that the Israelites were not bound to keepe the passeover in the wildernesse, neither do we reade, that they kept it more than once there, in the second yeere, Numb. 9. and the next passeover was kept under Iosuah, Ios. 5. eight and thirty yeeres after. Simler. The reason whereof might be this, because they were not circumcised after they came out of Egypt for the space of 40. yeeres, and the law was, that no uncircumcised person should eat of the passeover: this also signifieth that we shall not keepe our full and perfect passeover, till we come into our heavenly Canaan: Pelican. 2. The reasons why they are charged to keepe the passeover in that plentifull land, that abounded with milke and hony, was partly to stirre them up to be thankfull unto God for his benefits and abundant liberality. Calvin. As also to admonish them, that they should remember God in their prosperity, and take heed, that their full estate did not make them forget him. 3. But now in that so fruitfull and pleasant a country, as Palestina was, is become waste and desolate, this judgement hath befallen the Jewes and their country for their sinnes: Pelican. Five nations only are here named, that inhabited Canaan, the Cananites, Hittites, Amorites, Hivites, Jebusites, but the rest also are understood. Iun.

Quest. VI. Whether the keeping of the passeover was the cause of their deliverance, or that the cause of the other.

Because of that which the Lord did unto me. 1. Some doe make this the sense of the place: and Onkelos thus: For this did the Lord doe so unto mee. Septuagint, Chalde, Iun. Vatab. and would seem to be the meaning, that God did shew all these wonders in Egypt, and deliver them from thence, to end that they should keepe a memoriall of them. 2. Others doe reade thus, as is set downe, supplying the word which: and make this the reason of keeping the passeover, because the Lord delivered them out of Egypt: Simler. Calvin, Latine, Genevens. Pagine, Montan. And this seemeth to be the more agreeable opinion: both for that the cause of a thing goeth before the use thereof: the wonders which the Lord did were first done, and then the passeover commanded in remembrance thereof, this was because of the other, rather than the other because of this. And againe, the children aske not a reason of those things that the Lord did for them, but they demand the cause of their service, which they performe unto God, as is shewed, chap. 12. 26. and chap. 13. 14. Piscator.

Quest. VII. How these things should be as signets upon their hands.

It shall be for a signe upon thine hand, &c. 1. This phrase is not only used as a similitude, that they should alway have the benefits of the Lord in remembrance, as a thing alwayes in their sight, but the passeover should as a signet on their head and as a frontlet betweene their eyes call to their their remembrance their deliverance out of Egypt. Sic Simler. Pellic. though in the Proverbs this phrase is used in that sense, by way of similitude, as Prov.1.9. They shall be an ornament unto thy head, and a chaine with thy necke: and chap.6.21. Binde them to thy heart, and tye them to thy necke. And by these three to put on the hands, and forehead, and to have it in the mouth, are signified the faith in the heart, the confession in the mouth, and the operation of the hands, whereby we expresse our thankfulnesse unto God: Bucer.

2. Yet this is not all the meaning of this place, but it is like also that they used some externall signes, as wearing signets upon their hands, and frontlets upon their browes, to put them in minde of the Law of God: as for the same cause they were commanded to make fringes upon their garments, Numb.15. And as they were commanded to write the Law upon the postes of their doores, so also to binde them as signets to their hands, Deut.6.6. for like as the Idolatrous nations did weare earings and frontlets in honour of their Idols, as the Romane Gentrie were knowne by their rings, and their Priests and their Idols by their mitulæ, their foretops; so the Lord would have the Israelites to use these ornaments as ensignes of their profession: Simler. Thus M. Calvin approving the first exposition, yet assenteth also unto this, if any man thinke that Moses alludeth unto those, Qui tarditatis suæ conscii subsidia memoriæ sibi non repugno: Which because of their dulnesse do use these things as helpes to their memory, I will not gainsay. Junius also giveth this note, Deut.6.8. upon these words, Thou shalt bind them as a signe to thine hand: Typus accuratæ observationis atque perpetuæ: This was a type of the exact and continuall keeping of the Law: Therefore there is no inconvenience to thinke, that as they used fringes upon their garments, so also frontlets and signets that should be alwayes in their eyes to put them in minde of the Law of God, as reverend Beza very well noteth also: Erat hic ritus (quem postea Iudæi suis superstitionibus corruptum) a Domino constitutus ut esset veluti monumentum legis & beneficiorum: This rite (which afterward the Iewes corrupted with their superstitions) was appointed of God, that it should be as a remembrance and monument of the Law, and of the benefits which the Lord had bestowed upon them: Annot. in Matth.23.

3. Yet this being admitted, I cannot see how the Jewes out of this place, can prove that use and custome of writing some part of the law in scroules of parchment, and so binding them to their foreheads, and the wrests of their hands, as they doe at this day: Simler. For whereas they write in those parchments certaine sacred lections which they call praschioth; Beza: which are the foure places, where mention is made of these signes upon their hands and frontlets betweene their eyes: two out of this Chapter, vers.9. and 16. two out of Deut. chap.6.8. and chap.11.18. what warrant can they shew for the extending of these foure texts, rather than any other? this seemeth then to be a tradition of their owne without any ground in Scripture. 4. But that superstitious use of the Jewes, who doe place the grand part of their religion in carrying about with them, their tephillim, and zizim, their frontlets and fringes, as they call them, thinking that thereby they are preserved from evill spirits, hath no shew of any warrant at all in the Scripture, which Pharisaicall superstition is reproved by our Saviour, Matth.23.5. for while their chiefe care was to binde such monuments unto their foreheads and hands, in the meane time the law was out of their hearts. The like superstition hath much prevailed in time past among Christians, who by writing some parcell of Scripture, as the beginning of the Gospell of S. Iohn, and by hanging it about their necke, or an Agnus Dei, and such like, thought themselves sufficiently garded against spirituall faults: Simler. 5. Augustine is farre wide in the application of this ceremony; for upon these words, shall be as a signe upon their hands, thus collecteth, Super manum, id est, super opera: that is upon the hand, and so inferreth hereupon, that fides præponenda est operibus: that faith is to bee preferred before workes, which assertion and conclusion of his is most true, yet not proper or peculiar to this place: August. q.48. in Exod.

The superstition of the Iewes in their fringes and frontlets.

Quest. VIII. Of the redeeming of the first borne of uncleane beasts.

Vers.13. Every first borne of an asse, &c. 1. The first borne, which were peculiar unto God, were either of men, or beasts: the firstlings of the beasts were either cleane or uncleane, the cleane were to be sacrificed, the uncleane were either to be redeemed, or else to be beheaded, as the asse and other beasts of service, but some could not be redeemed, but they must be killed, as the dog: Simler. 2. By the first borne of the asse all other uncleane beasts are signified, this kind is put for the rest, because there was great store of them in that country. Iun. 3. The neck must be striken off, lest that which was vowed to God, should bee put to prophane uses. Iun. and by the horror of this sight to testifie the ingratitude of the owner of the beast, who had rather his beast should be killed, than redeemed. Pelican. This breaking or cutting off the necke, did signifie also the hard and stiffe necke of the people, which in time they would bend and breake: Borrh. 4. God would have the first borne of uncleane beasts also to be given to him, although they were not ordained for sacrifice, yet were they otherwise necessary and profitable for mans use: and to let them understand, that to God nothing was uncleane, which he had made, and saw all things to be exceeding good. Pelican.

Quest. IX. Of the conditions required in the first borne of cleane beasts.

Vers.12. The males shall bee the Lords, &c. 1. Three things are required in the first borne of beasts which should be offered unto God, 1. That they should bee of cleane beasts, for it was not lawfull to present any uncleane thing unto God: Vatab. 2. Then the first borne, to acknowledge God to be the giver and author of all things which we have: Pellican. 3. They must be males, because the best and most perfect things must be given unto God: and this was a type of that perfect man Christ Jesus, whom the Apostle alludeth, when he saith, Till we all meet together, &c. unto a perfect man and unto of the fulneſſe of Chriſt, Epheſ. 4. 13. Borrh. 2. Elſewhere in the law there are three other rules to be obſerved in the conſecration of the firſt borne: as firſt, that the firſt borne ſhould bee ſo- with the damme, and upon the eight day it ſhould bee given unto God, Exod. 22. 30. which both to prevent the fraud, which might bee uſed, in offering things ſoone taken from the which were of no uſe nor ſervice, and ſo the Lord ſhould be defrauded: as alſo in this perfixed dayes, there was a correſpondency to the law of circumciſion, which was limited to the eight 7. 12. Calvin. Secondly, in voluntary oblations, they were forbidden to dedicate unto the Lord firſt borne, becauſe it was the Lords already, Levit. 27. 26. which was to prevent, and to meet hypocriſie, that would pretend devotion in offering ſomewhat unto God, but yet would give but that which was his owne already: Thirdly, they were commanded, Neither to doe any with the firſt borne bullocke, nor to ſheare their firſt borne ſheepe: Deut. 15. 19. this was commanded againſt covetouſneſſe, that although they would not defraud the Lord of his firſt borne, yet would much profit of it as they could: therefore they are charged to offer unto God his firſt borne any diminution, neither to preſent a firſt borne bullocke, worne out with labour or a ſhorne Calvin.

Quest. X. Of the law of redeeming the firſt borne of men.

Likewiſe the firſt borne among thy ſonnes ſhalt thou buy out with money. 1. The reaſon of this exception was, both becauſe it was an impious thing to offer any humane ſacrifice unto ſuch were the impious ſacrifices of the Heathen to conſecrate their ſonnes through the their abominable Idols, which the Lord forbiddeth his people to doe: That they ſhould not give children to Moloch, Lev. 20. 2. Another reaſon was, becauſe the Lord had determined that the Le- ſhould be conſecrate to his peculiar ſervice in ſtead of the firſt borne. Calvin. 2. There are two kinds redemption made for the firſt borne, one was for that time only, when the Levites were taken for the in ſtead of the firſt borne; as the males of the Levites from one moneth old being 22000. were gi- unto God out of all Iſrael, for their firſt borne, which came to 22270. perſons: and the odde 270. were redeemed for money, every one being ſet at 5. ſhekels, Numb. 3. 47. The other redemption perpetuall, which was made with money: for every one of their firſt borne, they were to give five Numb. 18. 16. 3. The firſt borne alſo were two wayes to be redeemed: one was peculiar unto the borne, to redeeme them with money: the other was common, not only unto the firſt borne, but unto males which ſhould be borne: that the mother at the time of her purifying ſhould offer a lambe, or a pair of turtle doves, or of young pigeons, Levit. 2. 6. 8. but this offering ſerved rather for the purifying the mother, than for the conſecrating of the child. Both theſe lawes were fulfilled in the birth of our Lord Chriſt, for both hee was preſented unto God as the firſt borne, and his mother brought an obla- according to the law, Luk. 2. 23, 24. Ferus. 4. There were alſo two kindes of conſecrating the firſt the one wherein the Lord had a right unto them, as unto the firſt borne of cleane beaſts, which were ſacrificed, in which caſe the firſt borne were to be redeemed: the other when they were conſecrate unto God ſpeciall ſervice in the tabernacle, as Anna vowed Samuel unto God, or to a more ſtrict kind of Nazarites tooke upon him the vow of a Nazarite; and in this caſe there was no redemption allowed: 5. And as the firſt borne were thus to be redeemed: ſo there was a generall redemption of all the of Iſrael, who were every one to pay from twenty yeere old and above halfe a ſhekel, Exod. 30. which was as it were their acknowledgement or recognition money, that they were the Lords peo- and under his protection: Calvin. That as the Levites were taken to redeeme the firſt borne in Iſrael, all Iſrael in reſpect of other nations, were as the Lords firſt borne, as they are called, Exod. 4. 23.

Quest. XI. The ſpirituall application of the law of the firſt borne unto Chriſt.

WE concerning the ſpirituall application of this law of the firſt borne: 1. It calleth unto our mind, what wee are all by nature, even the children of wrath and of deſtruction, without the mercie of as the Iſraelites had beene all the children of death, as well as the firſt borne of Egypt, if the had not in mercy ſpared them. 2. We are againe to conſider, how we are delivered from the wrath of and redeemed from hell and deſtruction, even by the firſt borne of God Chriſt Jeſus, who was conſe- unto God, and made a ſacrifice of atonement for us: who was indeed the firſt borne of God in theſe reſpects: Firſt, becauſe he is the only begotten Sonne of God from the beginning, called therefore firſt borne of every creature, Coloſſ. 1. 15. Secondly, as he tooke upon him our nature, and was borne the Virgin Mary, ſo he was alſo her firſt borne, Matth. 1. 25. Thirdly, he was the firſt that roſe out of grave, and made a way unto everlaſting life, and therefore by the Apoſtle he is called the firſt borne of dead, Coloſſ. 1. 17. And as the firſt borne was firſt ſet apart, and then ſacrificed unto God: ſo Chriſt ſeparate from ſinners, Heb. 7. 26. as the unſpotted Lambe of God, holy and acceptable, and then made firſt oblation of himſelfe for the ſinnes of his people, Heb. 7. 27. Oſiander.

Quest. XII. Whether the neareſt way from Egypt to Canaan were by the Philiſtims country.

God carried them not by the way of the Philiſtims country, though it were neerer. That the way out of Egypt into Paleſtina thorow the land of the Philiſtims was neerer, doth evidently becauſe Gerara and Gaza, which were Cities of the Philiſtims, were part of the land of Ca- as is bounded, Gen. 10. 19. and Joſ. 13. 5. The five principall Cities of the Philiſtims, Azzah, Aſhdod, Aſhdod, Askelon, Gath, Ekron, are counted of the Cananites: the Philiſtims country then bordering ... Canaan, and being a part thereof, was the readieſt paſſage into Canaan. 2. Iſaack being purpoſed to ... into Egypt, becauſe of the famine, went firſt to Gerara, as being in the way, where he was ſtayed by ... Lords ſpeciall commandement, and forbidden to goe into Egypt. 3. Beſide, Ab. Ezra affirmeth that ... Canaan into Egypt is not above ten dayes journey. But Philo lib. de vita Moſis writeth, that the ... bounds of Canaan, are but three dayes journey from Egypt: which ſeemeth to bee more probable: ... the other way which the Iſraelites went from Horeb to Cadeſh barnea, to fetch a compaſſe by the ... taines of Edom, was but an eleven dayes journey, Deut. 1.2. 4. This alſo doth further appeare, becauſe ... other way which the Iſraelites tooke, was thorow the great and terrible wilderneſſe, Deut. 8.16. ... the which if the Lord had not beene their guide, they could not have found the way: in compari... whereof, the other was the more compendious and eaſie journey. Ex Pererio.

Quest. XIII. Why the Lord conſulteth to prevent dangers.

Verſ. 17. For God ſaid, leſt the people repent when they ſee warre. God could if it had pleaſed him ha... carried his people the neereſt way, even thorow the middeſt of their enemies country: b... God doth not alwayes ſhew his omnipotency, and extraordinary power, whereas ordinary meanes may ... uſed: 1. Becauſe the Lord, where no neceſſity is, will not infringe the law of nature, and ordinary cour... of things, which he hath ſet: Non ſunt ſine neceſſitate multiplicanda miracula: Miracles are not to be ... tiplied without cauſe: Pelican. 2. Rationem ſequi voluit, qua populi infirmitati eſſet commodior; He would ... follow a way, which was beſt agreeable to the infirmity of the people: Calvin. who could not ſo well depend ... immediatly upon God, as when they ſaw ordinary meanes before them. 3. And by this the Lord ſhewe... the tender care which he had over his people, omitting nothing for their good: Calvin. 4. And this w... done to teach us, that wee ſhould in every enterpriſe follow the ordinary courſe, and uſe the means ap... pointed: Iun. as Auguſtine well collecteth upon this place: Hinc oſtenditur omnia fieri debere qua ... lio rectè fieri poſſunt, ad evitanda qua adverſa ſunt, etiam cum Deus aperti ſſimè adjutor eſt: Hereby is ... ſhewed that all things ought to be done, which can be well compaſſed by counſell, to avoide all dangers, yea ... God apparantly helpeth: quæſt. 40. in Exod. So Moſes though God were their guide, yet is deſirous of Ho... habs company to direct them their way in the wilderneſſe, Numb. 10.29. And for the ſame cauſe they ſe... ſpies before to ſearch out the land, Deut. 1.22. when as notwithſtanding they were aſſured that the Lo... would give them that land. Iun.

Quest. XIV. Whether the like danger of warre, feared with the Philiſtims, did not befall the Iſraelites with Amaleke.

Leſt the people repent when they ſee warre. 1. The Lord ſpeaketh here doubtfully, not that he ... ignorant what would fall out, but he ſpeaketh after the manner of men, taking upon him the perſo... of a wiſe man, as conſulting prudently and providently to meet with all occurrent dangers. As alſo by ... manner of ſpeech, ſhewing that there is no repugnancy betweene Gods preſcience and mans free will ... ſuch things, that there is no neceſſity impoſed upon it: Theoſtat. 2. But it will be objected, that this ... convenience fell out in their other journey: for the Amalekites did encounter with the Iſraelites. ... anſwer whereunto it is to be conſidered, that the caſe is much unlike, betweene that battell with the ... malekites, and the encountring of the Philiſtims: 1. Becauſe the Philiſtims would preſently have ſet ... them, but they did not meet with the Amalekites till forty dayes after their departure out of Egypt, ... the next manſion or ſtaying place, when they went from Rephidim, where Amaleke fought with the... was in the wilderneſſe of Sinai, Numb. 33.15. and to Sinai they came 47. dayes after their comming ... of Egypt: for in the third day, after which was the 50. day, the law was given them in Sinai. 2. Be... they had this combat with Amaleke, they had experience of Gods aſſiſtance, both in the deſtruction of ... Egyptians in the red ſea, and of his mercie in ſending them Manna from heaven, and water out of ... Rocke, whereby they were confirmed againſt their enemies: this experience ſhould they have ... if they had gone the other way. 3. Now if they ſhould have purpoſed to flee from Amaleke, they ... not, becauſe they had the ſea on their backes, which would have beene no let unto them to eſcape ... the Philiſtims, if they had beene afraid of them. 4. The Amalekites did but ſet upon the Iſraelites by ... way, and cut off the hindmoſt and feebleſt of them, Numb. 25.18. but if they ſhould have gone ... the middeſt of the Philiſtims countrey, they ſhould all have beene in danger; they were alſo a ſtro... and more warlike people than the Amalekites. Perer.

Quest. XV. Of the reaſons why the Lord lead his people about by the wilderneſſe.

The reaſons then, why the Lord thought good to lead his people about, partly here and in ... places of Scripture expreſſed, are theſe: 1. Becauſe he would not yet put his people (being ... and not confident upon the Lords helpe) to ſuch hard combats, as they were like to have with the Philiſ... ſtims: but firſt he would teach them and prepare them, even as the Eagle firſt teacheth her young ones ... flie, before they altogether forſake the neſt, and truſt to their wings: So Moſes ſaith, he led him ... about and taught him, as an Eagle ſtirreth up her neſt flottereth over her birds, Deut. 33.11. Like ... the infant firſt is fed with pappe, before hee eat ſtrong meat, and as a ſouldier firſt exerciſeth him... with the weapon at home, before he goe to battell againſt his enemy: ſo the Lord would have his peo... firſt exerciſed and prepared before they ſhould bee employed in the Lords battels againſt the Ca... nites: Perer. 2. Another reaſon is here touched, leſt they might have repented and turned backe ... Egy...

...: for if afterward having no ſuch occaſion, yet they often purpoſed to have retired into Egypt, ... more, now the way being ſo ready and eaſie to returne: Simler. 3. Therefore the Lord to cut off ... ſuch purpoſes, and afterthoughts of theirs, did lead them thorow the red ſea, that it might have ſtop- ... their flight backe againe into Egypt; Ferus. 4. Beſide, the ſinne of the Amorites, and of the other Ca- ... was not yet full, and therefore the Lord purpoſed to bring his people about and to ſtay till their ... was come to their height: Simler. 5. The Lord alſo would have the Philiſtims ſpared, both ... of their kindneſſe ſhewed to the Patriarkes: Pellic. as alſo to keepe them in ſtore for the exerci- ... of his people, and chaſtiſing of them, when they tranſgreſſed: Faius, Rupertus. 6. If they had gone ... neere way by the Philiſtims countrey, the Egyptians might more eaſily have overtaken them, and ... with other nations have put them in greater danger: Calvin. 7. Further, then the Lord had not ... himſelfe ſuch honour in the overthrow of the Egyptians in the red ſea, if the Iſraelites had not ... that way. 8. But the chiefeſt reaſons of all were theſe two, that the Lord might ſhew his wonder- ... and miraculous workes in feeding and leading his people in the wilderneſſe, and that he might try ... them, whether they would be obedient: both theſe reaſons are ſhewed, Deut. 8. 2. Thou ſhalt ... the way which the Lord thy God led thee forty yeeres in the wilderneſſe, for to humble thee, and to ... thee, what was in thine heart, whether thou wouldeſt keepe his commandements or no, &c. he made thee ... and fed thee with Manna, which thou kneweſt not, &c. thy rayment waxed not old upon thee, neither ... feet ſwell theſe forty yeeres. Peter.

Quest. XVI. Whether the Iſraelites came up armed, or five in a ranke.

Vers. 18. And the children of Iſrael went up well appointed, &c. 1. Here we refuſe the tranſlation of the Septuagint, that they went up πέμπτην γενεὰ, in the fift generation: for howſoever ſome goe ... to juſtifie this tranſlation, becauſe they came out in the fifth hundred yeere, foure hundred and ... yeeres being already expired, as Auguſtine, or in counting five generations from Iacob; Levi, ... Amram, Moſes, and Iacob himſelfe to make the fift: as Auguſtine alſo quæſt. 44. in Exod. or in mak- ... the computation by Iudah, where we have five generations, Pharez, Ezrom, Aram, Aminadab, Naaſ- ... who was the Prince of the tribe of Iudah, when the Iſraelites came out of Egypt, as hee is named ... the Princes, Numb. 7. though, if the count be made by Levi, there are but foure generations, from ... comming of Iſrael into Egypt, and their going out: Coath, Amram, Aaron, Eliezer, who divided the ... Hieron. epiſt. 125. Notwithſtanding theſe excuſes and devices, the interpretation of the Septuagint ... neither here agreeable to the Hebrew, which hath not the word (dorh) or any ſuch that ſignifieth a ge- ... and chamuſhim ſignifieth quinque, five, not quinta, the fift in the ſingular, as Hierome well obſer- ... in the foreſaid place: neither is it conſonant to the Scripture, which ſaith, they ſhould returne into ... in the fourth generation, Gen. 15. 16. for from Coath to Eleazer, who helped to divide the land, ... 14. are foure generations.

... Neither doe I approve their opinion, that read they went up armed: for, as Oleaſter gathereth, it is ... like that the Egyptians would ſuffer them to have any armour: and they being but ſervants in E- ... how ſhould they get ſo much armour? If they ſay, as Pererius anſwereth (to juſtifie the Latine ... herein) that when they asked of the Egyptians their jewels, they might receive of them ar- ... likewiſe, it is not like that they would cumber themſelves with ſuch carriage, but rather take the ... things: beſide, it doth more ſet forth Gods glory, that the people were defended having ... or armour, but being protected by God only; Borrh. Pererius further anſwereth, that they ... without weapons, becauſe preſently after their departure they fought with Amaleke.

... This ſheweth indeed, that ſome weapons they had (and yet their victory was obtained not by ... but by the prayer and lifting up of Moſes hands) but this proveth not, that all of them ... even ſix hundred thouſand, for a few only choſen from the reſt did fight with Amaleke: ... Iosephus opinion is probable, that the Iſraelites came forth of Egypt unarmed, and that after ... were drowned in the red ſea, their armour and weapons being driven to the ſhore were di- ... by Moſes among the people.

... If then it be not like they went up armed, then their conſtruction ſeemeth leſſe probable, that be- ... the word chamuſhim ſignifieth five, they were appointed with five ſeverall kinds of weapons: for ... had beene ſufficient to have loaden them, whereas they carried their dow on their backes, and ray- ... with veſſels of gold and ſilver, which the Egyptians had given them.

... Some doe reade, that aſcenderunt quintati, they went up fived, that is, five in a ranke, as Theodotion ..., πεμπάζοντες; ſo alſo Montanus: and ſome underſtand it ſtrictly that they went up five and five ... as ſouldiers uſe to march; Oleaſter: or that they went up orderly, as Iun. militari ordine, in bat- ... diſpoſiti in certas ordines per quincurias, decurias; diſpoſed into certaine rankes by fives and tennes, ... Some thinke they went up by fifties together, as a ſigne of their Iubile (which afterward was ... yeere) in being now delivered from their long ſervitude: Borrh. Contra, 1. If their meaning ... they went up by fives in a ranke, the whole number being one with another not much under ... thouſand, the people would have taken up not much under one hundred mile in length, if (as ... thinketh) they went by fives in ſingle rankes, becauſe they could not conveniently go in the ... greater breadth, for feare of treading their vines and corne. 2. If it bee generally underſtood ... ſtay, and orderly marching, how could the women and children, which were a great number, ... in ſuch battell order? and if they went by tennes and twenties, how then is it ſaid they went by fives?

fives? And as for the Jubile, which they would have here relation unto, it was not yet instituted nor spoken of.

5. Wherefore the best reading is, that they went up accincti, undergirded, or trussed up, as Pagnine: the Septuagint, Iosu. 1.14. doe translate the same word ἐνωπλισμένοι: for the word chamushim may be derived of chomesh the fift ribbe so taken 2.*Sam.*2.18. where the place of the girding is: and further, the word mushim, used of the Rubenites and the rest, that they went up girded, or well appointed before their brethren, Iosuah 1.14. is expounded by another word chalutzim, Numb. 32.28. which the Latine translator and Iunius interprete expediti, ready furnished; which word chalutzim hath great affinity with chalatzim, which signifieth the loynes, because the armour or garments are trussed about the loynes: and chalatzim is the same with matenaim, as appeareth by the same phrase, *Isai.*32.11. as *Exod.*12.11. they are said to have mainecem chagurim, their loynes trussed up. So the Prophet saith to the careless women chagorah ghal chalatzim, gird upon your loynes.

This then is the meaning, that they went up well appointed, girded, and prepared, not as men flying for feare, but as men taking their journey; which also includeth a signification of their orderly going, not huddling together, but as they which goe a journey, or into battell doe so dispose themselves, as that one be not an hindrance to another. And so Aben Ezra doth touch both these senses, who interpreteth this Hebreos processisse accinctos per quinos; that the Hebrewes went forward trussed up and girded by fives. This then sheweth the peoples obedience how they went out with their loynes girded, as Moses had before commanded them to eat the Passeover, *chap.*12.11.

Vers.19. And Moses tooke the bones of Ioseph. 1. Not only Iosephs bones but the rest of the Patriarkes also were removed out of Egypt, and buried in Sechem, as S. Stephen sheweth, *Act.*7.16. Iun. It is not like they were left behind in Egypt, as Ferus. But mention is made onely of Ioseph as the chiefe, and because of the oath which was made unto him for this matter, Gen 50. 2. It may be also conjectured, that the rest of the Patriarkes gave the like charge concerning their bones, being thereunto moved by the example of Ioseph. Calvin. 3. And this Ioseph did, both to testifie his owne faith concerning the land of promise therein consenting with his fathers the patriarkes before him, as also to be an encouragement unto the Israelites with patience to expect the accomplishment of Gods promise. Simler. 4. This also is to be considered, that whereas Iosephs brethren sold him into Egypt, they did not only follow him into Egypt, but their children brought his bones againe out of Egypt upon their shoulders, Ferus.

Quest. XVIII. What it was that appeared in the cloud and who.

Vers.22. And the Lord went before them by day. 1. The Lord could by other meanes have testified his presence and guided his people, but hee for their great comfort doth shew them visible signes of his presence. Ferus. 2. And in saying that the Lord went in the cloud hee doth not pull God out of heaven, and conclude him in the cloud: for the Lord filleth both heaven and earth: but by this phrase he sheweth, that it was not a naked signe, but a most lively representation of Gods presence indeed: Calvin. 3. Moses afterward *chap.*14.19. calleth him the Angell of God, who is here named Iehouah for the Lord by the hand of his Sonne, the Angell of his presence, did lead his people. Calvin, Iun.

Quest. XIX. Of the divers properties of the cloud.

By day in a piller of a cloud, &c. This cloud wherein the Lord went before his people had these properties: 1. This piller of a cloud by day and of fire by night did alwayes accompany the people, and did never leave them, till they were come to the borders of the land of promise, as is here shewed, and 2. The use of these pillers was to guide them, and shew them the way, that they should not wander or erre in that vast unknowne and unwayed desert, *vers.*21. 3. This cloud sometime moved, and then the host of Israel removed, sometime it stood still, and the campe also pitched and went not forward: *Numb.*9.18. 4. When the cloud moved, it went before the host, when it stood still it rested upon the Tabernacle and did as it were sit upon it, *Numb.*9.19. 5. This cloud was of such an height and bignesse, that both by day and night, it might be seene round about in all the host of Israel, *Exod.*40.38. It was in the sight of the host of Israel: Perer. And therefore the Lord made choice of such signes as might easily be seene, to wit, a cloud in the day, and of fire in the night: Ferus. 6. These pillers did interchangeably one succeed another, that as the night followed the day, so the fire the cloud, it was a cloud in the day and fire in the night, *Exod.*40.38. 7. The Lord spake unto Moses out of this cloudy piller, when it descended upon the Tabernacle, and out of the same delivered his oracles unto him, *Exod.*32.9. Ex Perer. 8. As it was common both to the cloud and the piller, to guide them the way, so it was peculiar to the fire to give them light in the night, and to the cloud to defend them from the heate of the Sunne, as *Psalm.*105.35. he spread a cloud to be a covering: Iun. whereunto the Prophet alludeth in saying, *Upon Mount Sion, shall be a cloud and smoke by day, and the shining of flaming fire by night, &c. and a covering shall be for a shadow in the day for heate, &c. Isai.*4.5.6.

Quest. XX. How this cloud differed from other clouds.

This piller of the cloud was much differing from all other cloudes. 1. In respect of the substance, for it was cleere and lightsome, not darke and thicke as other cloudes are. 2. It was in figure and shape

, the nether part thereof deſcending unto the Tabernacle, the upper part reaching aloft unto hea- whereas other cloudes deſcend not as low as the earth. 3. It alwayes kept this figure and faſhion of ; whereas other cloudes doe alter and vary in ſhape and appearance. 4. This cloud moved of it , whereas other cloudes are moved by the wind, and of themſelves have no motion this way or that but only as they aſcend and goe up in vapors: but this cloud both aſcended and deſcended. 5. Other s are made of naturall cauſes, as of vapors and exhalations; but this cloud was raiſed by the Lord, the ordinarie courſe of nature. 6. The effects were divers: for other cloudes are apt to engen- , nine and drop downe moiſture: but this was not ordained for that end, but to ſhew them the way before them. 7. This cloud differed in motion from all other cloudes: for they are carried all with the wind; this ſometime went forward when the camp removed, ſometime it came and ſtood upon the Tabernacle: it went ſometime to the right hand, ſometime to the left, accor- as the journies of the people were appointed out. 8. The motion of it was alwayes certaine, it before the campe, as they were able to endure to follow; whereas other cloudes, are carried ſwift- that they cannot bee followed. 9. The ſituation of it was divers, not carried aloft as other cloudes, h can be no direction to leade a man in his journey: but this cloud was of ſuch equall diſtance as it ght out their way before them, like as the ſtarre that guided the Wiſe men, appeared below in the to conduct them, *Matth.*2. 10. Laſtly, whereas other cloudes are not durable, but are ſoone diſſipated diſſolved by the wind and weather: this cloud remained firme and ſo continued for the ſpace of 40. rs. Ex Peter.

QUEST. XXI. When the cloud began firſt to appeare.

ſle concerning the time of the firſt and laſt appearing of this cloud, it is not like as Hierome think- that it went not before them till they came unto the third ſtation in Etham, becauſe mention is ade of it there. 1. For they had need as well before of a guide to direct them the way as afterward: erefore it is like that they had this direction, in their firſt ſetting forth out of Egypt. 2. As it is in Pſal. *He made his people to goe out like ſheepe, and led them in the wilderneſſe like a flocke, Pſal.*78.52. ere the Prophet alludeth unto the faſhion of thoſe countries, where the ſhepheard goeth before and heepe follow after, as our Saviour ſaith in the parable, *Ioh.*10.27. So the Lord went before his people ſhepheard in the cloudy and fierie piller, even when he brought them out of Egypt. 3. The Prophet alſo alluding unto this cloud ſaith, That upon every place of mount Sion and the aſſemblies thereof ſhall cloud. Eſay 4.5. So that hence it may be gathered that the Iſraelites in every place and in all their aſ- lies and campes had the preſence of this cloud. 4. Then like as the Wiſe men ſaw the ſtarre that ught them to Chriſt in the beginning of their journey: as they ſay, Wee have ſeene his ſtarre in the , and are come to worſhip him, Matth. 2. 2. they firſt ſaw the ſtarre and then came forth: ſo it may bee ught that the Iſraelites ſaw this cloud in their firſt ſetting forth. 5. The people had need to have had couragement in their firſt going forth, and to be animated in their journey: and therefore it is like, the Lord did at the very firſt ſhew theſe comfortable ſignes of his preſence.

QUEST. XXII. When the cloud and fiery piller ceaſed.

Nd as the cloud appeared not ſo late as Hierome ſuppoſeth, ſo neither was it taken out of their ſight ſo ſoone as the Hebrewes imagine: for they ſay that after Aarons death (who died on the firſt day the firſt moneth in the 40. yeere after their departure out of Egypt, Numb. 33. 38.) the piller of the ud and of the fire were no more ſeene: and their reaſon is, becauſe that after that time no more men- n is made of them. Contra. Firſt, this is no ſufficient reaſon, for neither is there mention made of them ould wherefore. 2. The words of the text are againſt their opinion: for it is ſaid, That the Lord ot away the piller of the cloud by day, nor the piller of fire by night from before the people: Verſ. 22. So as long as they had need of this direction, the Lord failed them not. 3. Seeing the uſe of theſe pil- was to leade them the way, that they might goe by day and by night, it is like, ſo long as they were in and travelled in the wilderneſſe, they had the preſence of the cloud: the ſame cauſe remaining, reaſon are like to have beene ſtill continued. But from the mount Hor, where Aaron died, untill they to the plaine of Moab, in the borders of the land of Canaan, there were many ſolitary, deſert and places, thorow the which they paſſed: for divers of their ſtations were yet behind, as appeareth 33. that they had after they came from Mount Hor, eight ſeverall ſtations: therefore it may well ered, that as they had the direction of the cloud in their other ſtations, ſo alſo in theſe. Peter. ſe as the ſtarre left not the Wiſe men, till it had brought them to the very houſe, where the holy *Matth.*2. So we may judge that the cloud left not the Iſraelites till they came into the land of ther the Lord intended to bring them.

QUEST. XXIII. Of the foure great miracles which the Lord wrought for the people in the deſert.

extraordinary leading of the people by the going before of the piller of the cloud and fire was e of the great miracles, which the Lord wrought for his people in the deſert: for as foure things ly neceſſary for thoſe that travell, ſtrength and health of body, foode, rayment, and a guide: ſo ed in every one of theſe wrought wonderfully for them. 1. Their feete did not ſwell for the ſpace yeeres, Deut. 8.4. And of all that great multitude (there being not ſo few in all as 2000. thou- the third part of this number even 600. thouſand were fighting men above twenty yeers old) old) there was not one feeble person among them: *Psal.*105.37. 2. Their raiment during the said ter of 40. yeeres waxed not old, *Deut.*8.4. 3. The Lord fed them with Quailes and Manna, even that g hoſt, which could not pitch their tents in a leſſe circuit and compaſſe of ground than of ten or tw miles, and he gave them water alſo out of the rocke. 4. Beſide, the Lord was their guide by these v ſignes of his preſence both by day and night.

Quest. XXIV. Whether the cloud alſo ſerved to ſhelter them from the heat of the Sunne.

FUrther a queſtion is moved, whether this cloudy piller ſerved not onely to direct them by the but to keepe them and defend them from the heate of the Sunne. 1. Thoſtatus is of opinion, that cloud that guided them could not keepe them from the heat of the Sunne: upon theſe reaſons, bec if this cloud were a covering to the whole campe, then could it not goe before them to guide them, did ſtand betweene the hoſt of the Iſraelites, and of the Egyptians: and if it had ſheltred them from Sunne, it ſhould have beene as diſcommodious another way in ſhadowing from them the comfort light of the Sunne: and if it bee ſaid this cloud did not ſhadow the whole campe, but hung aloft in aire, and turned with the Sunne to ſlake the heat thereof, then could it not have guided the hoſt, but have followed the courſe of the Sunne. Contra. Herein is Thoſtatus error; he imagineth that this cl was ſtraight thorowout like a piller, and ſo keeping that faſhion ſtill, it could not performe both offices, to direct them in the way, and to ſhelter them from the heat of the Sunne. But by the like elſewhere, as Iud. 20.40. where the flame of the City of Gibeah, aſcended as a piller of ſmoke, we conjecture what faſhion this cloud was of: that it aſcended upright and ſtraight like a piller, yet a ſmoke which mounteth upright, when it commeth aloft diſperſeth it ſelfe as it were a cloud: ſo this ing both a piller for the ſtraight aſcending, and in the top as a cloud diſperſed might both by the and moving of the piller goe before the Iſraelites to direct them, and with the upper ſpreading part dow them from the Sun: ſo that we need neither imagine this ſhadowing part of the cloud to be ſo as it ſhould ſtill follow the Sunne, nor yet ſo low as to cover all the camp in the length and breadth of. And thus by the reſemblance of this piller, to a piller of ſmoke which is narrow below, and ſpread above, all Thoſtatus objections may bee anſwered. But whatſoever mans wit can object to the contr the truth of the Scripture muſt ſtand, which ſaith: *He ſpread a cloud to be a covering, and fire to give l in the night: Pſalm.*105.39. By the which text that is made plaine, which is affirmed before, that it w both a piller and a ſpreading cloud.

2. Thoſtatus then his opinion is, that the Iſraelites were indeed defended from the heat of the Sunn which is vehement in theſe parts, eſpecially in the ſandy and barren deſerts of Arabia: yet the clou ſhadowed them not, but God by his power did ſo qualifie the aire round about the campe, as they we not parched with heat, which operation is aſcribed to the cloud, becauſe the Lord that cauſed it, the ſhewed himſelfe vifibly preſent. Contr. But the Scripture overthroweth this conceit: which ſaith, t the cloud did ſtand *over them: Numb.*14. 14. and that he ſpread a cloud for a covering; *Pſalm.*105. God therefore uſed the cloud, as a meanes to cover and defend his people from the drought and p ching heat.

3. Pererius to take away the former objections imagineth that there were two cloudes, one belo a piller to direct them, the other above, as a covering to ſhelter them. Thoſtatus reaſons are ſuffic againſt this imagination, becauſe the Scripture ſpeaketh ſtill but of one cloud: for as there was be piller of fire to give light, ſo but one cloudy piller that did ſhelter them: it was common to both to g and lead them. And againe, one cloud, as is ſhewed before, being ſufficient to performe both thes vices, another cloud had beene ſuperfluous.

4. Wherefore it is agreeable and conſonant to the Scripture, that this cloud did as well ſhelter th from the heat, as lead them in the way: as is evident in the places before alleaged, Numb. 14.14. P 105.39. And unto the cloud the Prophet Eſay alludeth *chap.*4.5. The Lord ſhall create upon every pla Mount Sion, a cloud and ſmoke by day, &c. and a covering ſhall be a ſhadow by day for the heat. Of t opinion are *Lyranus, Ambroſ. in Pſal.*118. and Iuſtinus Martyr: Nubes contra æſtum appanſaſſe pro bracnio, ſimul & à frigore protegens in itinere. The cloud was ſpread as a ſhelter againſt the heat and ſafegard from the cold in their journey; Dialog. cum Tryphon. So then there were three ſpeciall uſes of cloud as Genebrard well noteth upon the 105. Pſalme, the firſt to direct them and ſhew the way: that ſandy deſert there is no way to be ſeene, by reaſon that the wind bloweth about the ſand, which reth the tract of the way, and therefore they that uſe to travell doe uſe mappes and cards to point quarters and coaſts, as ſailers doe upon the ſea. A ſecond uſe was to defend them againſt their enem the cloud came betweene the hoſt of the Iſraelites and of the Egyptians, giving light to the one, and ing darkeneſſe upon the other: Thirdly, it ſerved to ſhadow them from the parching heat of the Ex Perer.

Quest. XXV. Whether the cloudy and fiery piller were two in ſubſtance or but one.

BUt whether this cloud and fiery piller were all one in ſubſtance, and onely divers in uſe, or whe they were divers the one ſucceeding the other, it is a queſtion. 1. Iunius ſeemeth to bee of opinion that they were two ſeverall pillers, giving this annotation upon this place: Utriuſque eadem munus fuit: It was common to both the pillers to bee a guide of their journey, but peculiar to this piller cloud to protect them from the heat, &c. But I rather approve the opinion of Simlerus, who it was but one cloud: Fuit columna hujus multiplex uſus, &c. interdiu defendebat eos ab æſtu ſolis,

There was a divers uſe of this cloud, &c. by day it defended them from heat, by night it gave light: and this opinion is evidently confirmed, Numb.9.21. Though the cloud abode upon the Taber- nacle even unto morning, yet if the cloud was taken up in the morning, then they removed: here the fire that abode all night upon the Tabernacle is called the cloud, and the ſame cloud that abode there alſo all day. But it will be objected, that it is here ſaid, that he tooke not away the piller of the cloud by day, nor the piller of the fire by night from before the people: Here are two pillers mentioned, one of the cloud, and another of fire: and againe they alwayes went before the people, but it is ſaid in the next *chap.*14. 19. that the piller of the cloud went from before them, and ſtood behind them: it ſeemeth then that there was another cloud beſide, that went before them and ſhewed them the way. Contr. 1. They are called the piller of the cloud and the piller of fire, not becauſe they were divers in ſubſtance, but in uſe: as the ſame ſtarre is both the evening ſtarre, and morning ſtarre: it ſetteth and riſeth with the Sunne, yet but one ſtarre. 2. We read at that time onely that the cloud came behind them, to make a ſeparation betweene the hoſt of Iſrael, and of the Egyptians: yet it ſo came behind them, as that it might by ſtreames in the night let the Iſraelites to paſſe on before: and further, becauſe of the ſtretching out of Moſes rod the ſea was parted, and ſo a way made for the people to follow, they needed no other direction before for the time, but rather protection behind from the enemie.

Iunius thinketh that neither of theſe can certainly bee concluded out of Scripture, whether theſe were two or one, and therefore holdeth it indifferent to beleeve either the one or the other: his words are theſe: Quid verius ſit, non bene apparet ex ipſo ſcripturæ textu, certum eſt tamen quod utrumque poſſit eſſe: Which is the truer, doth not well appeare out of the text, yet it is certaine that it might be done either way. Contr. 1. There is but one truth, therefore if they were two clouds, it cannot be true that there was but one, and ſo on the other part. 2. It ſhall even now appeare that it is evident out of the text, that there was but one cloud in ſubſtance, though divers in offices. 3. The truth then is this, that this cloud was one and the ſame, which guided them by day, and gave light unto them by night: they were not two divers clouds one ſucceeding another; and this is evident both by that place before alleaged, *Numb.*9. as alſo *chap.*14. *verſ.*24. where it is ſaid that the Lord looked unto the hoſt of the Philiſtims out of the fiery and cloudy piller: by this it appeareth that the one and the ſame, was both the piller of fire and of the cloud. And againe, *verſ.*19. it is ſaid that the piller of the cloud went from before them and ſtood behind them: this being in the night, it is cleere that the piller of the cloud ſerved for their uſe in the night alſo, and did not give place unto the piller of fire. But yet this matter is made more plaine, *verſ.*20. It was a cloud and darkneſſe, yet gave it light by night: the ſame cloud then gave light in the night, which went before them in the day: which was on the ſide toward the Iſraelites lightſome, but toward the Egyptians darkneſſe. Of this opinion is Thoſtatus, Cajetane, Hugo S. Victor. Simlerus. Philo alſo hereof writeth: Præcedebat populum nubes in magna columnæ ſpeciem ſolari ſplendore lucens interdiu, noctu vero flammæ: A great cloud went before them in the likeneſſe of a great piller ſhining by day with a bright- neſſe as the Sunne, and in the night of fire. He thinketh that it was one and the ſame cloudy piller: but that did ſhine in the day as the Sunne, it is not like, becauſe there was no uſe of that light by day, and then could it not have ſheltered them from the heat of the Sunne; and beſide the Scripture ſheweth, that the end of this cloud was to lead them in the day, and to give light in the night. Now ſeeing it is made manifeſt, that there was but one cloud that both guided them by day, and did lighten them in the night, as Philo alſo thinketh in this place, then his other opinion that there were two clouds by day, one as a guide to direct them, another as a covering to ſhelter them, can have no probability: unleſſe he will ſay, that both theſe clouds alſo gave light in the night, which neither the Scripture ſheweth ſpeaking but of the fiery piller in the night that abode upon the Tabernacle: and it had beene ſuperfluous, ſeeing, that the fiery light that abode on the Tabernacle was in the view of all the campe, and ſufficient to give light unto them all, *Exod.*40.33.

Quest. XXVI. Whether it were a true naturall fire that gave them light by night.

WHether this were a true naturall fire, which gave light unto the Iſraelites in the night, or onely a ſhining brightneſſe, which the Lord cauſed to bee in the cloud in the night, it is a diſputable queſtion. 1. That it was a true fire, theſe reaſons may perſwade: 1. Becauſe in moſt places of the Scripture it is called a piller of fire, as *Exod.*13.22. and *chap.*14.20. and *Pſalm.*105.39. Fire to give light in the night. 2. As the one is called a cloud, ſo the other is ſaid to be fire: but the one was a true cloud, therefore the other alſo was a true fire. 3. Like as that which appeared to Moſes in the buſh was a flaming fire, yet was not, ſo is it like this was. 4. In the booke of Wiſdome, *chap.*18. 3. it is ſaid, thou gaveſt them a fiery piller of fire. But theſe reaſons may eaſily be anſwered. 1. It is called fire, and a piller of fire, in reſpect of the fiery light which it gave: it is called the light of fire, *Pſalm.*78.14. for that reſemblance, which that light had with the light of fire. 2. As the one was a cloud, ſo I confeſſe the other was a fire: but the one was no naturall cloud, as is ſhewed before, *queſt.*21. but did differ much from the clouds: ſo neither was it a naturall fire, yet a kinde of fire, as ſhall be declared afterward. 3. And ſuch a fire we acknowledge it that fire was which appeared in the buſh, which was no naturall or elementall fire, for it burned not: but a ſupernaturall and extraordinary, and ſo was this. 4. That it was a burning piller of fire the text ſpeaketh not, but the contrary rather: for as the fire was in the buſh, yet it burned not, ſo the fire upon the Tabernacle, and conſumed it not.

That it was no naturall fire it may thus appeare: 1. The naturall and elementall fire coveteth to aſcend upward; but this piller of fire kept his proper place. 2. The ordinarie fire is of the faſhion of a Pyramis, which hath the name of fire, broad below and narrow upward: but this fire being in cloud, was ſtraight as a piller below, and ſpreading above. 3. Our fire cannot continue without nourishment, but ſo did this. 4. Our fire heateth, ſo did not this, for then the campe had never beene able to have indured it, being ſo great a fire, as that the whole campe was lightned by it. 5. Our fire burneth, being fire ſitting upon combuſtable matter, as the covering of the Tabernacle, the Curtaines and ſuch like, yet devoured them not.

3. Beſide theſe reaſons the Scripture giveth teſtimonie hereunto: *Numb.*9.16. it is called Marah, ſhew or appearance of fire: it appeared as naturall fire, yet was no ſuch fire: if it had beene properly fire it could not properly be called the appearance of fire. 2. It is before ſhewed out of the Scripture that the firie piller, and the cloudie piller were all one; but a cloud is no fit ſubject or receptacle of naturall fire, being rather inclined to moyſture.

4. Then, this we affirme, that it was a fire not onely ſo in phantaſie and imagination, but a fire indeed, becauſe it had the light of fire, but yet no naturall ordinarie or elementall fire. There are three ſorts of fire: a groſſe thicke fire, ſuch as is in coales, and red hot iron, which burneth much but giveth ſmall light: there is another, which both giveth light and burneth, as a flame of fire: a third which giveth light and burneth not, ſuch as is the ſtarres, which are uſually called both by Eccleſiaſticall and prophane writers cœleſtes ignes, heavenly fires: and of this ſort was this fire, which gave light but neither burned, or gave heate: God who firſt gave unto the fire his qualities, to burne and give light, can reſtraine the ſame operations, and transferre them into another ſubject: as the Lord in the beginning could cauſe the light to ſhine, that made the day, before the ſunne was created, and as he gave afterward this glorious light and ſhining brightneſſe to the bodie of the ſunne, ſo it was an eaſie matter with God, to give unto this cloud the light of fire being no naturall fire: naturally the fire hath three properties, to give light, heate, and to burne: theſe properties the Lord can ſeparate the one from the other, and ſo ſuſpend them from the fire: the fire in the buſh gave light but burned not: the Egyptians fire in the time of the three dayes darkneſſe burned but gave no light: the fierie oven gave light but gave no heate, for their garments did not ſo much as ſmell of the fire, *Dan.*3.27. As in the naturall fire God can reſtraine the naturall properties, ſo God can give the naturall properties thereof to that which is no naturall fire, as here the light of fire was in the cloud, which yet was no naturall fire.

Quest. XXVII. Whether the piller of the cloud were moved by any naturall motion.

Concerning the motion of the cloudy and fiery piller, that is was not naturall, nor yet procured by any naturall cauſe, it is evident by theſe reaſons. 1. Vapors and fire have either naturally a motion of their owne in aſcending upward, or in being violently forced by the aire and winde, which motion is always certaine that way, which they are driven. But this cloud when the campe ſtood ſtill neither aſcended nor deſcended, neither was carried one way or other, but continued ſteadie all in one place. 2. The cloud pointed out the Iſraelites journey, ſo can no other cloud being of an uncertaine motion. 3. It was beyond the ordinarie and naturall motion of a cloud, that ſometime this piller went before the Iſraelites, ſometime it came after, as when the Egyptians purſued them, ſometime it ſtaied in the midſt of the campe upon the Tabernacle. 4. This cloudie piller moved no faſter, than the campe could follow, wherein were both women and children: this could not a naturall cloud doe. 5. This cloud was alwayes of one faſhion like unto a piller, but other clouds varie and alter their forme, according either to the varietie of the matter, whereof they are made, or as they are forced together of the wind. 6. But that this piller was moved by any naturall cauſe, but by the Lord himſelfe, the Scripture it ſelfe teſtifieth, as *chap.*14.19. The Angell of God which went before the hoſt of Iſrael, removed, and went behind them, alſo the piller of the cloud went from before them and ſtood behind: the piller then moved and removed as the Angell of God, or before Iehovah, *chap.*13.22. directed it, and therefore it is ſaid, *Numb.*9.18. That at the commandement of the Lord they journied, and at the commandement of the Lord they pitched: They removed when the cloud removed, and the cloud removed at the commandement of God, and ſo conſequently they removed and made ſtay at the commandement of God: Perer.

Quest. XXVIII: Of the times of the removing and ſtaying of the cloud.

Now as touching the times of the removing and ſtaying of the cloudie and fierie piller: 1. It is not directly expreſſed, that the fierie piller removed more than once in the night, and that was when the Egyptians purſued after them: Perer. becauſe the night was the fitteſt time for reſt, and it ſeemeth that the campe journeying all the day, did ordinarily take their reſt in the night: the ſpeciall uſe then of the fierie piller, was to give them light in the night, that they might bee defended from the inconveniences which the darkneſſe of the night might have brought upon them: it might alſo ſerve to direct them to travell in the night, if they had occaſion, as when they went through the red Sea.

2. Neither is it to be ſuppoſed, that when the cloud removed, the campe followed and reſted not, till they came to a place to pitch their tents in: for whereas they ſometime went forward a whole day together, they could not hold out without ſome repaſt, which could not bee done without ſtay: for when could they have time to dreſſe their owne meat, which they did ſometime ſeeth, ſometime bake (for beſide Manna, it is certaine they did eat of other meats, as of the fleſh of their ſheepe and cattell, for part of the ſacrifices their Prieſts did eat, and the Offerer had part: and to what end elſe ſerved the herds and flockes of cattell, than part for ſacrifice, but more for food?) likewiſe their Manna asked time to grind and bake it, and prepare it as they thought good, Exod. 16.23. Beſide, their cattell muſt have to feed; all this could not be done without some stay: therefore at the least once in the day, if not more, it is like that the cloud staied, that the people might refresh themselves, and so goe forward again.

3. Therefore the cloud made three kind of staies, one was but for a short time, while the campe might refresh themselves: the other was longer, when they staied all night in a place, but pitched no tents: as they went three dayes journey from the red Sea, till they came to Marah; they pitched no tents, neither had any mansion place, till they came to Marah: Exod. 15.22. and Numb. 33.7. yet they had their time of refreshing this three dayes journey: Perer. But when they removed from the wildernesse of Sinai they went three dayes together without any stay, the Arke still going before them to find out a resting place, Numb. 10. 13. till they came to Kibroth Hatavah, which was their next mansion place, Numb. 33. 16. The Lord still animating and strengthning his people to go forward: Iunius. The third manner of staying was when the cloud remained still upon the Tabernacle two or three dayes, and then they pitched their tents: and thus the cloud staied in 40. yeere not above 42. times, for so many mansion or camping places they had as they are set downe, Numb. 33.

4. Now how to know, when they were to pitch their tents: Pererius conjectureth at it, and giveth these three rules: First, if the cloud stayed about noone, then they knew, that it onely rested, till they had refreshed themselves: but if it staied in the afternoone before night, that they journeyed no more that day, they tooke it that then they were to stay there some while, and so pitched their tents: But if it made no stay till the evening, they pitched no tents till the next morning, and then if the cloud went not forward, they then set up their tents. These are onely Pererius conjectures, and uncertaine. And it otherwise may be gathered out of the Scripture, that they did not pitch their tents till the cloud had staied two dayes at the least, as we read, Numb. 9. 20. When the cloud abode a few dayes in the Tabernacle, they pitched their tents at the commandement of God: and afterward vers. 22. If the cloud tarried two dayes, or a moneth or a yeere upon the Tabernacle, the children of Israel pitched their tents. It seemeth then by this, that this was a rule unto them, not to pitch their tents or settle their campe till after two dayes. Beside, they had Moses to give them direction also in this case, when to encampe themselves, who continually consulted with God.

5. Now the manner of their removing was this: when the cloud arose from the Tabernacle, the Priests and Levites tooke up the Arke and carried it, and when they went forward with the Arke, Moses used this prayer, Rise up O Lord and let thine enemies bee scattered, and let them that hate thee flee before thee: And when the Arke rested, hee said, Returne O Lord to the many thousands of Israel, Numb. 10. 35. Hereunto the Prophet alludeth, when hee saith, The Lord shall arise and his enemies shall be scattered: Psal.

6. This cloud began not onely now to appeare, when they were come to their third mansion place in Etham, as Hierome thinketh, but straightway upon their setting forth from Rameses: though mention be made first of it here, that proveth it not now first to have appeared; as Moses is said first in this place to have taken Iosephs bones with him, which was done notwithstanding at his first comming out of Egypt: the Scripture observeth not alwayes the order of time in setting downe matters of historie, but the coherence of the argument. So neither did the cloud leave them at Aarons death, as is the opinion of the Hebrewes: for seven moneths after Aarons death (who died in the fift moneth immediatly before Moses death, when Iosuah was consecrated to succeed him) mention is made of the piller of the cloud, wherein the Lord appeared to Moses, Deut. 31.15. See more of this, quest. 22. before.

7. Gregorie maketh the appearing of the bright cloud by day a signe of Gods favour and mercie to his faithfull people, and the appearing of the terrible fire by night, as a signe of his severitie and justice against the wicked and unbeleevers: Gregor. hom. 21. in Evangel. Ex Perer.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. Of the lawfull use of ceremonies.

Vers. 9. THou shalt be as a signe unto thee upon thine hand, &c. As this place sheweth that there were then in the Church, and so are still commendable ceremonies, which the Lord hath instituted to be remembrances of spirituall things, as these were of their deliverance out of Egypt: so their superstition is reproved that dwell in the externall ceremony, not looking unto the spirituall sense: Ferus; as the Pharisies which did weare their phylacteries and fringes, yet forgot the law represented and signified by them.

2. Doct. Christ the Mediatour both of the old and new Testament.

Vers. 21. IEhovah went before them. He that is here called Iehovah, is chap. 14. 19. called the Angell of God, which was none other but Jesus Christ: Iun. the Prince and Capraine of his Church, the Mediatour both of the old and new Testament, according as the Apostle saith, Heb. 13.9. Iesus Christ is yesterday and to day, and the same also is for ever.

3. Doct. Christ sheweth us the way to the heavenly Canaan, as the piller did direct the Israelites toward their Canaan.

THe Lord went before them by day in a piller of fire. This piller divers wayes represented Christ: 1. He is the piller and upholder of his Church. 2. He leadeth us the way unto eternall life, himselfe saith, I am the way, the truth and the life, Ioh. 14. 3. Aperit nobis viam maris rubei, id est, gratiam gratiam baptismi sanguine suo rubentes: He openeth to us the way of the red sea, that is, the grace of baptisme died red in his bloud: Rupertus. 4. Christ is both a fire and a cloud, that is, both God and man. 5. In nocte veteris testamenti paucis lucebat, &c. He did shine but to a few in the night of the old Testament: as this fiery cloud gave light by night: Ferus. 6. But the most lively signification is this: that Christ is that covering cloud under whose shadow wee are defended from the heate and stormes of temptation; as the Prophet sheweth, *Isai.*4.6. Simler.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Conf. Against the theatricall Pagean of the Masse.

Vers.9. They shall be a signe unto thee upon thine head. These externall signets upon the head, and frontlets betweene the eyes, instituted at the first to a good end, to put them in minde alwayes of the law of God, they afterward superstitiously abused, onely glorying in the outward ostentation of them: so in Poperie, the right use of the Supper of the Lord, is turned into theatrum quendam actum Missæ, into a theatricall shew of the Masse: calling men à communione ad spectaculum, from the communion of the bodie and bloud of Christ to a gazing spectacle. Simlerus.

2. Conf. Against the adoration of reliques.

Vers.19. Moses tooke the bones of Ioseph. This maketh nothing for the adoration of the reliques of Saints, which idolatrous use is still retained and practised in Poperie: for Iosephs bones were carried to be buried; they tooke up the bones of Saints and Martyrs, after they have beene buried: these were true bones; they shew counters and ducks bones and such like trash for the bones of the Saints, as hath beene found by search: these were the bones of Ioseph certainly knowne, they shew the bones and parts no man knoweth of whom: for they in divers places offer to the view of the people, divers bodies and heads, foure or five armes of one Saint: neither were these bones of Ioseph carried in the sight of all Israel, adored, as theirs superstitiously are. Simler.

3. Conf. Against the heresie of Servetus.

Vers.21. The Lord went before them by day in a piller of a cloud. Servetus held this execrable heresie, that this, increata nubes Christi fuit Deitas, that this uncreated cloud was the Deitie of Christ, which he calleth filium figurativum, the figurative Sonne: which detestable heresie is not worthy of any confutation, but with all indignation to be rejected and detested: for he maketh the Deitie of God corporall, contrary to the Scripture, which saith, God is a spirit: and maketh a visible substance to be without beginning, whereas all things visible are created, Coloss. 1.16. and directly this heresie impugneth that saying of the Prophet *Esay, chap.*4.5. where he alludeth to this place, The Lord shall create upon every place of Mount Sion a cloud and smoke by day, &c. It was then a created, and not an uncreated cloud.

6. Morall observations.

1. Observ. As the Lord worketh for us redemption, so of us he requireth obedience.

Vers.2. Sanctifie unto me all the first borne. As the Lord had for his part delivered and saved their first borne, so he requireth of them their first borne. As God hath dealt mercifully and graciously with us, so he expecteth somewhat againe of us, namely our obedience: we must not looke unto that only which God hath done unto us, but consider also what is to bee done by vs. As our Saviour saith to his Apostles, As my father sent me, so send I you. As Christ was sent for our redemption, so we must also be employed in Gods service, to testifie our thankfull obedience. So our Saviour bidding his Apostles to preach the Gospell, addeth, teaching them to observe all things, which I have commanded you. As the glad tidings of salvation is published unto men, so of them is required againe obedience: Ferus: not as an help unto their salvation, which is perfited without our service, but as a true and lively testimonie of our faith whereby we apprehend salvation.

2. Observ. How we must offer our first borne unto God.

AGaine, as they were commanded to consecrate unto God their first borne: so we must offer our best and best things unto God: the Lord will have the prioritie of our service: Simlerus. As our Saviour biddeth us first to seeke the Kingdome of God and the righteousnesse thereof, *Matth.*6. our first fruits, our first times must be consecrated unto our God: as the Apostle exhorteth to give up our bodies a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable unto God, *Rom.*12.1.

3. Observ. God tempteth his children according to their strength.

Vers.17. Lest the people repent when they see warre. God hath respect unto his chidrens infirmitie, and suffereth them not to be tempted above their power: Piscator. But Gregorie doth notably amplifie this point: Tres modi sunt hominum ad Deum conversorum, inchoatio, medium, perfectio: inchoantes inveniunt blandimenta dulcedinis, in medio tempore certamina tentationis, ad extremum perfectionem plenitudinis, &c. There are three degrees of men that are converted unto God, the beginning, the middest, and perfection: in the beginning they finde pleasant allurements, in the middle hard tentations, in the end a perfe-

...Like as first a man entertaineth his spouse with sweet perswasions, afterward being married to her, he meeteth her with sharpe reprehensions, being thus tried he soundly enjoyeth her: So this people being brought out of Egypt, primò excepit blandimenta figurarum, first receiveth allurings figures, afterwards ...exercetur in eremo, they are exercised by tentations in the wildernesse; and lastly in the land of ...promis, virtutis plenitudine confirmatur, they are fully confirmed. Sic Gregor. lib. 14. moral. cap. 13.

4. Observ. The will of the dead must faithfully be performed.

Vers. 19. FOr he had made the children of Israel sweare. Moses most faithfully causeth the last will and Testament of Ioseph to be fulfilled, whereby we are taught, that the last minde and will of the dead in honest and lawfull things ought by no meanes to be violated: Osiander: as the Apostle saith, the Testament is confirmed when men be dead, Heb. 9. 17. God will surely revenge their quarrell, whose soules he hath received to his protection, whose godly bequests are reversed, and their last minde not fulfilled. Surely unfaithfull to the dead, will be much more to the living. And as God professeth himselfe the especiall protector of the fatherlesse and widow, so he will maintaine the cause of the dead, that are fatherlesse to the world, and their soules as it were widowes for a time absent from their bodies.

5. Observ. We must alwayes bee watchfull.

Vers. 21. THat they might goe both by day and night. The people were to take their journey whether by day or night, when the cloud was lift up from the Tabernacle: they were therefore diligently to take heed both by day and night, that they might be readie, when the Lord gave them a signe to goe forward, wherefore they are said to keepe the Lords watch, Numb. 9. 19. So our Saviour biddeth us also to watch, and alwayes to bee in a readinesse, because we know not when the master of the house will come, at even or at midnight, at the cocke crowing, or in the dawning, Mark. 13. 35. Pelican.

CHAP. XIV.

1. The Argument and method.

IN this Chapter is described the most miraculous and admirable passage of the children of Israel over the red Sea: there are two parts of the Chapter, the bringing of the Israelites unto the Sea, to vers. 14. their passing over the Sea, with the destruction of the Egyptians, to the end of the Chapter.

In the first part is set forth, first the counsell of God unto Moses, containing first a commandement where they should campe, vers. 2. then a reason thereof taken from the vaine consultation and opinion of Pharaoh, that they were tangled in the land, vers. 4. then the execution thereof, in following after them, which is amplified by the overruling cause, Gods providence and justice in hardning his heart, and the end thereof, the glory of God, vers. 4.

2. Then followeth the execution, first in the behalfe of the people, they did as the Lord commanded them: secondly, on Pharaohs part: 1. Both in pursuing and following after them, with the occasion thereof, the report that was brought, and their repentance in letting the people goe, vers. 5. The manner thereof, he made readie his horse and chariots, vers. 6. 7. and the ordering and disposing cause, Gods justice in hardning his heart, vers. 8. 2. As also in overtaking them, vers. 9.

3. Afterward the events hereof are declared: 1. The feare of the people, vers. 1. 2. The crying of the people unto God, vers. 10. 3. Their murmuring and expostulating with Moses, because hee had brought them out of Egypt; amplified both by their present feare of death, and their former fooliſh profession in Egypt, vers. 11. 12. 4. The confident answer of Moses, wherein he exhorteth them not to feare, with a promise of deliverance, and destruction of the Egyptians, grounded upon Gods assistance, vers. 13. 14.

In the second part there is first the counsell of God to Moses, containing both a commandement, that they should goe forward, vers. 15. and a promise both of the safe passing of the Israelites thorow the red Sea, with the instrumentall meanes prescribed, the stretching out of Moses hand with the rod over the Sea, vers. 16. and the destruction of their enemies, with the end thereof, Gods glorie, vers. 17. and the end, the confession and acknowledgement by the Egyptians themselves of Gods power, vers. 18.

2. The performance and execution followeth: first on the part of the Israelites, where the causes are expressed of their safe conducting thorow the Sea, both the principall, Gods presence, and working, testified by the removing of the cloud, vers. 19. 20. and the instrumentall, either voluntarie in the stretching out of Moses rod, or naturall, which was the East wind, vers. 21. then is expressed the manner of their passing thorow the Sea, vers. 22. Secondly, the other part of Gods promise is effected concerning the Egyptians: where we have first the occasion, the pursuit of the Egyptians, vers. 23. 2. The causes of their destruction, first the hand of God upon them in striking them with feare, and taking off their chariot wheeles, vers. 25. with the efficient thereof, the Lord looked toward the host of the Egyptians, vers. 24. 3. The effect, the flight of the Egyptians, vers. 27. Secondly, the returning of the waters, with the principall cause, the power of God in commanding, the instrumentall cause, the ministerie of Moses. Thirdly, the effect followeth, Pharaoh and his host are drowned, vers. 28.

3. The events follow: first, the saving of Israel in passing safe thorow the red Sea, *vers.*29. Then the overthrow of their enemies, whose carkasses they saw upon the Sea banke, *vers.*30. Lastly, the people believe God, and reverence his minister Moses; with the cause thereof, the beholding of the great power of God, vers. 31.

2. The divers readings.

I. Vers.2. Campe before the streits of Chiroth. I. Piscat. not, before Pihahiroth. A.P.B.G. cum cæter. for (pi) is here no part of the proper name, as is evident. *Numb.*33.8. where (pi) is omitted: mippenē hachiroth, from the face or sight of Hachiroth, where also Ha is the article prefixed, no part of the name, as the Septuagint read Eroth, and the Chalde in that place Hiroth.

I.C.V. Vers.5. and 11. What is this that we have done? I.C.V. rather than, why have we done this. A.P. cum cæter. as *Gen.*42.28. What is this that the Lord hath done unto us?

B.G. cum cæter. Vers.9. All the horses and chariots of Pharaoh. B. G. cum cæter. rather than, the chariot horsemen, I. seeing the horses were the chiefe strength of the chariots, who had not every one a rider, but charioteers to guide them, the originall word and sense is better retained.

B.G.V. Vers.12. Is not this the thing that we said unto thee? V. or, did we not tell thee this thing? B.G. is not this the word or saying. I. cum cæter. dabar signifieth both a word, or thing: their meaning is, that the thing now answereth to their words then.

I. Vers.17. And concerning me, behold I will harden. I. Piscat. rather, And I behold I will harden, B.G.A.P. cum cæter. vaani, and I. He the nominative case, is put absolutely, though in this place it agree with the construction following, yet elsewhere it doth not, as Gen. 17. 4. And I, behold my covenant is with thee: where unlesse it be read, concerning me, or some such word supplied, the nominative case (I) will not agree with the sentence following.

Vers.30. And the Israelites saw the Egyptians dead upon the Sea banks. B.G.C.V. cum cæter. rather than, the Israelites saw the Egyptians dying, in the Sea banke. I. that is, the Israelites standing upon the banke saw the Egyptians dying in the Sea: for the word meeth signifieth dead, rather than, dying, as *chap.*12.33. we are all meethim, dead men: and the Hebrew comma, or imperfect distinction, at Egyptians, sheweth that the last words, on the shore, are referred to the Egyptians dying, not to the Israelites beholding: and further, the preposition chal signifieth on, or upon, rather than in: and the Sea useth to cast up the dead bodies on the shore: Also if the Israelites saw the Egyptians yet alive, how should Moses speech be true, that they should never see them againe? *vers.*13. that is, alive.

3. The Explanation of doubtfull questions.

Quest. I. Of the place where they are commanded to pitch.

Vers.2. That they returne and campe before the streits of Chiroth. 1. The reason why they are bid to returne, or turne aside, was, as is shewed before *chap.*13.17. because the Lord would not have them goe thorow the Philistims countrie. 2. They are commanded to campe in a most incommodious place, where they were hemmed in on every side: betweene the Sea before them, and on one side the Tower or Citie Migdol, which was the Citie Hero, a Garison of the Egyptians, and the mountaines on the other side: so that they had no way to passe, but by the straits whereby they entred, and so to retire upon the face of the enemies that pursued them: Iun. Iosephus. 3. This Chiroth were certaine craggie mountaines which run along unto the hill Casius: Iun. and reach even to the Sea: Iosephus: which might be so called either of Chur, because they were full of dens and caves, or of Charath, which signifieth to cut, of the craggie rocks, that seemed as hewne or cut: Calvin. 4. Baalzephon, was a certaine place neere unto the Sea, where the Idoll so called of the place was worshipped which hath the name of watching or looking: there might be some watch Tower to observe the wayes that they might bee safe for the travellers. Simler.

Quest. II. Why the Lord would have them pitch in so discommodious a place.

Vers.3. For Pharaoh will say of the children of Israel. 1. The Hebrewes thinke that the Egyptians had great confidence in this Idoll Baalzephon, whereof they had this opinion that hee could send againe fugitives that were run away, and that therefore they hearing that the Israelites were inclosed there, thought them to bee in sure keeping of the Idoll: Ex Simler. But there is no such cause touched, the onely reason that moved Pharaoh to pursue them, was to take advantage of the place thinking they were so hemmed in, that they could by no meanes escape. 3. The Egyptians might have pursued and overtaken them, if they had pitched elsewhere, but not so easily or readily as now, the Israelites being thus enclosed, who were three dayes journey before the Egyptians: Iun. Analys. 4. By these meanes also the Lord setteth forth his mercy and wonderfull power in saving his people, when they had no way to escape. Simler.

Quest. III. How Pharaoh had word where the Israelites camped.

Vers.5. When it was told the King of Egypt. 1. Either some spies, which Pharaoh had set to watch which way the Israelites went, or some fugitives of the strange people which were among the Israelites might carrie this newes to the King: Simler. Or (as Iosephus thinketh) Obvium quemque rei quaerebant : They asked of every one they met, which way they were. 2. Pharaoh was not ignorant of the Israelites departure, but word was brought him of their state, where they pitched, and in what streit they were: Calvin. 3. They say, they fled either because they were gone above three dayes journey, and purposed not to returne againe, or because other people of the Egyptians, and other nations were gone away with them: Ferus. Or rather because they made such haste in travelling both day and night. Iun. 4. That they foolishly imagine them to flee, and reason the case among themselves, why they let them goe, when it was not in their power to hold them, for they were forced through the grievous plagues sent upon Egypt, to send them away, and to give them leave to depart.

QUEST. IV. Of Pharaohs chariots and horsemen, and whether there were any footmen in his host.

Vers. 7. And tooke six hundred chosen chariots. 1. 600. chariots seeme to have beene no great preparation to goe against 600000. people: for Sisera, Iabins Captaine, went against Israel with 900. chariots, Iudg. 4. and David tooke 1000. chariots from Hadadezer King of Soba, 1 Chron. 18. Therefore it is like that there were more chariots, but these were the principall and choice chariots, such as followed from chariots, and the words which follow shew as much, that beside these 600. chariots, he tooke all the chariots of Egypt. Simler. 2. Yet not all in generall, but all which could be made readie on such a sudden: and the horse which remained and were left after the morraine of cattell and other plagues: Iun. 3. Josephus writeth, that beside 700. chariots, there were 50000. horsemen, and 200000. footmen: but it is likelier unto some more probable, that there were no footmen, but all horsemen, as Piscator, both because the footmen could not make such speed after them, nor keepe pace with the horsemen, and for that mention is made afterward onely of the horsemen, that followed after them into the Sea, vers. 23. and 28. Moses in his song speaketh of the horse and rider which were overthrowne in the Sea. But because there is expresse mention made of Pharaohs host, beside his chariots and horsemen, So the waters returned, and covered the chariots and the horsemen with all the host of Pharaoh, vers. 28. it seemeth that there were other beside horsemen. Iunius thinketh that the footmen are understood thereby: Piscat. that it is the generall name, and the other the parts and members of the host. But it is more likely that those which did ride in the chariots and did fight out of the chariots are comprehended in this name. 4. And the rather because it is said, that there were shalshim, triarie Captaines, that is, set over threes, over every one of the chariots: which Captaines were so called, because in every chariot, as Cajetanus thinketh, there were nine, three before, and three of each side, over whom a Captaine was set. Therefore it is most probable, that there were 20 other footmen than those which did ride in the chariots for more speedy pursuit after the Israelites: so that Pharaohs host did consist of these foure, of horse, horsemen, chariots, and chariot men.

QUEST. V. How the Israelites are said to come with a strong hand.

Vers. 8. The children of Israel went out with an high hand. 1. Which is neither to be referred to the arme of the Israelites, that they came forth with a strong arme: Simler. Or in battell aray well prepared, Iun. for seeing they were a naked people without armour, as Iosephus, and they were greatly afraid at the sight of the Egyptians, it seemeth that they were not so strongly appointed. 2. Some thinke that thereby is meant their securitie and carelesnesse that they feared nothing, but were of good courage: Calv. In which sense the Chalde readeth, they went out bareheaded, (which is not in the originall) that is, courageous and bold. But neither is this like, for presently after it is said, they were afraid. 3. Therefore this high hand is best referred unto God, that he brought them forth with an high hand, as chap. 3. 19. it is said that the King of Egypt would not let them goe but by strong hand; as the Lords strong hand brought them out of Egypt, so his high hand and outstretched arme now leadeth them: Osiander. Deus ex Egypto potenter nos eduxerat: God had most gloriously brought them out of Egypt. So then here Gods high hand, which was all the strength of Israel, is set against the power of Egypt: Excelsi videbantur currus Pharaonis, sed revera manus domini fortior & excelsior: Pharaohs chariots seemed to bee very high, but the Lords hand stronger and higher Ferus.

QUEST. VI. Whether the Israelites cried unto God in faith.

Vers. 10. Therefore the children of Israel cried unto the Lord. But presently after they murmur and contend with Moses: how then could they pray unto God? 1. Some therefore thinke that the faithfull among them prayed unto God, as Caleb, Iosua, and such other, but the hypocrites among them and carnall men expostulated with Moses: In ultimis malorum clamant ad Dominum fideles, infideles autem in rabiem vertuntur: The faithfull crie unto God in their extremities, but the unbeleevers became mad. Ferus. But the text seemeth to speake of the same that cried unto God, and that did strive with Moses, as it followeth, vers. 11. And they said to Moses: that is, these whom hee spake of before. 2. Therefore they cried unto God, but rather out of the present sense of their calamitie, as men in their necessities will come unto God, as is shewed, Psal. 107. Calvin. than of faith, as it appeareth afterward by their contemptuous speech against Moses: Iunius. 3. Wherefore this was no prayer of faith, which they made: for then they would not have so soone forgotten themselves: Mercenaria charitas non durat in adversis: It is no true mercenarie charitie that faileth in adversitie: Confuso impetu clamor extortus fuit: It seemeth this was confusedly forced: not advisedly made: Calvin. Hoc primum facere debuerunt, quod vix ultimo faciunt: They should have done that first, which they scarce doe in the last place: Ferus.

QUEST.

Quest. VII. Of the great ſinne of the people in expoſtulating with Moſes.

Verſ.11. And they ſaid unto Moſes. The ſinne of the people doth here diverſely appeare. 1. In forgetting at once all thoſe wondrous works, which the Lord had done for them in Egypt. 2. In their great unthankfulneſſe for ſo great a benefit of their deliverance, which they had received, in preferring the miſerable ſervitude of Egypt before it. Ferus. 3. In their murmuring againſt God, and contempt of his miniſters. Calvin. 4. In their prophane ſcoffing, ſaying, Becauſe there were no graves in Egypt. 5. In their impatience, not waiting the Lords leiſure. Genevenſ. 6. In their prophane impiety, in juſtifying their former incredulitie and ungratious words in Egypt. Simler.

Quest. VIII. Whether Moſes did ſuffer the people at this time to paſſe without reproofe.

Verſ.13. Then Moſes ſaid to the people, feare ye not. 1. Some thinke that Moſes did not ſuffer the people to goe without ſharpe reprehenſion here. Calvin. But it is more like that Moſes did forbeare them at this time, the preſent neceſſitie ſo requiring: Simler. wherein he both ſheweth his mildneſſe in not anſwering the people roughly againe, and his loving care, in that he, notwithſtanding their perverſeneſſe, laboureth to comfort them in this perplexed hate. Ferus. 2. He doth encourage them by promiſing them certaine deliverance from God. Ioſephus more at large here doth amplifie Moſes exhortation: which conſiſted upon two principall perſwations: the experience which they had already of Gods goodneſſe toward them, that had omitted nothing needfull for them: that like as a wiſe man which hath hitherto well compaſſed all his buſineſſe, ſhould not be miſtruſted for the reſt; ſo they ſhould not doubt of Gods mercie toward them, who never yet failed them: the other was in communicating unto them Gods counſell, that the Lord had therefore brought them into this ſtreit, to get himſelfe greater honour by their deliverance: to this purpoſe, Ioſeph. lib.2.cap. 6. He ſaith they ſhall never ſee the Egyptians againe, that is, in that manner, as they ſaw them that day, inſulting againſt them and purſuing after them, as the Septuagint doe well interpret, ὑμεῖς οὐκέτι οὐδέποτε: after what ſort ye have ſeene them: for they ſaw them afterward, but drowned and lying dead upon the ſhore.

Quest. IX. When the Lord ſpake theſe words to Moſes.

Verſ.15. And the Lord ſaid. 1. Some doe read had ſaid, thinking that the Lord had thus ſpoken unto Moſes, as it is ſet downe in the 5. verſes following, before he had thus encouraged the people: Neque enim teſtis & præco ſalutis eſſe poterat non acceptâ promiſſione: for he could not be a proclaimer of their ſafetie, having not firſt received a promiſe: Calvin. 2. But it is more like that the Lord ſpake unto Moſes after he had exhorted the people, both becauſe Moſes cried unto God, which crie of his was occaſioned by the ſame imminent danger, which moved alſo the people to crie; as alſo he might pray unto God to forgive this ſinne of the people, which hee might juſtly feare would provoke the Lord to wrath, and ſo hinder his intended worke. Ferus. And though as yet Moſes had received no particular promiſe, how the Iſraelites ſhould be delivered, yet hee reſteth upon Gods generall promiſe before, that he would get him honour upon Pharaoh and his hoſt. Simler.

Quest. X. When Moſes cried unto God, and how, and for what.

Why crieſt thou unto me? 1. This is neither referred unto the crie of the people before ſpoken of, whoſe perſon Moſes did repreſent, and therefore he is ſaid to crie, becauſe the people cried: for the crie of the people was diſordered and tumultuous, and not much accepted. 2. Neither is this underſtood of Moſes privat prayers, which at that time he made unto God, when as all the people cried beſide, as Calvin: for though it be like that Moſes omitted not then to pray alſo, yet this prayer was after his exhortation to the people, which came betweene: clamorem hunc ingratiſſimus populus extorſit: for not onely the enemie in fight, but the unthankfull and grudging people did draw the crie from Moſes. 3. The Lord doth not find fault with Moſes becauſe he prayed, but for that he went not forward with the people as he was commanded, verſ.2. therefore that charge is here againe renewed: and though Moſes voyce was not heard, nor no words uttered, yet hee is ſaid to crie, becauſe hee prayed unto God in his heart. Iunius. 4. But Ioſephus is here deceived, who thinketh that Moſes in his prayer preventeth Gods ſpeech unto him, and firſt deſired of God, that the waters upon the ſtriking them with his rod might be divided, and that upon his prayer, without any other direction or commandement from God the waters parted. But this report of his as we ſee is oppoſitely contrarie to the Scripture.

Quest. XI. How the Angell is ſaid to remove.

Verſ.19. And the Angell of God, which went before the hoſt of Iſrael removed. 1. This Angell is called before Jehovah: Vtiq́, natura Iehova Dei filius, officio Angelus: By nature Iehovah the Sonne of God, and Angell in office: Simler. Calvin, Oſiander. 2. Not that God removeth from place to place. Sed ſigna præſentiæ in alium locum tranſierunt: but the ſignes of his preſence went to another place, and therefore the Angell is ſaid to remove. Simler. 3. This cloud both caſt darkneſſe upon the Egyptians, that they were not able to purſue the Iſraelites, and it gave light to the Iſraelites that they went on forward. 4. Here the Lord uſeth theſe three, the water, fire, and the cloud, as inſtruments of his judgments upon the Egyptians. So the old world was deſtroyed by water, Sodome by fire, and the Sonne of man ſhall come in the clouds to judge the world. Borrh.

Of the moſt miraculous worke of God in dividing the waters of the red Sea for the paſſing of his people.

Quest. XII. What winde it was which did blow upon the red Sea.

Vers. 21. The Lord cauſed the Sea to runne backe by a ſtrong Eaſt wind. 1. What manner of wind this was, ſeeing it is here expreſſed, there is no place for their opinion that thinke it was either a Northwind or a Southwind, as the Septuag. read ἐν πνεύματι νότῳ βιαίῳ, with a ſtrong Southwind, whom Philo Iudæus, who thinketh that the waters were parted aſunder by a ſtrong Southwind, and brought together by the Northwind. But there is no mention made of any wind, which the Lord uſed in cauſing the waters to returne: and as for the wind which was ſent at the dividing of the waters, the text ſaith it was an Eaſt wind, and ſo the Chalde tranſlateth: and this was the fitteſt wind to part the waters on each ſide, rather then a ſide wind North or South, which would have driven the waters all one way. 2. Neither is it to be thought that the winde could thus divide the waters: for though the wind may ſever the waters, yet not ſo, to emptie the very chanell: it bloweth upon the upper part of the waters onely. Againe, if it were the worke of the winde, the waters would have beene driven all one way: and the wind could not have ſo parted the waters, as to make a way in the midſt: beſide, if the wind had cauſed it, then when the wind ceaſed, they would have returned againe, but ſo did they not till Moſes lift up his rod againe: therefore it was the Lords miraculous worke, beyond the power or ſtrength of any creature. 3. Yet it pleaſed the Lord to uſe this creature to ſhew his power over all things which he hath made. Calvin: and this winde ſerved not for the dividing of the water, but rather for the drying of the ground after the waters were parted, Cajetan.

Quest. XIII. At what time of the night the Sea was divided.

NOw at what time the Sea was thus divided, it may be thus gathered. 1. It is evident that this was done in the night, becauſe the fierie cloud did give light onely in the night, as it did now, verſ. 20. and it was darke among the Egyptians. 2. Whereas they uſed to divide the night into foure parts which they called watches of the night, after the phraſe of militarie diſcipline, giving unto each watch three houres: it ſeemeth alſo, that the Sea was thus parted in the firſt watch in the beginning of the night, for after the fierie cloud had changed his place, Moſes preſently ſtretched his hand upon the Sea, verſ. 21. 3. But whereas Pererius thinketh, that it was paſt midnight in the beginning of the third watch before the Iſraelites deſcended into the Sea, and that they ſtaied on the ſhore till the wind had dried the ground for them to goe on, which he thinketh was ceaſed before they entred, for otherwiſe the wind would have beene troubleſome unto them: this his opinion ſeemeth improbable. 1. As ſoone as the Sea was divided, and a way made for the people, it is like they followed and ſtaied not on the ſhore, becauſe the Egyptians will purſued them, they would therefore ſlacke no time. 2. The Lord bid Moſes that they ſhould goe forward verſ. 15. it is like then they ſtaied not five or ſix houres on the ſhore. 3. The Eaſt wind did blow all night, verſ. 21. therefore it was not laid before the Iſraelites went in, for after that the Egyptians wheeles were taken off, verſ. 25, as may be conjectured, by the violence of the wind. 4. Neither was this wind diſcommodious to the Iſraelites, the walles of the water might keepe it from them, or the Lord knew how to qualifie it toward them, and to turne the rage thereof upon their enemies. 5. Neither needed they to ſtay ſo long, till the ground were dried for them: hee that could make a way in the water for them to paſſe, could alſo prepare the ground. 4. Neither was it ſo long as Pererius imagineth before the Egyptians entred after the Iſraelites, as about the end of the third watch, which was toward the morning: for during in the beginning of the fourth watch the Egyptians were overwhelmed by the returning of the waters, verſ. 24. and before that the Egyptians were gone into the midſt of the Sea, verſ. 23. we muſt allow them more than two or three houres to reach ſo farre into the Sea: it may therefore rather be ſuppoſed, that the Iſraelites going in, in the firſt watch, the Egyptians might follow them in the ſecond: for they were not farre from them, as verſ. 9. it is ſaid that Pharaoh and his hoſt overtooke them camping by the red Sea: and they were ſo neere, that the Lord cauſed an extraordinary darkneſſe among the Egyptians to keepe them from the Iſraelites, verſ. 20.

Pererius confuted, that the Iſraelites ſtaied five or ſix houres on the ſea ſhore before they entred.

Quest. XIV. Whether one way were made in Sea, or twelve for every tribe one.

Further it is a queſtion whether there were one onely way and path made for the Iſraelites in the red Sea, or for every ſeverall tribe, a ſeverall way, ſo that in all there ſhould be twelve diviſions of the red Sea for the twelve tribes. Origene in his homilie upon this place writeth, that this was an ancient tradition among the Hebrewes: quod propria unicuique in mari aperta eſſet via: That every tribe had a peculiar way made for them in the Sea: To this opinion ſubſcribeth Thoſtatus, diviſum eſſe mare in duodecim ſectiones juxta numero tribuum; That the Sea was divided into twelve parts according to the number of the tribes. Ezra upon this Chapter teſtifieth that this was an ancient tradition amongſt them, and Epiphanius lib. 64. This opinion both Origene and Thoſtatus doe ground upon that place, Pſalm. 136. 13. Which divided the red Sea into diviſions; Secuit mare in ſegmenta, as Iun. tranſlateth. But Thoſtatus doth fully anſwer this objection, that here the word tranſlated diviſions or parts in the plurall is ſo uſed according to the phraſe of Scripture, that uſeth the plurall ſometime for the ſingular; or elſe they are called diviſions, because of the greatneſſe and largeneſſe of the diviſion which ſufficed, as if there had beene many. Cajetane addeth, that they are called diviſions in reſpect of the Sea, which was divided into two parts:

Nam

Nam una inciſio plures facit inciſiones : For one inciſion maketh many inciſions ; as he giveth inſtance of a loafe being cut or divided, with one cutting there are made two parts. So the red Sea with one diviſion was parted in twaine. Origene urgeth alſo that place, Pſalm.68. There was little Benjamine with their ruler, and the Princes of Iudah with their aſſemblie, the Princes of Zebulon, and the Princes of Nep- whence he would inferre, that all the tribes went thorow the Sea in their order. But this may rather be referred to the publike and ſolemne thankſgiving afterward, as mention is made of the ſingers and players of Inſtruments, that went before, verſ.25. then to their marching thorow the Sea : And the Prophet ſeemeth (rather than both) to deſcribe the manner of their publike thankſgiving in the Sanctuarie, as verſ. 24. They have ſeene O God thy goings in the Sanctuarie : And he ſpeaketh of thoſe times when Benjamine in reſpect of the ſlaughter at Gibeah, Iudg. 20. and of the civill warres with the houſe of David and with Iudah, was much waſted, that it was a ſmall tribe in reſpect of the reſt.

2. Wherefore it is more conſonant and agreeable to the Scripture that there was but one way made thorow the red Sea for the people to follow : 1. Becauſe if there had beene twelve ſundrie paths it would have much amplified the miracle, and it is not like the Scripture would have beene ſilent therein : yet the Scripture affirmeth the contrarie, that there was but one way made for all Iſrael, as verſ. 12. The waters were a wall unto them on their right hand, and on their left hand : which ſheweth that the water ſtood but betweene them but on two heapes, and they walked betweene them. 2. Divines doe hold that miracles are not to be multiplied without cauſe: ſeeing then that one large way ſufficed for the whole hoſt of Iſrael, ſo many diviſions had beene ſuperfluous. 3. This dividing of the tribes into ſeverall quadrants had been diſcommodious unto them : for both they had no time to doe it, the Egyptians ſo eagerly purſuing them, and beſide it would have weakned them to have beene divided into ſo many parts. 4. And by this meanes they could not all have had Moſes to bee their guide to goe before them, which would have beene a diſmaying unto them if the hoſt had beene quartered out into ſo many parts. And of this opinion that they all went one way thorow the Sea, are Thoſtatus, Lyranus, Cajetane. Ex Perer.

Quest. XV. Which of the tribes firſt entred into the red Sea.

But this being made manifeſt, that all the hoſt of Iſrael went together the ſame way, there is another doubt, which of the tribes went firſt : 1. Hierome upon the 12. of Hoſhea ſaith, that the Hebrewes doe hold that the tribe of Iudah entred firſt, and that thereupon that tribe deſerved to have the principalitie over the reſt, according to the propheſie of Iacob, Geneſ. 49. 10. and to this purpoſe they alleage the words of the Prophet, which they tranſlate thus : Iudah a faithfull witneſſe deſcended with God into the Sea, and is faithfull among the Saints, Hoſh. 11.12. But in this tranſlation ſomewhat is added : for in the Originall there is no mention at all of the Sea : and the reſt is corruptly tranſlated : for the word el ſignifieth here not a witneſſe, for then it ſhould be ghedh, but, adhuc, yet ; and the other word rabh commeth of rudh, to rule, not of jaradh, to deſcend : ſo that this is the right tranſlation of the words, Iudah yet ruleth with God : that is, though Ephraim were fallen away from God, yet Iudah continued upright and ſtedfaſt in the worſhip of God.

2. Lyranus reporting the ſame opinion of the Hebrewes, ſaith, that they alſo affirme that Aminadab the Prince of Iudah was the firſt that went downe into the Sea, and that the reſt being animated by his example went in after him : to which purpoſe they cite that place, Cantic.6.11. My ſoule troubled me for the chariots of Aminadab, as the Latine readeth : or, My ſoule ſet me as the chariots of Aminadab, the Septuagint, which they ſay had relation to Aminadabs valiant marching into the Sea before the people. But the word amminadib is here no proper name, but is taken for the willing people : for the proper name Amminadab is all one word, Numb.7.11. but here are two : and the proper name is written dab with chametz, but here nadib with jod : ſome doe tranſlate it, the chariots of the nobles Vatab. Pagnin. but then it ſhould be nedib ; it ſignifieth the willing people, as Pſal.110. 3. and the meaning is, that the Church with her willing people maketh haſte, as being ſet upon chariots to come unto Chriſt. And further, it is not to be thought, that there were any chariots among the Iſraelites, but that all went after the Lord leading them as ſheepe after him.

3. Therefore it is moſt like, that the firſt which went into the ſea, was Moſes himſelfe: for he was neereſt unto the Sea, when he ſtretched his hand over it : and beſide, it was the part of a good Captaine in all extremitie to goe before his people to incourage them. Ioſephus alſo thus writeth hereof : Moſes progreditur hortatus Hebræos ut alacriter ſequantur per viam divinitus datam : Moſes firſt goeth forth exhorting the Hebrewes cheerfully to follow by the way which the Lord had made : lib.2. antiq. Iud. cap.

Quest. XVI. Whether the Iſraelites went thorow the middeſt of the red Sea, or only a part of it.

Verſ.22. Then the children of Iſrael went thorow the middeſt of the Sea. 1. Some thinke that the Iſraelites did not goe thorow the Sea in the breadth thereof to the other ſide, but fetched a compaſſe like a ſemicircle, and arrived on the ſame ſide againe beyond the mountaines : of which opinion are the Hebrewes, to whom Thoſtatus conſenteth, uſing theſe reaſons to confirme his opinion : 1. The Egyptians bodies were caſt up upon the ſhore where the Iſraelites arrived, for they could not ſee them on the other ſide over all the breadth of the Sea : but the Egyptians were neerer to their owne ſhore, when they were drowned, going into it but late in the night after the Iſraelites : now the Sea uſeth to caſt things at the next ſhore. 2. Againe, it was after midnight when the Hebrewes went into the red Sea, and about the morning were the Egyptians drowned : in the ſpace of five or ſixe houres it is not like the Hebrewes could goe all the breadth of the red Sea. 3. This further appeareth, that the Israelites returned to the same side againe, because they pitched in the desert of Ethan, when they went into the wilderness three dayes journey in the same desert of Ethan after they came out of the Sea, Numb. 33.8. This desert of Ethan is also called the desert of Shur, Exod. 15. 22. 24. If they had gone over the red Sea they should have beene forced to have come over the Sea againe, to goe into the land of Canaan: for they were further off from Canaan on that side toward Arabia, than on the other toward Egypt: and the red Sea did not bound the land of promise on the West, but only toward the East, as the land is described to be bounded from the red Sea to the Philistims Sea, Exod. 23. 31.

But these reasons may easily be answered: 1. Though it be admitted that the Egyptians were nearer their owne coasts, when they were drowned, than the other side, yet by the tempest and course of the waters which came against them, they might be and were carried to the other side: for Cajetane well observeth, that the Egyptians, when the chariot wheeles were taken off fled away from Israel, and fled from the waters that returned upon them, vers. 27. the violence of the waters thus did drive them to the other side: wherein Gods speciall worke also is to be seene, that to the comfort of his people would the Egyptians bodies cast up in their sight, whereas usually bodies being drowned doe sinke in the deepe. Note not. 2. The Israelites were above five or six houres in going over the Sea, they went all the night, as is shewed before, quest. 14. neither were they all passed over, when the Egyptians were drowned, as is shewed vers. 29. for the Israelites walked on still. 3. The desert of Ethan is so called on both sides of the Sea, both where the Israelites entred, and where they arrived, as Lyranus thinketh there were two deserts of the same name: and Iunius well thinketh, that both that desert on Egypts side is called, and where they travelled afterward, when they had gone over, Annot. cap. 13. v. 20. Ethan is not one with the desert of Shur, which bounded the Ismaelites countrie, Gen. 25. 18. 4. It was not needfull the Israelites should returne over the red Sea againe, for the Lord did not lead them the neerest way, which was through the Philistims country, but about by the vast desert, therefore that is no reason to bring them over the Sea againe, because of the neerer way.

2. That the Israelites went through the midst of the Sea: 1. The Scripture evidently speaketh, Psalm. 136. 13. He caused Israel to passe over in the midst of it. The word is ghabar, which signifieth transire to passe over. 2. If they had gone on the other side of the red Sea toward Egypt, they must have passed along by the Philistims countrie, which the Lord intended not to doe, chap. 13. 17. and Iosephus addeth this reason, why they went the other way: Ne Palestini quoi ob veterem simultatem infensos habebat de hac profectione certiores fieri possent: Lest the Philistims who had an old grudge against them should have knowne their journey. But they must needs have knowne it and hindred it likewise, if they had compassed about the red Sea: Est enim eorum regio Ægypti confinium: For their countrie doth border upon Egypt. 3. Iosephus also in the same place useth another reason, voluit obiter juxta Dei mandata in montem Sinai populum sacrificaturum adducere: Moses purposed according to the commandement of God to bring the people unto mount Sinai to sacrifice. But the next way unto mount Sinai (which is a mountaine in Arabia, Galath. 4. 25.) was not to goe backe againe into Egypt, but to passe over the red Sea. Beside it is not like that the Lord would bring them backe againe unto the Egyptian coast: Lyran. For so they should have beene in danger againe of the enemie. 5. The Israelites from the red Sea went forth to the wilderness of Shur, but that was beyond the red Sea toward the countrie of the Ismaelites, v. 25. 18. not on this side toward Egypt. 6. Lastly, of this opinion, that the Hebrewes went through Sea, are Iosephus, who saith, Impetus in adversum littus Hebræi evaserant: The Hebrewes were cast to the other shore against them, lib. 2. antiquit. cap. 7. Likewise Philo: Tempestas procellosa in littus adversum ejecit Ægyptorum exercitum: A tempestuous storme cast the dead bodies of the Egyptians upon contrarie shore, that the Israelites might see them; so also Euseb. Nyssen: Ictu Mosaica virgæ in oppositum ripam hinc atque illinc undis aquis scissura pervenit: By the stroke of Moses rod the waters leave along and give way unto the banke on the other side; and as the way was made throughout where the Sea, so the Israelites followed: Ex Perer.

QUEST. XVII. The division of the red Sea not the worke of nature, but altogether miraculous.

In the next place it would be inquired, whether this division of the red sea, altogether miraculous, or whether it might not be helped by the worke of nature or mans providence. 1. Artapanus an ancient writer reporteth hereof two opinions among the Egyptians: the Heliopolites doe hold that when Israel followed after the Hebrewes, Moses by the stretching out of his rod clave the Sea: the Memphites affirmed, that Moses being skilfull in such naturall observations did when the red Sea was at low ebbe, and then conducted over the people. But this foolish opinion is refuted by Diodor. Tarsensis, Chrysostomes Master, who by these two reasons overthroweth it: 1. When the Sea ebbeth, the waters onely toward the shore do abate, the chanell of the Sea is not emptied: againe the ebbing of the Sea could not make the water stand up on each side like a wall.

Neither is Iosephus narration probable, who to perswade that this was no noble thing for the Sea to give way to the Hebrewes, alleageth that in like sort the Pamphilian Sea did way to Alexander in his expedition against the Persians, lib. 2. antiquit. cap. 7. by which instance he doth much extenuate the glorious worke which the Lord did for his people. Concerning which story of Alexander; 1. Neither is the testimonie of Iacobus Crinitus to be approved, who utterly denieth it to be so, which Iosephus reporteth: and they which write of Alexanders affaires make mention of no such: for beside that they are silent, id quod omnes testantur, &c. Which all they doe testifie that were sent to memorize Alexanders Iosephus report of the Pamphilian Sea giving way to Alexander examined.

Alexanders exploits; who, it is like, had seene and read some of those writers, whose bookes may be now perished: Quintus Curtius lib.5. in a word touched such a matter, Mari novum iter in Pamphiliam aperuerit: He opened a new way by the Sea into Pamphilia. 2. And yet we may hold the report of Iosephus to be uncertaine and not credible, that Alexandro dato Macedonibus Pamphilium mare cessit: That the Pamphilian Sea gave way unto the Macedonians under the leading of Alexander: For this were to impaire the credit of this great worke. 3. Therefore Strabo for this matter commeth neerer the truth, who writeth to this effect, that there is an hill lying upon the Pamphilian Sea, called Climax, by the which there is a passage on the Sea shore when the Sea is calme and still, the waters so abating that the ground is left naked, which at the flowing of the waters is covered againe. And Alexander comming that way, prius quam fluctus rediret, movit, Set forward before the waters returned; but because it was winter, before he was passed, it so fell out that the waters overtooke him, Vt iens die iter faceret in aqua mobilibus renis: That he travelled all the day up to the middle: Strab. lib.14. This passing then of Alexander by the Pamphilian Sea, was much unlike to the Hebrewes walking through the red Sea: First, he went along by the shore, but they went through the Sea; Secondly, Alexander watched his time when the Sea ebbed, but the ebbing of the red Sea could not helpe the Hebrewes to goe through: Thirdly, the waters returned before Alexander was gone by: but the Sea gave way still to the Israelites, till they were all gone over, but it overwhelmed the Egyptians.

3. Paulus Orosius writeth that there are yet certaine miraculous monuments of this miracle extant at the red Sea, that the very trace of the chariot wheeles are to be seene, not onely on the shore, but in the Sea, as farre as ones eye can discerne them, and that if those marks be defaced, they renew againe: Oros. lib.1. But what credit there is of this report is uncertaine, it may seeme rather fabulous than otherwise: the monument of this miracle is sufficiently extant in Scripture, we need not to seeke it in the sand. And if any such monument were to be seene, rather the footsteps of the Hebrewes that walked that way, than the prints of Pharaohs chariot wheeles, were likely to remaine in remembrance of that miracle, which God wrought for his people.

4. But howsoeve the truth is concerning that miraculous monument of the traceings of the chariot wheeles: these thing were miraculous indeed, and shew it to be Gods extraordinarie worke, beyond the wit of man, or the power of nature. 1. It was a great miracle that a way should be made through the Sea, to the very bottome: the water useth to ebbe onely about the shore, not in the bottome and depth of the Sea. 2. That the waters stood up as a wall on each hand, it was also miraculous, and contrarie to the nature of the liquid element of water. 3. That such a great winde should bee raised on the sudden, and drie the ground in so short a time, was also admirable. 4. That the waters returned upon the Egyptians on the one side of the Sea when as yet the Israelites were not all gone over on the other, it was wonderfull: Peter. 5. That the winde and storme was so strong upon the Egyptians with thunder, lightning and raine, *Psal.*77.18. that the wheeles of their chariots were taken off while the Israelites passed on quietly, it was a thing of great admiration. 6. Gods providence also was seene, in that not one of the Egyptians remained, nor yet one the Israelites were missing. 7. The casting up of the bodies of the Egyptians and of their armour also Iosephus thinketh, which was after distributed among the Hebrewes, was extraordinarie, whereas such things use to sinke at the first. 8. The driving of them to the contrarie shore which was further off, was Gods speciall worke. 9. The Egyptians desperate following of them into the Sea, when they saw the waters stand up as a wall, is much to be admired. 10. But more, the courageous and speedie passage of Israelites through the wide and large Sea in the compasse of one night.

Quest. XVI. The division of the red Sea and of the river Iordan compared together.

But to compare this miracle of dividing the red Sea by Moses, with the parting of the river Jordan before Iosuah. 1. In points they agree together, both of them were wrought by an extraordinarie power, both were do the same end, for the passing over of the people of God; and they had the like effect, the setting for the power of God.

2. But herein they differed. 1. The Sea was divided to deliver them from danger of their enemies: Jordan to bring them into the land of Canaan to encounter with their enemies. 2. There at the stretching of Moses the waters parted, here at the presence of the Arke. 3. There the waters stood up on each side as a here the upper waters onely stood up on an heape, the nether waters were cut off and ran into dead Sea. 4. Here twelve stones were set up for a monument, there no thing was done, they were not to returne thither againe, but Jordan was alwayes in their sight. 5. There a great was raised to drie the ground, here none such needed, because the channell of Jordan was sandie and 6. There the people were guided by the leading of the cloudie and fiery but here they neer, being come into an habitable countrie, whereas then they walked in and unknowne 7. There a solemne thankesgiving was given immediatly unto God, instead thereof the were circumcised in Gilgal, Iosh. 5. 8. There the Egyptians were overwhelmed in the waters, but no such revenge was taken upon Gods enemies, but the people of God only provided for.

3. So that the dividing of the Sea was a more glorious and wonderfull worke than the other. 1. Because as was larger than the river, so the miracle in the standing up of the greater was greater. 2. people were at this time more distressed, and therefore their deliverance more full. 3. The of their enemies doth also set forth this worke beyond the other. 4. The same also that this miracle more than of the other, which was spoken of among the Gentiles of Jericho taketh notice of it, Iosh. 2. And the Philistines also heard of the Lords wonderfull working among the Egyptians, 1. Sam. 6. 10.

4. But yet in two respects the parting of Jordan was more strange than the dividing of the red Sea. Because Jordan had a perpetuall current running along into the dead sea, and therefore the upper waters which ran from the fountaine and head of Jordan, were either miraculously staied in the spring time flowing out, or else they did swell into an heape, as high and huge as a mountaine still increasing, which of the two is most agreeable to the text, The waters that came from above staied and rose up upon an heape, Iosh. 3. 16. 2. The other thing singular in the cutting of Jordan was, that this huge heape of waters of Jordan came together againe abated by little and little and fell not all at once, for the water being so much higher than the bankes would have overflowne all the Countrie, if they had not been restrained by the power of God, and brought to their ordinarie course. Peter.

Here follow certaine questions of the overthrow of the Egyptians in the red Sea.

Quest. XIX. Of the blindnes of the Egyptians running upon their owne destruction.

Vers. 23. AND the Egyptians pursued. Herein appeareth the just judgement of God upon Pharaoh, that they were so blinded, that they run headlong into their owne destruction, and follow the Israelites into the Sea: of this their blindnes the reasons were these: 1. The longanimitie and patience of God toward them, in sparing their lives hitherto, and onely touching their ground and cattell that were borne, in those ten plagues. 2. Their malice in desiring to be revenged of the Israelites. 3. Their rash and greedie desire to recover their substance: Ferus. 4. Iosephus addeth more: Cum incolumes suos fore videbant, sibi quoque eundem eventum pollicebantur: When they saw that the Israelites did keep the ground, they did promise unto themselves the same event. But they were deceived, for that they made for those that fled from their enemies, to escape them, not for the enemie that pursued with intent to destroy them. 5. But the greatest cause of all was, that God had given them over to a reprobate sense: Spiritu vertiginis in reprobum sensum abducuntur; They are carried headlong by a brainsicke and reprobate sence: Pellican: maxime eos excaecavit judicium Dei: Most of all the judgement of God blinded them. And these foure are the ordinarie causes of the excecation and blinding of men: abusing Gods long suffering, malice, covetousnes, and Gods justice concurring in giving the wicked and obstinate over to themselves. Ferus.

Quest. XX. VVhy the Lord looked in the morning toward the Egyptians.

Vers. 24. NOw in the morning watch when the Lord looked, &c. 1. The Lord is said to looke and behold two wayes, either in mercie, as Mary in her song, The Lord hath looked upon the poore estate of his handmaide, Luk. 2. 48. and as Hagar saith Thou Lord hast looked upon me, Gen. 16. 13. Or in judgement, as here he looketh toward the Egyptians, whom hee saw before, but seemed to winke at them, and suffered them to goe on: Simler. 2. The Lord looketh toward them toward the morning to the terrour of the Egyptians: ut serò viderent, quò ipsos projecisset furoris sui impetus; that they might see, though late, whether the force of their furie had cast them: Calvin, ut utrinque conspicua esset potentia Dei, that the power of God might be apparent, in the destruction of the Egyptians, and the deliverance of his people: Iunius. The Israelites it being now day, might with comfort behold the Lords mightie worke: and this was a lively type of the resurrection of Christ, which was in the morning, Ad ortum solis justitia, quia Christus resurrexit, judicantur satellites Satanæ: At the rising of the Sunne of righteousnesse, at the time of Christs resurrection, the bands of Satan were judged; Pellican. The power of darknes was then fully conquered, as here Pharaoh and his host at the appearing of the day are subverted and overwhelmed in the sea.

Quest. XXI. By what degrees the finall subversion of the Egyptians was wrought in the red Sea.

Vers. 25. FOr he took off their chariot wheeles. In these degrees this finall and last judgement was brought upon the Egyptians: 1. The Lord disturbed them, an horrible feare was sent upon them, as is shewed in the former verse, procured by the tempests and grievous thunders and lightnings upon them: Simler. 2. Which lightnings and tempests with winde and raine the Lord sent upon them when hee looked out of the cloud, as is more fully declared in the Psalme. 77. 16. The waters saw thee, O God, the waters saw thee, and were afraid, the clouds powred out water, the heavens gave a sound, yea thine arrowes went abroad, the voice of thy thunder was round about: Iunius. 3. Their chariot wheeles were taken off: and he drave them slowly, that is, not Pharaoh drave his chariots, Simler. or, the chariots heavily; Vatab. or, He carried them with violence: Calvin. Septuag. for the word signifieth to carry, Isai. 11. 6. But the Lord drave them slowly, or heavily, that is, caused that their chariots did not goe: partly because the wheeles were violently taken off: Simler. partly because the earth being moved by the returning of the waters clogged their wheeles, that they could not go. 4. The Latine translation readeth. Ferebantur in profundum: They were carried into the deepe: which although it doe not expresse the sense of the word, which signifieth heavinesse, not the deepe, yet this was another hinderance to the Egyptians, that their chariots were forced descending into the deepe places of the sea, and so ſo ſuoſe pondere demerſerunt: they did ſinke themſelves with their owne waight: Pellican. As in the next chapter verſ. 10. Moſes ſaith, They ſanke as lead in the mightie waters. 5. Hereunto may be added: Vt ſe invicem impedirent: That they hindred one another. Ferus: Equi impingebant: Their horſes ſtoundred and fell one upon another: Zeigler. 6. And to make up the full meaſure of their judgement, the water came together upon them, and they fled againſt it as followeth, verſ. 27. Iun.

QUEST. XXII. Of the number of the Egyptians that periſhed.

Verſ. 28. SO the water returned and covered. 1. Touching the number of the Egyptians which periſhed in the water: Ioſephus ſaith, that there were in Pharaohs hoſt 50. thouſand horſemen, and 200. thouſand footemen, which all were drowned in the waters, not one of them remained. 2. But it is hard to geſſe at the certaine number, ſeeing the Scripture hath not ſet it downe: yet it is moſt certaine that the number and multitude was very great: for Pharaoh had not onely ſixe hundred of the choice chariots, but all the chariots of Egypt beſide: and all his choſen captaines were drowned alſo in the ſea, chap. 15. 4. Oroſius doth make this an argument of their great numbers, becauſe the Hebrewes being 600000. of fighting men, were afraid of them, and had no power to reſiſt them, but made full account all to be put to the ſword and there to have their graves, cap. 14. 11. Oroſ. lib. 1. cap. 10.

QUEST. XXIII. Whether Pharaoh himſelfe were drowned in the Sea.

COncerning Pharaoh himſelfe: 1. That opinion of Manethon is utterly untrue, that hee himſelfe eſcaped, and reigned after this in Egypt 25. yeeres and 4. moneths, for the contrarie is gathered out of the Scripture. Firſt, becauſe the Lord ſaid before, that hee would get him honour upon Pharaoh and all his hoſt: God therefore was not honoured onely in the overthrow of Pharaohs hoſt, but of Pharaoh alſo himſelfe. Againe, they which purſued the Iſraelites followed after them alſo into the ſea, verſ. 23. but Pharaoh himſelfe with his hoſt purſued them verſ. 10. and therefore Moſes thus ſpeaketh, cha. 15. 9. The enemie ſaid, I will purſue, I will overtake them: which is ſpecially meant of Pharaoh himſelfe. But not one eſcaped of all that went into the ſea, verſ. 28. as Ioſephus alſo witneſſeth, Ita totus ille exercitus eſt deletus vt ne nuntius quidem cladis domum reverteretur: All the hoſt was wholly deſtroyed that not one remained to carrie tidings home of their deſtruction. The Pſalme alſo ſpeaketh evidently, Pſal. 136. 15. He overthrew Pharaoh and his hoſt in the ſea. 2. But yet the opinion of the Hebrewes, whereunto Theodoret conſenteth, may ſafely here bee received, and it is very probable, that Pharaoh was the laſt of all that were drowned, that ſeeing all the Egyptians were overwhelmed in the waters, he which had been the greateſt cauſe of this their ruine ſhould have alſo the greateſt griefe. 3. What this Pharaohs name was it is uncertaine: Euſebius in his Chronicle ſaith it was Cenchres, Manethon in Ioſephus calleth him Thmoſis, Cheremon, Amenophis, Lyſimachus, and Cornelius Tacitus ſay his name was Bocchoris. In ſuch uncertainties of ſo great antiquities, and varietie of opinion, nothing can be certainly affirmed: neither to be ignorant in ſuch things is it much materiall. Perer.

QUEST. XXIV. Whether the Iſraelites were all gone over when the Egyptians were drowned.

Verſ. 29. AND the children of Iſrael walked upon drie land. 1. Some thinke that the Iſraelites were all paſſed thorow the ſea before the waters returned upon the Egyptians, and therefore ſay of it, perrexerant per medium maris, they had gone through the middeſt of the ſea in the preterpluperfect tenſe. Pellic. Oſiand. 2. Ioſephus thinketh that the Iſraelites were come to the other ſhore before the Egyptians entred: Iamque in adverſum littus Hebræi evaſerant: The Hebrewes were now eſcaped to the contrary ſhore. But this is not like that either the Egyptians were not yet entred, or that the Iſraelites were all gone over before the waters came together: becauſe the Egyptians made all haſte, and were very eager in purſuit after them, as Moſes ſheweth, cap. 15. 9. The enemie ſaid, I will purſue, I will overtake them, my luſt ſhall be ſatisfied upon them, I will draw my ſword, mine hand ſhall deſtroy them. 2. Therefore it is more agreeable to the text, that while on the one ſide the ſea returned upon the Egyptians, in the meane time the Iſraelites went on ſafe betweene the two walles of the water, as this verſe ſheweth, and this doth more ſet forth the power of God, that defended his people and deſtroyed his enemies, they being in the ſame place and danger: Iun. Piſcat. And this very well may be a type of the laſt judgement, as Ferus ſaith: Sicut hic in mari alii pereuntalii evadunt, ſic in judicio unus aſſumetur alius relinquetur. As in the ſea ſome periſh, ſome eſcape; ſo in the laſt judgement one ſhall be received, another refuſed.

QUEST. XXV. Why the Egyptians dead bodies were caſt up upon the ſhore.

Verſ. 30. AND the Iſraelites ſaw the Egyptians dead &c. This alſo did further ſhew the great power of God, that cauſed the ſea to caſt up the dead bodies of the Egyptians, which thing is not uſuall for them which are drowned in the ſea preſently to be caſt up: Simler. 2. Beſide, it made much for the comfort of the people of God, when they ſaw their enemies deſtruction with their owne eyes, as it is in the Pſalme, When the wicked men ſhall periſh thou ſhalt ſee, Pſal. 37. 30. Ferus. 3 This object alſo being in their eye, they were thereby more effectually ſtirred up to give thankes unto God, which they preſently performed, as it followeth in the next chapter. 4. They did not only ſee their enemies dead, but they alſo ſpoiled them: Pellican, Simler. and, as Ioſephus writeth, Moſes diſtributed their armour and weapons among the Iſraelites.

QUEST.

QVEST. XXVI. Of the red Sea whence it is so called.

NOw because often mention is made in this storie of the subversion and overthrow of the Egyptians in the red sea, it shall not be amisse briefly to shew the reason of that name, whereof there are diuers opinions which may bee all sorted into three heads. 1. Some think that it is so called of the red colour of the water, which some hold to be but in shew, others that the waters have that colour indeede: of them that hold the water not to bee red, but to seeme so to be, some ascribe it to the reflection of the beames, that shine very hot and red: others to the red mountaines adjoyning, that cast that colour into that sea: Strabo lib. 16. Plin. lib. 6. cap. 23. Some to the rednes of the sand, where Pliny saith the Coral tree groweth. They which hold the water to be indeed of red colour, doe either ascribe it to the nature of the water: Plin. or to the raine that runneth downe from the red mountaines, and so colloureth the water: Franius ex Maso in Iosh. and Strabo out of Crœsius Caldus reporteth, that there is there a running fountaine which sendeth red water into that sea, and Varro also writeth of a certaine fountaine by the sea side, whereof the sheepe drinking, of white become red and tawnie.

2. Others thinke that the sea is not red at all neither to the eye nor otherwise, but it was called in the Greeke tongue Ἐρυθρὰ θάλασσα, mare Erythræum, which signifieth in the Greeke, red, of Erythra, the sonne of Perseus, whose sepulchre is to bee seene in an Iland upon the sea called Tirina: Strab. libr 6. for Philostratus saith that the sea it selfe is of a blew and azure colour: lib. 3. de vita Apollin.

3. A third opinion there is, that this sea in Hebrew is not called the red sea, but the sea Suph, which groweth not either red, or a reed, as Hierom. Epist. ad Fabiolam, but a reed onely or bulrush, such as groweth in great abundance on the sea shore: as Aben Ezra and Rabb. Salomon. Pliny also writeth, and so doth Strabo, that within the sea toward the bankes there grew great plentie of trees, like unto Lawrell and Olive trees, which is so much the more strange, because none grow there upon the land.

4. Now to put somewhat of all these opinions together: 1. It is out of question, that in Hebrew this sea is not so called of the rednes, but of the reed there growing: as the rivers in Egypt, and specially Nilus, were full of flagges and reed, as is evident Exod. 2. 3. 2. It is also cleere, that the sea in the Greek tongue was not called Erythra, after the name of Erythra the sonne of Perseus, as is before shewed: which word signifying red, by translators it was turned from a name proper, to an appellative. 3. Yet notwithstanding the same having so prevailed, that almost by all writers, it is called by the name of the red Sea, insomuch as the Chalde Paraphrast retaineth that name: it is like that the colour of the sea might give occasion also of that name: not appearing so to bee by the reflexion of the Sunne, for so other waters seeme red when the Sunne shineth red upon them in the morning, as we reade 2. King. 3. 22. that the waters by like meanes appeared to the Moabites red as bloud. But that the reede and trees growing by and in the water doe in some part give such colour to the water; yet the proper name thereof is the Sea Suph, or Reedie Sea, of the abundance of reede, or some such like there growing. Ex Peter.

QVEST. XXVII. Of the fabulous reports of heathen writers, concerning the causes of the going out of the Hebrewes.

In the last place, as Pererius hath collected them, shall be added the fabulous reports of the Heathen writers concerning the departure of the Hebrewes out of Egypt. 1. Manethon an Egyptian writer, as Iosephus reporteth him, lib. contra Appian. devised this fable, that after long warre betweene the Egyptians and Hebrewes, whom hee calleth Pastores, shepheards, who had reigned a while in Egypt; at length when Themasis the King of Egypt, had besieged them with 80. thousand armed men, being compassed in with a strong wall, which they had made, and being out of hope to overcome them, compounded with them to get them gone of Egypt, whither they would.

In this fabulous tale of Manethon many lyes are heaped up together: 1. The Hebrewes never reigned in Egypt, but Ioseph under the King a long time governed that people even 80. yeeres to their great good. 2. Neither ever did the Hebrewes take armes in Egypt against the King, but endured their miserable servitude with great patience. 3. Neither did they make a wall for their owne defence, but they made in some certaine places of munition for Pharaoh. 4. Nor yet did the Hebrewes goe away upon any such composition and agreement but Pharaoh was forced by plagues, and by the strong hand of God to let them goe.

2. Lysimachus as Iosephus also in the same place testifieth, did thus fable of the Hebrewes, that they being a people infected with the leprosie, and the contagion being so generally dispersed, that by reason of the diseased people the land lay waste, the King Boccharis consulted with their gods, who advised them to expell the Hebrewes, and to drowne all those that were infected among them. The Hebrewes hereupon secretly in the night kindled fires and lights, and went away under the leading of one Moses, and burned among them to spare none, yea to deface the Temples of the gods, till they came to some places inhabited, and at length they came to that countrey which is called Judea, and there built the Citie Jerusalem. Concerning also this tale that the Hebrewes were expelled because of the leprosie, Iustinus and Cornelius Tacitus doe concurre with Lysimachus. Iustinus adding further, that the Egyptians pursuing the Hebrewes were driven home by tempest, and Tacitus, that Moses bid them to looke neither for gods helpe nor mans, but to trust to him.

Now. That this fable is worthie of no more credit than the other it may diversly appeare: 1. These heathen Chroniclers doe not agree together: one saith they were expelled for their leprosie; another saith they warred with the Egyptians: one saith that Themasis was then King; the other, that Beecharis then reigned in Egypt. 2. Beſide, how is it like that the Hebrewes ſhould be a leprous people, ſeeing Moſes made ſuch ſtraight lawes againſt ſuch as were lepers, ſhutting them out of the congregation, as Ioſephus well reaſoneth. 3. The Hebrewes at their departure uſed no artificiall or naturall light, but lead by the fierie cloud the light of heaven. 4. And untrue it is that they agreed among themſelves to put to the ſword the people that inhabited Jordan before them: they were commanded of God ſo to do, who is the Lord of the whole earth, and may give it to whom it pleaſeth him. 5. They deſtroyed indeed the idolatrous Temples, becauſe they were a diſhonour to God: and for their abominable Idolatrie were thoſe nations worthily put off. 6. Untrue alſo it is that the Egyptians were driven home with tempeſt, for they were utterly overthrowne by tempeſt in the ſea, not one of them returned. 7. Untrue alſo it is that Moſes bid them truſt wholly in him: he did indeede exhort them, neither to truſt in the vaine gods of the Heathen, nor in man: but he bid them wholly to relie upon God, and to wayte for the ſaluation of the Lord, chap. 14. 13.

Quest. XXVIII. Of the compariſon betweene the red ſea and baptiſme.

NOw to conclude, this paſſing of the Hebrewes thorough the ſea, is by the Apoſtle made a type and figure of Baptiſme: They were all baptiſed unto Moſes in the cloud and in the ſea, 1. Cor. 10. 2. Which reſemblance conſiſteth of divers part: 1. As in Baptiſme there is a dying unto ſinne, & a riſing to newneſſe of life, ſo the Iſraelites were as it were buried in the ſea, and afterward were reſtored to the land. Simler. 2. As Pharaoh was overthrowne in the ſea, and the Iſraelites delivered from their ſervitude, ſo in Baptiſme wee renounce the devill and the ſervice of ſinne: Theſtatus. 3. As the cloud did ſhelter them from the heat of the Sunne, ſo Chriſts bloud doth defend us from the wrath of God: Simler. 4. As the Iſraelites after they had paſſed the red ſea did eate of Manna, and dranke of the water of the Rocke; ſo they which are baptiſed into the name of Chriſt, are made partakers of the heavenly myſteries: Theodoret. 5. Like as all the Iſraelites were baptiſed in the ſea, yet many of them becauſe of their unbeliefe did not enter into the land of Canaan; ſo many that have been baptiſed into the name of Chriſt, afterward falling away either in faith or life, do not enter into the kingdome of heaven: Oſiander. 6. As in the morning watch the Egyptians were deſtroyed: ſo Chriſt riſing in the morning made a perfect conqueſt of the devill: Pelican. 7. As the Iſraelites were all baptized in one ſea, ſo, as S. Paul ſaith, there is one faith, one baptiſme. Epheſ. 4. Ferus. 8. As the Egyptians being caſt up dead were a ſpoile to the Hebrewes; ſo Chriſt hath lead captivitie captive, and given gifts unto his Church, Epheſ. 4. 4:9. As the Egyptians being dead could doe no more hurt to the Iſraelites; ſo our ſinnes being remitted, and as it were buried in the death of Chriſt, ſhall no more riſe to our condemnation: Simler. 10. As Moſes lift up his rodde and the waters were divided; ſo Chriſt ſaith, All power is given unto me, which is ſignified by the rodde; and then he giveth this commiſſion to his Apoſtles, Goe and baptiſe &c. Matth. 28. Ferus.

Quest. XXIX. How the people are ſaid to beleeve Moſes, or in Moſes.

Verſ. 31. THey beleeved the Lord and his ſervant Moſes. In the Hebrew the phraſe is, they beleeved in the Lord, and in Moſes: for beth the prepoſition here uſed ſignifieth (in) Now whereas this diſtinction is received in ſchooles, Credere Deo, credere Deum, credere in Deum: To beleeve God that he is true, to beleeve God to be, and to beleeve in God, that is, to repoſe our truſt and confidence in him, as we ſay in our beleefe, I believe in God: hereupon ariſeth this queſtion, how the people are ſaid to beleeve in Moſes, that is, to have any confidence in him. Therefore howſoever this diſtinction hath prevailed in ſchooles, and it may well be retained, yet it is not grounded, in reſpect of the phraſe, upon the Scripture which taketh theſe two, credere Deo, & credere in Deum; to beleeve God, and to beleeve in God, for one: ſo that the letter (beth) is taken here in the ſame ſenſe with (lamed): and the Chalde, Septuagint and Latine doe in this place tranſlate ἐπίστευσαν τῷ Θεῷ, crediderunt Deo & Moſi; they beleeved God and Moſes. So alſo 2. Chron. 20. 20. Beleeve his Prophets, and ye ſhall proſper: the ſame phraſe is uſed with (beth). Likewiſe in the new Teſtament to beleeve in the name of Chriſt, is ſometime taken not for confidence, but to give credite or beleeve him to bee true, and ſo betokeneth a temporarie faith, as it is ſaid that many beleeved in the name of Chriſt at Jeruſalem, when they ſaw his miracles, yet Jeſus would not commit himſelfe unto them, Ioh. 2. 24. And credere Chriſto, to beleeve Chriſt, is other where taken for true faith, Ioh. 5. 46. Had ye beleeved Moſes ye would have beleeved me: likewiſe, credere Chriſto, to beleeve that Jeſus is the Chriſt, is taken for true faith, that bringeth us to everlaſting life, Ioh. 20. 31. Now then they are ſaid to beleeve Moſes, that is, to acknowledge him to be a true Prophet and the faithfull ſervant of God. Simlerus.

4. Places of doctrine.

1. Doct. Of the difference betweene filiall and ſervill feare.

Verſ. 5. AND the heart of Pharaoh and his ſervants was turned againſt the people. Here wee ſee the difference betweene a ſervile and filiall and true feare: Impiorum timor ſervilis non diu durat, quàm ſenſus plagarum: The ſervill feare of the wicked laſteth no longer than the ſenſe and feeling of the plagues, as appeareth here in Pharaoh, whoſe heart was hardned againe ſo ſoone as the plagues were ceaſed. Filialis autem timor & fides in mediis malis exercetur: but a filiall feare and faith is exerciſed in the midſt of afflictions. Pelican.

2. D

2. Doct. Prayer may be made without the voyce.

Vers. 15. Why crieſt thou unto me? Moſes here uttered no voice, but ſighed unto God and cried in his heart, Egit vocis ſilentio ni corde clamaret: Hee in the ſilence of his voice ſo brought that he cried in his heart, as Auguſtine ſaith, quæſt. 52. in Exod. So that the lifting up of the voice is not the moſt neceſſarie part of prayer, but the ſorrow and contrition of the heart; and therefore the Lord ſaith by his Prophet, Before they call I will anſwere, Iſai. 65. 24. Before they call with their voice I will make anſwere to the ſecret requeſts and inward groanes of their heart. Piſcator.

3. Doct. Chriſt not all one to the beleevers and unbeleevers.

Vers. 20. IT was both a cloud and darknes. A lightſome cloud it was to the Iſraelites, but to the Egyptians a grievous darkenes: ſo our Saviour repreſented in this cloud, is to ſome the ſavour of life unto life, in the preaching of the Goſpell, to other the ſavour of death unto death, 2. Cor. 2. 16. to the Grecians fooliſhnes, a ſtumbling-block to the Jewes, but to the faithfull the power of God and the wiſedome of God, 1. Cor. 1. 23. 24. Simler.

4. Doct. A double deliverance by Chriſt.

Vers. 30. THus the Lord ſaved Iſrael the ſame day. The Lord had delivered them before, but now their deliverance is accompliſhed and perfected: So our Saviour by his death and paſſion redeemed us, as the Iſraelites were redeemed, when they did eate the paſſeover in Egypt, and ſprinkled of the bloud upon the doore-poſts: But Chriſt by his reſurrection did make perfect the worke of our redemption, and the triumph over hell and damnation: ſo that as the Pſalme ſaith, With him is plentious redemption Pſalm. 130. Ferus.

5. Places of confutation.

1. Conf. Againſt the Porphyrian Atheiſts.

Vers. 22. THe waters were a wall unto them on the right hand, and on the left. This doth evidently convince the Atheiſts, and Porphyrians, who objected that Moſes being a skilfull man in naturall obſervations, did obſerve the tide of the ſea, and at a low and ebbing water went over with his people. For 1. If Moſes had this skill, it is like that the Egyptians, ſpecially Pharaoh and the wiſeſt of them ſhould not have been ignorant of it, who notwithſtanding their skill were drowned in the waters. 2. When the ſea ebbeth the water onely leaveth the ſhore, the channell of the ſea is never drie. Simler. 3. And the ſea ſwelleth rather than ebbeth and falleth at the full of the moone, as it was now. 4. But this doth evidently bewray their malicious ignorance, that the waters ſtood up as a wall on each hand, which the ſea uſeth not to do at an ebbing water: Iun. in Analyſ. See more hereof queſt. 18. before.

2. Conf. That Chriſt was the ſubſtance both of the old and new Sacraments.

Vers. 22. THe children of Iſrael went thorow the middeſt of the ſea. Saint Paul hereupon doth inferre, that they were all baptiſed unto Moſes, in the cloud and in the ſea. 1. Cor. 10. 2. This their going then thorow the ſea, was not only a figure of baptiſme, and a bare ſignification of that which our Sacraments exhibite, as the Rhemiſts do note, 1 Cor. 10. Sect. 2. But the ſame truth and ſubſtance, even Chriſt Jeſus was exhibited in their Sacraments as is in ours, only the difference is in the manner, becauſe we ſee Chriſt more clearely then they did, whom they ſaw only as it were in a cloud, for the Apoſtle ſaith, they did eate the ſame ſpirituall meate not among themſelves, as the Rhemiſts cavill, but with us, as Auſtine well expoundeth, Lib. de pœnitent. cap. 2. And the Apoſtle himſelfe ſaith that the rocke was Chriſt: Chriſt then was the ſame ſpirituall drinke both to them and us.

3. Conf. No beleefe nor confidence to be placed in men.

Vers. 31. THey beleeved the Lord and his ſervant Moſes. The Rhemiſts urging here the Hebrew phraſe, which is, they beleeved in the Lord and in Moſes, would inferre that we may beleeve and truſt in men, and ſo in the Church: and the like place they object, 2. Chron. 20. 20. Beleeve in his Prophets and ye ſhall proſper: Rom. 10.

Contra. 1. The Latine tranſlator in both places readeth, Crediderunt Moſi, credite Prophetis, They beleeved Moſes, and beleeve his Prophets: ſo that they do heere refuſe the Latine text, which they only hold for authenticall. 2. It is ſhewed before, queſt. 30. that theſe phraſes to beleeve in God, and to beleeve God are indifferently taken both in the old and new Teſtament: and whereas Moſes ſaith of Abraham, Vehaiſhmin baihovah, He beleeved in God, the Apoſtle tranſlateth it ἐπίστευσε τῷ Θεῷ, He beleeved God. Rom. 4 2. Therefore Piſcators note is not true, that the word heemin with beth, ſignifieth to truſt or put confidence in, but with lamed it ſignifieth to beleeve, and ſo he ſaith they are ſaid to put their confidence in God principally, but in Moſes ſecondarily, as the faithfull ſervant of God. Contra. 1. What differeth now Piſcator noted of ſome overſight. from the opinion from the doctrine of the Romaniſts, who do not teach us principally or originally to truſt in God, but as our mediator, having dependance of God. 2 How can this aſſertion ſtand with the Scripture, Jer. 17. 5. Curſed be the man that truſteth in man. 3. Whereas he produceth certaine places, where in Scripture they are ſaid to put confidence in man, as 2. Cor. 2 3. This confidence have I in you all, that my joy is the joy of you all, and chap. 7. 16. I rejoyce, that I may put my confidence in you in all things: the Apoſtle in theſe places by confidence, underſtandeth only a firme perſwaſion that he had of them, that they would not deceive his hope hope and expectation, using the words מִדּוֹ and ἐλπίζω which differ much from מִבְטָח, that betokeneth a confidence in one, with a dependance upon him for helpe and succour.

6. Morall observations.

1. Observ. God knoweth the perils and dangers of his servants, & how to Deliver them.

Vers. 4. I will get me honour upon Pharaoh and all his hoast. The Lord brought his people into the strait of purpose, to get himselfe honour in delivering them out of their distresse, and in judging their enemies: whereupon it is evident, that the dangers which the servants of God fall into, come not by chaunce, but are brought upon them by Gods providence, who knoweth also how to deliver them out of the same, as it is in the Psalme: Call upon me in the day of trouble, and I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorifie me, Psalm. 50. 11. Simler.

2. Observ. Not to faint in our journey to the heavenly Canaan.

Vers. 12. It had been better for us to serve the Egyptians, than to die in the wilderneſſe. Like unto these Israelites, that preferred their servile life in Egypt, before their perilous travell unto Canaan through the wilderneſſe, are they, which will undertake no paines, nor undergoe any labour for the kingdome of God, but are readie when affliction commeth to fall away, and wish they had never entred into the profession of faith, which they finde so difficult and unpleasant. Sed melius est in itinere mori, quam cum Egyptijs interire: But it is better to die in the middest of the journey, than to perish with the Egyptians. Ferus. As Moses did rather chuse to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enioy the pleasures of sin for a season, Hebr. 11. 25.

3. Observ. Action to be joyned with invocation.

Vers 15. Why crieſt thou unto me? speake unto the children of Israel that they go forward. As prayer is necessarie and faithfull invocation, so also from prayer we must go forward unto action: we must so depend upon God by prayer for his protection, as that we must also carefully use the meanes which God hath appointed for our preservation: Ostenditur non opus esse ut deinceps clames, sed ut agas quod in mandatis acceperit: Hereby is shewed, that he need no longer crie, but to do that which he is commanded. Simler. Cornelius after he had prayed, goeth forward, he sendeth for Peter to bee further instructed, as he was commanded, Act. 10.

4. Observ. Faith the victorie of the world.

Vers. 14. Lift up thy rod, &c. and divide the sea. This rod signifieth faith whereby the sea is divided unto us, we overcome all tribulation, as the Apostle saith, this is the victorie that overcommeth the world, even your faith, 1. Ioh. 5. 4. Ferus. Of the power and efficacie of faith against all dangers the Apostle thus speaketh, Hebr. 11. 31. Which through faith subdued kingdomes, wrought righteouſneſſe, ſtopped the mouth of Lions, quenched the violence of fire, escaped the edge of the sword, of weake were strong. &c.

5. Observ. Obedience to God and his Ministers cannot be severed.

Vers. 31. They beleeved God and his servant Moses. Moses was Gods Minister, and they could not have their obedience unto God, but they must also receive and acknowledge the Minister of God Moses: Hoc ergo principium teneamus, non alios obedire Deo, niſi qui Prophetas ab eo miſſos recipiunt, quia nefas eſt separare quæ ille conjunxit: Let us hold this principle, that no other obey God, than do receive the Prophets sent of him, because it is a wicked thing to separate what he hath joyned together. As our Saviour saith, He that heareth you heareth me: Calvin. Moses therefore is here joyned with God, to teach that the Ministers of God speaking in his name, are no otherwise to be heard, than if the Lord himself should speake unto us: as the law of Moses is of no lesse authoritie than the decalogue it selfe, which the Lord pronounced; and the Epistles of the Apostles, than the Gospels which containe the doings and sayings of our Saviour, Simler.

Chap. XV.

1. The Argument and method.

THis Chapter conteineth, first the solemne thankesgiving of the Israelites for their deliverance, to vers. 22. Secondly the historie of certaine journeyes of the Israelites, to vers. 20.

The thankesgiving is performed, first by Moses and his company, to vers. 20. Then by Miriam with the women, vers. 20. 21.

In Moses song there is first the argument and summe of the song propounded, that they will prayse the Lord, because they had overthrowne their enemies, the horse and the rider in the sea, vers. 1.

2. The narration or exposition, consisting of benefits past and to come.

The benefit already past is their deliverance, and the destruction of their enemies, to vers. 13. where the effects with the causes are set forth, which are three: First, who were drowned in the sea, ecinſe is ſet before, the power of God, verſ. 23. The effect followeth, Pharaohs hoaſt and chariots, and is captaines were drowned in the ſea, verſ. 4. Secondly by what meanes, the cauſe is firſt expreſſed, the ower of God, verſ. 6. Then the effect, they were deſtroyed by the winds, called the blaſt of his noſtrils, d the raging waters, verſ. 7. 8. Thirdly, when, and upon what occaſion they were deſtroyed, even hen they were in the height of their pride, verſ. 9. The enemie ſaid, I will purſue; then the cauſe theref, the power of God, ſet forth comparatively, verſ. 11.

The benefits to come. 1. Their preſervation ſtill, verſ. 13. 2. The feare of the enemies, both whom feare ſhall take, the people of Paleſtina, Edom and Canaan, verſ. 14. 15. and the cauſe of this feare is ered, Becauſe of the greatnes of their armie, verſ. 16. and the fruits and effects of this feare, Till the peo-paſſe by, verſ. 16. 3. The bringing of them in, and planting them in the land of Canaan, verſ. 17.
Their continuall protection for ever, verſ. 18.

3. The concluſion of this ſong, containing a rehearſall of the deſtruction of the Egyptians, and the deverance of the Lords people, verſ. 18.

In the thankeſgiving of Miriam: three things are declared. 1 Who they were, Miriam with the won and matrons of Iſrael, verſ. 20. 2. With timbrels and daunces. 3. The matter and argument of their ng, anſwerable unto Moſes ſong, verſ. 20. 21.

In the ſecond part of this Chapter, there are deſcribed the journeyes of the Iſraelites, which were of two rts, either hard & unpleaſant journeyes, in difficult and dangerous places, or comfortable and pleaſant.
Of the firſt ſort were their two journeyes, one in the wilderneſſe of Shur for three dayes, where they nd no water at all: the ſecond journey was to come to Marah, where is deſcribed: firſt the diſtreſſe herein they were, the waters were bitter, with the event, the naming of the place upon that accident, d the effect, the mourning of the people: then is ſhewed how they were delivered from this diſtreſſe, here, 1. The cauſes are expreſſed, the principall, God at the prayer of Moſes; the inſtrumentall or mi-iſtriall, a tree which the Lord ſhewed. 2. The effect, the waters became ſweete. 3. The event, that by is occaſion, the Lord maketh a promiſe and covenant with them: conſiſting of the condition, their obedience, the promiſe of the benefit, their health and ſafetie from all the plagues of Egypt, the foundation thereof, the providence and protection of God: I am the Lord that healeth thee, verſ. 26.

Their journey of the ſecond ſort, was in Elim, wherein were twelve fountaines of water, and ſeventie alme trees: both delectable for their pleaſure, and profitable for their preſent uſe and neceſſitie, verſ. 27.

3. The explanation of doubtfull questions.

QVEST. I. Of the antiquitie and excellencie of Moses song.

Vers. 1. THen sang Moses. 1. This song of Moses, as it is the first that we reade of in Scripture, so it is the most auncient song that is extant in the world, for the songs of Linus Musæus, Orpheus are found to be 300. yeares after this song of Moses. 2. Iosephus saith that Moses composed this song in hexameter verse: and lest any should thinke this strange, Hierome in his preface to the booke of Iob, witnesseth that all that booke from those words in the beginning of the third chapter, Let the day perish wherein I was borne, unto those words cap. 42. therefore I abhorre my selfe, and repent in dust and ashes, is written in hexameter verse, for the most part consisting of Dactilus and Spondæus, the two usuall feete of an hexameter verse. Perer. 3. But whereas Iosephus in the same place saith, that the Israelites did passe all that night in mirth, and rejoycing for their deliverance, that seemeth not to be so: for it was morning before the Egeptians were drowned, cap. 14. 24. The Lord looked toward the Egyptians in the morning watch: and the Israelites saw their dead bodies upon the sea banke, which they could not so well discerne by night: therefore this rejoycing was solemnized the next day, not the same night.

QVEST. II. In what order Moses, the children of Israel, and Miriam sang this song.

COncerning the order and manner how this song was sung. 1. Some are of opinion, that Moses sang it alone, and that he taught the people afterward this song, who did often sing it, as they had occasion: Thostatus and Iosephus thinketh that the people first rejoyced, and gave thankes unto God, and that afterward Moses framed this song in hexameter verse: but the text favoureth not this opinion, which saith, that then, even at that time Moses and the children of Israel sang; wherefore I subscribe rather unto Philo, who saith, that Moses began first every verse, and then the people followed: & this is agreeable to the text, where Moses boginneth in his owne person saying, I will sing unto the Lord: and seeing that Moses and the children of Israel sang this song, who were not all Prophets to endite a prophetical song, neither in so short a time could they have learned this song before, it is like that the one followed the other, and that Moses began, and then the people repeated either the whole verse or the ground of the song only, which was this, Sing unto the Lord, for he hath triumphed gloriously the horse and his Rider hath he overthrowne in the sea; which verse is after repeated by Miriam and her companie: for so was it the use in solemne songs, to have one verse repeated, as Psalme 136. that clause, For his mercie endureth for ever, is often repeated.

Now in what order of consort and consent Miriam sang and answered the men, is not agreed upon. 1. Some think that Miriam with the women answered the men, and sang the ground of the song by turnes: Oleaster, Iun. and Philo sometime is of the same opinion, that there was a mixt harmonie of the great and base voyces of the men, and of the sharpe tunes of the women. 2. But I thinke rather that there were two companies of singers, of the men apart, and of the women apart, and that as Moses began, and the people followed, so did Miriam sing, and the women answered her. Sic Pellican. Simler. Calvin. And this may seeme more probable. 1. Because it was the use for the women only by themselves, not mingled with men to celebrate such solemnities, as appeareth Ind. 11. when Iepthahs daughter met him, and 1. Sam. 18. 5. when the daughters of Israel came out against Saul and David. 2. Beside their instrument and gesture of dancing sheweth so much, that they were by themselves. 3. Neither is it to be thought, that they sang only the ground of the song, which for brevities sake only is expressed, but the whole song. Simler. Calvin. Ferus. And so much seemeth to be insinuated in the Psalme 68. 11. The Lord gave matter to the women to tell of the great armie: They therefore did set forth in their song the whole manner of their deliverance, and the overthrow of their enemies, as Moses had done before: this place of the Psalme Genebrard doth fitly applie unto this song of deliverance, made by this company of women; whose opinion also is that there were two companies, one of the men, the other of women, singing by themselves. Viri in uno choro cum Mose, & fœmina in altero cum Maria celebrabant victoriam de Pharaone partam. The men in one companie with Moses, and the women in another with Marie or Miriam, did celebrate the victorie of Pharaoh obtained. 4. And whereas Miriam is said to answere the men, that may be referred rather to the correspondencie of the like act of singing performed by the women, and to the identitie or agreement of the song, than restrained to their answering them by turnes: as Simlerus giveth his opinion that while Moses sang this verse with the men, Marie his sister, appointeth a peculiar queere of women. Et idem carmen præcinens illis succinentibus priori virorum choro respondet: And singing before them the same song, doth answ ere to the former queere of men.

QVEST. III. The end of the song of Moses.

THe end of this song of Moses was, 1. To testifie their thankfulnes unto God for this great deliverance, and that by this example others afterward should be stirred up, to give like thanks unto God: the daughters of Israel did at the returne of Saul and David, from the overthrow of Goliah and the Philistims, 1. Sam. 18. and as Iehosaphat and the people blessed God in the same place, where they had obtained the victorie, 2. Chron. 20. Simler. 2. This celebration of publike thanks, doth make also very much for the truth of the historie, for as Calvin saith, Quibus mentiti essent, cùm aliis alii testes essent? Would they have lied, seeing they were one witnesse to another? neither did this song come abroad to other nations. 3. This song was a notable type and resemblance of the spirituall joy of the Church, for their deliverance by Christ: as in the Revelation, the Saints that had gotten victorie over the beast, are said, To sing the song of Moses the servant of God, and the song of the Lambe, saying, great and marvellous are thy works Lord God Almightie, just and true are thy wayes, thou King of Saints: cap. 15. 3.

QUEST. IV. Why the ſcripture ſpeaketh ſo much againſt horſe uſed in battell.

Vers. 1. THE horſe and his rider hath he ov erthrowne in the ſea. 1. The ſingular is put for the plurall, which is uſuall in the Scripture, and in this place with a ſpeciall relation to Pharaoh himſelfe perſon, overthrowne with his horſe. 2. We ſhall finde in Scripture, that the pride and truſt in horſes in battell is much diſcommended, as Pſal. 20. Some put their truſt in chariots, ſome in horſe, but we will remember the name of the Lord our God. Pſal. 33. 17. An horſe is but a vaine helpe. Pſal. 76. 6. At thy rebuke O God of Iacob, both the chariots and horſe are caſt aſleepe, Pſal 147. 10. He hath no pleaſure in the ſtrength of the horſe: and among other ſinnes of the people, this is numbred for one, Their land was full of horſes, and their chariots were infinite: Eſay 2. 7. 3. The reaſon why horſes are ſo much diſcommended, Origen would have to be this: the Law commandeth nothing concerning horſes, as it ſpeaketh of aſſes, becauſe theſe are ordained more for mens deſtruction, but aſſes ſerve for labour, and carrying of burdens, and other neceſſarie uſes: and he addeth further, Laſcivi motus, & ſuperba cervicis animal equus: An horſe is a wanton and proud beaſt, and therefore the Scripture compareth ſuch unto horſe. Orig. hom. 15, in Ioſ. Another giveth this reaſon, Quia contra Dei imperium poſſidetur: Becauſe it was againſt the commandement of God, to poſſeſſe and multiplie horſes, Deut. 17. Hieron. in 2. cap. Iſaia. Another yeeldeth this reaſon: Habet & Dominus noſter equos, habet & diabolus ſuos, &c. The Lord hath his horſe, and ſo hath the devill: when the Prohpet deſired that the eies of the young man might bee opened, hee ſaw chariots and horſe, but no riders: Quia currus & equi Angeli, & eorum aſcenſor Deus, Becauſe the Angels are the chariots and horſe, and the Lord himſelfe is their rider: and on the other ſide, the Devill is the rider of the horſe, Hieron. in Pſal. 77. Rupertus would have this the cauſe: Hic mundus per equum, Diabolus per aſcenſorem ſignificetur, Becauſe the world is underſtood by the horſe, the Devill by his rider. Philo goeth further from the marke: Equi ſunt furor & concupiſcentia, inſeſſor & auriga intellectus; The horſe are wrath and concupiſcence, the rider is the underſtanding: and ſo he underſtandeth that prohibition allegorically, Deut. 17. That the King ſhould not multiplie horſes, of the paſſions and affections of the minde: Philo in the ſame place. Ex Perer. 4. But the true cauſe indeed why the Scripture ſo much inveigheth againſt horſe, is not as though it condemned the neceſſary uſe of them, and the defence and ſervice by them in warre: for Salomon had 40. thouſand ſtalles of horſes for his chariots, & 12. thouſand horſemen, 1. King. 4. 26. and therein ſinned not. But two reaſons may bee rendred thereof, the one politicall, which concerned onely that people, leſt they might by this occaſion go into Egypt to multiplie horſes, Deut. 17. 16. which being a plaine countrie abounded with horſe: the other reaſon was morall, becauſe they did put their truſt and confidence in horſe. Both theſe cauſes the Prophet joyneth together, Iſay 31. 1. Wo unto them that go down into Egypt, and ſtay upon horſes: And for this cauſe, as Origen well noteth, Filii Iſrael nunquam equis inſiſtere reperiuntur, The children of Iſrael in all their battels againſt Canaan, are never ſaid to have uſed any horſe: Baſil alſo toucheth the cauſe, Quia jubebat Deus, ut toti penderent à ſuo præſidio, &c. God commanded them wholly to depend upon his helpe: Baſil upon that place, 2. Eſay. So then as ſimplie to number the people, was not diſpleaſing unto God: for Moſes numbred them, but with an intent to rejoyce and put confidence in their numbers, as David did; ſo ſimplie, it was not unlawfull for them to have horſe, but to put their truſt and confidence in them.

QUEST. V. How the Lord is ſaid to be the ſtrength and ſong of his Church.

Vers. 2. THE Lord is my ſtrength and ſong, and he is become my ſaluation. 1. Theſe words are repeated both by the Prophet David, Pſal. 118. 14. and by the Prophet Iſay cap. 12. 2. whereby appeareth the excellencie of this ſong, and that the praiſe of God is a moſt principall part of Gods ſervice: 2. God is ſaid to be the ſtrength of his ſervants, being not only mightie and omnipotent in himſelfe, but giving them alſo might and ſtrength: for as Iehoſaphat ſaid, There is no ſtrength in us in reſpect of this great multitude. 2. Chron. 20. 12. So for the moſt part the people of God are weakeſt in outward meanes, and in their extreme diſtreſſe, that God may have the more glorie in aſſiſting, and ſtrengthning them. 3. He is ſaid to be their ſong, that is, both the matter of their ſong, to whom they do referre the honour and praiſe of all their victories, as alſo, he is the ſong of his Church, in whom they onely rejoyce and make their boaſt, as Saint Paul onely rejoyced and gloried in Chriſt. Simler.

QUEST. VI. Whether God appeared in any viſible ſhape to the Iſraelites at the red ſea.

Vers. 2. THIS is my God. 1. The Hebrewes opinion, that God appeared to them in a viſible forme, as like a man of warre upon the red ſea, whom they pointed at with the finger, and ſaid, This is my God, hath no ground, nor warrant at all. Firſt, the Lord knowing how prone the people were to Idolatrie, would not ſhew himſelfe publikely in any viſible ſhape leſt they ſhould have imagined God to be ſo, as Moſes ſaith unto them: Take heede to your ſelves, for yee ſaw no image in the day, that the Lord ſpake unto you in Horeb, out of the middeſt of the fire, Deut. 4. 15. And for the ſame cauſe, the Lord would not ſhew himſelfe in any viſible maner unto Iſrael, though privately he was ſeene of Ioſuah, like a man of warre, Ioſ. 5. But in what manner the Lord ſhewed himſelfe, is expreſſed before, cap. 14. 24. The Lord looked unto the hoaſt of the Egyptians, ſending thunder, raine and lightning, with ſtorme and tempeſt upon them. Perer. 3. They therefore by the viſible and ſenſible effect, which they ſaw before their eyes, did conſtrue God to be verily preſent. Lyran.

They therefore in ſaying, This is my God, make a difference betweene the true God and the falſe, as the Egyptian gods were, as if they ſhould have ſaid, Hic eſt verus Deus, non falſo nomine, quales erant in Egypto colebamus, This is the true God, not falſely ſo called as they were whom we worſhipped in Egypt. Baſil.

Basil. And againe they acknowledge him, Non novum aut recentem Deum, Not a new start up god, but the fathers God, whom Abraham worshipped; and hereby, as before, they distinguished the true God from the heathens Idols: so Hac voce fides Abrahæ discernitur à cunctis gentium superstitionibus; By this word the faith of Abraham is discerned from all the superstitions of the Gentiles: Calvin. And these words The is my God, have a speciall reference unto Christ their peculiar God, whom their Father Abraham worshipped, as our Saviour saith, Your Father Abraham rejoyced to see my day, he saw it, and was glad, Joh. 8. Rupert. And Christ specially is said to be the strength of his members: for the strength of the head is the strength of the members. Ferus.

Quest. VII. In what sense Moses saith he would build the Lord a tabernacle.

I will build him a tabernacle. 1. Some reade, I will glorifie him. Latine and the Septuagint, Aquila, Calvin and Piscator; but the usuall signification of the word navah, which signifieth to dwell, doth favour that reading. 2. Some reade, Habitabo eum, I will inhabite him, Cajetan. But the word being hiphil, includeth beside an active power, as, I will cause to inhabite. 3. Wherefore the best reading is, will build him a sanctuarie, or seemely tabernacle, as the Chalde Paraphrast, and Vatab. Iun. Montan. Pagn. So that heere Moses by the spirit of Prophecie, foreshewed that the Lord would have a peculiar tabernacle made for himselfe, as the Idols of the Gentiles had their temples. Simler.

Quest. VIII. How the Lord is said to be high.

I will exalt him, or set him high. That is, exalt his praise, and acknowledge the Lord to be the only high God: foure wayes in Scripture is the Lord said to be high: 1. In respect of his incomprehensible nature which none can behold as it is, or attaine to the knowledge of it: Who only hath immortalitie and dwelleth in the light, that none can attaine unto, whom never man saw, neither can see, unto whom be honor and power everlasting. 1. Tim. 6. 16. 2. In respect of his deepe and unsearchable wisedome, as the Apostle also saith, O the deepenesse of the wisedome and knowledge of God, how unsearchable are his judgements, and his wayes past finding out, Rom. 11. 33. 3. The Lord is said to be most high, in respect of his high dominion, and above all Kings, and Princes, as Nebuchadnezzar confesseth the Lord to be most high, Dan. 4. 31. though he were the most high Prince then in the earth, yet he confesseth God to be higher than he. 4. The Lord is very high in his habitation, he dwelleth in the heavens, God is in the heavens, and thou art in the earth, Eccle. 5. 1. who although he is in everie place, yet heaven is said to be his seate, in respect of the more glorious signes, which he hath there placed of his presence. Let us also with the Hebrewes thus acknowledge the Lord to be high, and exalt his praise.

Quest. IX. In what sense the Lord is said to be a man of warre.

Vers. 3. Iehovah is a man of warre. That is, an excellent warrier. 1. God is said to be a warrier in three respects. 1. Because he giveth victorie, συντρίων πολέμους, he breaketh battels and subdueth warre, as the Septugaint, Victor bellorum: an overcommer of battels, as the Chalde Paraphrast. 2. Because he is exercised in warre, and fighteth the battels of his people, giving them good successe: as Ezechias thus encouraged his people against Senacherib; With him is an arme of flesh, but with us is the Lord our God to helpe us, and to fight our battels, 2. Chron. 33. 7. Simler. 3. He is a man of warre in respect of his policie and policie: as a wise Captaine will watch his best opportunitie, and then he will set upon his enemie: so the Lord a great while suffred the Egyptians to go on, but when he saw his time, he came upon them and overthrew them all at once. Ferus. 4. A wise warrier will make best choice with what weapon and force he will encounter his enemie: so Christ was this wise warrier, who having not to deale with flesh and bloud, but with spirituall enemies, did not arme himselfe with carnall, but with spirituall weapons: Contra potestatem superbia, humilitatem induit contra spiritualia nequitiæ fortitudine charitatis seipsum cinxit: Against the power of pride, he put on humility; against spiritual malice and impiety, he armed himself with charity.

Quest. X. Why now it is said His name is Iehovah.

Vers. 3. His name is Iehovah. 1. The Latine translator readeth, Omnipotent is his name, which although it be true of God, that he is omnipotent in himselfe, and so the name of God signifieth God himselfe, and that by the invocation of the name of God, miracles and wonderfull things are wrought, as Moses here, when he stretched out his rod upon the sea, did also invocate and call upon the name of God; yet it is not the meaning of this place, where in the Hebrew, it is Iehovah, which signifieth not omnipotent, but is a peculiar name, which is given unto God in Scripture. 2. The true reading is, Iehovah is his name, which Oleaster deriving of hovah, which signifieth destruction, maketh this to be the meaning, that the Lord had now shewed himselfe Iehovah, in the destruction and overthrow of his enemies: the word being derived rather of haiah to be, as of the same root, the Lord calleth himselfe Ehye, Exod. 3. 13. the Lord now sheweth himselfe Iehovah, in making good his promises, in delivering of his people, and in shewing his Majestie and power: that as hee before made himselfe knowne to Moses by his name Iehovah, Exod. 6. so now as a mightie Iehovah, he performeth that which there he promised. Simler. more of the name Iehovah, Exod. chap. 6. quest. 7. and before.

Quest. XI. Of the name of the Captaine set over three.

Vers. 4. His chosen captaines, &c. they sunk like a stone. 1. The word is shalshim, which signifieth captaines over threes: some thinke they were so called tristatæ, as the Septuag. readeth, because they were in the next place to the King, as Daniel was one of the three, that was set over all the governors vernours, Dan. 6. 3. Hier. in. 5. cap. Dan. Some becauſe they were in the third place from the King. Greg. Nyſſen. upon this ſong bringeth divers interpretations, as they were called triſtatæ, that upon three horſes: or they which could ſtand againſt three, or they which had the third place in the that if the firſt and ſecond were ſlaine, they might ſtand up in their place. Heſychius ſaith they called, which were of the Kings guard, which uſed three ſpeares. Origen. hom. 6. in Exod. fleeth allegoricall ſenſe, who applieth theſe triſtatas, to thoſe three wayes wherein a man ſinneth, in thought, and deed, and ſuch other allegoricall applications he hath, which come not neere the point. But the probable conjecture is, that they were ſo called, as Greg. Nyſſen. in the former place alleageth, becauſe in every chariot there were three, one to guide the chariot, one to fight, another to defend. But like Cajetans conceit rather, that thinketh there were in every chariot nine, three on each ſide, and three before, and that every chariot had his Captaine, as it may be gathered, cap. 14. 7. If every chariot had his ſeverall captaine, it is like there were more than three in a chariot: this ſenſe the Septuagint do favour, calling them ἀλλαγὰς τριστάτας, the triarie captaines, riders, ſo that theſe captaines were ſuch as rid in the chariots. Ex Perer.

2. The chiefe Captaines then are drowned in the red ſea, as before they made the waters red with the blood of the Hebrewes children, and as both King and Princes conſented in crueltie, ſo are they joyned in puniſhment. Pelican. The fearefull deſtruction of Pharaoh and his hoſt.

3. The Lord is ſaid to caſt them into the ſea: the word is jarah, taken from archers: that as an arrow is ſhot ſwiftly, and with ſtrength out of a bow, ſo were they with violence caſt into the ſea. Borrh. and as a ſtone falleth and never riſeth againe, and being throwne, it falleth with violence: ſuch was the deſtruction of Pharaoh, with violence not to be reſiſted, and they ſanke as a ſtone that lieth ſtill never to be recovered. Ferus. 4. To the ſame purpoſe afterward, they are ſaid to be conſumed as ſtubble, to ſhew their ſwift deſtruction, as ſtubble is eaſilie ſet on fire. Simler. But as the fire which conſumeth the ſtubble purgeth the gold: ſo the Iſraelites came forth of the ſea like gold, that whereas they were murmurers before, now they do give thankes unto God. Borrh.

Quest. XII. What is meant by the blaſt of his noſtrils.

Verſ. 8. By the blaſt of thy noſtrils the waters were gathered. 1. Some underſtand by this phraſe the wrath of God, Simler. But he made mention of the wrath of God immediately before, and the ſtanding of the waters was a worke of Gods mercy, and favour to deliver his people, not of wrath, and therefore Moſes expoundeth himſelfe, Thou bloweſt with the wind, verſ 10. whereof mention is made before, cap. 14. 21. how the Lord ſent a ſtrong Eaſt wind. Iun. Vatab. 2. And by this phraſe, how eaſily the Lord can confound the wicked, Levi attactu Dei concidunt omnia, By the leaſt touch, even by the breath of his mouth all things do fall to the ground. Pelican. Si hoc ſolo ſpiritu potuit, quid poterit cum venerit in Majeſtate, if the Lord could do this with his breath, what is he able to do when he commeth in his Majeſtie? Ferus. 3. And in that he ſaith the depthes were congealed together, where the word is kapha, which properly ſignifieth the running or ſetting together of cheeſe; Borrh. it ſheweth how eaſily the Lord commandeth his greateſt creatures, that even he can cauſe the waters of the ſea to come together as curds do cheeſe: And in that it is added, the Depthes were congealed together in the heart of the ſea: it declareth that they went not thorow the ſides of the ſea only, fetching a compaſſe like a ſemicircle about: but that they went into the middeſt and heart of the ſea. Simler.

Quest. XIII. Of the vaine boaſting of the Egyptians.

Verſ. 9. The enemie ſaid, I will purſue, I will overtake. 1. The Egyptians are heere brought forth, as if they were upon a ſtage, vaunting and boaſting themſelves, which kind of figure called Proſopopœia doth more fully and emphatically ſet forth, how the Lord diſappointed them of their purpoſe, than if it had been expreſſed by a ſimple narration. Simler. After the ſame manner Siſeras mother is brought in ſpeaking and vaunting of the victory. Iud. 5. 2. This doth not only ſhew the pride and haughtines of the enemie, but the great power of God, that whereas they made account of the victorie, comming with chariots and horſe againſt naked and unarmed people, yet the Lord delivered them, as ſnatching the prey out of betweene their teeth. Calvin. 3. And three things they purpoſed and promiſed themſelves, to be enriched by the ſpoile of them; Vatab. And they purpoſed to put many to the ſword, as Moſes and Aaron, and the principall, and to take the reſt captive, and to bring them againe into their ſervice, and poſſeſſe them as their inheritance. Simler. For ſo the word is beſt tranſlated, as is ſhewed before in the Hebrew readings.

Quest. XIV. What are the ſtrong, before whom the Lord is preferred.

Verſ. 11. Who is like unto the Lord among the mightie? 1. This being uttered with an interrogation, is more emphaticall, than if it had been barely affirmed. Calvin. 2. The moſt reade, among the Gods. But the word eelim, is alſo taken for the Mightie, as Pſalm. 29. 1. Give unto the Lord ye ſonnes of the mightie, give, unto the Lord glorie; and it hath a more generall ſignification, preferring the Lord before the Angels, both good and evill: which of the latter ſort aſſiſted the Magicians againſt Moſes, and above the Idols of the Egyptians, upon whom the Lord alſo executed judgement, chap. 12. 12. and above the mightie of the earth, for Pharaoh and his Princes were confounded. 3. This expoſition is confirmed by the like place. Pſal. 89. 6. Who is equall to the Lord in the heavens, and who is like the Lord among the ſonnes of the ſtrong? Pſal. 89. 6.

Quest.

Quest. XV. How the Lord is said to be fearefull in praises.

Vers. 11. Who is like thee so glorious? 1. In three things God is preferred before all other, in holi-neſſe, for the very Angels are imperfect in his ſight: in feare and reverence, none is ſo to be reverenced as the Lord, whoſe glory the Angels cannot endure to behold, and in the power of his workes. Siml. 2. He is ſaid to be fearefull in praiſes: which ſome do interpret, that whereas the Devils are feared becauſe they worke miſchiefe, God is feared, becauſe his workes are mercifull and praiſe-worthie, as it is in the Pſal. 130. 3. Mercy is with thee, that thou mayeſt be feared. Some expound it, that God is not to be praiſed without feare and trembling; but the fitteſt ſenſe is, Quod Deus non poteſt rite laudari, quin rapiuntur omnes in ſtuporem: That God cannot duly be praiſed, but all men fall into aſtoniſhment, no man can praiſe him as he is worthy. Calv. To this purpoſe the Prophet David, Pſal. 89. 7. God is very terrible in the aſſemblies of his Saints. Even the Saints, the holy Angels do tremble, and wonder when they conſider God's praiſes. 3. Laſtly, God is ſaid to doe wonders: many things amongſt men are counted wonders, which wiſe men doe not admire: and many things are miraculous, even unto wiſe men, which are not ſo to the Angels: but God doth wonders, which are an aſtoniſhment even to the Angels. Simler.

Quest. XVI. Wherein the Egyptians are compared unto lead.

Vers. 10. They ſanke as lead in the mighty waters, &c. 1. Impuriſſimo metallo comparantur: They are compared to the moſt impure mettall, not to ſilver and gold, but to lead, which is called ghophrith derived of ghophir, which ſignifieth duſt or earth, becauſe lead is of the moſt terrene and earthly nature of all the metals. Borrh. 2. Likewiſe they are compared to lead, Quia peccatum ſua mole ad infernatrahit: Becauſe ſinne by the waight thereof, draweth into hell. And therefore by the Prophet wickedneſſe is compared to a talent of lead, Zachar. 5. 7. Ferus. 3. Neither in reſpect of the waight of their ſinne onely, but of the heavineſſe of their judgement, doth this ſimilitude agree unto them, Onere perfidiæ & gravitate judicii divini in altum depreſſi: They are borne downe into the deepe with the burden of their ſinne, and the heavineſſe of Gods judgement. Borrh. 4. And beſide, Nullus fuit evitandi locus: There was no way for them to eſcape, as lead ſwimmeth not, neither floteth in the waters, but ſinketh downe to the bottome. Oſiander. 5. Beſide, whereas, Omnia quæ in opere metallorum conflatorio uſurpantur, hic nominantur: All things which are uſed in melting of mettals, are here named, as fire, ſpirit, or wind, lead. Borrh. Herein alſo they are likened unto lead, becauſe that mettall is ſooneſt of all metals melted, waſted, and conſumed in the fire, and ſo the wicked are ſwept away with Gods judgements, whereas the righteous are thereby tried and purified, as ſilver and gold: So the Prophet Ieremy ſaith, The bellowes are burnt, the lead is conſumed in the fire, Ier. 6. 29. 6. Likewiſe this ſimilitude ſheweth, that this their ſinking downe like lead, betokeneth their everlaſting puniſhment: Malitia gravis, & importabiles Deo & hominibus abjiciuntur in abyſſum inferni cum Satana & Angelis illius diſcruciandi: They being weighed downe with malice, and importable to God and men, are caſt downe into the bottome of hell, for ever to be tormented with Satan and his Angels. Pellican.

Quest. XVII. How the earth is ſaid to have ſwallowed them.

Vers. 12. The earth ſwallowed them. 1. Neither is the water here underſtood by the earth, as the earth is ſometime taken for this inferiour part of the world, as when God is ſaid to have made heaven and the earth, as Auguſt. quæſt. 54. in Exod. for this were ſomewhat coact. 2. Neither yet did the earth open and devour them, as the water ſwallowed them, as Vatab. For if they had beene ſwallowed up of the earth; as Core, Dathan and Abiram were, the Scripture would not have concealed ſo great a miracle. 3. Neither are they ſaid to be devoured of the earth, Quia in limo hæſerunt: Becauſe they did ſtick in the mudde, as Simler. For they were caſt up upon the land. 4. Neither is the meaning, Subito perierunt, ſi eos terra deglutiviſſet: That they periſhed ſuddenly, as though the earth had ſwallowed them. Oſiander. For this is not a ſimilitude, but a narration of the fact. 5. Therefore by the earth here is underſtood, Alveus maris: The chanell of the ſea, hemmed in, and compaſſed of the mountaines, as Ionas deſcribed the bottome of the ſea, I went downe to the bottome of the mountaines, the earth with her barres was about me for ever, Ionah 2. 6. Iun. 6. Ferus by the earth underſtandeth hell, Vbi nullus ordo, ſed ſempiternus horror inhabitat: Where there is no order, but everlaſting horrour and confuſion. But the other ſenſe better agreeth to the hiſtorie. 7. Wherein appeareth the correſpondency of the judgement of their ſtate, Amatores terrenorum devorabuntur à terra: The lovers of earthly things, are devoured of the earth. Pellican.

Quest. XVIII. How the Lord will lead and carry his people.

Vers. 13. Thou wilt carry them in thy ſtrength unto thine holy habitation. 1. The word in the original is in the preterperfect tenſe, Thou haſt carried, not that Moſes only wiſheth that the Lord would carry them to the land of promiſe: but he ſpeaketh confidently, that the Lord which had redeemed them would not now leave them, till he had accompliſhed his good worke toward them: and it is the manner of Prophets, to ſpeake of things to come, as already done and paſt, becauſe of the certainty of Gods promiſe. Siml. 2. Here Moſes uſeth two effectuall words, the one is nachah, which ſignifieth to leade, as a ſhepheard leadeth, which ſheweth the provident care of God, as a faithfull and carefull ſhepheard leading his people like ſheep. Siml. The other word, nahal, ſignifieth to carry: which ſheweth both the tender care of God, who carrieth his children, as the mother doth her infant in her boſome, and the weaknes & infirmity of the people, that had need to be carried; yea which is more, Chriſt hath not only carried us, but hath carried our ſins. Per. 3. Two reaſons Moſes here uſeth to encourage the people, not to doubt, but that the Lord will pro-them ſtill, becauſe to that end he had redeemed them, and beſide, the Lord is of great power and ſtrength, to carry them thorow all difficulties and lets whatſoever. Calvin.

Quest. XIX. What is meant here by Gods holy habitation.

Vnto thine holy habitation. 1. Some underſtand here mount Sinai, where the tabernacle was firſt erected. Vatab. But they were not planted in mount Sinai; there they continued not, as Moſes ſaith, they ſhould be planted in Gods inheritance, verſ. 17. 2. Some doe referre it unto the tabernacle, which Moſes ſaw by the ſpirit of propheſie, ſhould be erected and builded: Oſiander. But the tabernacle was ſet up in the deſert where they dwelt 40. yeeres in tents and boothes, they were not there planted; and Moſes ſpeaketh of a certaine place, to the which the Lord would bring them, but in the deſert the tabernacle had no certaine place, but was removed from one ſtation to another. 3. Some apply this ſpeech to mount Zion. Rabb. But there the tabernacle was not pitched, till many yeeres after their comming to the land of Canaan. 4. Therefore by the habitation of his holineſſe, or by his holy habitation, the whole land of promiſe is here underſtood. Iunius: So called, both becauſe there was the Lords tabernacle, where the Lords preſence, and as it were, dwelling was: and that was the land promiſed ſo often to the Fathers. Pellican. And the Lord wrought his ſignes and wonders there, evident demonſtrations of his preſence, and it was the place of the incarnation and birth of Chriſt. Simler.

Quest. XX. What nations ſhould be afraid of the Iſraelites.

Verſ. 14. Then the Dukes of Edom ſhall be amazed. 1. Moſes here ſheweth by the ſpirit of propheſie, that feare ſhall come upon the nations: the Moabites, whoſe feare is evident, Num. 22. when Balak hired Balaam to curſe Iſrael: the Cananites, as Rahab teſtifieth, Ioſu. 2. 11. When wee heard it our hearts did faint, and there remained no more courage in any of us. The Edomites alſo were affraid, which was the cauſe why they denied the Iſraelites paſſage thorow their country, leaſt they might have ſurpriſed it. Simler. 2. For the manner of their feare, they ſhall be as ſtill as a ſtone, both becauſe as a ſtone maketh no ſound, or noiſe, ſo they ſhall not once mutter or move the tongue againſt the Iſraelites. Oſiand. And as a ſtone is ſtill without any motion or action, ſo they ſhall ſuffer the Iſraelites to paſſe over Jordan, without any reſiſtance, as is evident, Ioſuah 2. Iun. Obmutеſcent & fient immobiles, ut lapis, They ſhall hold their peace, and be immoveable as ſtones. Pellican. The Septuagint reade ἀπολιθωθήτωσαν, they ſhall become as ſtones, that is, dead hearted, cold as ſtones through feare: as it is ſaid Nabals heart through feare died within him, and was as a ſtone, 1. Sam. 25. 37. Simler.

Quest. XXI. Why the Lord is ſaid to plant his people.

Verſ. 17. Thou ſhalt plant them in the mountaine of their inheritance. 1. This word of planting ſheweth both the care, which the Lord had of his people, as the husbandman with care, labour and diligence, ſetteth his plants. Simler. It ſignifieth alſo the firme and ſure poſſeſſion which the people of God ſhould have of that country, that they ſhould as plants take deepe rooting there: as the Prophet ſaith in the Pſalme 44. 2. That the Lord had driven out the Heathen, and planted them in. Calvin. 2. It is called Gods inheritance, becauſe it was prepared for his people, adopted to be the Lords heires, to whom he had given the right and privilege of the firſt borne, before all the people of the world, Exod. 4. 22. Perer. 3. The whole country of Sion is underſtood by the mountaine of Gods inheritance; becauſe it was a land of hills and mountaines, Deut. 11. 11. Iun. And with ſpeciall relation alſo unto mount Sion, which the Lord had choſen for his habitation, as Pſal. 132. 13. The Lord hath choſen Sion, and loved to dwell in it, ſaying, This is my reſt for ever, here will I dwell. Calvin. 4. The Land of promiſe is here ſet forth by three names: It is called The mountaine of Gods inheritance, prepared for the habitation of his people: the place, where the Lord would dwell: it ſhould be as the palace of the great King, the Lord would protect it, and watch over it: It is alſo called the Sanctuary of God: for to this end had the Lord choſen that land, thereto to erect a tabernacle, and the publike worſhip of God. Cajetan.

Quest. XXII. In what ſenſe the ſanctuary of the Iewes was called a firme and ſure tabernacle.

The place which thou haſt made to dwell in. 1. The Latine tranſlator here readeth, In firmiſſimo tabernaculo: In the moſt ſure tabernacle which thou haſt made: but the word is macon, which ſignifieth a place, not nacon, that is firme, ſure; yet this ſenſe and interpretation is true, that it is called a ſure tabernacle, as the next words ſhew, Which thy hands have eſtabliſhed; And the Lord promiſed to dwell for ever, Pſal. 132. 14. 2. It was then a firme and ſure habitation, not, as ſome doe take it, promiſed ſo to be conditionally, that if the Jewes had continued in the obedience of Gods Commandements, he would have dwelt with them for ever; for the tabernacle was not appointed to continue for ever, but the Sanctuary, and ceremonies and rites thereof were to give place unto Chriſt. But it was a firme and ſure tabernacle, becauſe there the Lord was publikely worſhipped at Jeruſalem, above a thouſand yeeres, from the time of the laſt, as may thus appeare. At the firſt the Sanctuarie with the Arke was in Shilo, for 300. yeeres and more, from the firſt entrance of the Iſraelites, untill the time of Heli the high Prieſt: then the Philiſtines tooke the Arke, where it ſtayed ſeven moneths: after it was placed in the houſe of Aminadab, where it continued about 50. yeeres, till the eight yeere of the reigne of David: then it abode three moneths in the houſe of Obed Edom: from thence it was removed to the city of David, where it remained 42. yeeres, till it was carried into Salomons temple: where it continued about 420. yeeres, from the 11. yeere of Salomons reigne, till the captivity of Babylon; and after the captivity the temple being reedified, endured for the space of about 500. yeeres, till 42. yeeres after the death of our Saviour: So that from the first setling of the Arke in the temple, in the 11. yeere of Salomons reigne, untill the dissolution thereof 42. yeeres after Christ, were about 1000. yeeres. In respect therefore of this long continuance, it may be said to be a firme and sure tabernacle. Perer. 3. The tabernacle was a type of Christ and his Church, and in that sense was firme and sure. Simler. And beside, we must understand, as Lyranus well noteth, Sub promissione templi materialis cœleste templum: Under the promise of the materiall temple, the heavenly temple of glory. And as Pellican observeth, Significat statum gloriæ beatorum, ubi hæreditas sola est sanctorum: It signifieth the state of glory, where is the inheritance onely of the Saints. And in this sense, it was a most fit tabernacle.

Quest. XXIII. Of the meaning of these words, for ever and ever.

Vers. 18. THe Lord shall reigne for ever and ever. 1. The Septuagint reade, εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα καὶ ἔτι, For ever, and further, or, yet; which Origen expoundeth thus: if he had said, In sæcula sæculorum: For ever and ever, or for all ages, although a long time should so be expressed, yet it might bee supposed to have an end, if not in respect of us, yet unto God: but now when it is added, For ever, and further, Nullum sæculi, termini aut finis alicujus relinquit: Now there is no place left at all, for any end to be imagined.

2. But the Latine translator readeth, In æternum & ultra: For ever and beyond, or longer: which Lyranus thus expoundeth, because the word holam, translated, for ever, sometime is taken for a finite time, yet long, as for the space of fifty yeeres, the other word is added, Ut significet æternitatem, to shew that he meaneth eternity indeed. Thostatus thinketh, that ultra, beyond, additur ex abundanti ad significandam magnam affectionem loquentis, is added of abundance more than need, to signifie the great affection of the speaker, because ultra æternum nihil est, beyond eternity nothing is. Thomas thus interpreteth, In sæculum & ultra, id est, ultra quamcunq; durationem datam: For ever, and beyond, that is, beyond any time or continuance that can be given: or, ultra æternitatem participatam à creatore: God is said to be beyond eternity, that is, such eternity as is participated unto the creature: In regard that God hath eternity in himselfe, he is said to be more eternall than that, to the which he giveth eternity. So Hugo S. viktor. Et ultra, non quantum ad temporis spatium, sed quantum ad dignitatem, id est, super omnes: For ever, and beyond, not in respect of the space of time, but in respect of dignity, because God reigneth above all. Rupertus, Ultra id quod videri potes: beyond that which thou seest, or canst in thy minde conceive, or thinke of eternity.

3. But the cause of this great variety of opinion, and busines, which these Interpreters make to themselves, is, because they labour still to justifie and uphold the Latine translation, whereas the word hedh, or ghedh, as some reade, signifieth not here, yet or beyond, but it is taken for perpetuity and eternity, as the Lord is called Shocen heedh, He which inhabiteth eternity, Esay 57.15. The words then are best read, For ever and ever: the first ever may signifie the time of this present world, the second, the time after this world: Non solum quamdiu durat sæculum, sed etiam post hunc mundum in æternum regnat: Not only while this world lasteth, but after this world he shall reigne for ever. Pellican.

And although the Kingdome of God, in the externall regiment of that common wealth of Israel were not eternall, the temple long since being destroyed, and the policy of that state being dissolved: yet in respect of the true Israel of God, the Kingdome of Christ hath no end. Cajetan. And as the Lord hath now shewed his power upon the Egyptians in their overthrow, and in the preservation of his people, so for ever shall the Lord shew himselfe mighty in the protection of his Church, and in the confusion of their enemies. Ferus. Thus the Kingdome of God is opposed against all terrene and earthly Kingdomes, which are but temporall, and against the vaine Gods of the Egyptians: for the Lords Kingdome, and all theirs should remaine for ever. Simler. Borrh.

Quest. XXIV. Whether this be a part of Moses song.

Vers. 19. FOr Pharaohs horses, &c. 1. Some thinke that this is no part of the song of Moses: but rather an historicall narration, shewing the cause why Moses and the Israelites did celebrate the praise of God, both for their glorious deliverance, and the overthrow of their enemies. Calvin. But it seemeth rather to be a part of Moses song: containing the summe of the whole, partly in the destruction of Gods enemies, partly in the preservation of his people. Simler. And these reasons may shew it to be a part of the song. 1. Because otherwise the song would seeme to bee defective, because no mention is made before in the song, how the Israelites went on dry land thorow the sea. 2. It containeth a reason of the last sentence before, namely of the power and Kingdome of God; that God had given an evident demonstration of his power, in the overthrow of Pharaoh. Osiander. The reason and amplification should not be divided from the sentence. 3. The like song is found, Apoc. 12. 10. I heard a voice saying, Now is salvation in heaven, and strength, and the Kingdome of our God, and the power of his Christ, for the accuser of our brethren is cast downe: As there in that heavenly song, the reason cannot bee sequestred from the clause, so neither in this song of Moses.

Quest. XXV. Whether the Israelites went straight over the red sea.

Vers. 19. IN the middest of the sea. Whether the Israelites went thorow the middest of the sea, or not thereof, there are three opinions. 1. Some thinke that they fetcht onely as it were a semicircle in the sea, and arrived againe on that side which is toward Egypt: so Thostatus. But this opinion confuted before at large, quæſt.17. in cap. 14. 2. Some thinke that they went juſt over the middeſt of the ſea from the Weſt ſide to the Eaſt; but that is not like, becauſe they arrived againe in the wilderneſſe, Etham, from whence they went when they entred into the red ſea, as it is evident, *Num.*33.8. It is not like that the wilderneſſe of both ſides, (the ſea comming betweene) ſhould be counted as one deſert, and bear the ſame name: and if they had gone right over, they had kept the way to Arabia, declining altogether from Paleſtina. And although the word be betoch, in the middeſt, that is not ſo taken, as though they preciſely ſhould keepe the middeſt of the ſea: but the word ſignifieth as much, as within, as *Gen.*18.26. If I find fifty but fifty perſons in the middeſt of the City, that is, within the City; as *Gen.*25.10. Ephron ſate in the middeſt of the ſonnes of Heth, that is, among them: So the Iſraelites went in the middeſt of the ſea, that is, within it. Piſcator. The common mappes therefore are here in errour, that deſcribe the journey of the Iſraelites thorow the middeſt of the ſea, from one ſide to the other ſtraight over. 3. Wherefore the truer opinion is, that they went thorow the ſea, but at the further end, and corner of it as it were, Piſcator. They went into the very depth of the ſea, and fetched not a compaſſe onely in the ſide of the ſea, as the firſt opinion ſeemeth to be: for the waters are ſaid to be congealed in the heart of the ſea, *verſ.*8. Simler. Neither yet did they paſſe thorow the middeſt, as though the ſea ſhould have beene parted into two equall parts, but their way thorow the ſea was ſomewhat aſlope, as it might bee from the Weſt to the Northeaſt, becauſe they meet with the wilderneſſe of Etham againe, which vaſt deſert ſeemeth to have fetched a compaſſe from Egypt ſide about the end of the red ſea, and ſo winding againe on the Eaſt ſide: So that I neither thinke that this deſert of Etham, was altogether on the Weſt ſide of the red ſea toward Egypt, for it is altogether unlike that the Iſraelites arrived toward Egypt againe: neither was part of it ſome on the other ſide of the red ſea Eaſtward toward Arabia, but that it was one continued deſert, from the place where they entred the red ſea, and ſo fetched a compaſſe about the North end of that ſea, to the place where they landed: ſee more hereof. *Quæſt.17. in cap.*14.

Quest. XXVI. Of the divers kindes of women ſingers mentioned in Scripture.

Verſ.20. And Miriam the propheteſſe. Miriam and her company, and queere of women, being encouraged by the example of the men, and following the direction of Miriam, that was ſtirred up by the inſtinct of the ſpirit, being a propheteſſe, did both by ſinging and ſeemely dauncing and geſtures, expreſſe their joy, and give thankes unto God: So that not onely men, but women alſo did uſe to ſing unto the praiſe of God: A laude enim Dei nemo tacere debet: For none ought to bee ſilent in Gods praiſe. But we ſhall finde three ſorts of women ſingers in the Scriptures. 1. Some were ſuch as were uſed only for recreation, for the voice of women, for muſicall harmony, doth in theſe two reſpects excell the voice of men, both in ſmalneſſe and ſharpeneſſe, and in the continuance and unchangeableneſſe: the conſtancy of voice and time, holdeth in that unconſtant ſex: So Salomon for his pleaſure and recreation, had men ſingers and women ſingers, *Eccleſ.*2.8. 2. Another ſort of women ſingers, were ſuch as were uſed to ſet forth the praiſe of God in publike ſolemnities: and theſe were either profeſſed ſingers; as among thoſe that returned from the captivity of Babylon, there were two hundred ſinging men and ſinging women, *Eſra.*2.65. or they were voluntaries, ſuch as of their owne accord came forth triumphantly, to meete thoſe that returned in victory, as the women met David and Saul with ſongs and daunces, 1.*Sam.*18.5. There was a third ſort of ſingers, that were extraordinary, who did not onely ſing, but by the ſpirit of prophecie indited to the praiſe of God, as Miriam here, and Deborah, *Judg.*5. and Anna, 1.*Sam.*2. Mary, *Luk.*1.

Quest. XXVII. Whether women did at any time publikely propheſie.

The Propheteſſe. Miriam was a Propheteſſe, becauſe the Lord uſed to ſpeake unto her by viſion, as unto other Prophets, as is evident, *Num.*12.2. where ſhe and Aaron object againſt Moſes, Hath not the Lord alſo ſpoken by us? Such Propheteſſes were Deborah, Anna, and Huldah, and in the new Teſtament Elizabeth, Mary, Anna the daughter of Phanuel, and Philips foure daughters alſo were Propheteſſes, *Act.*21.9. But here the queſtion is, whether theſe Propheteſſes were admitted, or did take upon them publikely to teach. 1. Some are of opinion that they did not, becauſe according to S. Pauls rule, women ought to keepe ſilence in the Church, 1.*Cor.*14.34. 2. Other thinke that women were barred, A docendo tantum, non à laude Dei: They were only enjoyned ſilence from preaching, but not from praiſing God. 3. But it is more probable, that theſe Propheteſſes extraordinarily ſtirred up, did alſo publikely propheſie, not privatly onely in their families: as may be proved by theſe reaſons. 1. Becauſe the gift of propheſying, was given them to edifie the Church withall: they having then the gift, did uſe it to the right end. 2. It is confirmed by example: Miriam ſaith, The Lord hath ſpoken by us: Deborah judged Iſrael publikely, being a Propheteſſe, *Judg.*4.4. ſhe did therefore exerciſe her propheticall gift publikely. 3. Saint Paul ſpeaketh of women propheſying in the congregation, 1.*Cor.*11.5. It ſhould ſeeme then, that ſome women being Propheteſſes, ſuch as Philips daughters were, did publikely propheſie. Beza thinketh the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of the particular act of women, but of the whole act of the congregation, which is to pray or propheſie, when one only prayeth or propheſieth, that is, preacheth. But it ſeemeth otherwiſe by the uſe of this word elſewhere: Yee may all propheſie one by one, that all may learne, 1.Cor. 14.31. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh of the particular act of propheſying: Others anſwer, that the Apoſtle commendeth not this uſe of women to propheſie publikely, but elſewhere reproveth it, enjoyning women to ſilence in the congregation, as *chap.*14.34. Genevenſ. But it rather ſeemeth that the Apoſtle miſlikeſ not the act in the extraordinary propheſying of women, but the manner, and willeth that it ſhould be done with comelineſſe and order. And concerning that place objected, wherein ſilence is enjoyned women: the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of the ordinary calling of preaching and propheſying, which women ought not in any wiſe to uſurpe, not of the extraordinary gift and function of propheſying: which as the Lord hath ſometime given unto women, ſo no doubt, they accordingly uſed the ſame: herein therefore, I ſubſcribe rather to the judgement and opinion of Simlerus.

Quest. XXVIII. Why Miriam is ſaid to be the ſiſter of Aaron, not of Moſes.

THe ſiſter of Aaron. She is called the ſiſter of Aaron, rather than of Moſes, for theſe reaſons. 1. Ne videretur Moſes genus ſuum commendare: Leſt Moſes might have beene thought to commend his kindred. Ferus. 2. Becauſe Aaron was the elder brother, and ſo ſhe was firſt Aarons ſiſter, before ſhe was Moſes. Simler. 3. Becauſe ſhe lived in Egypt in the time of Moſes abſence and exile, and ſo was better known commonly to be Aarons ſiſter than Moſes. Piſcator. 4. Beſide, it ſeemeth that, Conjunctius vixit: She was in great league with Aaron, for they two conſpired together againſt Moſes, Num. 12. Simler. 5. And this is expreſſed concerning Miriam, here called a Propheteſſe, to ſhew how the Lord bleſſed that houſe of Levi, and what worthy inſtruments he raiſed from thence; Moſen elegit in ducem, Aaron in Sacerdotem, Miriam in prohetiſſam: Moſes was choſen to be the Captaine, Aaron for a Prieſt, and Miriam was a Propheteſſe. Ferus.

Quest. XXIX. Why Miriam taketh a timbrell.

TOoke a Timbrell in her hand. 1. Ferus thinketh that the women did here more than the men, ſinging not only with voice, but with inſtrument, Quia infirmi, quales ſunt mulieres, pluribus incitamentis opus habent: Becauſe the weake, ſuch as women are, had need of more incouragements: But this was no ſigne of weakneſſe in Miriam, being here called a Propheteſſe. 2. Therefore ſhee tooke this inſtrument, Ut ad certos modos canerent: That they might ſing in meaſure and order. Oſiander. For timbrels, Pra cæteris inſtrumentis ad numeros & menſuram aptiora ſunt: are fitter to keepe number and meaſure by, than other inſtruments. 3. Becauſe the ſtriking of timbrels might ſeeme ſomewhat too light, in ſo waighty a buſineſſe, it is here divers wayes excuſed: Firſt, Mos gentis eum excuſat: the faſhion of that nation doth excuſe them, with whom it was ordinary, for the women to play upon timbrels, as Pſal. 68. 26. The ſingers went before, the players of inſtruments after, in the middeſt were the maids playing with timbrels. Calvin. Secondly, their intent is to be conſidered, Choreas ducunt non ad petulantiam carnis, ſed ad jucunditatem ſpiritus, &c. They dance not to ſhew the wantonneſſe of their fleſh, but the ſweet joy of the ſpirit, rejoycing for Gods benefits. Pelican. Thirdly, Shee did it, motu prophetico, by a propheticall motion. Iun.

Quest. XXX. Whether the women came with pipes, beſide their timbrels, or with dances.

Verſ. 20. THe women came out after her with timbrels and dances. Iun. readeth with timbrels and pipes or flutes; but the firſt rather, as ſhall thus appeare. 1. The word mecholoth here uſed, hath three ſignifications: it ſometime ſignifieth a pipe or flute, as Pſal. 149. 3. Let them praiſe his name with the flute, &c. with timbrels alſo and harpe. Sometime it ſignifieth the company it ſelfe of the dancers, as Iud. 21. 21. The daughters of Shiloh came forth, Lachul Bamecholoth, to dance in companies: it alſo ſignifieth the dancing it ſelfe, as Iud. 11. 34. Iepthahs daughter came forth with timbrels and dances: There is no mention made of any company that was with her, for then Iepthah would have taken any of the company rather (all comming out together) than his onely daughter. 2. Now that it is here taken rather for either of the two latter ſenſes, than in the firſt, it may appeare by theſe reaſons. 1. Becauſe Mecholoth more uſually, and in moſt places, is ſo taken for dances, or companies dancing, than for pipes, as in the places before alleaged, Iudg. 11. 34. Iud. 21. 21. 1. Sam. 18. 6. and beſide Cantic. 6. 12. Iſa. 31. 4. 2. Becauſe ſo was the uſe and practice for women, to play upon timbrels, dancing withall, as is evident in Iepthahs daughter meeting her father, and the women of Iſrael meeting Saul and David, and Pſal. 68. 26. there were other that played upon inſtruments, and the maidens played upon timbrels. 3. And hereunto the two reaſons before alleaged in the divers readings upon this place: that it is likely the reſt of the women did imitate Miriam: now ſhee is mentioned onely to have taken a timbrell againe, Miriam ſang firſt, and they all anſwered her; but if they had played upon pipes, it would have hindred their ſinging.

Quest. XXXI. Of the lawfulneſſe of inſtruments of muſike.

NOw concerning this example of Miriam and her company, playing upon timbrels, how farre it is to be imitated, ſhall briefely be ſhewed. 1. Such ſignes (whereby men expreſſe their joy, ſuch as timbrels were, and of the ſame kind are other inſtruments of muſike) are of two ſorts, either ſuch as were commanded, and ſo neceſſary, or voluntary: the ſignes commanded were either ceremoniall and typicall, prefiguring ſomewhat concerning Chriſt and his Church, which being but ſhadowes of things to come, are aboliſhed now, the things, whereof they were types and figures, being exhibited: or elſe they were politicall, which only concerned the policy of the common wealth, which being now diſſolved, the date of ſuch ſignes is alſo expired. The voluntary ſignes are likewiſe of two ſorts, either ſuch as come of a naturall motion, as the uſing of inſtruments for recreation, which may be uſed ſo long, untill they be found to bee againſt common order, or honeſty, or againſt any worke of grace or regeneration. Or they are ſuch, which are uſed to ſerve to ſet forward any act of godlineſſe and grace, as David by his ſhe alleged the malady and evill ſpirit of Saul; and theſe are no longer to ſerve, than as they may be helpes unto ſuch workes of grace: But this ſigne here uſed by Miriam, to teſtifie her ſpirituall joy, was not of this latter ſort, but ſhe did it by a propheticall motion, therefore it was not voluntary, but ſhe was thereunto moved and directed by God. Then this is no warrant for them that abuſe inſtruments and dauncing to wantonneſſe, for in that it is ſaid ſhe did it, being a propheteſſe, and ſo with a propheticall ſpirit, it followeth that this example is extraordinary, and therefore not to be drawne into imitation. Iunius Annotat. that is, in reſpect of the particular manner: but in regard of the generall uſe and intention, it may and ought to be followed, to uſe ſinging to the praiſe of God: that as Mary did ſing, Non amatoria, non turpia canica, ſed pia: Not love ſongs, or wanton ſonets, but godly; ſic nos canemus Domino: ſo let us ſing unto God. Ferus.

Quest. XXXII. Of dancing.

Concerning dancing, we find thereof foure ſorts in Scripture. 1. There was a ſpirituall kind of dancing, which proceeded of an extraordinary motion, as David danced before the Arke to teſtifie his joy. 2. There was a civill kinde of dancing uſed in triumphes, when they met the Captaines with dancing returning from the conqueſt of their enemies, as David and Saul were met. 3. They uſed dancing for honeſt recreation, as the daughters of Shiloh uſed to doe in their yeerely ſolemne feaſt, Iud. 21.19. 4. There was a fourth ſort of wanton and laſcivious dauncing, ſuch as Herodias daughter came skipping in with, to pleaſe Herod, wherewith his amorous and luſtfull eye was intangled, and Iohn Baptiſts head begged: of theſe, the two firſt are lawfull and commendable, the laſt wicked and abominable, the third indifferent and tolerable.

Quest. XXXIII. Whether Miriam did ſing the whole ſong, or repeated only the beginning.

Verſ. 21. And Miriam anſwered the men. Sing yee unto the Lord: Moſes repeated only the firſt verſe, which ſeemeth to be the ground, and foot of the ſong, but it is like that Miriam ſang the whole ſong, as is partly ſhewed before queſt. 2. and ſhall be now further declared. 1. Beſide the opinion of Ferus, Vatablus, Pellican, Simlerus, Oſiander, that all conſent herein, that ſhee with her company did ſing the whole ſong: by theſe reaſons, further it may be gathered, becauſe ſhee is ſaid to be herein a Propheteſſe: ſhe ſhewed her propheticall gift in ſinging; but to have repeated only one verſe of the ſong, had beene no ſuch propheticall action. 2. In this ſhort ſentence Miriam profeſſeth to ſing, and giveth the reaſon thereof: it is not like that ſhe ſo ended, giving a reaſon, why ſhe would ſing, and ſinged not, ſhee ſupplied then the ſong, as well as ſhe yeelded a reaſon thereof. 3. This being an incouragement and charge withall, unto the women to ſing, Sing yee, it is like that they alſo followed, and anſwered her in ſong, as the men of Iſrael did Moſes, ſhee being a Propheteſſe, and bidding them ſing, it is not to be doubted, but that they followed her direction, and did ſing. 4. The like example is found, 1. Sam. 18.6. Where only the ground and ſumme of the ſong is repeated, Saul hath killed his thouſand, and David his ten thouſand. It is very like that the women did ſing more than there is expreſſed, but for brevities ſake, the principall part of the ſong is only ſet downe, and ſo is it thought to be done here.

Quest. XXXIV. Whether the deſert of Shur, were ſimply a deſert, and barren place.

Verſ. 22. Then Moſes brought Iſrael from the red ſea, and they went forward to the wilderneſſe of Shur. 1. The word ſignifieth to cauſe them to goe: which ſheweth that Moſes with much adoe brought them from thence, being too much intent upon the ſpoile of the Egyptians. Simler. 2. And whereas they are brought into a barren deſert, where they were much diſtreſſed for want of water, it appeareth that the Lord would not bring them into Canaan, but thorow much tribulation and tentation. Borrh. Pelican thinketh that it was called a deſert, not becauſe none inhabited there, but for that it was craggy and full of hils: but I rather ſubſcribe to Ioſephus opinion, that it was Difficilis regio propter ciborum & aquarum extremam inopiam: An hard country (thorow which they were to paſſe unto mount Sinai) for extreame penury of food and water: ut ne brutis quidem alendis, ne dum hominibus idonea; that it is not able to nouriſh cattle, much leſſe men, lib. 3. cap. 1. This wilderneſſe of Shur, many doe thinke to bee the ſame deſert, which is called Etham, wherein they travelled three dayes journey after they came out of Egypt, Num. 33.8. And here they are ſaid preſently to enter the wilderneſſe of Shur. Sic Thoſtatus, Simler. And this wilderneſſe of Shur lyeth, they ſay, betweene the two ſeas, the red ſea, and the Philiſtims ſea one way, and betweene the Philiſtims country, and Egypt another way: Borrh. But that the deſert of Shur and of Etham, are not the ſame, but altogether divers, it ſhall now be ſhewed.

Quest. XXXV. The deſert of Shur, and Etham not all one.

Some thinke that Etham ſhould be the generall name of the whole deſert, and Shur only of a part: Simler. Others that Shur is the generall name, and Etham a part thereof. Borrh. But neither can it be, Shur cannot comprehend Etham, for Etham belonged unto Egypt, and ſtretched unto the red ſea, hereupon the City Pithom, which the Iſraelites built in Egypt, was ſo called, becauſe it was the mouth of the wilderneſſe of Etham, and the entrance into it. Iun. But the deſert of Shur was no part of Egypt, but is ſaid to be over againſt Egypt, 1. Sam. 15.7. and it was the bounds of the country of the Iſraelites, Gen. 25.18. 2. Neither was the deſert of Shur a part of the wilderneſſe of Etham: for Etham touched the red ſea, and from the ſea they journeyed three dayes in the deſert of Etham, Num. 33.8. But wee doe not find that the desart of Shur came so farre as the red sea: being the South border of the Israelites country, who extended not their dwelling to the red sea.

3. Wherefore the wildernesse of Etham where the Israelites went into the red sea, and came out, was all one continued desart, fetching a compasse by the North end of the red sea: and Shur was the name of that desart into the which they came out of the wildernesse of Etham: the words then are to be understood, as Iunius well distinguisheth them, that Moses brought the Israelites from the red sea, to goe forward into the wildernesse of Shur, but before they came thither, they spent three dayes journey in the desert of Etham. Iunius.

Quest. XXXVI. Of the place Marah.

Vers. 23. THerefore they called the name of that place Marah. 1. Augustine readeth Mara, but the word is Marah, so called of the bitternesse: the Septuagint make it no proper name, but interpret mœsia, bitternesse, whereas the proper name Marah was retained. 2. Augustine moveth here this doubt, seeing it was called Marah, of the bitter waters, which they found there, after they came thither, how was it called Marah before? his solution is, because these things were written after they were done, and at such time as this history was written, the name thereof was called Marah, quæst. 56. in Exod. But beside, it is usuall in Scripture by the figure Prolepsis, to call places by the names which are given them afterwards, as is evident in the name of Dan, Gen. 14.14. which was not given that place in Abrahams time: and of Succoth, Gen. 33.17. which afterward Iacob so called. 3. This seemeth to be that place, which Plinie calleth fontes amaros, bitter fountaines, lib. 6. cap. 29. Iunius.

Quest. XXXVII. Of the grievous sinne of murmuring.

Vers 24. THen the people murmured against Moses. The sinne of murmuring was a great transgression, and it includeth many other particular sinnes in it. 1. Their murmuring shewed, that they were utterly forgetfull, and oblivious of all the great wonders which the Lord had done for them. Borrh. 2. They were ungratefull for all the benefits which they had received, as though the Lord had done nothing for them: Ingratitudo perpetua Iudaici populi, &c. The perpetuall ingratitude of the people of the Iewes, is set forth in Scripture. 3. They shew their incredulity and distrust, when they say, what shall wee drinke, as though the Lord could not provide them drinke. Osiander. 4. They are impatient and discontent: In prosperis gaudent, in adversis murmurant: They rejoyce in prosperity, but straightway they murmure in adversity. Ferus. 5. It bewrayeth their disobedience, and disloyalty to their governour, they murmure against Moses, accusing him, as though he would kill them with thirst. Simler. 6. It maketh them prophane, that they have no heart to call upon God: Pro murmure contra Mosen Dominum vos debuerunt: Instead of murmuring, they should have called upon God. Pellican. 7. It made them to extenuate the blessings of God toward them, as Numb. 11.6. We can see nothing but this Man. 8. It made a way for other most grievous sinnes, which they fell unto, as Idolatry, Exod. 34. and fornication together with Idolatry, Num. 25.

Quest. XXXVIII. Of the divers murmurings of the children of Israel.

COncerning the divers murmurings of the children of Israel, Hierome numbreth them to have been ten: the first for want of water, Exod. 17. the second likewise for water, Numb. 20. the third, Exod. 14. when the Egyptians pursued them: the fourth and fifth about Manna, when they kept it till the morning, and gathered it upon the Sabbath, Exod. 16. The sixth murmuring was for flesh, Exod. 16. and the seventh for flesh likewise, Numb. 11.4. The eighth for Moses absence, when they made the golden Calfe: the ninth, when they tempted God in fighting against the Amalekites, being forbidden, Numb. 14. The tenth, upon the returne of the Spies which were sent to search the Land of Canaan: Hierom de 10. tentationib. But if all the murmurings of the Israelites be summed together, they will bee found more than ten, not fewer than twenty. And they were of three sorts, either generall of the whole congregation, or speciall of some few, or particular of some principall persons. 1. Their generall murmurings were upon these occasions: first, for things which they endured, as, the increasing of their bondage in Egypt, at the first comming of Moses, Exod. 5.21. their feare to be all destroyed of the Egyptians, chap. 14.11. their wearinesse of the way, Numb. 11.1. their biting by Serpents, Numb. 21. Secondly, for things which they wanted, as for sweet and potable water, Exod. 15.24. for bread, chap. 16.3. for water in Rephidim, Exod. 17. for flesh, Numb. 11. for water againe, when Moses also offended, Numb. 20. Thirdly, they murmured, and disobeyed, when any thing was imposed them which they liked not, as twice they were disobedient about Manna, in reserving it till the morning, chap. 16.19. and in gathering it upon the Sabbath, chap. 16.28. where although their murmuring be not expressed, yet this their refractary disobedience could not bee without murmuring: So they rebelled in fighting against the Amalekites and Canaanites, being forbidden, Numb. 14.41. Fourthly, they murmured when their expectation was deceived, as upon Moses long absence, Exod. 32. 1. when they heard a false report of Canaan, that the inhabitants thereof were invincible, Numb. 14. when Core, Dathan, and Abiram, with their adherents were suddenly destroyed, Numb. 16.41. These murmurings in all were sixteene.

2. The second kind of murmuring was of some speciall men, as Core, Dathan, and Abiram, with two hundred and 50. persons murmured against Moses and Aaron, Numb. 16. 3. The third kind was of some principall persons, as of Aaron and Miriam against Moses, Numb. 12. Of Moses himselfe at the water of strife, Numb. 20. of Aaron being discontent and so negligent in his office, because of the death of his two sonnes, Nadab and Abihu, Levit. 10. 19. Here are foure more, and unto these others by diligent observations may be added.

Quest. XXXIX. Whether the wood had any vertue in it, that Moses cast into the water.

25. And he cried unto the Lord, and the Lord shewed him a tree. 1. The Hebrewes thinke that this tree had no vertue at all in it to make the waters sweet, but rather the contrary, but that God would therein shew his power, in healing one contrary by another, as Elizeus did heale the waters by casting in of salt, which was more like to have made them more bitter, and our Saviour anointed the eyes of the blinde with clay and spittle, which was an unlike thing to heale them. 2. But it is more probable that there was some vertue in this wood to season and relish the water: because it is said, that the Lord shewed him, or as the Hebrew word signifieth, taught him the tree: Tanquam tale jam lignum hoc esset quod posset hoc fieri. As though it were such a kinde of wood, as could doe this thing: So Augustine reasoneth quæst. 17. in Exod. to whom Calvinus and Simlerus consent: for to what end else did the Lord direct Moses to that speciall tree, more than to others, unlesse we say that there were no trees there at all in the desert? But the words will inferre another sense, that seeing the Lord shewed him a tree, there was a tree to be shewed: as the Lord caused Hagar to see a fountaine, not which newly sprung out of the ground, but which was there before, though she saw it not, Gen. 21. The author of Ecclesiasticus chap. 38. 5. affirmeth that there was vertue in the wood. 3. But Iosephus is deceived, who saith, Moses fructum ligni accepit forte ibi jacens: That Moses tooke a peece of wood lying there by chance: whereas the Lord shewed it him: and he further addeth, that Moses did not cast in the wood, because the people asked what it should do, but caused a great part of the water to bee drawne out of the fountaine, and so the residue became sweet; but this is also directly contrary to the text.

Quest. XL. Wherein the miracle consisted of healing the waters.

NOw although there were some vertue in this wood to heale the waters, yet it was done not without a great miracle. 1. Which consisted not herein because the Lord Ostendit ei lignum ubi nullum erat Shewed him a tree where none was: for this is confuted before. 2. Neither, Quia in tali natura ligni Creator demonstratur laudandus est: Because the Creator and shewer is to be praised, in giving such a nature to the wood: as Augustine in the same place: for if the nature of the wood had done it, it had not beene miraculous. 3. But herein was the miracle, that by the meanes of so small a peece of wood, such a deale of water was changed, as served such a great multitude. Calvin. And that it was suddenly and presently changed. Simler. And the waters were but made sweet only for that time, and afterward returned to their bitter nature againe, as Pliny before alleaged, maketh mention of bitter waters there. Iun.

Quest. XLI. Why the Lord used this meane in healing of the waters.

GOd could have healed the waters, if it had pleased him, without this tree. But it pleased him to use this meanes, for these causes. 1. To teach us, that we should not neglect the meanes, which God appointed: So the Lord divided the red sea, and dried the way by a strong East winde: Ezechias was healed by a lumpe of figges: So God instructeth men, and begetteth them to the faith by the ministery of men. Simler. 2. God hereby also reproveth their distrust and diffidence, shewing, Multa sibi in promptu esse remedia quibuscunque malis: That he hath many remedies in store, for whatsoever evils. Calvin. 3. Hoc medio uti voluit propter mysterium: He would use this meane because of the mystery. Ferus.

Quest. XLII. Of the mysticall signification of this tree.

NOw what mystery is signified in this tree, that sweetned the waters, shall bee shewed in a word. 1. Some by the bitter waters doe understand the killing letter of the Law, which is impotable and deadly, but being qualified by the Gospell, Iam dulcis erit litera: The letter of the Law becommeth sweet. Ferus. 2. This tree was a figure of that rod, which should come of the stocke of Iesse, and of the root that should grow out of his root, Isay 11. 1. who should make our bitter waters sweet, as he saith: Come unto me all that labour, and I will refresh you. Borrh. 3. It signifieth also, that our bitter afflictions, by Christ are made easie and pleasant: which remaine bitter, sowre and tart, Nisi fide adhibeamus ad lignum Christi: Unlesse we doe apply by faith the wood of Christs crosse, that is, beleeve in his death. Osiander. So Augustine; Præfigurans gloriam & gratiam crucis: It prefigured the glory and grace of the crosse. This further sheweth what wee are by nature, and what by grace: by these bitter waters the Lord bringing to light, Amaritudinem quæ in eorum cordibus latebat, the bitternesse which lay hid in their hearts. Calvin. By nature therefore, our waters, that is, our thoughts, and all our actions are bitter, but they are washed and purified by grace and faith in Christ.

Quest. XLIII. What law and ordinances the Lord here gave his people.

25. There he made them an ordinance, and a Law. 1. The Hebrewes thinke that this Law here given them, was concerning the Sabbath, which in the next Chapter is confirmed and established: where they are forbidden to gather Manna upon the Sabbath. But the law of the Sabbath was more ancient: for immediately after the creation, the Lord sanctified the seventh day of rest, to bee perpetually observed and kept of his Church. And it is not to be doubted of, but that the Israelites kept the Sabbath in Egypt, as may appeare by the institution of the Passeover, wherein, both in respect of the number of the seventh day, prescribed to be an holy convocation, and by the manner of keeping the same, in resting from all servile worke, *Exod.*12.16, there seemeth to be relation to the rest of the Sabbath, and seventh day, which they were already acquainted with, after the ensample whereof, they should keepe the seventh day of unleavened bread.

2. Lyranus thinketh that these were certaine ceremoniall Lawes, as of the red cow, prescribed afterward at large, *Num.*19. and other rites of legall purifyings, as also some judicials: But this is only his conjecture without any ground, the first Law that was given the people after they came out of Egypt was the morall Law: and before this, it is evident, that there were certaine ceremoniall rites, and judiciall equities kept by the Fathers: so that this was not the first time and place, that they received such things.

3. Simlerus is of opinion therefore, that such ceremonies and rites as were preserved, and continued by tradition from the Fathers, were here by the authority of God confirmed, that they should not take them as grounded upon custome only, but warranted and commanded by God. But it seemeth by the phrase, He set them an ordinance, that they received an ordinance not given them before: and seeing that the Lord intended shortly, within the space of little more than a moneth (as may be gathered, *chap.*16.1. and *chap.*19.1.) to give them Lawes and ordinances in mount Sinai, there appeared no such necessity, to prevent that time and place.

4. Pellican understandeth the Lawes and ceremonies, which were given afterward in mount Sinai, Et loci, sed non jam tunc: About that place, but not at that time. But neither about that place, were the Lawes given, which were delivered in mount Sinai, for betweene Marah and the desert of Sinai, they had six stations, or mansions, as they are numbred, *Num.*33. from verse 9.10 *vers.*16. And this Law here mentioned was given at this time, while they stayed in Marah, where they proved and tried their faith and obedience, as the next words shew.

5. Some thinke that the Lord here gave them Lawes, Non scriptura, sed ore ut juste viverent: not in writing, but by word of mouth, that they should live uprightly. Ferus. And what Lawes they were, is not here expressed. Osiander. But to what purpose should a Law be given not written, that the people might alwayes have it in remembrance?

6. Therefore, what this Law and ordinance was, is here in the next verse expressed, where the Lord moveth the people to the obedience of his Lawes, with promise to bee their protector, in keeping them from the plagues and diseases of Egypt. Iun. So that the Lord in this place, dealeth two wayes with his people, Postquam aquæ penuria illos examinavit, verbo etiam admonuit: After he had tried and examined them, with the want and penury of water, hee doth also by his Word admonish them to be obedient. Calvin.

Quest. XLIV. Why the Lord at this time gave his people a Law.

NOw why the Lord gave them this Law and ordinance in Marah, the reasons may be these. 1. Because the people a long time having beene in bondage, were not used to the Lords yoke: they might have said then with the Prophet, *Isai.*26.13. Other Lords beside thee have ruled us: therefore, Hos populus longa servitute oppresso forte in diffuetudinem venerant: Because the people by their long servitude, might perhaps have growne to a disuse, the Lord giveth them a Law. Simler. 2. The Lord in thus doing, Pactum cum patribus factum renovat: Doth renne the covenant made with their Fathers. Pellican. Hee doth give them a Law, to put them in mind of the ancient covenant made with their forefathers. 3. The Lord taketh occasion by this present benefit, in providing of them water in their distresse, to take triall of their obedience, Postquam aquæ penuria examinavit populum: After he had examined them with the penury of water. Calvin. Which might serve as a preparative to move them to obedience. 4. Because they were a carnall and disobedient people, they had need of a Law to bind them, Carnales enim cancello legis indigent: carnall men had need to be held in by a Law. Ferus. As the Apostle saith, The Law is not given to a righteous man, but to the lawlesse and disobedient, 1.*Tim.*1.9. 5. The Lord here giveth them a Law, to shew what was the end of their deliverance, and redemption out of Egypt, not to live as they list, but to walke in obedience before God: Populum docet ne ex servitute liberati ad carnis libidinem deflectat: He teacheth the people, lest they being delivered out of bondage, should turne unto the lust of the flesh. Pellican. 6. And in fide, the Lord would by this meanes, Paulatim populum jugo legis adsuefacere: By little and little accustome his people with the yoke of his Law, which he was purposed to deliver more fully in mount Sinai. Osiander. So also Simler. and Borrh.

Quest. XLV. Who is said here to tempt him.

AND there he proved him. 1. Some doe understand this of the people, that they should tempt God, and in that sense it is understood two wayes: either that they tempted God, after he had given them a Law, which sheweth the great perverseness of the people, that notwithstanding the Law given them, they ceased not to sinne against God: or it is a reason why the Lord gave them a Law, because they tempted him: this latter sense Calvin preferreth, Quod Deus populi malitiam castigaverit, a quo tentatus erat: The Lord correcteth the malice of the people, of whom he was tempted. But if it were understood of the people, the verbe would have beene put in the plurall number, They tempted him, as *vers.*23. When they came to Marah, and *vers.*24. jilonu haguam, the people murmured, where people is in the singular, but murmured in the plurall: And againe, the coherence of the sentence beareth not this sense, There he proved him (that is, the people) a law, and there he proved him, the same him then he proved, unto the which he set a

2. S

Some thinke that Moſes in Gods name proved the people. Genevenſ. But the ſame that is ſaid before, to ſet them a law, doth alſo prove them, that is, God, and not Moſes. 3. Therefore the meaning is, that God tried here the faith and obedience of his people: and this beſt agreeth both with the words before going that he which gave a law unto them, is ſaid alſo to prove them, and with the words following, And he ſaid, if thou wilt diligently harken, &c. As God thus ſaid to his people, ſo hee it was that proved them. Sanct.

Quest. XLVI. Of the divers kinds of temptations.

Vers. 25. AND there he proved him. 1. There are three kinds of temptations: God tempteth man, and man tempteth God, and the Devill is the tempter of man.

1. God is ſaid to tempt two kind of wayes, either directly, and immediately by himſelfe, or mediately by others: By himſelfe, ſometime he proveth and tempteth by bleſſings, to ſee if the people will be thereby encouraged to obedience, as he did by giving them Manna, *Exod.*16.5. and *Deut.*8.16. ſometime by afflictions, to ſee if they will be faithfull, as he proved the Iſraelites in the deſert 40. yeeres, *Deut.*8.3. The other is ſaid to tempt mediately, when others are the inſtruments and agents, but God the diſpoſer, as, when he is ſaid by falſe Prophets, to prove his people, whether they love the Lord with all their heart, *Deut.*13.3.

2. Man alſo is ſaid to tempt God, as the Iſraelites did in the wilderneſſe, provoke the Lord by their tentations 40. yeeres, *Heb.*3.10. And theſe tentations are of three ſorts. 1. By deſpairing, and diſtruſting the power and aſſiſtance of God, as *Pſalm.*78.41. They tempted God, and limited the holy one of Iſrael: they did limite and tye God unto meanes; that when they ſaw no ordinary meanes to be provided for, they deſpaired: as they ſpake againſt God, ſaying, *Can God prepare a table in the wilderneſſe? Pſal.*78.19. 2. They are ſaid to tempt and provoke God, which preſume upon God, neglecting, or refuſing the meanes: as our Saviour anſwered the Devill, that would have tempted him, to caſt himſelfe downe from the top of the pinacle, and to truſt in Gods aſſiſtance: Thou ſhalt not tempt the Lord thy God: to have preſumed upon Gods helpe, where there was no cauſe or neceſſity, had beene a tempting of God. So the Prophet ſaith that the King of Judah (in refuſing to aske a ſigne, for the confirmation of their hope in God provoked God, Iſay 7.13. 3. Men alſo tempt God by their curioſity, where as they aske things of God, which are not neceſſary: as the King of Judah would not aske a ſigne, becauſe it was to tempt God, Iſay 7.12. which is generally true, that he which beleeveth not Gods word without a ſigne tempteth him: but hee was deceived in the particular: for it is no tempting of God to aske a ſigne, where the Lord doth offer it, as in that place he did. So the Sadduces and Phariſies are ſaid to tempt Chriſt, when they asked a ſigne: for men doe as well tempt God of curioſity, as of infidelity: of this ſort was the temptation of the Iſraelites: *When they tempted God in their hearts, requiring meat for their luſt, Pſalm.*78.14. They did of wantonneſſe and curioſity for their bellies (as the other curioſity is for the mind) luſt for fleſh when they needed not, having Manna to content them.

3. The Devill is ſaid to be the tempter of man, that is, a ſeducer and leader of them into evill: and therefore he is ſimply without any other addition called the Tempter, *Matth.*4.4. Here then Auguſtines diſtinction may well be received, Unam tentationem intelligimus, qua decipit, ſic Deus non tentat; alteram qua probat, ſic tentamur à Deo: Wee underſtand one temptation, which deceiveth, ſo God tempteth none; one which proveth, ſo we are tempted of God. The temptation of Satan hath a double act, one toward God, when he tempteth and urgeth God againſt the Saints, and therefore is called the accuſer of the brethren, the other toward men, and ſo he is the deceiver of the world, *Revel.*12.9,10. And in theſe temptations unto evill, there is a principall tempter and chiefe egger unto evill, which is the Devill, and miniſtring, and cooperating tempters, as the concupiſcence of our owne nature: So the Apoſtle ſaith, every man is tempted, *When he is drawne away by his owne concupiſcence and is entiſed, Iam.*1.14. As Bernard alſo well ſaith: Diabolus proprio baculo nos cædit, & manus noſtras proprio cingulo ligat, ut caro quæ nobis data eſt in adjutorium ſit nobis in ruinam: The Devill doth beat us with our owne ſtaffe, and bindeth our hands with our owne girdle, that our fleſh which was given for our helpe, ſhould bee unto our ruine. Bernard. meditat. cap.15.

Quest. XLVII. Of the difference betweene good and evill tentations.

I ſhall not bee amiſſe here to ſhew the differences betweene good and evill tentations. 1. They differ in the efficient cauſe, God is the author of the one, as God tempted Abraham; the Devill of the other, as hee entred into Judas heart and tempted him to betray Chriſt. 2. The end is divers: *Deus tentat ut doceat, Diabolus ut decipiat: God tempteth to teach us, the Devill to deceive us. Auguſt. de tempore, ſerm.*72. Abrahams temptation ſheweth the one, and Iobs the other: *Deus tentat ut coronet, Diabolus tentat ut ſubruat, God tempteth to crowne us, the Devill tempteth to confound us. Ambroſ. lib.*1. *de Abraham, cap.*8. 3. The manner alſo is divers, the Devill promiſeth faire and performeth foule, he maketh himſelfe a friend, but in the end turneth a foe, hee beginneth like a Lambe, but endeth like a Lion: *Spiritualis defraudet transfigurat ſe in angelum lucis, ut fortes comprimat apparet agnus: To deceive thoſe that are ſpirituall, he transfigureth himſelfe into an Angell of light, to overcome the ſtrong, hee ſheweth himſelfe a Lambe. Auguſtin. ſoliloq. cap.*17. Hee inveigleth Judas with hope of gaine, when hee betrayed him: but he payed him with hanging. God contrariwiſe for the preſent ſeemeth to frowne, and to be an enemy, but he in the end ſheweth himſelfe a father: hee beginneth with hard precepts, but endeth with ſweet promiſes: Incipit à vinculis ferreis, finit ad torquem auream: Hee beginneth with iron bands, bands, but endeth with a golden chaine: Augustine. As Iosephs prison irons were turned into a golden chaine *Gen.*41.42. God handled Iob at the first as one of his enemies, Iob 19.11. but in the end he doth plentifully reward him, Iob 42.10.

4. Good temptations are wrought by good Ministers and instruments, evill temptations by evill instruments: the temptations wherewith the Lord proved Israel, were wrought by the hand of Moses and Aaron, and by good Angels: but the Sabeans and Chaldeans were Satans instruments in the afflicting of Iob. so *Augustine: Deus per homines bonos tanquam per ministros suos agit omne quod bonum est: diabolus per homines malos tanquam satellites suos exercet omne quod malum est: God by good men as his ministers doth whatsoever is good: the Devill by evill men as his assailes worketh all mischiefe: serm.*85. *de tempore.*5. They differ as in the instrument that worketh, so in the measure of working: God tempteth his children according to their strength: as the Apostle saith: God is faithfull and will not suffer you to be tempted above that you are able, but will give an issue with the temptation: 1. *Cor.*10.13. Good temptations are neither greater, nor more than the children of God can beare. But the Devill layeth on load, he hath never done, as he sent one crosse in anothers necke upon *Iob: Ingruit nuntius post nuntium, congeminat vulnera: One messenger followeth at anothers heeles, he doubleth his strokes: Non unum telum diabolus habet, frequenter vulnera: The Devill hath more than one weapon, he sendeth his darts thicke, Ambros. lib.*4. *in Luke.*6. They differ in the power of the tempter: God whom he will he draweth unto him by his temptations, he worketh upon mens hearts and affections, and turneth them as it pleaseth him: Ex nolentibus volentes facit: He of nilling maketh willing, August. But the Devill forceth none: *Suadere, sollicitare potest, cogere non potest, non extorquet consensum, sed petit: He may perswade and solicite, but he can compell none: he extorteth not ones consent, but beggeth it. Augst. hom.*12. 7. Another difference is in tho subject of the temptations, that is, such as are tempted. *Deus probatos sibi tentat, unde David, proba me Deus & tenta me: God doth tempt those which are knowne to him, as David saith, prove me O God and trie me, Ambros. lib.*1. *de Abraham. cap.*8. The righteous are the object of Gods temptations, as he tempted Abraham. But the wicked for the most part the temptations of Satan worke upon, as the Apostle saith, 2. *Tim.*2.16. That they may come unto amendment out of the snare of the Devill which are taken of him at his pleasure. 8. The matter of the temptation is divers: God tempteth about things externall, sometime veris, which things fall out in deed: as when Abraham was tempted to come out of his country: sometime Compositis & fictis: With things supposed and pretended: as when he was tempted to sacrifice Isaack. But the Devils temptations are most exercised in spirituall things: Non solum in vitiis, sed in ipsis spiritualibus exercitiis laqueos abscondit: Hee doth not only in vices, but even in spirituall exercises hide his snares: hee tempteth unto vice, and maketh men proude of vertue: *August. Soliloq. cap.*17. *tom.*9. 9. The successe of these temptations is much differing: God never faileth in his worke, neither is deceived: but his tentation hath the end for the which he sendeth it, as in the proofe of Abrahams obedience. But the Devill is prevented in his purpose, and whom he seeketh to supplant, they become stronger. *Illuditur diabolus, & vulnere suo eum sanat armat, quem debilitandum putavit: The Devill is mocked, and with his owne wound armeth them against him whom he thought to weaken, Ambros. lib.*1. *de pœnitent. cap.*12. 10. Lastly, the effect of these temptations is farre unlike: Gods temptations doe try out for the most part, that good, which is in a man: as Abrahams obedience appeared in his tentation: so *Augustine, Tentatio Dei non illud agit, ut ipse aliquid cognoscat, quod ante nesciebat, sed illo tentante, id est, interrogante quod in homine occultum est prodeat: God by his tentation seeketh not to know that which hee knew not before, but by his tentation as a kinde of interrogation, that which is hid in man is brought to light. Serm. de tempor.*72. But Satans tentation discovereth that evill which lieth hid in a man: as in Iudas, his malice and covetousnesse, in betraying his master for money. See more of the difference betweene good and evill tentations: doctrine 1. upon Gen. 22.

Quest. XLVIII. Wherein the Lord at this time proved his people.

Now the Lord at this time proved and tried the people in these three things. 1. *Tentavit aquarum penuria: He proved them by the penury of water: Borrh. Pellican.*2. Tentavit lege data: He proved them by giving them a law. Simler. Probavit eum num jugo adsuescere vellet: He proved them, whether they would yeeld unto the Lords yoke: Osiander. 3. The Lord also proved them by his mercies, in healing the waters and sending them drinke in their necessity. In the first hee trieth their patience, in the second their obedience, in the third their thankefulnesse.

Quest. XLIX. What diseases of Egypt he meaneth.

Vers.26. I will put none of those diseases upon thee which I brought upon Egypt. 1. Some understand hereby the diseases which the Israelites had in Egypt. Cajetan. But the words doe plainely shew, that hee meaneth such diseases as were imposed upon Egypt: called also the diseases of Egypt, *Dm.*28.60. 2. Neither yet are the ordinary diseases of Egypt here understood, such as was the Leprosie, called (Elephantiasis) peculiar unto that countrey, caused by the contagion of Nilus: for the Lord speaketh of such extraordinary diseases, as hee brought at that time upon the Egyptians. 3. Some therefore doe referre them to the plagues of Egypt, which the Egyptians endured: but seeing most of those plagues were without their bodies, and here the Lord speaketh of such diseases as were in the body, as it appeareth by the reason annexed, I am the Lord that healeth thee: such plagues then as touched not the Egyptians in their bodies, are not here comprehended under the name of diseases: and beside, seeing this promise conditionall, upon their obedience, includeth a secret commination, that if they will

...e in obedience, the Lord will bring upon them all those diseases, and yet we reade not of such plagues, ...herewith the Israelites were punished for their disobedience: it seemeth then, that those externall ...s of Egypt, are not here signified. 4. Wherefore speciall reference is here made, to those swelling ...ing biles and running sores, wherewith the Egyptians were smitten in the fixth plague, Exod. 9. 11. ...ld rained, understanding the like burning diseases, and swelling sores: as this to be the meaning, may ...gathered, Deut. 28. 60. where after he had said, He will bring upon thee all the diseases of Egypt, whereof ...thou wast afraid: then it is added, And every sickneſſe, and every plague, which is not written in the booke of ...this law, verſ. 61.

Quest. L. Whether Iob, being a righteous man felt not the diſeaſes of Egypt.

But here a further queſtion ariſeth, how this promiſe was fulfilled toward Iob, who being a righteous man, was notwithſtanding ſmitten with botches and ſores. 1. Ferus anſwereth, that theſe diſeaſes were the plagues of Egypt, which were not laid upon Iob: but ſeeing one of thoſe plagues was of botches and ſores, though Iob felt not all the plagues, yet therein he was tried; and alſo, his ſheepe and ſervants were deſtroyed with lightning and fire from heaven, which alſo was one of the plagues of Egypt; therefore, this anſwer doth not ſatisfie. 2. Neither yet will we ſay, that Iob lived before theſe times, and that this promiſe was made to the Iſraelites, for the ſame equity was generall in all times, and extended to all men. 3. Therefore, this we anſwer: that this promiſe to be kept from the diſeaſes of Egypt, is conditionall upon the keeping of all Gods ordinances, which never any did but Chriſt, who was freed in his holineſſe from all diſeaſes, and corporall infirmities: now Iob, although in reſpect of others, hee was a perfect man, yet he could not juſtifie himſelfe toward God: for he ſaith, If he ſhould waſh himſelfe with ſnow water, yet his owne cloathes ſhould defile him, Iob 9. 30. though hee ſhould ſtand upon his beſt workes, yet the Lord could finde out his ſinnes. And beſide, theſe corrections laid upon Iob, were not puniſhments and plagues for his ſinne, but the Lords chaſtiſements in the end, to his greater comfort. And further, wee underſtand the diſeaſes of Egypt to have beene generall; this letteth not, but that ſome particular perſons in Iſrael might be touched with the like diſeaſes, as Ezechiah had a byle, yet were they not the plagues of Egypt, that is, univerſall and generall.

Quest. LI. In what ſenſe the Lord ſaith, I am thy healer.

I am the Lord that healeth thee, or, I am thy healer or Phyſitian, for ſo the word Ropheca ſignifieth. 1. This reaſon containeth an argument from the contrary: I am hee that keepeth diſeaſes from thee, and healeth them, therefore will I not bring them upon thee. Vatab. 2. And further, this reaſon is taken from the power of God: Ego poſſum & volo tui corporis vires conſervare, &c. I can and will preſerve the ſtrength of thy body, and retaine it. Oſiander. 3. And further, this promiſe is grounded upon the naturall inclination of God unto mercy: Non vult mortem peccatoris, potior apud eum eſt miſericordia quam ira: He will not the death of a ſinner, mercy beareth greater ſway with him, than wrath. Pellican. And the Lord here promiſeth, not only to heale all their infirmities, and helpe their preſent dangers, but keepe from them all perils imminent, or to come: as they had preſent experience by the healing of the waters.

Quest. LII. Of the fountaines and Palme trees in Elim.

Verſ. 27. And they came to Elim, where were twelve fountaines of waters. 1. Concerning the ſituation of this place, it ſeemeth that it was in Arabia petraea: and from theſe fountaines proceeded the river which watred the City Petra, and the circuit thereabout: this floud Herodotus calleth Cambyſes, of the coldneſſe thereof, for kor in Hebrew ſignifieth cold: by the benefit of this river Cambyſes, as writeth Herodotus, once made a way and entrance into Egypt. Iun. 2. It ſeemeth it was a watry place, becauſe Palmes doe not grow in dry grounds. Calvin. 3. So it was every way commodious to campe in, the water was neceſſary both to quench their thirſt, and to allay the heat with the cooleneſſe thereof, and the Palme trees (which ſome interprete Date trees) were comfortable both for their ſhadow, and their fruit.

Quest. LIII. Of the myſticall ſignification of the twelve fountaines, and 70. Palmes.

This camping place in Elim, in reſpect of the fountaines and Palme trees there growing, hath a threefold application: 1. It reſembleth the preſent ſtate of Iſrael; the twelve fountaines, the twelve tribes, that were watered there: the 70. Palme trees, the 70. Elders, which were afterward choſen, and the Palme beſide betokened victory. 2. Beſide, the twelve fountaines were a repreſentation of the twelve Apoſtles, out of whoſe pure doctrine, the Church of God is nouriſhed and refreſhed: the 70. Palme trees ſet forth the Doctors and Fathers of the Church, whoſe writings, as the palme trees give comfort, both in ſhadow and fruit, are alſo profitable, ſo long as they are watered with theſe twelve fountaines, that is, have not from the Apoſtles doctrine. Some alſo make theſe 70. Palme trees, a type of the 70. diſciples. Pellican. Theſe as inſtruments, doe ſet forth unto us the true living water, the Meſſiah, by faith in whom the Church is ſpiritually nouriſhed and ſuſtained. 3. This alſo was a type and figure of everlaſting reſt, and of the ſtate of the bleſſed: as S. Iohn deſcribeth the heavenly Jeruſalem, by the river that was in the middeſt of it, and the tree of life growing by it, that bare twelve manner of fruit. Borrh.

Quest.

Quest. LIV. Of divers errors and oversights of Iosephus.

NOw in the last place, I will briefely shew, how many errors and oversights are committed by Iosephus, in the narration of this short story. 1. Iosephus thinketh, that before the people came to Marah, they carried water with them in their journey, and digged pits by the way, and found water, but enough: but the text saith they found no waters, that is, none at all. 2. He saith that they came prima vespera, the first evening unto Marah: but Moses saith, that they went three dayes in the desert, till they came to Marah, both in this place, and Numb. 33.8. 3. Hee saith, Moses accepit fruſtrum ligni forte ibi jacens: That Moses tooke a peece of wood by chance, there lying, to cast into the water: whereas hee found not that wood by chance, but the Lord shewed it him. 4. Hee addeth, that when the people asked what need there was to change the water, he cast not in the wood, but commanded them to draw out a great quantity of the water, and then the rest would be sweet, and they did so: But Moses sheweth how the waters became sweet, by casting in the tree. 5. Hee misreporteth the story, concerning the pleasant place of Elim, saying, that a farre off, it seemed a delectable place, but when they came neere, Festinum expectationem, It deceived the expectation of all. 6. Hee saith further, that the palme trees were not Admodum procera propter loci ariditatem: That the palmes were not very tall, because of the drines of the place, wherein he seemeth to follow the Septuagint, that there were seventy ταῖς φοίνιξιν τοῦτον τοῖς palmes: But the text sheweth that it was a watry place, where were twelve fountaines, and therefore the Palmes there growing, were like to be goodly trees: And if they were such stubs, and stumps of trees, neither profitable for shadow or fruit, Moses would not have made such a speciall mention thereof, but here, and Num. 33. 7. Iosephus goeth on, and telleth that these twelve fountaines were not sufficient, Ut humiditatem terræ subministrarent: To minister moisture to the earth. But the contrary is shewed before quæst. 52. and it seemeth it was a watry and commodious place, because it is said, they camped there by the waters. 8. Iosephus also writeth, that in this place, for want of food, the people murmured against Moses: whereas their murmuring for want of food, was afterward in the desert of Sur, chap. 16.1. And thus far of the questions, doubts and difficulties, which this Chapter, as wee have seene, hath plentifully afforded.

4. Places of doctrine.

1. Doct. All proceedeth of Gods mercy.

Vers. 13. Thou wilt by thy mercy carry this people. Whatsoever the Lord doth for his people, proceedeth of his love only, and mercie, not of any merit or desert in them. Simler. As Iacob confesseth, he was not worthy of the mercy and truth, which the Lord had shewed him.

2. Doct. All both men and women, must set forth Gods praise.

Vers. 20. And all the women came out after her. In that not only the men, but women also here did sing and set forth Gods praise: it sheweth that all in generall, both men and women, should be exercised in singing to the praise of God, as the Prophet David exhorteth all people to praise the Lord. Psalm. 147. both young men and maids, old men and children, Psal. 148. Ferus.

3. Doct. Of the lawfull use of Church Musike, and how it ought to be limited.

They came out with timbrels. As hence it may be gathered, that there is a commendable use of Musike both in voice and Instrument, in the publike service of God: So here certaine rules are prescribed which serve for the moderation and limitation of Church Musike. 1. That according to the Apostles rule, all things are to be done to edifying: as here Miriam and the rest so sing, as they are understood, the women answered the men, and the women answered themselves in singing. So he that singeth in the Church, should so sing, as that hee both edifie himselfe and others: Augustine saith concerning the hearer, Si sonum non sensum libido audiendi desideret, improbatur: If he that heareth, regard the sound more than the sense, it is to be reproved. Cont. Iulian. lib. 4. cap. 14. And touching the Singer, Bernard thus confesseth: Sæpe ad sacrum mysterium vocem meam fregi ut dulcius cantarem; magis delectabar in vocis modulamine quam in cordis compunctione: Oftentimes in the sacred mystery, I did warble with my voice, to sing more sweetly; I delighted more in tuning the voice, than in turning my heart. Hee acknowledgeth this to have been a fault in himselfe, and so is it in all such singers as use the like. 2. Another rule is, that all things should be done in the Church εὐσχημόνως, decently, and with a comely grace, 1. Cor. 14.40. Miriam being a prophetesse with the rest, did sing after a sober manner, as it became a grave Matrone or Prophetesse: so should Church Musike, expressed by voice or Instrument, bee grave and sober, not with divisions, and running catches, and curious warbling, and breaking of the voice: As Augustine well saith, Sobrie psallimus in ecclesia divina cantica Prophetarum: Wee doe sing soberly in the Church, the divine songs of the Prophets, Epistol. 119. cap. 19. 3. The Apostle addeth a third rule, that all things should bee done ordinatè, according to order. And this is agreeable to order, that things most necessary in the service of God should have the first and the chiefest place: Musike then should bee used and ordered in the Church, that it hinder not the preaching of the Word, neither take up that time, which should bee spent in spirituall instruction, and in edifying of mens soules. There is no comparison betweene preaching and singing in the Church, like as S. Paul preferreth five words, spoke with understanding to the instruction of others, before ten thousand words uttered in a strange tongue, 1.*Cor.*14.19. such oddes there is between lively and edifying preaching, and dumbe tunes, and unedifying songes. This abuse hath beene spied, even in the popish Church, when other necessary parts of Gods service, as prayers and thankesgiving, were many times omitted, because of the Organe play, and tedious Church-muiike: and it is censured in these words, Illud non rectè fit in quibusdam ecclesiis: This is not well done in certaine Churches, &c. Clemens. *part.*2.*chap.*12.

4. Doct. Of the lawfulnesse of Physike, and the abuses thereof.

Vers.27. I The Lord am thy healer, or Physician. By this, that the Lord giveth himselfe this title, the honourable science of Physike is commended: The Physician is to bee honoured in the time of health, against the day of sicknesse. Luke is called the beloved Physician, *Colos.*4.10. He would not, being called to be an Evangelist, retaine a calling either unlawfull, or dishonourable to his profession: Ecclesiasticus well adviseth, τίμα ἰατρὸν, honour thy Physician: not the science of Physike, but the abuse of Physicians is to be condemned. And there are two generall faults in that calling, one is in the professors, and practisers themselves, if they be not faithfull, but make long cures, to inrich themselves, and impoverish their patients, as that poore woman was handled, which had beene troubled with a bloudy issue twelve yeeres, and had spent all she had: the text saith, *Shee had suffered many things of the Physicians and had spent all she had, and it availed her nothing, but she became much worse, Mark.*5.26. where foure inconveniences are set downe, that came by the fraud of the Physicians, the prolonging of the disease, the putting of her body to paine, the wasting of her substance, the increasing of her disease. The other fault is in patients, when they trust to Physicians, and forget God, (as Asa did, 2.*Chron.*15.13.) who can worke without Physicians, but they can doe nothing without him.

5. Doct. That is only right, which the Lord commandeth.

Vers.26. If thou wilt doe that which is right in his sight, and give eare to his commandement. Tunc rectum est opus hominis, cum eo modo fit quo Deus jubet: Then a mans worke is right, when it is done as the Lord biddeth. Pellican. For that is not right, which seemeth good in a mans owne eyes, but what is approved of God: as the Lord by his Prophet saith, They worship mee in vaine, teaching for doctrines the commandements of men, as our Saviour citeth the Prophet, *Mark.*7.7.

5. Places of confutation.

1. Confut. Against uncertainty or doubtfulnesse of salvation.

Vers.13. Thou wilt carry thy people. But in the Hebrew it is nachitha, thou hast carried: Propter certitudinem fidei, sic de futuris loquitur ut de præteritis: For the certainty of faith, hee so speaketh of things to come, as already past. Ferus. As S.Paul saith, By his mercy he saved us, Tit.3.6. whereas yet we are not saved, but are assured of our salvation by faith in Christ This then sheweth the absurdity of popish doctrine, that counteth it presumption for any man to be assured of his salvation.

2. Confut. Against the Maniches.

Vers.25. And there he proved him. The Maniches upon the like place, where the Lord is said to tempt Abraham, thus objected: Egone Deum colam qui tentat? shall I worship a God that tempteth? The Maniches rejected the old Testament, and the Author thereof, they made two beginnings, one of evill, the other of good, two chiefe Princes, the one of darknesse, to whom they ascribed the old Testament, the other the Prince of light, whom they held to be the Author of the new Testament. Si displiceat Deus tentans, displiceat & Christus tentans: If God displease thee, because he tempteth, then must Christ displease thee, because he is said also to tempt: As he said to *Philip, Whence shall we buy bread, that these may eat? Iob.*6.5. then it followeth, This he said to prove or tempt him, for he himself knew what he would do. Christ is said to prove him that is, to see what he would say: so, *Deo tentanti id quod occultum est proferre: God tempteth, that what is hid may bee bewrayed: Deus tentat ut doceat, and God tempteth to teach and instruct: August. de tempore, serm.*72. See before *quest.*50.51.

3. Confut. Against free will.

Vers.26. If thou wilt give eare unto his commandements. These and the like places are urged by the Romanists, to prove freewill, as Esay 1.19. If yee consent and obey, yee shall eat the good things of the land: upon these and such other places, they argue thus: If it bee in our power to performe the conditions, then have wee free will, if not, to what end are they propounded? *Bellarm. lib.*5.de grat. 1.19.

Contra, This argument consisteth upon a disjunctive proposition: These places either shew free will, or else they are propounded in vaine. First therefore, I answer, that according to their collection, these places as well shew, that a man hath power of himselfe to keepe the Commandements, as that hee hath free will: But this S. Paul denieth, and thereupon hee concludeth, that every one that is of the workes of the Law, is under the curse, because they cannot keepe it. Secondly, these places being taken in their sense, doe as well conclude, that a man of himselfe, without grace may keepe Gods commandements, for if a man cannot performe them wholly of himselfe, the same question remaineth, why they are propounded to him that cannot keepe them? Thirdly, And yet though it bee not in our power, to keepe these commandements, they are not in vaine, for they serve as spurs to incite and stirre us up to obedience, and to strive unto perfection, and to labour to goe forward. But S. Paul sheweth the onely sufficient reason, why the Lord gave the Law, to bee a Schoolemaster to bring us unto Christ, Gal. 3. And Augustine writeth excellently of this point: Non ob aliud superbis data ista præcepta sunt, quam ut in suis viribus deficientes in quibus confidebant, liberatorem requirerent: These precepts were for no other cause given to the proud people, than that failing in their owne strength, wherein they trusted, they should seeke for an helper, and deliverer. Contra Celestin. de perfectione justitiæ.

6. Places of Morall Observations.

1. Observ. Against vaine confidence in strength or riches.

Vers. 4. His chosen captaines were drowned also in the redsea. Notwithstanding, their great power, nobility, favour with the King, skill in feats of warre, the Lord being mightier than they, and a greater man of warre, was able to confound and overthrow them: this sheweth that no man should put confidence in his nobility, power, riches. Ferus. As the Prophet saith, Ierem. 4.23. Let not the wise man glory in his wisdome, nor the strong man glory in his strength, neither the rich man glory in his riches, &c.

2. Observ. The enemies of the Church are the enemies of God.

Vers. 7. Thou hast overthrowne them, that rise against thee. They which are enemies unto the Church, the Lord holdeth them to be his enemies: they which rise against his people, doe set themselves against the Lord: as the Lord Jesus said to Saul, Why persecutest thou me. Simler. They then, which oppose themselves to the Church and people of God, doe bid battell to the Lord himselfe, and hee will take their cause in his owne hand, and maintaine it.

3. Observ. Sinne presseth downe to hell.

Vers. 10. They sunke as lead in the mighty waters. Sinne is heavy, and presseth downe, yea it weigheth downe to hell: Examinemus ergo nos per pœnitentiam ne deprimamur gravitate peccatorum usque in profundum: Let us therefore examine our selves by repentance, lest wee bee prest down with the weight of our sinnes, into the deepe. Ferus. So the Apostle exhorteth, That wee should cast away every thing that presseth downe, and sinne that hangeth on so fast, Hebr. 12.1.

4. Observ. Not to give over to goe on in our calling, notwithstanding the unthankefulnesse of men.

Vers. 24. Then the people murmured against Moses, and he cried unto the Lord. Moses notwithstanding the peoples murmuring, goeth on in his calling, and leaveth not off to pray for them, though they were a very stubborne and ungratefull people: this teacheth the servants of God, to goe on with courage in their calling, notwithstanding, the evill acceptance in the world of their labours: Ministers must looke for small thanke at the hands of men, for their paines: nor yet must such as labour, either by preaching or writing, to propagate the knowledge of the truth, looke for their reward among men: nay it ought to be a comfort unto them, that they find not their reward here, for it is a sure signe, that a greater reward is laid up for them in heaven: As the Lord saith by his Prophet Ieremy, Refraine thy voice from weeping, and thine eyes from teares, for thy worke shall be rewarded, Ierem. 31.16. As Moses prayeth for a murmuring and unthankfull people; the like doth Samuel, God forbid that I should sinne against the Lord, and cease praying for you, but I will shew you the good and right way, 1. Sam. 12.23.

5. Observ. Obedience the best remedy against sicknesse.

Vers. 26. If thou wilt keepe all his ordinances, then I will put none of these evill diseases upon thee. The best medicine then, against diseases and sicknesse, is obedience, and to walke in the feare of God. Osiander. And sinne is that which causeth diseases: as S. Paul sheweth, that divers among the Corinthians, were some sicke, some weake, some were fallen asleepe, because of certaine abuses, which they committed in celebrating the Lords Supper: And in the same place, the Apostle sheweth the best remedy, that they should judge themselves, (by repentance and amendment of life) and then they should not be judged of the Lord, by sicknesse, mortality, and other such judgements, 1. Cor. 11.30,31.

6. Observ. After heavinesse commeth joy.

Vers. 27. And they came to Elim, where were twelve fountaines, &c. After they had gone through deserts and barren places, the Lord bringeth them to a pleasant and comfortable station: thus the Lord after heavinesse sendeth comfort, after labour rest, after affliction prosperity. Simler. As it is in the Psalme, Weeping may abide in the evening, but joy commeth in the morning. Psal. 30.5.

CHA

CHAP. XVI.

1. The Method and Argument.

THis Chapter ſheweth both the neceſſity and want of food, which the children of Iſrael ſuſtained, to *verſ.*4. then the ſupply of their want in the reſt of the Chapter.

Firſt, their want is deſcribed: 1. By the circumſtances of the time and place. 2. By the effects, their murmuring: where are ſet forth the circumſtances of their perſons that murmured, the whole congregation, and againſt whom, namely, Moſes and Aaron, *verſ.*2. then the matter of their murmuring, verſ. 3.

Secondly, the ſupply is: 1. Promiſed by the Lord, with particular direction, what they ſhall gather upon every day, and what upon the ſixth day, *verſ.*4,5. 2. The ſame is declared to the people: 1. Jointly by Moſes and Aaron, with a reprehenſion for their murmuring, *verſ.*6,7. 2. By Moſes alone, verſ. 8. 3. By Aaron alone, at the appointment of Moſes: where is ſhewed, both what the people ſaw when Aaron ſpake, and what the Lord ſaid before to Moſes, *verſ.*10,11,12. 3. The promiſe is exhibited: where firſt is deſcribed the manner of the comming forth of the fleſh, then of the Man, *verſ.*13,14. 2. The effect which it wrought, the admiration of the people, which is ſhewed by the name Man, which they gave it. 3. Then followeth certaine lawes and precepts for the diſpoſing and ordering of this Man.

The firſt law and order is, how much every one ſhould gather: where is ſet forth the precept or rule, *verſ.*16. The obedience of the people, *verſ.*17. and the ſucceſſe, *verſ.*18.

The ſecond precept is, that nothing ſhould be reſerved till the morning, where both the tranſgreſſion of the people is ſhewed, *verſ.*20. and their obedience afterward, in gathering it every morning, *verſ.*21.

The third precept is, that they ſhould gather none upon the Sabbath, but twice ſo much upon the ſixth day, to ſerve alſo for the Sabbath: here is declared. 1. The occaſion of this law, the information of the Rulers, with the occaſion thereof, the people gathering double on the fixth day, *verſ.*21,22. 2. Then the publication of the law of the Sabbath, with the obedience of the people thereunto, to *verſ.*27. 3. The tranſgreſſion of the people, *verſ.*27. 4. The reprehenſion by Moſes, with an iteration of the law, to verſ. 30. 5. The reformation of the people, *verſ.*30. with a further deſcription of Man, *verſ.*31.

The fourth precept is, the reſerving of Man in a pot, commanded by the Lord to Moſes, verſ. 32. prefigured by him to Aaron, *verſ.*32. and by him accordingly performed, *verſ.*34.

Laſtly is ſhewed the perpetuall uſe of Manna, till they came to the land of Canaan, *verſ.*35.

3. Queſtions and doubts diſcuſſed and explained.

QUEST. I. Of the deſart of Sin.

1. THey came to the wilderneſſe of Sin, &c. 1. There was another deſart called Zin, where Miriam Moſes ſiſter died, which is named alſo Pharan, and Kadeſh, *Numb.*33.36. but with this difference: this Sin is written with ſamech, the other with tſade: Marbach. Simler. Then Toſtatus is ſomewhat deceived, who maketh two deſarts bearing the ſame name Sin: qu. 1. in Exod. whereas the one is called the other Zin or Tzin. 2. There was alſo the deſart of Sinai, which was divers from this of Sin: for from this deſart they came on the 15. day of the ſecond moneth, but into the other, on the firſt day of the ſame moneth, *chap.*19.1. Toſtat. 1. quaſt. 3. This was the eighth ſtation or manſion place of the Iſraelites: the ſouth which was by the red Sea, Numb. 33.9. is here omitted: as other ſtations there numbred, as Rithmah and Alush, are not here rehearſed, but only the principall places remembred: Iun. Simler.

QUEST. II. Of the time, when the Israelites came into the desert of Sin.

THe fifteenth day of the second moneth: 1. This was a moneth after their comming out of Egypt whence they departed upon the 14. day of the first moneth: Marbach. 2. Which sheweth their great ingratitude, who in so short a time had forgotten all those miracles, and great workes, which the Lord had done for them in Egypt, and their mighty deliverance from so great a bondage: Pelarg. 3. also by this appeareth the cause of their great want and penury: they had now spent all their provision which they brought out of Egypt, of the which they had lived all these thirty dayes, feeding thereof sparingly neither: for they could not bring out much foode with them, comming forth in haste; and having no other carriage but upon their shoulders, and they pretending to goe out to sacrifice in the desert, could not without suspition of a purpose not to returne, convey much away: Simler. 4. Now whether it is to be observed, that this 15. day of the second moneth, when Manna was given, was the same which was prescribed for them to keepe the Passeover in, that were uncleane, Num. 9. signifying so much, that the true Manna was not given to the Jewes, which observed the first legall pasch, but to Gentiles, which were uncleane through their filthy Idolatry, Christ the true Passeover was offered: and this was the second pasch under the Gospell, which succeeded the first pasch under the Law: Ferus. Gloss. ordinar.

QUEST. III. Whether all the children of Israell murmured.

Vers. 2. AND the whole congregation of the children of Israel murmured. 1. The word Lun here used signifieth to persist, as also to murmure: but the latter is more proper, they persisted obstinate, and opposed themselves by their murmuring against Moses and Aaron. 2. It is like that there were some godly persons among them that murmured not, as Caleb and Iosua: but because they were but few in respect of the rest, all are said to have murmured: Lyran. and even the Saints also are not without some infirmities: Ferus. 3. The whole congregation therefore is said to murmure, both because it was generall throughout the campe, and in regard of the manner, they assembled tumultuously against Moses and Aaron, and shewed their discontent: Simler. 4. It is added, in the desert, to shew the cause of their murmuring: the place where they were was barren and dry, and yeelded no hope of any succour or comfort: Iun. And beside, their wretched nature appeareth, that being in such misery and distresse, which should have stirred them to prayer, they fell to murmuring: Simler. 5. This famine then, which they endured, was the more grievous in these three regards: because all their provision, which they had brought out of Egypt was spent: and there was small hope of any new supply in that vast and barren desert; and beside, the multitude was so great, that a little provision would not suffice: Borrh. 6. So for this cause all the congregation is said to murmure, both to include the Levites, who also murmured with the rest: and there were beside other strange people mingled with the Israelites, who set them on worke to murmure, as we reade, Numb. 11. 4. Tostat. quæst. 1.

QUEST. IV. How they are said to have murmured against Moses and Aaron here, and afterward against the Lord.

AGainst Aaron and Moses. Yet afterward verse 8. they are said to have murmured, not against them but against the Lord: the reason is this: 1. Because they were the servants and Ministers of God: for he which murmureth against Gods Ministers, contemneth God himselfe: Genevens. And Moses saith, Ut adversus illum se scirent murmurasse, qui illos miserat: That they should know, that they had murmured against him, who had sent them. August. quæst. 59. in Exod. 2. They are said then to murmure against Moses and Aaron, because their speech was directly against them, and to them: but in effect it was against the Lord: because not Moses and Aaron, but the Lord had brought them out of Egypt, which the Israelites repented them of, and were discontented with: Lyran. and beside, that which they murmured for, want of flesh and of bread, Moses could not give them, but God. Thostat. quæst. 1.

QUEST. V. Of the grievous murmuring of the Israelites.

Vers. 3. O That we had died by the hand of the Lord, &c. These murmuring and obstinate Israelites diversly offend: 1. In their ingratitude in extenuating the benefits, which they had received upon every occasion: they looke onely unto their present state, and place, where they were, and thinke not of the place of bondage, whence they were brought: Pellic. 2. They preferre carnall things before spirituall, the flesh-pots of Egypt before the glorious presence of God, who now shewed himselfe visibly among them: Ferus. 3. They preferre their miserable bondage in Egypt, with their grosse flesh-pots, before their glorious liberty, being in some want, whereas men will even with the losse of their lives deeme their liberty: Marbach. 4. Yea they untruly accuse Moses and Aaron, as though they had brought them out for their destruction: whereas they did therein nothing of their owne head, but as they were directed them: Ferus, Pellican. 5. Yea, they call their glorious vocation from bondage to liberty, a bondage and destruction. Borrh.

QUEST. VI. How the Israelites are said to have sit by the flesh-pots of Egypt.

WHen we sate by the flesh pots. 1. The word (sir) signifieth both a pot and a thorne: because they used to hang their pots upon hookes of iron, or wood, like unto thornes: and so the meaning is, that they sate by the pot hangers, whereon they used to hang their pots: Oleaster. 2. Some thinke that ken becauſe they had flocks of cattell in Egypt, whereof they might have fed, if they would, but they rather uſe to eat of fiſh and fowle, which they had there in abundance: Gloſſ.ordinar. 3. But though Egyptians abſtained from the fleſh of bullocks and ſheepe, it is like the Iſraelites had their fill: and ſitting by the fleſh pots, both noteth their ſecurity: Lyran. and their carnall voracity and greedi- Sedebant affectuoſe: They ſate gaping over the pots: Toſtat. They had cattell in the deſert, but if ſhould have eaten of them, they might ſoone have killed them all up. 4. But it is very like that they ſomewhat laviſhly in the commendation of Egypt, as Dathan and Abiram did call it a land that with milke and hony, Numb. 16.13. of purpoſe to diſgrace and diminiſh the true praiſe of the of Canaan, which indeed was the land that flowed with milke and hony. 5. Some thinke further, they had no ſuch ſtore of cattell in the wilderneſſe, becauſe of the want of paſture: or that they ſpa- kinde of fleſh, leſt they ſhould want for ſacrifice: but it is not like that this people had any ſuch thought at this time: therefore it is more probable, that they longed not for ſuch kinde of which was at hand, but for the fleſh of fowles, ſuch as they uſed to eat in Egypt, and they wanted for the nature of diſcontented people is, to loath ſuch things, as they have, and to covet and deſire which they have not: and in that the Lord giveth them quailes, it ſeemeth hee ſatisfied their owne but to their further hurt, in ſending that kinde of fleſh which they luſted after: Sic fere Gloſſ. Ordinar.

QUEST. VII. In what ſenſe the Lord ſaith he will raine bread from heaven.

I will cauſe bread to raine from heaven. 1. Some thinke, that by bread is underſtood generally, any kinde of nouriſhment, after the manner of the Hebrew phraſe: Gloſſ.ordinar. Lyran. Olen. But Auguſtines reaſon overthroweth this interpretation: Nam iſto nomine carnes complectuntur: quæſt.60.in Exod. ſunt: for ſo alſo the fleſh ſhould be comprehended in this word, for they were alſo a kinde of but the fleſh and bread here promiſed, were two diſtinct things, as is evident, verſ. 8. 2. Nei- yet bread here taken properly, for that which is made of corne, for of that kinde Manna was not. Therefore the (name) bread, is here taken for that which ſhould be in ſteed of bread, as the foundation of other meates, which ſhould ſerve to ſtrengthen mans heart, as bread doth, Pſalm. 104.14. and they were to uſe it as bread, in grinding it, and baking it, and making cakes of it, Numb. 11.9. 4. It is ſaid to raine from heaven: becauſe it came downe in the manner of raine or ſnow, out of Quæſt. 2. in Exod. which is called by the name of heaven: as Pſal. 8.8. they are called the fowles of heaven. 5. And by the Lord ſignifieth the great abundance of this heavenly bread, which ſhould overflow, and fall every where, as the raine, that both poore and rich might have enough: and in that it came from heaven, would teach them, that although the earth was barren below, that he could command the heavens above to nouriſh them, that they ſhould no more be ſo diffident or diſtruſtfull. Ferus.

QUEST. VIII. Why they are commanded every day to gather this bread.

Of that which is ſufficient for every day. 1. What this ſufficiency was, is afterward expreſſed, verſ.16. for every one, a gomer full. Toſtat. 2. And as God promiſeth to ſend it, ſo they are required gather it: whereby is ſignified, that although God doe ſend bread, and other neceſſaries for the ſuſten- of man, yet hee muſt doe his diligence in the labour and travell of his vocation. Ferus. 3. And the Lord promiſeth only ſufficiencie, not ſuperfluity, that they ſhould not give themſelves to immo- appetite and gluttony. Pellican. 4. And further, the Lord promiſeth bread, not for yeeres or but for every day for it ſelfe, that they ſhould depend upon Gods providence, day by day. And for this cauſe the Hebrewes thinke, that the ſeventh yeere of reſt was appointed wherein they ſhould neither ſow nor reape; that as well the rich as poore ſhould that yeere upon Gods providence. And agreeable unto this rule, is that petition in the Lords prayer: this day our daily bread: where our Saviour teacheth us daily to depend upon God for our food. Lyr.

QUEST. IX. How the Lord is ſaid by this to have proved his people, and to what end.

That I may prove them. 1. This probation of them, was not to that end, that the Lord ſhould have experience of them, for their froward nature was well enough knowne to him: but as ſaith, ut ipſis hominibus oſtenderet, to make them knowne to themſelves and others: Toſtat. referre this probation or triall, to that particular law and precept of gathering but a certaine por- of Manna every day: to ſee whether they would beleeve Gods promiſe, and depend upon him: Barba. Galaſ. Toſtat. Rupert. 3. Some underſtand it as well of that precept, as of the other, not any upon the Sabbath: as the Lord tried Adams obedience in that one prohibition not to eat forbidden fruit: Simler. 4. Some will have it taken more largely of all the precepts and com- touching Manna: which were eight in all: 1. To gather Manna in the morning. 2. To that which was ſufficient. 3. Not to exceede in eating the meaſure of a gomer. 4. Not to any till the morrow. 5. Upon the 6. day to gather double ſo much. 6. To reſerve one gomer Sabbath. 7. To eat that meaſure ſo reſerved upon the Sabbath. 8. To keepe a gomer of Manna to poſterity: Lyranus. 5. But it is better to take it in a more generall ſenſe: The Lord tried them before with croſſes and adverſity, ſo now hee will prove them by his benefits, to they will afterward walke in his feare, and in obedience before him: Sic Ferus, Calvin. Oſiand.

Oſiand. PeLarg. And thus by this particular benefit God would prepare them to the obedience of his l which ſhould be given afterward: Oleaſter.

QUEST. X. Why the fleſh was given in the evening, the bread in the morning.

Verſ. 8. AT even ſhall the Lord give you fleſh to eat, &c. 1. The reaſon why both the fleſh and b were not given together, as the Ravens brought unto Elias, bread and fleſh at once, bo the things: the evening was fitteſt for the fall of the quailes, which being wearied by the flight of day, doe light upon the ground at night: and the morning was the fitteſt time for the Manna, which with the dew, and if it were not gathered betime, it melted with the heat of the Sunne. Lyranus. Th reaſons are miſliked by Toſtatus: the firſt, becauſe the quailes came not by any naturall inſtinct, but of God by an extraordinary wind: and the Manna, which was hardned by the fire, and melted by heat of the Sunne, had not that property by any naturall quality, for then it ſhould have melted by a heat whatſoever, as we ſee butter and oyle doth, and other liquid things: therefore it was a ſupernatur quality, which was given to Manna, to melt with one kind of heat, and not with another. But Toſ hath not thus anſwered Lyranus reaſon concerning the falling of Manna in the morning, for howſoe that were a ſupernaturall quality in the Manna, yet it appeareth (de facto) that it did melt by the heat the Sunne: then was the morning the fitteſt ſeaſon to gather it in, before the Sunne waxed hot: T morning then ſerving beſt for Manna, what other time could bee fitter for the rayning of fleſh than QUEST. XI. Whether the rocke were firſt ſtriken to bring out water, or the fleſh and bread firſt ſent.

RUpertus here alſo moveth another doubt out of the 78. Pſalme, verſ. 20. Behold he ſmote the rock that the water guſhed out, &c. can he give bread alſo, and prepare fleſh for his people? For here the Pro QUEST. XII. Why Moſes biddeth Aaron to ſpeake to the people, and doth it not himſelfe.

Verſ. 9. AND Moſes ſaid unto Aaron, &c. 1. Some thinke that Moſes vouchſafeth not to ſpeak this unworthy and unthankfull people, and therefore appointeth Aaron to ſpeake. Pho
But this can be no reaſon, becauſe afterward Moſes ſpeaketh unto the people himſelfe, verſ. 13. 2.
thinke, that it was Aarons office to ſpeake unto the people, for God had made him Moſes mouth, 4. 16. and as Moſes Prophet, chap. 7. 1. But although this order was obſerved in Egypt, that the L when his glory appeared in the cloud: this then was the order, wherein theſe things were done, ſuch to rehearſed in this Chapter: Firſt, after the people had murmured, then the Lord ſpake to Moſes, wh which might be betimes in the morning: after that, Moſes and Aaron ſpake to the people, verſ. 6.

Moſes gave that charge to Aaron, of ſpeaking further to the people, verſ. 9. This being done,

...unto the place, where the Lord appeared in the cloud. Toſtat. 4. Now Aaron ſpake unto all the congregation, either in calling the Elders and Rulers together, who ſhould ſpeake to the people: or elſe, cauſing himſelfe proclamation to be made, and notice to be given to the people, which is moſt like, for this might be ſooner done, and as all the people had murmured, ſo it was fit, they ſhould all preſent themſelves before the Lord. Toſtat. ibid. Quæſt. 4. in Exod.

QUEST. XIII. How the people are bid to draw neere before the Lord.

...Draw neere before the Lord. 1. The Lord in reſpect of his divine eſſence is every where: and not in one place more than in another: but by reaſon of ſome new effect, and extraordinary manifeſtation of his preſence, he is ſaid to be rather in one place, than in another: As here hee is ſaid to be in the cloud, becauſe there hee ſhewed his glory. Toſtat. 2. The people are called before the Lord, which Pelbean underſtandeth of the aſſembly and congregation, where they ſhould heare the Lords Prophets ſpeake unto them: but it is rather underſtood of Gods preſence in the cloud, that all the people ſhould come forth of their tents, and turne themſelves toward the wilderneſſe, and ſo behold the glory of God which appeared unto them: as followeth in the tenth verſe. Toſtat. Iun. For as yet there was neither Arke nor Tabernacle, where they ſhould appeare before the Lord. Simler.

QUEST. XIV. What cloud it was wherein the Lord appeared.

...The glory of the Lord appeared in the cloud. 1. Some thinke, that this was not that cloud, whereby the Lord directed the journeyes of his people, but another: becauſe that cloud went over the hoaſt, but this was toward the wilderneſſe: but this is no good argument: for that cloud which did lead them, went before them, ſometime neerer, ſometime further off. 2. Others thinke that it was the cloud, which reſted upon Moſes Tabernacle, before the great Tabernacle was made, which is mentioned, chap. 33. 7. but this is uncertaine. Ex Toſtat. 3. Therefore, without further queſtion, it was ſome other cloud, than that, which was their guid, which in the day was a cloudy piller, in the night a piller of fire: which was an evident teſtimony of Gods preſence: Iun. Oleaſter. Yet it is to be thought, Visum Dei inſolito modo patefactam, &c. That the glory of God was manifeſted, otherwiſe than it was, that is, in more fearefull manner, the more to terrifie the people: Calvin. Simler. Toſtat. quæſt. 3. in Exod.

QUEST. XV. When the Lord thus ſpake to Moſes.

...On the Lord had ſpoken to Moſes, &c. 1. Some thinke, that Moſes, after he had given Aaron charge to ſpeake to the people, and was gone to appeare before the Lord, that then the Lord ſpake thus to Moſes, which words, he returning againe, delivered to the people. Toſtat. But here is no mention, that Moſes ſpake thoſe words in this place to the people: only it is ſaid, The Lord ſpake, or had ſpoken. 2. Therefore it is the better opinion, that the Lord had thus ſpoken unto Moſes, before he ſpake thus unto the people, verſ. 6, 7. but here it is expreſſely mentioned, to ſhew Moſes faithfulneſſe, that hee delivered nothing to the people, but what he had received from God: for here the very ſame words almoſt are rehearſed, which Moſes before had uttered to the people: it is therefore better expreſſed in the præterfect tenſe, dixerat, the Lord had ſaid. Sit Simler. Patab. Genevenſ. Toſtat quæſt 4. in Exod.

QUEST. XVI. What manner of fowles were ſent, whether they were Quailes.

...At even the Quailes came, &c. 1. The Septuagint tranſlate the Hebrew word (ſhelau) ὄρτυγομήτρα, ortygometra, which is not the Quaile, but a bird of a greater ſort, much bigger, and not much unlike a Quaile, as Ariſtotle deſcribeth: which is the King and Captaine of the Quailes, and goeth before them: but the Rabbineſſe, as David Kimhi, Salomon, doe take it for the uſuall bird called Quaile. 2. But this doubt will be made: becauſe both Plinie, and Solinus doe write, that the Quaile is unwholeſome fleſh, becauſe it feedeth of poiſonfull herbes: and Galen ſaith, that the Quaile eateth Helleborus: and beſide they ſay, that it hath the falling ſickneſſe, and the claw thereof is uſed to ſtay ſhoote their neckes, that are troubled with that diſeaſe. But hereunto it may be anſwered, that many fowles which feed of groſſe, and unwholeſome meat, yet doe yeeld wholeſome and nouriſhing fleſh for mans food: and wee ſee by experience, that the Quaile is held to be dainty meat, and found to bee nouriſhing, and not much unlike the Partridge: and therefore Ariſtotle treateth of them both in one and the ſame Chapter. Simler. And further, if it were admitted, that the Quaile is of it ſelfe no wholeſome meat, who doubteth, but that the Creator, which ſent them, could make them wholeſome and ſafe to his people? Pelarg. 3. Therefore the Lord rather in ſending Quailes, not beeſes or ſheepe, or other groſſer fleſh, doth therein ſhew his power, that was able to provide for them of the beſt; hee ſhewed alſo his love, in ſending them the beſt: and he would thereby take occaſion of murmuring away, which they would have fallen into, if God had fed them with the worſt, and groſſeſt fleſh. Ferus. Lib. 8. de hiſtor. animal. cap. 12. Solinus cap. 18. Galen. lib. 4. meſ. ſpecial.

QUEST. XVII. Whether the comming of the Quailes were a naturall worke.

...ſtly, it is queſtioned, whether the comming of theſe Quailes were an ordinary and naturall thing, ſeeing that thoſe Arabian coaſts doe abound with ſuch kind of fowles: and Plinie writeth, that they paſſe over the ſeas in ſuch numbers, that reſting upon the maſtes of ſhips, they put them in danger of ſinking, and in Italy in the ſea coaſts, about Piſaurus, they flock in ſuch numbers, that a great ſort of them are taken by the inhabitants: Beſide, they uſe in the ſpring, to fly into the Northerne countries, and Plin. lib. 10. cap. 23.

and in the Autumne, to returne againe into the Southerly parts, and it was now about the spring ti when they were sent upon the camp of the Israelites. 2. But notwithstanding these allegations, this peareth to have beene a miraculous worke, above the ordinary course: 1. Because God promised would send them flesh: but if the Quailes would have come otherwise, by ordinary flight, such prom needed not to have beene made. 2. Though Quailes use to take their flight in great troupes, yet for so ny to come together, to suffice 600. thousand people and more, was beyond the compasse and reach ordinary experience. 3. The place also maketh it seeme the more strange: for the Quailes living upon fruits of the earth, would not of themselves have taken their flight, into barren and desert grounds, such these were: but rather unto the fertill and fruitfull countries. Simler. Pelargus.

Quest. XVIII. Whether this story of the sending of the Quailes, and that Num. 11. be all one.

A Third question remaineth, whether this sending of Quailes, be the same with that, which is mentioned, Num. 11. Some thinke that it is the same story, though remembred in two sundry places: this opinion seeme to bee Fermi, Borrh. Genevens. But that these are two divers stories, and that Quailes were two sundry times sent, it may appeare by these reasons: 1. Because this sending of Quailes was in a divers place from the other: this was done in the desert of Sin: the other in Kibroth hattaava after they were departed three dayes journey from the wildernesse of Sinai, Numb. 10. 33. and 33. Pelarg. 2. These Quailes came in the second moneth, on the 15. day: but the other, after they had received the Law in mount Sinai. Simler. 3. These Quailes were given, but to satisfie them for one time there they are satisfied with them a moneth together. Calvin. 4. These Quailes onely covered the Camp because they were but to suffice them for once: those fell a dayes journey without the hoast on each side because they were to feed on them a moneth together. Tostat. quæst. 5. 5. Here no punishment followes but there the wrath of God was kindled against them, and they were smitten with a very great plague while the flesh was betweene their teeth. Osiander.

But here two principall doubts will be moved: First, Why the people were punished then for lusting after flesh, and not now? The answer is, because God in his fatherly compassion, and longanimity, doth beare with them now: but being often provoked with the same sin, he will no longer forbeare. Osiander. Beside their murmuring now, being in extreame want, destitute of all manner of food, was more excusable than the other, proceeding of wantonnesse, when they were fed with Manna. Simler.

Secondly, it will be objected, that Moses, Numb. 11. 21. doubteth, how the people being 600. thousand, should have all flesh given them: which Moses would have made no doubt of, if the like miracle had beene done before. To this it may bee answered: 1. That so in Rephidim, when the people murmured for water, Moses smote the rocke, and there came out water: yet hee doubted, when hee was to smite the roeke againe at another time, Numb. 20. 2. Beside, at the first time the Quailes came but one evening, and served but for one refreshing, but at the other time the Lord promised, that they should have flesh for a moneth together: therefore Moses might not simply doubt of the sending of Quailes, but that they should be fed with them so long together. Simler.

So then notwithstanding these objections, it is evident by the reasons before alleaged, that the Quailes were twice sent unto the Israelites: and Iosephus also accordingly reporteth this story in two several places, as twice done, Lib. 3. Antiquit. cap. 1. and againe, cap. 12. This also is warranted by the Psalme vers. 20. where mention is made of the streaming of the water out of the rocke, before they had flesh given them: whereas the first giving of flesh, came before that miracle of bringing water out of the rocke Exod. 17.

Quest. XIX. Whether the Man were a kind of dew.

Vers. 13. And in the morning the dew lay round about the hoast, and when the dew that was fallen ascended, &c. 1. Some by this dew understand the Manna it selfe, which was as a kind of congealed dew, and lay round about the hoast. Lyran. But it is evident, that beside the Manna, there was a dew also, together with the which the Man did fall, Num. 11. 9. 2. Some other are of opinion, that there fell as an hoare frost upon the earth, and then the Man fell upon that: and so they doe reade the place, Numb. 11. 9. that the Man fell upon the dew: Tostat. quæst. 6. But there the preposition cum is better interpreted, with, than upon: as the Latine Interpreter giveth the sense: Pariter descendebat Man: The Man descended together with it: and beside, it is said in the verse following, that the dew first ascended, that is, vanished, and then the Man appeared: but this could not bee, if the Man were upon the dew. Tostatus taketh the ascending of the dew, for the being or lying of it, above and upon the earth. But that cannot be: for in the verse before it is said, The dew lay round about the hoast, then it followeth, When the fall or lying of the dew was ascended. Here then two things are evidently expressed concerning this dew: the comming and falling of it, and the ascending of it, and going away. A third opinion there is of the Rabbines, that the Man had both an hoare frost, and congealed dew under it, and dew upon it, and so was, as it were betweene two covers: R. Salomon. But, if there were an hoare frost beside the Man, how should it have beene discerned from it? for the Man it selfe is said to have been a small hoare frost upon the earth. 4. This then remaineth as the truest opinion, that the Man fell upon the dew, with the dew, as it were wrapped and folded up in it: and when the dew was gone and vanished away, the Man remained: Simler. Oleaster. Ium. Vatab. But against this Tostatus objecteth: 1. That the Man it selfe melted also with the heat of the Sunne, so that when the dew wasted, the Man should have with it. 2. The dew hath an evill reliſh and taſte, and ſo if it had fallen together with Man, which is ſweet and pleaſant taſte, it would have marred and corrupted the pleaſantneſſe and ſweetneſſe: Contra. 1. The dew being of a thinner ſubſtance, was quickly licked up, but the Manna melted before the heat of the Sunne came: in the ſpace then betweene the drying up of the dew, and the heat of the Sunne, was the time to gather the Man. 2. We ſee by experience, that when the dew is dried up, herbs doe nothing reliſh or ſavour of it: beſide, there are ſweet and pleaſant dewes, ſuch as this which would nothing have allayed the pleaſant taſte of the Man.

QUEST. XX. Whether the Man were a naturall meteore.

Whether it is to be enquired, whether this Man were a naturall meteore, and ordinary thing. 1. Ioſephus affirmeth, that in his time in all that region, it uſed to raine Manna, as it did then in Moſes time: the Arabians alſo have ſuch a like thing, as that was, which is called Manna. Contra. The Arabian Manna is not like unto this Man: 1. This fell every day, ſaving the Sabbath, for 40. yeeres together, the other but in the ſpring time: Polarg. 2. The Arabian Manna neither hath ſuch a pleaſant taſte, neither doth it with the heat of the Sunne, nor yet is ſo hard, to bee beaten in a morter: and it will continue a yeere, it is uſed alſo rather as a medicine, than nouriſhment: beſide, the Hebrewes write, that the Manna falleth not at all about the mount, and circuit of Sinai. Simlerus, Oleaſter. 2. Then this was not a naturall meteore, or an ordinary and uſuall thing, as may appeare by theſe reaſons: 1. This was never ſeene before till that time. Toſtat. And it came not but according to the word and promiſe of God. Calvin. 2. The naturall Manna falleth but in the ſpring: this came winter and ſummer, and every day: as no naturall meteors doe: Simler. 3. This came in ſuch abundance, that it ſufficed 600. thouſand daily. 4. It fell every day, the Sabbath excepted. 5. It fell only in that place where the Iſraelites were, the other nations bordering upon it, as the Amalekites, Edomites, and others knew it not. 6. This Man, if it were kept till the next morning upon the weeke-dayes, putrified, yet was preſerved till the Sabbath, and indured many yeeres in Aarons pot of Manna. Simler. 7. It had contrary qualities: it melted at the Sunne, and was hardned at the fire: 8. It fell twice ſo much upon the ſixth day, to ſerve for the Sabbath. 9. As ſoone as they were gone over Jordan, and entred into the Land of promiſe, the Manna ceaſed. Simler. Calvin.

Ioſeph. lib. 3. Antiq. cap. 1.

QUEST. XXI. Whether the Manna lay about the campe only, and not within it.

Vers. 13. They round about the hoaſt. 1. The Manna fell not as the Quailes did, which covered the campe, and were ſent amidſt their tents, that they might take them with eaſe: but the Manna fell without the campe round about, whereof Toſtatus yeeldeth theſe two reaſons: 1. Becauſe the place where they pitched their tents, was trampled upon with their feete, and ſo full of duſt, and therefore not cleane, or fit for the Manna to fall in. 2. After that the Sunne roſe, the Manna melted, which remained uncollected, and then the ground would have beene moyſt and ſlabby, and ſo diſcommodious for their walking, and footing: therefore hee thinketh, that the Man fell rather without the campe, upon the cleane graſſe, and ſword ground, which was not walked, nor trampled upon. 2. Rupertus further maketh application of the divers ſite and place of the Quailes and the Manna: the one lying within the campe ſignified the carnall rites and ceremonies of the Law, peculiar to the Jewes, the other lying without ſignified the Goſpell of Chriſt, which ſhould be preached to all nations: and that as the Iſraelites went out of the campe to gather Manna, ſo we muſt leave the Jewiſh rites and ceremonies, if we will bee ſaved by the faith of the Goſpell. 3. But this obſervation of the divers falling and lying of the Quailes and Manna is too curious: neither will the text beare it. For, Numb. 11. 9. it is ſaid that the Man with the dewfell ghalhamachaneh, upon the hoaſt or campe: in the which very word, the Quailes are ſaid alſo, Numb. 11. to have fallen upon the hoaſt, or campe: ſo that indifferently the Manna fell upon and about the campe, as the Quailes did: for if the Manna had fallen all without the campe, which lay in a great compaſſe and circuit of ground, ſome miles in length and breadth, the people, if it had not rained Manna at their very doores and neere hand, could not ſo readily have gathered it, before the heat of the Sunne. And it is not to be imagined, but that in the middeſt of the tents, there was ſome convenient ground for the Manna to fall upon: and that it was ſo ordered and diſpoſed in the fall, as it was fitteſt for their gathering: neither the other inconveniences to be feared, of moiſtening the ground: for beſide, that it may bee ſaid, that the Manna came in ſuch meaſure every day, as ſufficed for their eating, ſo that much remained not ſuperfluous after their gathering: it falling like unto a dew, or thin froſt being melted, could not moiſten the ground.

Rupert. lib. 3. in Exod. cap. 15.

QUEST. XXII. Whence it was called Manna.

Vers. 15. It is Man. 1. The words in the Hebrew are Man hu, which have a double interpretation: Some doe reade, quid hoc, what is this, ti tuto iſti: Septuagint, whom Ioſephus followeth, and the reſt alſo, Simler. Pellican. Toſtat. Rupertus. And then they take man hu, for mah hu: for mah ſignifieth what, and then they will have the letter (nun) added paragogically for better ſound: Munſter: but that Man in the Chalde tongue, ſignifieth what: Simler. And this interpretation beſt agreeth with (ky) both to the words following, They wiſt not what it was: and to Moſes anſwer; This is the bread the Lord had given: but if they had called it Man, that is, a gift, or meat prepared, they had known what it was, and Moſes needed not to have told them. Toſtat. Lyran. Contra. 1. If ſuch a ſignification and ſenſe bee found in the Chalde, yet there is no reaſon to thinke, that Moſes would uſe a Chalde Chalde word here. 2. The people in generall, might know it to be sent of God, but could give no specific or particular name to it. Iun. Galas. And so as Calvin saith, Colligimus mediam fuisse eorum cognitionem &c. We gather that they had a meane kinde of knowledge mixed with ignorance: and therefore they were more fully instructed of Moses, concerning the use and end thereof.

2. The Hebrew word there being man, not mah, it is more likely to be derived of the root manah, which signifieth to number, or prepare: some will have it called man, because it fell in such great number. Oleaster. But it signifieth here rather a gift, or meat prepared, that is, without any labour. Calvin. Galas. Vatab. And so the Author of the wisdome of Salomon taketh it: who calleth it ἄρτον ἄγγελων, cibum paratum, meat prepared: chap. 17.20. Howsoever the other reading may seeme to have a good coherence with the words following, yet because it answereth not to the originall word, which is not mah, what, but man, the latter is to be preferred.

Quest. XXIII. Why the Manna is said to be the bread of Angels.

THis Man is called. Psal. 78.25. The bread of Angels. 1. Some Rabbines hold, that it is so called, because the Angels indeed are refreshed with the divine light: Quod lumen incorporatum est & factum Manna: Which divine light was incorporate, and became Manna: So R. Aquiba, and R. Moses Gerundens. To whom seemeth to subscribe Paulus Burgens. in his additions upon this Chapter: But R. Isaac dissenteth from them, that the Angels doe eat no materiall or corporall food, being themselves spirits immateriall: and that divine light being a spirituall thing, how could Manna, being a materiall substance be made of it? 2. But this is a more probable sense, that not the materiall, but the mysticall Manna, is the bread of Angels, because it was a type and figure of Christ, whom the Angels desired to behold. Burgens. Marbach. Yet this is not the proper and literall meaning. 3. Some thinke it is so named of the effect, because it gave strength unto them not to wax old, nor feeble, as the Angels are preserved in their state without decay: such an operation this Man wrought in Caleb, who was of as good strength at 80. as hee was at 40. yeeres before, Iosh. 14. Ferus. But this is spoken without ground; true it is that Caleb was lively and of good strength in his old age, but this he had not by the eating of Manna, but by the speciall gift of God: And this being but one speciall example, maketh not a generall rule: whence also can this vertue of Manna be gathered, seeing all the 600. thousand, which came out of Egypt (only Caleb and Iosua excepted) all died in the wildernesse, and yet they did eat of Manna? 4. Some thinke therefore, that it is called the bread of Angels, because of the excellencie of it: as S. Paul saith, The tongues of Angels. Burgens. But the right meaning is, that it is so called, because the Angels were Gods Ministers, in the forming and preparing of Manna: it was given by the ministry of Angels. Tostatus quæst. 6. Lyranus, Iansen, Marbachius.

Quest. XXIV. Of the measure gomer how much it contained.

Vers. 16. GAther every man a gomer, &c. 1. Concerning the measure of the gomer, it is said in the 36. verse of this Chapter, to be the tenth part of an Ephah, which according to the estimate of R. Salomon, containeth three of the measures called Seah: and every Seah held six of the measures called (cabi) and every cab held so much as 24. egges: so that the gomer being the tenth part of an Ephah, contained 42. egges, which maketh just three pints of ale measure. Oleast. Lyran. In another account, the gomer contained two of the measures called chœnix, and an halfe. Iun. And the chœnix was a pint and halfe and somewhat more; so that by this estimation the gomer should be somewhat above three pints: some esteeme the gomer at a pottle. Genevens. 2. Simlerus thinketh that the gomer was not so large a measure, nor yet the Epha, as it is taken for: he thinketh that there was no great difference betweene the chœnix, which was an Attike measure, and the gomer: so also Budæus. For the chœnix was the ordinary allowance for one day, as appeareth by that proverb of Pythagoras, Chœnicine insideas, that one should not sit over his chœnix, that is, be too carefull for his daily diet: it is not like therefore, saith he, though the Lord shewed himselfe liberall toward his people, that he would double and treble their diet: Againe it is written in the story of Ruth, that she gathered every day an Epha of barley, which had beene too much for her to beare according to this rate, if the Epha were equall to the medimnus Atticus, the Attike bushell: and whereas Sarah is said to have made ready three Seahs of meale, for the three Angels, which came as three ghests to Abraham, which make an Epha, to what end should she have made ready so much? To these reasons may bee answered. 1. The Lord in allowing unto this people double the ordinary did therein shewed his liberality toward them. Iun. 2. The Epha, though it should containe (as some make it) almost 8. gallons, equall to our bushell, was not too great a burden for a woman to beare: neither is it strange, that Sarah of her bounty, especially in so great a family, made ready such a quantity of meale for so few ghests. 3. But I neither thinke, that a gomer containeth so little, as Budæus and Simlerus make it, as to be equall to the measure chœnix, which was the daily allowance for servants: for in the Epha which was the halfe part of the medimnus Atticus, the Attike bushell, Iun. Analys. there were 24. of that measure chœnix: so that a gomer being the tenth part, must containe two chœnix, and almost an halfe: neither was the gomer so large, as to containe a pottle. Genevens. Which had beene too great a proportion for one dayes allowance: or to hold 12. of the measure called Sextarius, as Rupertus: which as some thinke, contained six egges. Marbach. Some foure egges. Oleaster. I then subscribe to the former computation of R. Salamoh, as most probable: that the gomer was of the content of 42. egges; which make just three pints of Ale measure: so the Epha shall by this reckoning hold not all out foure gallons, almost halfe of our bushell. For the Epha is derived of Apha, which signifieth to seethe or bake: The Epha signifieth Quest. XXV. How one meaſure of Manna ſufficed for every ones eating.

If the meaning of theſe words were, that every man ...ld gather according to his owne eating, and not according to the eating of the family, then they ...t could not gather, ſhould be excluded from eating. 3. Quest. XXVI. Why a gomer was appointed for every head.

...the reaſons wherefore a ſtint was ſet them for their gathering were theſe. 1. Quest. XXVII. Whether the people tranſgreſſed in gathering, ſome more, ſome leſſe.

They gathered ſome more, ſome leſſe. 1. Some thinke, that the Iſraelites offended herein, and tranſgreſſed the commandement of Moſes, as they did afterward, both in reſerving the Man...in going out to gather it upon the Sabbath day. Rupertus, Ferus. But this appeareth not in the ...ſe they came not to the ghomer to meaſure, till they had gathered, and therefore in the gathe...e was no apparent tranſgreſſion. 2. It is then only hereby inſinuated, that they did their endeſ...gather it, as Moſes bad them, one helping another. Galaſ. And they which had more ſervants, ...lpe they uſed in gathering, had more, and they which had fewer, gathered leſſe. Piſcator. Rupert. lib. 3. in Exod cap. 16.

3. Yet

3. Yet the obedience of the people is not much commended, seeing presently after, their disobedien noted. Calvin. It might be, that at the first gathering, some of them were greedy, and gathered wi unsatiable mind.

QUEST. XXVIII. How it came to passe that none had over, that gathered more, nor none had any lacke, that gathered lesse.

Vers. 18. When they did measure it with a gomer, he that had gathered much, had nothing over, he that had gathered little, had no lacke. How this could be, seeing it is said before, some gathered more, and some lesse, it is diversely resolved: 1. Iosephus thinketh, that what any man gathered above a gomer, putrified and corrupted, and so he had not the more. Contra. This solution cannot received, for these two reasons. First, because by this it yet is not evident, how he that gathered little no lack, though he that gathered much had not the more: Againe, this putrifying of the Manna, w that which was reserved of every mans gomer, as it followeth, vers. 20. not of any such overplus a gomer. 2. Some other thinke, that God so guided and directed their hand in gathering, that every when they came home, found no more by the measure, but for every person a gomer. Oleaster. B text is against this conceit: which saith, that some gathered more, some lesse: but if God had di their hand, they should not have exceeded their gomer in gathering: neither is it like that every ho had a gomer to measure by at home: for they had no occasion to use such measures till now. 3. Some here affirme a miracle to have beene wrought: that, what any gathered above a gomer, when it c the measure, was annihilated by the power of God, or secretly subtracted by the ministry of the A and what lacked of that measure, in any ones gathering, was by the like secret meanes supplied. T quæst. 10. But we are not to imagine miracles without necessity: Divers miracles indeed must be ack ledged concerning Manna: 1. That every day there fell so much, as sufficed 600. thousand and 2. That upon the sixth day, there fell twice so much, as upon any other day. 3. That the Manna rot upon any other day, putrified, saving what was kept for the Sabbath, upon the sixth day. 4. That no na fell upon the Sabbath: all these were miraculous workes. Marbach. But in this equall distribu it is not necessary to presuppose a miracle. 4. Piscator hath this solution, that although in an arithm call proportion, some gathered more, some lesse: as hee that went into the field with ten servants ga red more, than he which went with five: yet in a geometricall proportion, there was no difference: he which gathered for five, had as much, his number considered, as they which gathered for ten: but text seemeth to speake, not of the gathering by families, but of every ones single gathering: that which gathered much, had nothing over, that is, more than his fellow, that gathered lesse. 5. The reas of this equality then, was, they did not carry every one his gathering presently home, but they put their gatherings together: Tandem ex communi acervo sumebant præscriptam portionem: Then they their stinted portion out of the common heape. Calvin. Galas. Or the fathers of the families, Adhibita distribuebant ab omnibus in commune comportatum: Did by applying the measure, distribute that brought together in common. Iun. 6. S. Paul by this example of the Israelites, one helping another in thering, and conferring their labours in common, exhorteth to liberality, that Christians in like should support the necessities one of another, 2. Cor. 8. 14. Beside this excellent morall use, Ru maketh this fit mysticall application: that as in the gathering of this Manna, howsoever they had red, none had over, nor yet did any lacke: so in the Eucharist, wherein we receive the true spiritual na, it goeth not by ones eating much or little of the bread and wine, which are proposed in the S ment: Non pro quantitate portiuncula vivifici panis, quam ore sumit & gratiam accipit: A man not grace, according to the quantity of the portion of the lively bread, which he taketh with his he receive but a little, it doth as much profit him, as if he had received all: As Adam was as deepe in gression, in tasting of one apple, as if he had eaten of all the trees in the garden. So Rupertus.

Rupert. lib. 3. in Exod. cap. 17.

QUEST. XXIX. How the Manna grew to be corrupt with wormes.

Vers. 20. Some reserved of it till the morning, and it was full of wormes and stunke. 1. They abused M reserving it of a covetous and distrustfull minde, contrary to Gods commandement by and therefore it became unprofitable unto them: for no creature is so pure, but being abused our destruction. Genevens. 2. Here an ὑστερον πρότερον is to be admitted: the latter is expressed first stanke and putrified, before it crawled with wormes. Borrh. 3. The Manna putrified not of its ture, as is evident, both that it kept without any putrification untill the Sabbath, and it was pre pot for many generations. Lyran. As also the Manna being ministred by the Angels, and of as workmanship, was of such a perfect composition, that it had no such malignant and noxious corruption then was sent upon Manna, and caused by the Lord, as a punishment of their Testat. quæst. 11. 4. This putrifying of Manna hath this morall application: that after the covetous men, which greedily gather riches, and hoard them up unprofitably, doe now feele the of conscience: and after this life, Vermem illum sentient, qui nunquam morietur, shall feele th shall never dye, unlesse they repent. Ferus. 5. But Rupertus application is unfit, who by the Manna understands Christ, that as the wormes bred there without any generation: so Christ the Virgin, without any carnall copulation: Christ is in Scripture compared and resembled na: but the corruption of this Manna, no way agreeth with his perfection and incorruption.

Rupert. lib. 3. cap. 19.

QUEST. XXX. How the ſunne is ſaid to wax hot, and of the melting of Manna.

Vers. 21. WHen the heat of the ſunne came, or when the ſunne waxed hot, it melted. 1. Some take by the ſunne here, to be underſtood the ayre next unto the ground, which waxeth hot, not the ſunne. Borrh. But the figure rather is in this: the ſunne is ſaid, incaleſcere, to wax hot, for calescere to make hot. Iun. For the ſunne increaſeth not in heat. 2. Ariſtotle thinketh that the ſunne is hot of it ſelfe, and the reaſon is, Quia corpora cœleſtia non ſuſcipiunt peregrinas impreſſiones: The heauenlies receive no forren or ſtrange impreſſions. Thoſtat. This may be admitted, and yet the ſunne ſhall therefore that is no elementary or forren impreſſion, but a quality inherent, and native in the ſunne, ſeeing Scripture ſaith, nothing is hid from the heat thereof, Pſal. 19. 8. which heat may be increaſed by the reflexions of the beames of the ſunne, and the exhalation of hot and drie vapours; but the beginning of hot and comfortable heat, without any inconvenience, may be granted to come from the body of the ſunne, as the fountaine thereof. 3. Now the reaſon why the ſunne, as he riſeth higher, ſo waxeth hotter, and when the ſunne is too low, his beames doe not fall directly upon the earth, but being in the Eaſt, tend to the Weſt; but as the ſunne aſcendeth unto the meridianall point, ſo his beames doe deſcend, more upon the earth, which then beginneth more and more to feele the power and force thereof. 4. In that the Manna melted by the heat of the ſunne, but was hardned by the fire, for otherwiſe will not be baked and made into cakes: it appeareth, that neither of theſe proceeded from any naturall qualification or quality in the Man, for if naturally it had beene diſſolved by the ſunne, the heat of the fire in like manner, would have wrought upon it: therefore both theſe operations in Manna, proceeded from any naturall qualitie therein, but was wrought extraordinarily by the power of God, ſo diſpoſing. Toſtat. quæſt. 11. 5. And this was the reaſon, why it melted by the heat of the ſunne, to ſtir up the people to gather it betimes, that they might have time to prepare it, and then attend other buſineſſe: if it had beene to bee gathered all day, they might have beene more ſlothfull and negligent. Calvin. 6. The houre of gathering Manna, was after the ſunne riſe, ſo ſoone as the dew was off the ground, untill the ſixth houre of the day toward noone, when the ſunne began to be hot. Lyran.

QUEST. XXXI. How they gathered twice ſo much upon the ſixth day.

Vers. 22. THe ſixt day they gathered twice ſo much, &c. 1. Some thinke, that they gathered no more upon the ſixth day, than they did other dayes, but that it was multiplied by the power of God, and became twice as much, that is, two gomers for every man. Ioſeph. Lyran. But the words of the text are otherwiſe, they gathered twice ſo much: it was not then made twice ſo much when it was gathered, but they indeed gathered twice ſo much, as they did upon any other day. 2. Therefore, herein the miracle was ſeene, that upon the ſixt day there fell twice ſo much, as upon the other dayes. Marbach. And they indeed gathered as much againe, as they uſed to doe: for otherwiſe, if the Lord had not commanded them ſo to doe, to gather double upon the ſixt day, they had tranſgreſſed in exceeding a gomer. in their gathering: yet they are not reproved, but commended for it: And Moſes ſaith, they did herein the ſame thing which the Lord ſaid. If it were then Gods commandement, that they ſhould gather double, this was in their gathering, not in the increaſing afterward: God would not have commanded them that, which was not in their power, but in his owne working: It was in their power to gather when God had ſent it upon the ground: But it was in Gods hand onely to increaſe and multiplie that was gathered. Sic fere Toſtat. quæſt. 12.

QUEST. XXXII. What moved the Rulers to come and tell Moſes, that the people had gathered double.

Vers. 22. THe Rulers of the Congregation came and told Moſes. Theſe were not the Captaines over thouſands and hundreds, and over fifties, for they were not inſtituted till afterward, chap. 18. yet were they the 70. Elders, which alſo were not yet appointed: but they were the Princes of the ſeuerall families, ſuch as are rehearſed, Numb. 1. 2. 7. Toſtat. 1. Some thinke that theſe Princes came of good minde, and feared leſt the people tranſgreſſed the commandement in gathering double, becauſe they knew not Gods will yet touching the Sabbath. Perm. But they could not be altogether ignorant of it, being the Lord by Moſes had told them before, verſ. 5. that upon the ſixt day, they ſhould gather ſo much, as they did daily. 2. Some impute it unto their forgetfulneſſe, and incredulitie, that they remembred not the word of God, that he would ſend them double food upon that day. Calvin. Galaſ. But it is like that the Princes, and chiefeſt men, which uſed to conſult with Moſes, and were directors of the reſt, were more ignorant, and of leſſe beleefe, than the common people: neither doth Moſes here charge them for any ſuch unbeleefe. 3. Therefore the ſounder opinion is, that they were not ignorant of Gods commandement of gathering double, and that the people did therein as they were commanded: but they came to Moſes to receive further direction, how that double portion which they had gathered, ſhould bee ordered. Toſtat. 4. Another opinion is, that Moſes had not yet propounded to the people what the Lord had ſaid concerning the double portion, to be gathered upon the ſixt day, verſ. 5. but the people of themſelves did it, being accuſtomed to keepe the Sabbath, knowing that upon that day, they were to reſt, and yet that it was not Gods will they ſhould faſt that day, and altogether abſtaine from all ſuſtenance. But this would lay both an imputation of unfaithfulneſſe to Moſes, that he ſhould conceale part of Gods counſell from them, eſpecially in ſo neceſſarie a thing, as the obſervation of the Sabbath was: and of ignorance upon the Rulers of the Congregation, that the common people did better know what was to be done, than they: and although it was an usuall custome among the people of God to keepe the Sabbath; yet they were not yet so well instructed, in the manner of the observation thereof: therefore I rather preferre the opinion of Tostatus herein, next before alleaged.

Quest. XXXIII. Of the meaning of the 23. verse, and whether they dressed upon the first day, that which was reserved for the seventh.

Vers.23. The rest of the holy Sabbath is to morrow. 1. Thostatus in not rightly pointing, or distinguishing this verse, putteth this word morrow to the next sentence, reading thus, Quæ quodcunque operandum est, facite, To morrow, what is to be done, do; and so much busieth himselfe about the meaning of these words; resolving upon this sense, that, what was to be done the next day about their victuall because it was the Sabbath, they should doe it now: but, although this indeed be the meaning of the words following, that what they had to seeth and dresse the next day, they should doe it now: yet all this labour might have beene spared, if the word morrow, be joyned with the former sentence, as it is here set downe, and as it is in the originall, the Sabbath is to morrow. 2. The words following, Seeth that which you would seeth, &c. are two wayes understood, that either they should seeth upon the sixt day, so much as should serve the next also, for upon the Sabbath they were not to busie themselves about their meat. Iosephus. Piscator. Or they should seeth so much, as would serve their turne presently, and reserve the rest till the next day: for if they had sod & dressed that which was reserved till the next day, it had seemed no strange thing, that it was not putrified. Simler. But I preferre the former exposition, both because there was much businesse, which belonged to the grinding, dressing of Manna, and making it into cakes, which works they were not to doe upon the Sabbath: and it is like that the Manna, which was reserved upon other dayes, though sodden or baked, yet was corrupted with wormes: and of it selfe, the Manna was not like to putrifie in one day, though it were raw and unsodden, but that the Lord caused it to corrupt thereby to admonish his people.

Quest. XXXIV. Whether the observation of the Sabbath were now first instituted.

Vers.20. The Lord hath given you the Sabbath. 1. Some are of opinion, that the Israelites began first now to keepe the Sabbath, and that this precept was but to continue till the comming of the Messiah. Tostat. quæst. 12. But this opinion hath no ground, nor good warrant: for Moses speaketh of the Sabbath, as of a thing well knowne: To morrow is the rest of the Sabbath: and to what end else should the people have beene so readie, to have gathered a double portion upon the sixth day, but to prepare them for the Sabbath, before Moses had yet spoken any thing of the rest thereof? 2. Therefore it is more than probable, that the Sabbath of ancient time was kept among the people of God, grounded upon the example of God himselfe, that rested after the creation, finished in six dayes, upon the seventh: which observation was delivered by godly tradition from Adam to his posteritie: for seeing, that the Church had from the beginning a publike and externall worship of God, it could not otherwise be, but that they had also a certaine time prefixed, wherein to celebrate the publike worship and service of God; and then what time was more fit, than that which God had sanctified by his owne example? Simlerus, Oland. This law then of the Sabbath, as belonging rather to the law of nature, than to the law of Moses, because it containeth the manner of Gods worship, was to continue even after the abrogating of Moses law. For though we keepe not the very same day, which the Jewes did, yet the Lords day is kept upon the seventh day: Die septima vacare etenus morale & necessarium, quod statò tempore Domino vacandum. Upon the seventh day to rest is therefore morall and necessarie, because we must upon some set time be free for God. Pelican. 3. Here the reason given of observing the Sabbath, is taken from Gods liberalitie, that had given them upon the sixt day, meat for two dayes: two other reasons are else where yeelded, the one from the end of the creation, *Gen.*2. the other from the deliverance of the Israelites out of the bondage of Egypt, *Deut.*5.15. Iun.

Quest. LV. Of the Feast of the Sabbath.

Vers.29. Tarrie every one in his place, let no man goe out. There are three rules here set downe for the observation of the Sabbath: 1. That every one should tarrie in his place, and so being restrained from other businesse, give himselfe to contemplation: so Ferus interpreteth these words: Maneat apud se: Let him abide with himselfe: that is, enter to himselfe: Conscientiam suam scrutetur: Let him search his conscience: This indeed may very well be a consequent of that their staying and tarrying within, being sequestred from other affaires, they were the freer for meditation: but the literall sense of the words is, that they should stay within. 2. Neither were they to goe forth, that is, with intent to gather Manna, which lay round about the host; or to doe any further businesse: they were not forbidden all manner of walking and going out for their solace and recreation: as the mount Olivet is said to be a Sabbath dayes journey from Jerusalem, *Act.*1. that is about a mile: *Thostat. quæst.*13. 3. They are also commanded to keepe the Sabbath rest, to Sabbatize, which is to be exercised in good works, Ferus: as the Apostle saith: Malè celebrat Sabbatum, qui à bonis operibus cessat: otium enim ab iniquitate debet esse, quia bona conscientia non inquietum, sed tranquillum facit animum: He keepeth the Sabbath ill, which ceaseth from good works: for true rest must be from iniquitie; because a good conscience doth make the soule not but calme and still: yet although they were commanded to rest the seventh day unto the Lord, Non tenebantur tota die vacare Deo: They were not bound all the day to attend upon Gods service.

August. de vera mor. cap. 114.

other occupations? No impedirentur, si Deo vacare vellent: That they ſhould not be hindred, if they were diſpoſed to attend upon God. Toſtat. queſt.12. in Exod.

Quest. XXXVI. The deſcription of Manna, the quantitie, faſhion, colour and taſte thereof.

It was like unto Coriander ſeed, white &c. The Manna is reſembled here and in other places to five ſeverall things: to the hoare froſt, *verſ.*14. to Coriander ſeed, unto wafer cakes made with hony, and *Numb.*11.7. to Bdellium, and freſh oyle, 1. it is likened to the hoare froſt: Non quia extenderetur pruina, ſed ſic multiplicatum: Not becauſe it was extended (or lay in flakes) as the hoare froſt, but it was multiplied in number like unto it: as it is in the Pſalme: He ſcattereth the hoare froſt like aſhes. Pſal.147. Oleaſter: Ioſephus therefore is deceived, who thinketh that it came downe like ſnowe: for that as Moſes prayed it fell upon his hands, and he thought it ſnowed: 2. In quantitie and proportion was like to Coriander ſeed, not in colour, for that kinde of ſeed is blackiſh. Vatabl. And ſo likewiſe it is ſaid to be a ſmall round thing: the word is Meenſphau, which Hierome tranſlateth pilo contuſum, wheat that is husked, and brayed with a peſtle: and the Chald. decorticatum, like unto barked wood, that is, white: the Septuag. tranſlate it, white: but the Hebrewes generally interpret here this word is onely found in this place, and ſo the ſignification is the more doubtfull and uncertaine: but I prefer the uſuall reading. 3. For the colour, it is ſaid here to be white: and *Numb.*11.7. colour like unto Bdellium, which ſome take to be white pearle: Oleaſter, or a kinde of precious ſtone. Some the Septuagint take it ſometime for λίθος, the Carbuncle, ſometime for the Cryſtall: *Numb.*11. it is rather the gumme of the tree Bdellium, which was tranſparent and ſhining like unto pure and white wax, *Plin. lib.*12. *cap.*9. Iun. Oſian. and Ioſephus ſaith, that Bdellium was a kinde of drugge, or ſpice. *Ioſephus lib.*3. *cap.*1. then the Manna was not onely white, but it was alſo of a cleare colour, like unto gumme, or to the cruſtall of a grape: Pellican. 4. For the taſte, it was like unto wafers made with hony, or unto freſh and ſweet oyle, *Numb.*11.7. it had a pleaſant taſte and reliſh.

Quest. XXXVII. Whether the Manna had a divers reliſh according to every ones taſte.

Touching further concerning the divers taſte of Manna, a queſtion is moved out of thoſe words in the booke of Wiſdome, *chap.*16. *verſ.*21. It ſerved to the appetite of him that tooke it, and was meet to that that every man would. 1. Upon this ground the opinion of ſome is: that the Manna, though it had actually and poſitively, but one kinde of taſte, like unto wafers made of hony: yet God gave unto it ſuch a gift, that it reliſhed according to every mans deſire, and it was turned to the taſte and ſavour of any kinde of meat, which they had mind unto. Toſtat. And that Manna had this quality onely in their mouths and bellies, that were holy men, and thankfull; but to the evill and diſobedient, it had not that variety of delectable taſte, but was as unſavory in their mouths, for they preferred peppons, onyons, leekes and garlike before it. Lyran.

Contra. 1. If the Manna, actually gave one certaine reliſh in the mouth, as of hony or oyle, how could it at the ſame time have any other reliſh? for divers taſtes of contrarie kindes and tempers it could not have at once: and if it were turned to any other taſte, then had it not actually the taſte of hony or of oyle. 2. Beſides, by this meanes the Lord ſhould have ſatisfied every ones wanton appetite, which ought to be contented with the ordinarie taſte of Manna, would have it changed according to his deſire. And that Manna had the ſame reliſh to all, both good and bad, is evident by Moſes deſcription, Numb. 11. The people went about and gathered it, &c. ſo it reliſhed in that manner to the people: if it had reliſhed onely to the better ſort, to the beleevers and the thankfull, a very few ſhould have had that privilege: for the people wept and murmured in their families, every one in his tent dore. Now in that they longed for the onyons and leekes of Egypt, it ſhewed their great unthankfulneſſe, that made more account of groſſe meat, than of the precious delicate Manna.

The meaning then of that place is, that this Manna actually had ſuch variety of delectable taſtes, that it pleaſed every man: not that it changed and turned as every mans fanſie led him: but there was no ſtomach ſo weake, nor no tooth ſo daintie, whom Manna might not content: the Manna being yet raw and undreſſed, had the taſte as of mingled hony, or oyle, but after it was prepared and dreſſed, it gave a ſweet and variable taſte, as if many ſweet and pleaſant things were tempered together. Iun.

The excellencie then of this food commendeth the goodneſſe of God, who was not contented to give ordinary and common food, but fed them with the beſt. Ferus. As it is ſaid, Wiſdome 16.21. Thy ſweetneſſe declared thy ſweetneſſe to thy children. The Grecians write that Democritus prolonged his life by eating of hony, *Athan. lib.*2. *cap.*3. Plinie maketh mention of ſome that lived of pulſe, *lib.*18. The Egyptians boaſt much of their herbes. *Diodor. lib.*1. *cap.*4. But all theſe muſt give place to Manna: never was any people in the world fed with the like food unto Manna. Pelarg.

Quest. XXXVIII. When Moſes ſpake to Aaron concerning the pot of Manna, to be ſet before the Lord.

And Aaron laid it up before the Teſtimonie. 1. The opinion of ſome Hebrewes is, that this pot of Manna was laid up in Moſes Tabernacle, before the great Tabernacle was made. Lyran. but cannot be: 1. Into that Tabernacle none came but Moſes, and in his abſence Ioſhua, *chap.*33. Therefore it is like, that Moſes would rather have there placed it himſelfe, than have ſpoken to Aaron. 2. Becauſe Moſes ſpeaketh to Aaron to doe it, it ſeemeth that Aaron was conſecrated Prieſt, which was not before the ſecond yeare, when the Tabernacle was erected. Toſtat. 2. Whereas it is ſaid *verſ.*33. to be ſet before the Lord, it may alſo have this ſenſe, *Ante Deum dictum eſt, quod ſit ipſa devo offerendi, &c. Before the Lord may be ſaid, in reſpect of the devotion of the offerer, whereſoever it was put: Auguſtin. quæſt.*61. But theſe words, before the Teſtimonie, which is meant of the Arke, doe expou the other: therefore the Arke being not yet made, this here commanded, was not done preſently. 3. A guſtine miſliking the former ſolution, reſolveth, that this is ſpoken by way of a prolepſis, that is here wri ten which was afterward done: for in Scripture the order of time is not alwayes obſerved: Moſes there fore to finiſh at once the whole hiſtory concerning Manna, maketh mention alſo of this reſerving of t pot of Manna, which was done afterward, the Tabernacle being now made, and Aaron conſecrat Prieſt. *Toſtat. quæſt.*14. So 1 *Sam.*17.54. David is ſaid to have put Goliahs armour in his Tabernacle, whi was not then, but long after, when he was eſtabliſhed in the Kingdome. Piſcator. 4. This pot of Man which was of gold, Iunius thinketh was not placed hard before the Arke, for then it could not have bee ſeene of the people, as it is ſaid, *verſ.*32. That they may ſee the bread &c. And in the Arke it was not within it onely were the two tables of the law, 1 *King.*8. 11. it was ſet therefore, in the entrance of t moſt holy place. Iun. But it ſeemeth rather, that it was placed in the moſt holy place within the ſeco vaile, by the Apoſtles deſcription, *Heb.*9.4. Simler. Where alſo Aarons rod was, which was there kept ſo, for a teſtimony to the people, *Numb.*17.11. though it were not continually in their ſight.

Quest. XXXIX. By whom this clauſe was added of the Iſraelites eating of Manna fourtie yeares.

Verſ.35 THe children of Iſrael did eat Manna 40. yeares, untill they came to a land inhabited, &c. A guſtine alſo thinketh, that this is ſpoken by a prolepſis, that is, an anticipation or prevention o the ſtory; but it cannot ſo properly be ſaid here, becauſe Moſes lived not to ſee this, for he died in the 11 moneth of the 40. yeare: and the Manna ceaſed on the 15. day of the firſt moneth of the 41. yeare: but prolepſis, or anticipation of the ſtory is, when the ſame writer ſetteth downe that before, out of his place which was done after. Toſtat. He therefore reſolveth that Moſes did write this, prophetice by a prophetica inſtinct: ſo alſo Iun. But this may be rather thought to be added by Ioſhua, or ſome other of the Prophet afterward; as likewiſe, the ſtory of Moſes death and buriall, Deut. 34. which is not like to have bee penned by himſelfe. Piſcator.

Auguſt. quæſt. 61. in Exod.

2. Till they came to a land inhabited. Auguſtine thus expoundeth, Non quia continuò ceſſarunt ad ter ram habitabilem, &c. Not becauſe as ſoone as they came to a land inhabited, they left eating of Manna: Sed quia non ante, But becauſe not before. But what land inhabited it was, is expounded afterward, namely the land of Canaan: for though the Iſraelites poſſeſſed before, the land of the Amorites, on the other ſide of Jordan, yet the Manna ceaſed not, till they had paſſed over Jordan, and were entred into the bounds and borders of Canaan, which was the promiſed land, that flowed with milke and hony. *Toſtat. quæſt.*15.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. Of the excellencie and prerogative of the Lords day.

*Orig. homil.*7. in Exod.

Verſ.5. BVt the ſixth day, &c. it ſhall be twice ſo much. Origen upon this place, well collecteth the p rogative and excellencie of the Lords day, beyond the Sabbath of the Jewes, proving that t Manna began firſt to fall upon that day: his words are theſe: Si ſex diebus continuis (ut ſcriptura dicit) lectum eſt, à ſeptima autem die, quæ eſt Sabbati, ceſſatum eſt, ſine dubio initium ejus à die prima, quæ eſt Dominica, fuit: &c. If the Manna were gathered ſix dayes together, as the Scripture ſaith, and it upon the ſeventh, which is the Sabbath, without doubt it began on the firſt day, which is the Lords day.

2. Doct. That it is lawfull to lay up in ſtore, ſo it be done without diſtruſt in Gods providence.

Verſ.19. LEt no man reſerve thereof till the morning. Though the Iſraelites were bound unto this p cept, becauſe every day they received Manna from heaven, and ſo the Compaſſions of God renued every morning, as the Prophet Ieremie ſaith, Lament. 3. 23. yet this taketh not away all from proviſion, to be laid up aforehand: for the ſluggard is condemned for his ſloth and careleſneſſe, ſent by the Wiſe man to learne of the Ant, which gathereth her meat in ſummer; Prov. Our bleſſed S our alſo commanded τὰ λείψανα, the remainder of the meat to be kept. And the reaſon is not alike they received Manna every day, and therefore needed not to lay up any thing in ſtore: But now the of the earth are onely gathered in ſummer: wherefore τὸ ῥητὸν, the letter of this precept is not to be but the διάνοια, the ſenſe and morall equitie bindeth us ſtill, that we take heed of an immoderate full care, in making proviſion for the time to come, but depend upon Gods fatherly providence. Pa

3. Doct. How Manna was a type and figure of Chriſt.

Verſ.31. THey called the name of it Man, &c. The holy Apoſtle S. Paul, maketh this Manna an dent type of Chriſt, calling it their ſpirituall meat, 1 *Cor.*10.3. And in many things the and figure agreeth unto the bodie and ſubſtance: 1. In the cauſes of ſending this Manna: 2. In the ditions and qualities thereof: 3. In the manner of the gathering: 4. In the uſe thereof. Form.

Firſt, touching the cauſes: 1. The Lord had compaſſion of his people, when they were in want, almoſt famiſhed in the wilderneſſe: ſo Chriſt was given unto us, that by faith in his bodie and blood,

...ules ſhould bee nouriſhed. Marbach. 2. The Lord in ſending Manna, ſhewed his power, his ...ercie, goodneſſe, and love to his people: and in nothing more appeareth the love of God to us, than in ...g his onely Sonne into the world to die for us. 3. The Lord by ſending Manna, did prove, whether ...ople would walke in his law or no, verſ. 4. So the Lord maketh triall of the obedience of the world, ...ving the law of his Sonne Chriſt, that is, the Goſpell. Ferus.

...econdly, concerning the qualities and properties of Manna: 1. It was but a ſmall thing, yet had ...e vertue: and Chriſt, though in the low degree of a ſervant, was of great power. 2. The Manna was ..., and Chriſt was pure and unſpotted. 3. The Manna was ground in the mill, or beaten in a morter, ...Chriſt was beaten and bruiſed for us. Ferus. 4. The Manna came from heaven: ſo the Sonne of God ...ended, and tooke upon him our fleſh. Simler. 5. The Manna was ſweet and pleaſant, as hony: ſo is ...t into the ſoule. 6. The Manna fell with the dew: ſo Chriſt brought with him abundance of ſpirit ...d grace. 7. The Manna fell every day: and Chriſt hath promiſed to be with his Church unto the end of ...world. 8. The Manna ceaſed as ſoone as they came into the land of Canaan: and in the next world, ...ſhall be no uſe of the Word, or Sacraments. Ferus.

...Thirdly, in the gathering of Manna, theſe conditions were obſerved: 1. It was lawfull and free for ...men and children, male and female, young and old, maſter and ſervant, to gather the Manna: ſo there ...neither bond nor free, male nor female, but all are one in Chriſt, Gal. 3. 28. Simler. 2. They were com...anded to gather every day: and we muſt all our life long gather of the heavenly Manna. 3. They were ...to get out of their tents to gather it: and wee muſt depart from our old converſation. Ferus. 4. They ...which gathered much, had not the more, nor they which gathered little, the leſſe: ſo both thoſe which ...are ſtrong, and they which are weake in faith, are admitted to this Manna. Marbach.

...Fourthly, for the uſe: both good and bad did eat of the Manna: ſo men of all ſorts come unto the ...Word and Sacraments, but not all to the ſame end: for as the Manna putrified to thoſe which kept it con...trary to Moſes commandement, ſo the Word of God, and the Sacraments are the ſavour of death unto ...death, to thoſe which unworthily receive them. Ferus. But it will here bee objected, if this Manna were ...ſpirituall and heavenly food to the Iſraelites, as S. Paul ſaith, how is he reconciled with our Saviour Chriſt, ...who ſaith, Moſes gave you not bread from heaven, but my father giveth you true bread from heaven? Ioh. 6. The anſwer here is ready, that our Saviour ſpeaketh according to their capacity and underſtanding, ...with whom he there dealeth: who had a carnall imagination of Manna, and could ſee therein nothing, ...but corporall food. Simler.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Conf. Againſt the carnall preſence in the Euchariſt.

...verſ. 5. The people ſhall goe out and gather. Rupertus hath upon theſe words this gloſſe, applying them ...to the Euchariſt: Si digne manducare cupimus, ab omni curioſitate corporei ſenſus egrediamur, &c. If we will worthily eat, let us goe forth from all curioſitie of corporall ſenſe, that we doe not thinke to ...learne by the ſight, taſte, ſmell, feeling, whether it be the fleſh of Chriſt indeed, which we take &c. Paulus ...Burgenſ. likewiſe in his additions upon this Chapter, maintaining the opinion of ſome Rabbines againſt ...Lyra, that the Manna is called the bread of Angels, becauſe it was made of that incorporeall light, ...with the Angels are refreſhed with, addeth further, thus: Eſt valde applicabile, &c. This is very fit to ...applicate our true Manna, the Sacrament of the Euchariſt: In qua eſt verum lumen divinum, ex voluntate Dei incorporatum, ex quo ſcilicet lumine divino Angeli in cœlo reficiuntur, &c. Wherein the true ...light, by the will of God is incorporate, out of the which divine light, the Angels in heaven are refreſhed, and the faithfull in the wilderneſſe of this life, are fed by the ſame light, being incorporate.

...Anſw. Firſt, this is but a weake text, The people ſhall goe out and gather, to prove the carnall preſence ...of Chriſt in the Euchariſt: for an argument cannot be grounded upon an allegorie of Scripture deviſed: ...neither maketh againſt that groſſe opinion: for ſeeing their Manna was alſo, as the Apoſtle ſaith, a ſpiritual meat unto them, and ſignified Chriſt, as the Euchariſt doth unto us; and yet as it was their corporall ...food alſo, they taſted it, and it had a ſweet reliſh in their mouths, as of hony or oyle: they were not to goe ...out of their ſenſes, though under that type ſpirituall food alſo were conveyed: ſo in the Euchariſt, the ...outward ſymboles are diſcerned by the ſenſes, while the ſpirituall food is offered to the faith of the worthy receiver.

...And concerning Burgenſis conceite, it is very new and ſtrange: that not the true bodie of Chriſt, that ...was borne of the Virgin Marie, is not incorporate in the Sacrament, which is the opinion of ...moderne Papiſts, but a certaine divine and incorporall light, ſuch as the Angels are nouriſhed with in ...heaven. In his aſſertion then theſe three notable errours are contained: 1. that the Iſraelites Manna, and ...bodie of Chriſt in the Euchariſt were made of one and the ſame ſubſtance, a certaine divine light in...corporate. 2. That Chriſts bodie in the Euchariſt is incorporate, and made of that divine light: and ſo ...conſequently, Chriſt ſhall have another kind of bodie in earth, than that in heaven, which was incarnate ...of the Virgin Marie. 3. That the Angels in heaven, and the faithfull in earth, have one and the ſame ...food. Thus when men follow their owne fanſies, and leave the Scriptures, they wind themſelves into errour, and finde no way to get out.

2 Conf. That there was the same spirituall substance of the old Sacraments and ours.

FUrther, where the Apostle saith, alluding unto this Manna, they did all eat The same spirituall meat, 1 *Cor.*10.3. The Romanists, because they cannot away that there was the same spirituall substance of the Sacraments of the old Testament, and of ours, have this shift: that they eat the same meat among themselves, not the same with us, Rhemist. annot. in 1 *Cor.*10.3. and Rupertus hath the same conceit: That they did all eat the same meat, Non eandem, quam nos, Not the same which we eat.

Lib.3. in Exod. cap. 8.

Contra. 1. This answer is contrary to the very sense of the Scripture: for the Apostle sheweth, that Christ was their spirituall meat and drinke, and so is he ours: therefore they had the same spirituall meat with us. 2. Against Rupertus, we will oppose Augustine, who thus writeth of this matter: It had sufficed to have said, they did eat a spirituall meat, but he saith the same, I cannot finde how I should understand the sense, but the same that we doe eat.

De utilitat. pœnitent. cap. 1.

3. Conf. Against the Anabaptisticall communitie.

Vers.18. HE that had gathered much, had nothing over, &c. S. Paul upon this text thus inferreth: Upon this condition, your abundance at this time supplieth their lacke, that also their abundance may be for your lacke, that there may be equalitie, as it is written, He that gathered much, &c. 2 Cor. 8.14. Upon which place the Anabaptists would ground their confused communitie and equalitie: whereas the Apostle speaketh not of an equalitie in the possession of things, but in the use, and that not all times, but when the necessitie of our brethren requireth it: and so he exhorteth, that like as in the gathering of Manna, one helped another, and that which any gathered over, went to make up his part, that had gathered lesse: so the superfluitie and abundance of the rich, should supplie the necessities and wants of the poore. Simler.

4. Conf. Against prayer and sacrifices made for the dead.

Vers.26. SIx dayes shall yee gather, but in the seventh you shall find none. Ferus hereupon thus noteth: Septimo die, id est post hanc vitam, non invenietur quod colligere possumus, &c. On the seventh day, that is, after this life, there shall nothing be found for us to gather. They then which in this world doe not finde remission of sins, shall not finde it in the next: what helpe can prayers, or Masses afford unto those which are departed, if nothing be to be gathered after this life? Here then one of their owne writers hath made a good argument, against their superstitious and fruitlesse prayers, and sacrifices, which the Romanists use to offer for their dead.

5. Conf. Against the keeping of reliques.

Vers.32. FIll a gomer, and keepe it for your posteritie. Here is an holy relique kept by the commandement of God, not to be adored and worshipped, but to put the people in remembrance of this great benefit, in feeding of their forefathers in the wildernesse. The popish reliques offend against all these rules: 1. God hath not commanded them to keepe any such thing. 2. They shew them to the people for adoration, not for the commemoration of any benefit. 3. The Manna which putrified, being kept contrary against Gods commandement, endured many hundred yeares by his appointment: but popish reliques are not privileged from putrifying, therefore God hath not ordained them so to be kept.

1. Observ. The Church of God hath her turnes, of fulnesse, and of want in this world.

Vers.1. THey departed from Elim, and came into the wildernesse of Sin. They remove from a place of pleasure and plentie, where they found 12. fountaines, and 70. Palme trees, to a barren and comfortlesse desert: wherein is set forth unto us the state and condition of Gods Church and children in this world. Ferus. Sometime they ebbe, otherwhile they flow: now they have plentie, and ere long, they suffer want, which the Lord doth, to exercise the patience of his servants, that they may be instructed with the Apostle, both *To be full, and to be hungrie, to abound, and to have want, Philip.*4.12.

2. Observ. Against the unprofitable gathering of riches.

Vers.20. SOme reserved of it till the morning, and it was full of wormes. This sheweth, that they which corruptly gather riches, shall have no profit by them, they both scrape them together and live without comfort, and heape them up to their punishment afterward, as the Prophet saith worketh covetous men: Thou hast consulted shame to thine owne house, by destroying many people, and hast sinned against thine owne soule: for the stone shall crie out of the wall, and the beame out of the timber shall answer it: woe unto him that buildeth a towne with blond, &c.

Habakuk 2. vers.10,11,12.

3. Observ. Worldly and carnall men acknowlege not Gods gifts.

Vers.15. THey wist not what it was. This is the difference betweene the godly and the wicked: the one thankfully acknowledge the gifts of God, and know from whom they receive them: the other as bruite beasts, use the things present before them, not praising the Author thereof. Oleaster. And therefore, men of this world are said to have their bellies filled with hid treasure, *Psal.*17.14. for it is not known unto them, who it is that feedeth and filleth their bellies: and in this respect, the Prophet maketh the unthankfull and ignorant people worse than the oxe, That knoweth his owner, & than the asse, which knoweth his masters cribbe: but Israel hath not knowne, my people hath not understood, &c. Isay 1.2.

4. Obs

4. Obſerv. Gods benefits are to be had in remembrance.

Verſ.32. FIll a gomer, and keepe it for your poſteritie, that they may ſee the bread, &c. God will not have his worthie and ſingular benefits, to bee committed to oblivion, but alwayes thankfully remembred: as for the ſame cauſe, Chriſt commanded the remainder of the broken meat to be kept, which filled 12. baskets, after he had fed the multitude: that that ſingular miracle might be had in thankfull remembrance. Oleaſter.

5. Obſerv. Where ordinary meanes are offered, extraordinary muſt not be ſought.

Verſ.35. THey did eat Manna till they came to the borders, &c. As ſoone as they came to helpe themſelves ſufficiently with the fruits of the earth, the Manna ceaſed: which ſheweth, that extraordinary meanes muſt not be expected, where ordinary are at hand. Piſcat. For this cauſe our bleſſed Saviour repelled the tempter, which would have had him make bread of ſtones, which was an extraordinary and unwonted way for food.

CHAP. XVII.

1. The method and Argument.

THis Chapter treateth of two diſtreſſes, which the Iſraelites fell into, the one of thirſt, the other of warre.

In the deſcription of the firſt, theſe things are orderly declared. 1. Their penurie and want of water, verſ. 1. 2. The effects thereof, their murmuring, begun, verſ. 2. and continued, and confirmed, verſ. 3. 3. The remedie againſt this calamitie. 1. Begged and asked of God by Moſes prayer, verſ. 4. 2. Promiſed by the Lord, with a deſcription of the manner, how Moſes accompanied with the Elders, ſhould ſmite the rocke with his rod, verſ. 5. 3. Effected accordingly, verſ. 6. 4. A conſequent whereof is this, that Moſes impoſeth a name upon the place, to be a memoriall of this miracle.

In the other part theſe particulars are ſet downe. 1. The attempt of Amalek againſt Iſrael, verſ. 8. 2. The manner of reſiſtance, partly by externall meanes, the preparation of Ioſhua againſt Amalek, verſ. 9. 10. partly by ſpirituall, the prayer of Moſes, with his geſture, the lifting up of his hands, the letting downe of his hands, with the divers event thereof, verſ. 10. and the ſupporting of his hands, verſ. 11. 3. The ſucceſſe of this battell, the diſcomfiting of Amalek. 4. The event, the decree of God againſt Amalek, verſ. 12. teſtified by Moſes, both by his fact in building an Altar, and by his ſpeech, verſ. 16.

2. The divers readings.

Verſ.1. According to the appointment of God. I. or, word of God. L. S. P. commandement, or, precept of God. V. B. G. mouth of God. A. H.

Verſ.2. To kill me, and my children. I. V. B. A. P. rather than, kill us, and our children. L. S. G. the word I, vbi, me, not nu. V. B. I.

Verſ.4. Yet a little, and they will ſtone me. I. A. P. L. S. they are almoſt readie to ſtone me. B. G. V. They give the ſenſe rather, than the words. I. A. P. & L.

Verſ.7. He called the place Maſſa and Meribah. I. A. V. G. not, Meſſah, and Meribah. B. he called the name temptation, and contention. S. A. he called the place tentation. L. Here the other word is wanting, and they are proper names, not common and appellative. I. A. V. G.

Verſ.8. Then came Amalek. B. G. cum cæter. the Amalekites. I. but in the originall it is put in the ſinguler, yet taken for the plurall, as it is uſuall in Scripture. B. G. cum cæter.

Verſ.14. From under heaven. B. G. V. A. rather than, under heaven. L. here the preposition ſignifying from is omitted: or, leſt it be under heaven. A. or, from the earth under heaven. I. or, from that, which is under heaven. S. Theſe render the ſenſe rather than the words. B. G. V.

Verſ.15. And he called it, Iehovah niſſi. G. that is, the Lord is my banner. V. or, my banner is of Iehovah. other than, the Lord is my exaltation or lifting up. A. L. or, my refuge. S. or the Lord is he, that worketh victorie for me. B. C. for, neſſ, ſignifieth a ſtreame or banner. G. I. V.

Verſ.16. The hand is on the ſeate of God. B. or, the hand is on the throne of the Lord. A. P. better than, the Lord hath ſworne. G. or, lift up his hand to ſweare. V. the ſenſe rather, than the words: or, with a ſecret hand the Lord ſigheth. S. or, becauſe the hand of Amalek, is againſt the throne of Iah. I. here Amalek is added: or, the hand is onely of the Lord, ſolius Domini. L. Here one word is miſtaken for another, ſolius for ſolii. B. A. P.

3. The explanation of doubtfull and difficult queſtions.

QUEST. I. Why ſome manſion places are omitted here.

THey camped in Rephidim. 1. They came from the wilderneſſe of Sin by divers countries, for betweene Sin and Rephidim, there were two ſtations beſide, here omitted, Dophka, & Alush, Num.33.13,14. Inn. 2. Sin is here taken for one ſpeciall ſtation, but it is the name in generall of all that deſert desert unto Sinai: Gloss. ordin. 3. These two stations are omitted and many beside: for whereas there are 42. mansion places reckoned in all, *Num.*33. not above 15. are specially mentioned before in the history, as it is set forth in this booke and Numbers, because those places are specially noted, wherein any notable accident befell: as in Marah the bitternesse of the water, in Elim the Palme trees, in the desert of Sin, the Manna, in Rephidim, the issuing of the water out of the rocke, and some other beside. Tostat. quæst. 1. 4. There are also more names of places rehearsed in the storie, than are numbred in the Catalogue of their stantions, *Num.*33. as *Mattanah, Nahaliel, Bamoth, Numb.*21. but all those were not the names of the mansion places, where they stayed, but such as they passed by. Tostat. ibid. 5. They are said to have journeyed at the mouth of God, because they followed the direction of the cloud: for when the cloud was taken up they journeyed, and where it abode they pitched: this was the commandement of God here spoken of, as it is interpreted, *Numb.*9.18. Tostat. Simler.

Quest. II. Of penury and want of water which the Israelites here endured.

Vers.1. There was no water for the people to drinke, &c. 1. The Rabbines here are deceived, which thinke that the thirst of the people here, was not naturall and necessary, (for Manna was both meate, and being full of moisture, served for drinke, say they) but of wantonnesse rather. The words of the text shew the contrarie, that there was no water for the people to drinke, and therefore it was a violent and necessary, not a wanton and voluntary thirst. Simler. Calvin. 2. Their conceit also hath no ground, that thinke some of the people had water, which they brought along with them from Elim, and therefore they are said to tempt God, to shew his power, when there was no such necessitie. Tostat. quæst. 2. For all the people murmured, as though they were ready to die for thirst, *vers.*3. 3. The truth is therefore, that they were driven to great extremitie for want of water: for drought and thirst is a great triall and a miserable calamity, as is evident by divers examples in sacred and forren stories: As Hagar with her sonne were ready to perish for want of water, *Gen.*21. And the three Kings, that were to fight against Moab, were like all to bee undone for want of water, if the Lord by his Prophet had not relieved their want: The men of Bethulia, when the Citie was besieged, fell downe and died for thirst: The Samaritanes, being assaulted by the Romanes, died of thirst: Thales Milesius, as Laertius writeth, perished through heate and thirst: Ioannes Leo hath a memorable storie of certaine Merchants, that perished by thirst in the desert of Azoad in Africa: where are to be seene two Sepulchers, the one of a Merchant, the other of a Carrier of wares: who sold unto the other a cup of water for a thousand crownes, and yet, the water not being able to suffice both, they twaine died there: Lysimachus yeelded himselfe and his whole host, for want of water, and having drunke, being now become a captive, he uttered these words: O Dii, inquit, quam brevis voluptatis gratia ex rege me fecí servum! O God for how small a pleasure of a King have I made my selfe a captive! Pelarg.

Quest. III. Why it pleased God to prove his people with thirst.

NOw it pleased God, as before hee tried his people with hunger, so now with thirst, for these causes: 1. Because the people were very oblivious and forgetfull of Gods benefits, God by afflictions would put them in mind of their dutie, that they which in prosperitie did forget him, by want and penurie might be driven to seeke him, as it is in the Psalme, When he slew them, they sought him, and returned. 2. Another cause was in respect of themselves, because they were a proud and haughtie people, and thought well of themselves: as the rebellious say unto Moses, All the Congregation is holy, *Numb.*16.3. therefore the Lord by this meanes would humble them, and make them know themselves. 3. The Lord being purposed to make the Israelites a peculiar people to himselfe, and purposing to give unto them his lawes, by these meanes would prove and trie them, whether they would keepe his commandements, *Deut.*8.2. Even as a father nurtureth and schooleth his child, whom he purposeth to make his heire; so the Lord saith, As a man nurtureth his sonne, so the Lord thy God nurtureth thee. Tostat. 4. The Lord also brought them into this strait, that the faithfull thereby should be discerned from the rest: for affliction and temptation is a sieve to trie the chaffe from the wheat. Ferus.

Psal.88.34.

Deut.8.5.

Quest. IV. How the people are said to tempt God.

Vers.2. Wherefore doe yee tempt the Lord? 1. Some will have them to tempt God, because there were among the people, that had water, and yet would have God to helpe them, when there was no need: for then to expect or require the divine helpe, when there is no urgent necessitie, is to tempt God. Tostat. But it is shewed before, that this want of water was generall, and all the people were in great extremity. 2. They are therefore said to tempt God, either because they doubted of his power, and therefore would trie whether he could give them water: for the word nasah, signifieth properly to make triall, as David is said not to have tried or proved before to goe with armour, 1 *Sam.*17.39. Olaster. Or they tempted God, doubting of the truth of his promises, as *vers.*7. Is God among us or no? Pelarg. And so they tempted God by their incredulity. Iun. Further they doe prescribe and limite God, that unlesse he shew them some signe of his presence and power, they will not beleeve, that it was his will to bring them out of Egypt unto that place. Marbach. They doe tempt him also by their impatiencie, they urge Moses fiercely to give them helpe, or else they will stone him, whereas they should patiently have waited upon God. Simler. And further, though they are not herein said to tempt God, expecting his helpe, where all meanes, & counsell was denied: yet herein they tempted him, because they thought God was bound unto them, to succour them at their need. Lyran. Whereas the heathen by the light of nature, could ll say, Dis & parentibus non possumus reddere aequalia, We cannot recompense the Gods and our parents: Aristot. lib. 8. cap. 14.

dis no way indebted unto man. Toſtat. quaſt.2.

Quest. V. Of Moſes feare leſt he ſhould be ſtoned.

Vers.4. YEt a little while, and they will ſtone me. 1. Ioſephus here ſomewhat altereth, and tranſpoſeth the ſtorie: for this taking up of ſtones to caſt at Moſes, hee placeth before the giving of Man, when they murmured for food in the deſert of Sin: But this their violent and audacious enterpriſe fell out in Rephidim. 2. This was not a carnall, worldly, or diſtruſtfull feare in Moſes, but a naturall feare, ſuch a right perfect man is ſubject unto, for ſo our Saviour ſaith, My ſoule is heavie unto death. Toſtat. Yet this feare of Moſes was not ſo much, in reſpect of his preſent danger, as in regard of the people, leſt they (if he ſhould have beene ſlaine, after his death might have fallen to Idolatrie. Lyran. 4. Or he might feare, leſt if they ſhould have killed him, the Lord would have puniſhed them, and revenged his death: as Ioſhua ſaith in the like caſe: As for me, behold I am in your hand, doe with me as you thinke good: But be yee certaine, if ye put me to death, you ſhall ſurely bring innocent bloud upon your ſelves; &c. Toſtat. quaeſt. 3. Moſes objecteth his danger, that he might the ſooner obtaine his deſire. Oleaſter.

Quest. VI. Why Moſes is bid to take the Elders with him.

Vers.5. TAke with thee of the Elders of Iſrael. 1. The vulgar people were not thought worthy, becauſe of their murmuring, to ſee the miracle, which God was about to worke for them, and therefore is bidden to take the Elders. Simler. Or becauſe, the Elders might be murmurers alſo with the reſt, are called to bee eie witneſſes of this great worke, that they might ſee and teſtifie, that water was brought forth out of the rocke, where there was none before. Ferus, Toſtat. Galaſ. 3. That being men of authoritie, they might be able better to inſtruct and certifie the people. Iun. 4. And God hereby would obſerve an order for government, that Princes ſhould bee aſſiſted with grave counſellers, neither to doe things of their owne head, as Saul did. Ferus. Nor to deſpiſe the counſell of the wiſe and ancient, and to follow the raſh and headſtrong, as Rehoboam did to his coſt. Ierem.26.14.15.

Quest. VII. Why Moſes is bid to take his rod.

Vers.5. AND the rod, wherewith thou ſmoteſt the river. 1. Rab. Salomon, to whom ſubſcribeth Lyranus, thinketh that Moſes is bid to take the rod, becauſe ſome of the Iſraelites thought, that rod had power onely to bring plagues, as it did upon the Egyptians, and not bleſſings: but that was no reaſon, for before this, Moſes uſed that rod in dividing the waters of the red ſea, to deliver the people of Iſrael out of the hand of their enemies, which was a great bleſſing. Toſtat. 2. Therefore that was not the reaſon, but becauſe it pleaſed God to uſe this organe and inſtrument at this time. Toſtat. And to get Moſes the greater authority with the people, hee is bid to ſmite the rock with the rod, whereas God could have brought forth the water, without any ſuch meanes. Pelarg. And the Lord did it alſo to confirme the faith of the Elders, when they ſaw this rod in the hand of Moſes, whereby he had wrought great wonders, eſpecially in the waters. Simler. 3. By the river and floud, we are not to underſtand the ſea, but the river of Egypt, which is here remembred, becauſe it was firſt of the Egyptian plagues: and though Aaron ſmote the water, and not Moſes: yet he is ſaid to doe it, becauſe it was done by his direction. Iun. Toſtat. Aaron fecit authoritate & mandato Moſis: Aaron ſmote it by the authoritie, and at the commandement of Moſes: Toſtat. quaeſt.64. in Exod. ſo alſo Lyran.

Quest. VIII. Whether it be all one ſtorie of ſmiting the rock, Exod.17. and Num.20. or divers.

Exod. whereas the like ſtorie of bringing waters out of the rock, is penned by Moſes, *Numb.*20. the queſtion is, whether it were one and the ſame act. 1. Some thinke, that in both places there is a narration of one and the ſame fact: as Procopius upon this place with others: of which opinion theſe may be reaſons: 1. Becauſe it would ſeeme ſtrange, if Moſes had once before done the like, that he would have ſmitten the ſecond time, as he doth, *Num.*20. 2. The people there object, Wherefore haſt thou brought us out of Egypt? Whereas all of that generation were dead before, that came out of Egypt, they onely except which were then young. 3. The name which Moſes giveth to the place in both ſtories is the ſame, Meribah.

2. Moſes might be doubtfull the ſecond time, in reſpect of the unworthineſſe of the people, that the Lord would not ſhew his power, becauſe of their unthankfulneſſe, and therefore he ſaith, the Lord was angrie with him for their ſakes, *Deut.*3.26. 2. the offſpring of thoſe which were dead, might ſtill die, becauſe if their fathers had not come out of Egypt, they had remained there ſtill. 3. The ſame may be given unto divers places: and yet herein there was a difference, for the place in Rephidim is called both Maſſah and Meribah, tentation, and contention: the other Meribah onely.

Therefore the ſounder opinion is, that theſe two ſtories were divers, and that Moſes ſmote the rocke two times, which may appeare to be ſo by theſe reaſons: 1. The place was divers: this ſtriking of the rock was done in Rephidim, which was the 11. ſtation, *Numb.*33.14. but the other was in the deſert of Zin, the 33. ſtation, *Numb.*33.36. 2. The time was divers: this miracle was done in the firſt yeare after their departure out of Egypt: the other in the 40. yeare: for in the very next ſtation Aaron died in the fifth moneth of the 40. yeare, Numb. 33.38. 3. In the other ſtorie Moſes was ſomewhat doubtfull, and diſpleaſed God, and was reproved: but here he is found firme and faithfull. 4. Here he onely takes the Elders with him, but there the Lord biddeth him to gather together the whole congregation.

5. This

5. This miracle was wrought by the rod, wherewith Moses had wrought wonders in Egypt: the other with Aarons rod that budded, and was laid up before the Lord, Numb. 27. for Moses is said to have taken it from before the Lord, Numb. 20. 9. Iun. By these reasons, the stories appeare to be divers. Sim. Osiander.

Quest. IX. Of the mount Choreb.

Vers.6. I will stand before thee upon the rocke in Horeb. 1. Some take Horeb or Choreb to be the top of the mount Sinai: but that cannot be, for they were not yet come unto mount Sinai, much lesse unto the top of the mount. 2. Some thinke that Choreb and Sinai were all one, but this was another place, yet called by the same name. Lyran. Tostat. But that this was the same Choreb, which was called the mount of God, chap. 3. 1. appeareth in the next chap. vers. 5. where it is said, they camped by the mount of God. 3. Some other thinke that Sinai was the name of the whole plaine or desert, wherein there were many hils and mountains, whereof Choreb was one. Oleaster. in 3. cap. Exod. But this opinion is controuled, chap. 19. 11. where the very hill it selfe is called mount Sinai. 4. Therefore the more probable opinion is, that all that hillie tract or circuite was called Choreb of the drines of the ground, where Sinai was situate. Iun. Or that hillie tract might beare the name of Choreb on the one side toward the West, and the name Sinai toward the East. Simler.

Quest. X. Whether the water out of the rock did still follow the Israelites.

Vers.6. Thou shalt smite the rocke, and water shall come out of it. The Apostle saith, that the rocke followed them, 1 Cor. 10. 4. 1. Some thinke that this is spoken of Christ the spirituall rocke, that did still accompanie them: but the Apostle meaneth that rocke whereof they dranke, which he called spirituall, because it signified Christ. 2. Some will have the water of this rocke still to follow the Israelites to serve thrir necessarie use, as Tertullian calleth it Aquam comitem, the water, that did accompany them: but this cannot be admitted: for afterward Moses smote a rocke in another place, Numb. 20. and in another place they digged a well for water, Numb. 21. 17. which needed not to have beene done, if the water still followed them. 3. Neither yet is it like, that this water did onely satisfie their present necessity, in that place. Osiander. For it came forth abundantly, and so ran along: and if in that place onely, it had refreshed them, that whole circuite being barren and drie, they should oft soone againe have beene in distresse for want of water. 4. Therefore I condescend to their opinion, that thinke this was not Unius diei beneficium, a benefit for one day, or place, but that they had use of this water afterward in their journeye. Beza. 5. But whether this river or streame runneth still to this day, and watereth all that valley which before was drie, as Tostatus thinketh, quæst. 3. I leave as doubtfull, thinking rather, that it ceased as the Manna did, being appointed onely for a supplie of their present necessity.

Quest. XI. What nation the Amalekites were, and how they set upon Israel.

Vers.8. Then came Amalek. 1. The singular number is here put for the plurall, Amalek for the Amalekites: for one man could not bid battell to a whole host. Tostat. 2. Amalek the father of this nation, was the sonne of Eliphaz the sonne of Esau by his concubine Timna, Gen. 36. 12. Mention is made of the countrie of the Amalekites in Abrahams time, Gen. 14. 7. but that is by a prolepsis, the countrie is called by that name which it had when Moses writ that storie, not when these things were done. Simler. 3. Some take these Amalekites to bee the same with the Ismaelites, and Saracens. Glos. They rather belonged to the Idumeans, or Edomites, but dwelled apart from them, in a part of Arabia themselves. Tostat. They inhabited the region Gobolitis, and the citie Petra, Ioseph. lib. 3. cap. 2. They are thought to be the same with the Arabians called Autai. Zeigler. 4. The manner how Amalek set upon Israel, is declared, Deut. 25. 18. how they set upon the hinmost of them, the tayle of the armie, where followed the women and children, when they were faint and weary; whereas it had beene their part, rather to have met them with bread and water: Like as Shemei cast stones at David, and railed upon him, being already afflicted and pursued of his wicked sonne: and as the Jewes insulted over Christ hanging in torment upon the crosse, and gave him vineger and gall to drinke. Marbach. 5. These Amalekites were the first of all nations that set upon Israel, when they came out of Egypt. And therefore Balaam thus prophesieth of them: Amalek the first of the nations, his latter end shall be destruction, Numb. 24. 20. As they were the first that assaulted Israel, so their destruction should not be behind. Ferus. 6. Twice did the Amalekites encounter with Israel, once by stealth, striking the hinmost of them, and this was in Rephidim: another time they fell upon them being joyned with the Cananites, while Israel abode in Cadesh barnea, Deut. 1. 44. Tostat. 7. This Amalek is not unfitly by some, made a representation and lively image of Satan, who lieth in the way, to hinder all true Israelites in their way to the heavenly Canaan. Glos. interlin.

Quest. XII. The reasons which moved the Amalekites to set upon the Israelites.

The causes why Amalek did thus lie in waite for Israel, were these: 1. Some thinke they did it terræ abdicationis ultores essent, to revenge their father Esaus quarrell for the losse of the blessing. Calvin. But this was no wrong offered to Esau, seeing he sold his birthright, and so willingly lost it: this revenge rather belonged to the Edomites (if there had beene any wrong done) which were the offspring of Esau, whereas the Amalekites came by a concubine. Simler. 2. Some thinke that the Amalekites did it of envie, to hinder them from the possession of Canaan, their promised inheritance. Marbach. But it is not like, that they had any such perswasion, that ever they should conquer Canaan it is very like, that there remained some envie and hatred in them against the Israelites, as there Esau toward Iacob. 4. Therefore the Amalekites might feare their owne countrie, lest the Israeshould set upon them, and therefore combined themselves with other nations against them, to pre-danger, Iosiph. 5. As also, they not onely enterprised this of a malicious, but of a covetous mind it is the manner of the Arabians, to rob and spoile those that goe by the way, thinking to enrich selves by the prey, and spoile of the Israelites: these were the causes which moved the Amalekites.

on Gods behalfe the reasons were these, that he might exercise his people with new crosses, lest ease and idleneſſe they might wax wanton. Pelarg. That they might have experience of the of God, which still added benefits to benefits. Ferus. That they might by this meanes be made ger, and animated against their enemies, whom they should afterward encounter. Byran. Tostat.
this meanes, the Israelites also were furnished, and provided of armour and other necessaries, by of the Amalekites. Ferus, Lyranus, Marbach.

QUEST. XIII. Why Moses goeth not himselfe to battell, but appointeth Ioshua.

AND Moses said to Ioshua. 1. Moses goeth not himselfe to battell, propter senium, because of his age, he was now 80. yeare old. Ferus. 2. And Quia novit officium suum spirituale magis esse momentum, &c. He knew that his office was spirituall, rather than worldly. Marbach. 3. Hee appointeth Ioshua in his place, whose courage and faithfulneſſe hee had experience of. Tostat.
because he was to bring the people into the land of Canaan, and to fight the Lords battels, it was the people should be used and acquainted with his government and command. Simler. 5. As also goeth behind, that he might attend unto prayer, and use spirituall meanes, whith he knew would availe above all externall force. Simler. 6. Beside, this doth notably shadow forth the excellency pre-eminence of the Gospell, before the law: for by this, that Ioshua, and not Moses, encountereth Amalek, and prevaileth against him, was prefigured, Quod non lex nos ab hostibus liberaret, sed Iesus Christus. That not the law could deliver us from our enemies, but Iesus Christ. Ferus.

QUEST. XIV. Whether this Hur were the sonne of Caleb.

MOSES, Aaron and Hur, or Chur, went up. 1. The opinion of some is, that this Hur was the sonne of Caleb, and Miriam, Moses and Aarons sister, who, they say, was also called Ephrata, whom Caleb married after his wife Azuba, 1 Chron. 2. 20. Contra. But this cannot be for divers reasons: 1. Miriam was elder than Moses by 13. or 14. yeares: being then a maid of discretion, when Moses was an infant, exposed in the river, who stood by to see what became of the child, and went and called Moses mother to be his nurse: Moses then being at this time 80. yeares old, Miriam could not be under 90. at the least, and then was Caleb but 40. when he was sent to search the land, Iosh. 14. 7.
Therefore it is not like that these two were married together, especially considering that Caleb had another wife before. 2. Againe, this Hur was now a grave man, and fit for government: for to him and Aaron, Moses committed the affaires of the Common-wealth, when he went up into the mount, Exod. 24 14. how could he be the sonne of Caleb, who was but 40. yeare old? 3. That Ephrath, which was Calebs second wife, gave that name unto Bethlehem, of whom it was called Bethlehem Ephrata: but Miriam dying in the wilderneſſe, never came into the land of Canaan, and therefore of her could no place bee named after: so was not then that Ephrath, that was Calebs wife. 4. Now whereas Hur is there said to be the father of Ephrath, it might be another of that name: for in the Scriptures we finde, that divers have had the same name, Sic Lyran. Tostat.

This opinion then is more probable, that this Hur was rather the husband of Miriam Moses sister, and he was allied unto Moses and Aaron. So Procopius.

QUEST. XV. Whether Moses lifted up his hands in prayer.

AND when Moses held up his hand. 1. Some thinke that Moses held up his hand by course:
when the one hand was weary, then he held up the other with a staffe in manner of an ensigne or banner: Iun. But I rather subscribe here to Oleaster, that hand is put in the singular, for hands:
for both afterward, vers. 12. that Aaron & Hur held up his hands on both sides, not by turnes, but Iunius also, with whom consenteth Piscator, thinketh, that Moses did not lift up his hand, as the gesture of one that prayed, but he lift up the staffe with his hand, as a triumphant banner. But this opinion Tostatus objecteth: 1. That had beene to no purpose, for Moses to hold up the staffe as victory to the host, because the backes of the Israelites were toward him, seeing the Amalekites came South, set upon the hindermost part of the campe: and then they could not turne them to see the staffe, giving advantage to their enemies. 2. There had beene no force in the lifting up the staffe to get victory, therefore the efficacie was in Moses prayers: to the which end he lift up his hands: as the Apostle exhorteth men to lift up pure hands, 1 Tim. 2. 8. 3. But both these opinions are better joyned in one, that Moses prayed unto God, Et manuum elevatio symbolum fuit additum precibus, And the lifting up of hands was a signe added to his prayers. Simler. And the Chalde Interpreter expresseth the same sense, that his hands were stretched out to prayer. Vatab. As also the holding up of the staffe betweene his hands, for the victory. Moses dux & belli quidam signifer fuisse eventum ipse spondebat baculi vexillo, quasi munere functus: Moses the Captaine of the warre, & as it were the ensigne bearer, did assure himselfe by the banner of the staffe, not neglecting in the meane time his prophesicall office. Pelarg.
But the former of Tostatus reasons, it cannot certainly be gathered, which way the host of Israel went: but it is no other like, but that Moses staffe, which he held up, was in the sight of the Israelites:

and

and to that end he went up to the top of the hill: and to this purpose Procopius maketh this fit allu-

Procop. in cap. 17. Exod. Populus si cernit manus legislatoris supinas, vincit, &c. If the people see the hands of the Lawgiver lifted up, they overcome: but if they see them hang downe they are overcome: so if one understand the law spiritually, he obtaineth victorie, but the contrarie falleth out, if one follow the literall sense. 3. But whereas some make this gesture of Moses, holding his hands aloft with the staffe betweene them, to be a representation of the signe of the crosse: I say with Simlerus. Non valde huic sententiæ innitor, ut dubia, I doe not much upon this sentence, as doubtfull.

Quest. XVI. How Moses hands were heavie.

Vers. 12. Moses hands were heavie. 1. The peoples sins did not presse downe Moses hands, as Lyranus, for then he should not have lift them up at all, which is Tostatus reason. 2. Neither was his hands feeble through age: for 40. yeare after this, when Moses was an 120. yeare old, Moses was of such a perfect constitution, that it is said, his naturall strength or vigor, was not abated, Deut. 34. 3. Neither yet is this to be imputed to Moses infirmitie of mind, as our Saviour saith, The spirit is ready, but the flesh is weake, as though Moses waxed cold in prayer. Ferus. 4. Nor yet doe I consent to those that thinke Moses still continued his prayers, but that this remissnesse was onely in his strength: Continuus labor ab eo perferri non potuit, Continuall labour, in lifting up of his hands hee could not endure. And God would have the victorie to follow the lifting up, or falling of Moses hands, to testifie unto the people that the victorie was onely from God, to whom Moses did elevate his hands. Simler. For if Moses inward strength and zeale had continued all one, it is like the same effect would have followed. 5. Wherefore I thinke rather with Calvin: Iste defectus ex singulari zeli vehementia natus est: This defect in Moses proceeded not (of any tepiditie or coldnesse in Moses) but from the vehemencie of his zeale: for while he held up his hands, Intentissime orabat, & magna animi contentione, He prayed vehemently, and with great earnestnesse of mind. Vatab. The remitting of his hands then shewed an inward abating of his zeale and fervencie, which may befall the most perfect men: for the gesture of them that pray, hath a reciprocall worke with the affections, which first doe bring forth the humble gesture of the bodie, and by the same, they are againe kindled and inflamed: as Augustine hath this excellent saying, Gestu corporis, ut flexione genuum, extensione manuum seipsum magis excitat homo ad orandum, &c. By the gesture of the bodie, as the bowing of the knee, the stretching out of the hands, a man doth stirre himselfe up the rather to prayer: and these being visibly done, the invisible affection of the soule is increased: and by this meanes, Affectus cordis, qui ut fierent præcessit, quum facta sunt, crescit: The affection of the heart, which went before that these were done, is increased, when they are done. So then, Moses hands became steadie afterwards being supported; and so, the constancie of the gesture of the bodie, did rebound upon the affection of the soule, which in like manner continued constant and fervent. 6. Rupertus mysticall application is not here to be rejected: Moses manus graves erant, Moses hands were heavie, because the law could bring nothing to perfection.

Lib. de cura mortuorum c. 5.

Rupert. lib. 3. cap. 20.

Quest. XVII. Of the supporting and bearing up of Moses hands.

Vers. 12. And they tooke a stone, and put it under him, &c. 1. Moses was both wayes wearied, both standing so long, and in holding up his hands all that while, therefore they provide for both wayes for his infirmitie and weaknesse: they put under a stone for him to sit upon, and of each side to hold up his hands. Tostat. 2. As they supported and bare up his hands; so no doubt they joyned with him their earnest prayers and desires unto God: Quum manus ejus attollerent, mentes etiam habebant ad Deum erectas. As they lift up his hands, so also they had their minds erected unto God. Calvin. 3. His hands are said to be steadie to the going downe of the sunne, not that then they began to be faint, but then the fight was well ended, and the victorie obtained, there was no need for him any longer to hold up his hands. 4. Divers allegories are made of this place: as that Moses hands, that is, the precepts of the law are heavie, but that by Aaron, who signifieth Christ, and Hur, that is, the holy Ghost, they are made easie and light. Ferus. Some by Moses and Hur, understand the two Testaments: upon the which our prayers must rest. Some againe thus allegorize: Aaron, they say, signifieth montanus, hillie, and Hur, fire, so two things support our prayer, high and heavenly meditation, and fervent charitie. Lyran. But Chur signifieth rather light or fire: and beside the false etymologie, these allegories are too curious, and somewhat fond. 5. But Rupertus mysticall application may be received: who by this stone understandeth the grace of the Gospell, In qua sederet Moses, id est, lex adimpleretur: whereon Moses sate, that is, the law was fulfilled. And this morall accommodation also is very fit: that by Aaron and Hur, all godly Ministers must learne Quomodo se mutuò animare debeant, & incitare ad preces: How they ought to animate and stirre up one another unto prayer. Marbach.

Rupert. lib. 3. cap. 20.

Quest. XVIII. What this Amalek was, and of whom descended.

Vers. 13. Iosua discomfited Amalek and his people. 1. Strabo hath this opinion, that this Amalek the father of the Amalekites, should bee descended of Ismael. Lyranus and Tostatus would convince him of errour herein, because the young man, which came running to David and confessed that he had killed Saul, said he was an Amalekite, and yet he is generally held to have beene the sonne of Esau, that was an Edomite: But this were to prove a thing more certaine, by that which is uncertaine: for it is evident and certaine out of the Scripture, that Amalek the sonne of Eliphaz came of Esau, but whether that young man were the sonne of Doeg, is uncertaine. 2. Where it is said, Amalek and his people: Tostatus doth much busie himselfe to shew, that this could not be Amalek the sonne of Eliphaz he must have beene above 260. yeare old: for the time of the ſojourning of Iſrael in Egypt, was and when Iacob deſcended thither, he was an 130. yeare old, about whoſe 80. yeare Amalek ſtorie: and ſo he reſolveth that this was not that Amalek, but another of that name, deſcen race. Toſtat. quæſt. 7. in Exod. But all this labour might have beene well ſpared, for by Amalek, he perſon, but the whole nation of the Amalekites is underſtood: as Iſrael is uſually in Scripture the Iſraelites: and his people were thoſe, which ayded and aſſiſted them. Vatab. As Ioſephus how the King of Amalek ſent unto other nations, and that they combined themſelves together Iſrael. 3. Thus we ſee how this victorie was atchieved: Firſt and principally by God the Author, ſe thereof, then the meanes were of two ſorts, partly ſpirituall by the earneſt prayer of Moſes, externall by Ioſhuas ſword. Simler. And here began the prophecie to take place, concerning Iacob ſau, The elder ſhall ſerve the younger, Borrh.

Joſeph. lib. 3. an: iq. Judai. cap. 3.

Quæſt. XIX. What booke this was wherein Moſes is commanded to write this ſtorie.

WRite this for a remembrance in the booke. 1. Toſtatus thinketh, that this was ſome ſpeciall booke beſide this preſent ſtorie, and namely that, which is called the booke of Iaſhar, or rous, which is mentioned, Ioſh. 10. and that many things were written in that booke by way ecie, which booke was written by Moſes, but is now loſt, becauſe when that Heretikes had cor- his booke, the ancient Church neglected it, and had no care of it, leſt in receiving the Veriſtes in they ſhould together have received their Falſities and Herreſies. Toſtat. quæſt. 7. in Exod. That this booke of Iaſhar was written by Moſes, it is not like: ſeeing mention is made thereof time. 2 Sam. 1. 18. for if all thoſe ſtories had beene prophetically ſet downe in that booke afore- nt needed thoſe ſeverall hiſtoricall books of Scripture to have beene written afterward? 2. Neither beene a good reaſon, to reject that booke, becauſe it had beene corrupted: for ſo ſome bookes of Scripture alſo, ſhould have beene laid aſide, which ſome Heretikes corrupt fingers have beene with. 3. This booke of Iaſhar therefore was none other than a Chronicle of the acts and geſtes people of God, which booke is now loſt, as divers other hiſtoricall books. Iun. 4. Toſtatus addeth that this booke of Iaſhar was the ſame booke, which is called the booke of the battels of the Lord, 21. 14. which was not that booke of Numbers: for there is a confirmation of thoſe things, then already done by a former book, which prophetically deſcribed thoſe warres: But it is no good argument, no reaſon: the booke of the battels of the Lord is not the booke of Numbers, therefore it is that other ke of Iaſher: ſome thinke it was the booke of Judges. Genevenſ. Some a booke now miſſing, the ſcriptures now extant being ſufficient. Oſiander. The beſt anſwer is, that the word ſepher, ſignifieth as ll a rehearſall, as a booke, as it is taken, Matth. 1. 1. The booke of the generation of Ieſus Chriſt. The eaning then is, that when the battels of the Lord are rehearſed, theſe alſo ſhall be ſpoken of, which by ods providence the Amorites made againſt Moab, preparing an inheritance for the children of Iſrael, o were forbidden to deale directly againſt Moab. Iun. Numb. 21 annot. 8. 5. Wherefore the booke, erein Moſes did make a memoriall of this thing, was no other than this preſent hiſtorie of Exodus, and r his hiſtoricall commentaries, which are likewiſe mentioned, chap. 24. 17. Deut. 31. 9. 22. Iun. Calvin. This ſame charge is likewiſe regiſtred by Moſes. Deut. 25. 17. Galaſ. 6. This the Lord would committed to writing for theſe cauſes: 1. That a thankfull memorie ſhould ſtill be retained in time of this great deliverance. 2. That the people of God ſhould know the ſentence denounced malek, which ſhould be executed in due time. Simler. 3. And that Saul, who was to performe ſhould with better courage and boldneſſe, ſet upon that enterpriſe. Ferus.

Quæſt. XX. Why Moſes is commanded to rehearſe it to Ioſhua REhearſe it, or as the Hebrew is, put in the eares of Ioſhua. 1. Moſes is bidden to intimate this to Ioſhua, becauſe he was to be his ſucceſſor. Iun. 2. Some thinke, that this was the thing, ſhould rehearſe to Ioſhua, how Moſes by his prayer, and the lifting up of his hands, obtained the which Ioſhua was not preſent to ſee. Pellican. But it followeth in the next words, what it was, ſentence of God, for the utter extirpation of Amalek. 3. That both it might be an incourage- againſt the reſt of Gods enemies, ſeeing, that they, which made the firſt attempt, are thus God. Simler. As alſo to be a caveat unto Ioſhua, and the Iſraelites, that they ſhould make no peace with this nation, which before the Lord ſtood accurſed. Toſtat. 4. In like manner, God written in every faithfull mans heart, that he hath ordained the Devill and his Angels, and all enemies, that wee ſhould be at perpetuall defiance with them: Ferus, Rupert. 5. Neither charge given to Ioſhua, that they ſhould beare ſtill in mind this injurie, which was offered them Amalekites: but that they ſhould thinke of the judgements of God againſt them: it is one thing ember private wrongs, another to beare in mind the judgements of God given in charge.

Quæſt. XXI. Whether Amalek were wholly deſtroyed by Saul.

I will utterly put out the remembrance of Amalek, &c. Toſtatus here affirmeth thus, Nomen Amalechitarum penitus extinctum eſt poſtea tempore Saulis, That the name of the Amalekites did wholly periſh in the time of Saul. quæſt. 7. in Exod. But this appeareth to be otherwiſe: for after that time, when Saul had ſlaine Amalek, Sam. 15. (and after that, Toſtatus ſaith, Non fuit populus Amalechitarum, &c. there was no people of the Amalekites) wee find that the Amalekites burnt Ziklag Davids City, 1. Some therefore thinke, that the meaning is, that the Lord would overthrow and deſtroy, statum & dominium, the state, Kingdome and dominion of that nation. Pellican. But the words are more generall, hee would put out the remembrance, or memorie of Amalek. 3. The truth then is this, that God gave indeed a charge unto Saul, utterly to destroy Amalek: and if Saul had done his faithfull endevour at that time, there had not beene any left: But Saul being negligent to execute the Lords commandement, onely the destroying those Amalekites, that were neareſt, and made reſistance, letting them alone which were farther off; Iun. 1 *Sam.*15. Martyr. 1*Sam.*27.8. David afterward perfected what Saul had omitted, & did ſmite Amalek, 1 *Sam.*27.8. & afterward he put to the ſword the whole hoſt of the Amalekites, letting none to eſcape, ſaving 400. which rode away upon camels, 1 *Sam.*30.17. And after this we find no great exploit done by that nation: but by little and little they were rooted out, according to the ſentence of God here decreed againſt them.

Quest. XXII. Of the building of the Altar, and the name thereof.

Verſ.15. And Moſes built an Altar, and called it Iehovah niſſi. 1. Moſes by the example of the godly Patriarkes built an Altar, whereon to offer ſacrifice unto God, and to ſhew his thankfulnes for this great victorie. Simler. 2. There was yet no ſetled Prieſthood ordained, but the right of ſacrificing belonged unto the firſt borne, as mention is made afterward of certaine young men of the children of Iſrael, which were ſent to offer ſacrifice, *chap.*24.8. Now Moſes, though he were not the firſt borne (Aaron being elder than he) yet he was extraordinarily conſecrated of God both Prince and Prieſt, to offer ſacrifice, who conſecrated Aaron afterward for the Prieſthood. Toſtat. 3. The name given unto this Altar ſignifieth, Iehovah is my banner: which name ſome thinke was not given to the Altar, but is referred to the ſacrifices there offered. Calvin. And ſo the Chalde interpreteth, that hee worſhipped God upon that Altar. Toſtatus ſaith, that the name of God is incommunicable, and cannot be given unto the creatures, but complexè with ſome other addition, as *Gen.*22. Abraham calleth the mountaine, The Lord will be ſeene: but this obſervation is not alwayes true: for Iakob called the Altar which he ſet up in Sechem, The mightie God of Iſrael, without any other addition: where notwithſtanding the word Altar muſt be ſupplied: The Altar of the mightie God of Iſrael. Iun. As we uſe commonly to ſay, We will go to Andrewes, meaning the Church ſo called. Oleaſter. So the word Altar is to be ſupplied here, The Altar of Iehovah my banner. Simler.

Quest. XXIII. Of the meaning of theſe words, The hand is upon the throne of Iah.

Verſ.16. The hand is on the throne of Iah. 1. Here the Latine tranſlator readeth very corruptly, manus ſolium Domini, the hand, is of the Lord onely, for, manus ſuper ſolium Domini, the hand is on the throne of God: and the Interlineary gloſſe giveth this note upon it: Omnia opera noſtra operatur in nobis. He worketh all our works in us, which is a true note, but upon a wrong text. 2. Iunius in his laſt edition doth underſtand it of Amalek, reading thus, Becauſe the hand of Amalek was againſt the throne of Iah, that is, againſt his people: But here, Amalek is thruſt into the text: and Iunius himſelfe hath reverſed that interpretation, in his Analyſis, inclining to their opinion, that take this to be the forme of an oath, which the Lord taketh for the aſſurance of this ſentence againſt Amalek. 3. Some by the throne of God underſtand the heavens, and make this the meaning, that as the covenant with the heavens is ſure, ſo this decree againſt Amalek. Ex Simler. 4. Others by the hand upon the throne, underſtand the power and majeſtie of God, which with an outſtretched hand ſhall bee revenged of Amalek. Iunius in his firſt edition, Tol. Lyran. Galaſ. 5. Some by throne interprete the Church of God, which is as Gods ſeate and reſting place which hee will defend againſt all the adverſaries thereof. Ex Calvin. 6. But the fitteſt interpretation of all is this, that God as by the lifting up his hand to heaven, and laying it upon his throne, doth ſweare that he will have continuall warre with Amalek: for as men uſe to lift up their hand, when they take an oath, as Abraham, *Gen.*14.22. ſo the like phraſe is uſed of God, as Deut. 32.40. I lift up my hand to heaven, and ſay I live for ever. Iun. Analyſ. Borrh. Pellican. For divers formes are ſet forth in the Scripture of the Lords oath: ſometime hee ſweareth by himſelfe, *Gen.*22.16. ſometime by his excellencie Amos 8.7. ſometime by his life, Ezech. 18.3. As I live, ſaith the Lord: and by lifting up his hand to heaven, Deut. 32.40. and by his throne, as in this place. Oleaſter. 7. So by this oath, the Lord confirmeth his ſentence againſt Amalek, that hee will have warre againſt him, from generation to generation, that is, continually, till hee have made an end of him, which was fulfilled partly under the Judges, and under the Kings, ſpecially Saul and David: and under the Perſian government, Haman who was ſubdued by Eſter, was an Agagite, that is, an Amalekite of the poſteritie of Agag. Oleaſter. Iunius.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. Chriſt is the rocke, whereon iſſueth the waters of life.

Verſ.6. Thou ſhalt ſmite the rocke, and water ſhall runne out of it. This rocke is interpreted to be Chriſt by the Apoſtle, 1 *Cor.*10.4. The rocke was Chriſt. Chriſt is diverſly ſaid to be a rocke: he is a moſt ſure rocke, againſt the which the gates of hell ſhall not prevaile, *Matth.*16.18. hee is a rocke of offence to the wicked and unbelievers, *Rom.*9.33. Behold, I lay in Sion a ſtumbling blocke, and a rocke to make men fall: hee is a rocke, upon the which the faithfull doe relie, 1 *Pet.*2.6. Behold I put in Sion a chiefe corner ſtone, elect and precious, and he that believeth thereon, ſhall not bee aſhamed. Hee is a rocke of judgement, that *upon whom it falleth, it grindeth them to powder, Matth.*21.44. This rocke giveth water of life: First, his moſt precious bloud, which iſſued out of his ſide, whereby we are cleanſed. Secondly, the Spirit of grace, which is the water of life, as it is interpreted, *Ioh.*8.38. He that beleeveth in me, out of his belly ſhall flow rivers of waters of life: this ſpake he of the Spirit, which they that beleeve in him ſhould receive, &c. The people asked thus water of Moſes, but he could not give it them: they receive it of the rocke. Ferus.

2. Doct. It is lawfull for Chriſtians to defend themſelves by warre.

Moſes ſaid to Ioſhua, chuſe us out men and goe fight. Hence is proved the lawfulneſſe of warre against the Anabaptiſts, which denie the uſe of armour and weapons unto Chriſtians. Pe. It is lawfull for the people of God to defend themſelves with weapons, againſt their enemies. Piſcat. Moſes doth here nothing of himſelfe, but by Gods direction.

3. Doct. Reverent outward geſture to be uſed in prayer.

And when Moſes lift up his hands, &c. A comely reverent geſture is to be uſed in prayer, to ſtir up the devotion of the minde: as Moſes lift up his hands, Salomon bowed the knee; our bleſſed Saviour fell upon his face. Ferus.

5. Places of confutation.

1. Conf. Againſt the doctrine of merits.

And the people murmured, &c. Upon theſe words Rupertus hath this good note: Non ergo ille populus glorietur, quod pro ſuis meritis magnificaverit eum Dominus, &c. Let not therefore that people boaſt, that God hath magnified them for their merits: Neither did the Lord looke upon the Gentiles, in making them his people, for any worthineſſe in them, but for his owne mercie ſake hath he called us to the knowledge of his truth, for otherwiſe, what we are in our ſelves, the Apoſtle ſheweth in the Pſalme: *They are all gone out of the way, &c. there is none that doth good, no not one, Rom.*3.12. *Lib.*3. *in Exod. cap.*19.

2. Conf. That ſignes and ceremonies doe not actually conferre grace.

Behold I will ſtand there in the rocke before thee. Otherwiſe, if God had not concurred with that outward act and ceremonie, in ſmiting the rocke with the rod, and given force and efficacie unto it, Irrita fuiſſet & luſoria rupis percuſſio. The ſmiting of the rocke had beene in vaine and trifling. Cal. We ſee then, that ceremonies have no efficacie or activitie of themſelves: they cannot conferre and worke grace, as the Romaniſts teach, but the Spirit and word of God concurring, giveth operation unto the ſacramentall ſignes: as here by Gods ſtanding upon the rocke, not by Moſes ſtriking of the rocke, the waters iſſued out: ſo wee are cleanſed by the waſhing of water, as the Apoſtle ſaith, but yet through the Word, *Eph.*5.26.

3. Conf. That the wicked cannot eat or drinke the bodie and bloud of Chriſt in the Euchariſt.

That the people may drinke. Oſiander holding with the reſt of the Lutherans, the carnall preſence of Chriſt in the Euchariſt, upon theſe words giveth this corrupt gloſſe: Sicut inter Iſraelitas multi impii, &c. As among the Iſraelites there were many wicked men, which did draw water out of the rocke, which notwithſtanding entred not into the land of Canaan, but fell in the wilderneſſe, 1 *Cor.*10. So among Chriſtians, many doe drinke and eat the bodie and bloud of Chriſt, which for their unbeleefe ſhall not have life eternall. His poſition here with the reſt of the Conſubſtantialiſts, is (therein agreeing with Papiſts) that the wicked and unbeleevers, doe eat and drinke the very bodie and bloud of Chriſt.

1. But firſt he ſhould have proved out of this place, that there is a carnall and corporall preſence of the bodie and bloud in the Euchariſt, before the other aſſertion can have any place, that the wicked are partakers of it. But this text maketh directly againſt that carnall and groſſe conceit: for as Chriſt ſaith of the bread, which hee brake to his diſciples, This is my bodie, which is the chiefe text they have, whereupon is ground that fanſie: ſo S. Paul ſaith, this rocke was Chriſt: like as then, neither the rocke was Chriſts bodie, nor the water thereout iſſuing his bloud, but onely in ſignification, and repreſentation: ſo the bread and wine are lively, demonſtrative, and exhibiting ſignes of the bodie and bloud of Chriſt, to the faith of the receiver, and no otherwiſe. 2. The other poſition is directly oppoſite to the text, *whoſoever eateth my fleſh, and drinketh my bloud, hath eternall life, Ioh.*6.54. *Hee that eateth my fleſh and drinketh my bloud, dwelleth in mee, and I in him, verſ.*56. Hee that eateth mee, even hee ſhall live by me. But the wicked and unbeleevers, neither have eternall life, neither doe they dwell in Chriſt, or Chriſt in them, neither doe they live by Chriſt: which life is by faith, as the Apoſtle ſaith, *I live by the faith in the Sonne of God, Galath.*2.20. therefore they cannot eat or drinke the bodie and bloud

6. Places of Morall Observations.

1. Observ. That one affliction followeth another, as long as we are in this life.

Vers.1. Where was no water for the people to drinke. God doth divers wayes exercise his children, to trie their faith, as before with want of food, so now with penury of water and presently after with warre. Piscator. And thus it falleth out in the desert and wilderness of this life, that one temptation followeth another, till we come to the celestiall Canaan, and so as the Scripture saith, we must through many afflictions enter into the Kingdome of heaven, Act. 14.22.

2. Observ. Ministers must not intermit their dutie, though it be evill accepted.

Vers.4. And Moses cried to the Lord. Moses is not discouraged by the ingratitude and murmuring of the people, to forsake his calling: hee intermitteth not his dutie, nor ceaseth to pray for them: whereby the Ministers of Jesus Christ are taught, that notwithstanding the evill acceptance of the world of their painfull, and godly labours, they should persever and continue still in discharging their dutie. Marbach. As Samuel saith, God forbid that I should sinne against the Lord, and cease praying for you, 1 *Sam.*12.23.

3. Observ. We must still goe forward and hold out to the end.

Vers.1. They departed by their journey. As the Israelites stayed not in one place, but still went forward approaching still nearer to the promised land: so we must still goe forward in the pilgrimage of this life; and hold out to the end of our journey, till we have attained to our celestiall inheritance, the Apostle saith, Let us studie to enter into that rest, lest any man fall away after the same example of disobedience, Heb.4.11. Ferus.

4. Observ. Prayer is not effectuall, unlesse it be fervent.

Vers.11. When he let his hands downe, Amalek prevailed. While Moses prayer was fervent, it was effectuall: but when his zeale abated, which is signified by the letting downe of his hands, he failed of the effect: which teacheth us, that so long as we lift up hearts and hands unto God by lively faith, we overcome our spirituall enemies, but when our zeale waxeth cold, and our faith faint, they are superiour. Piscator. Therefore the Apostle having said, The prayer of a righteous man availeth much, addeth, if it be fervent, Iames 5.16.

5. Observ. The punishment of the wicked though it be deferred, will most certainly come.

Vers.14. I will utterly put out the remembrance of Amalek. This was not presently accomplished: but the judgements of God were suspended above 400. yeares, untill the reigne of Saul: which sheweth that the judgements of God, though they bee deferred a long time, yet in the end will most certainly come. Marbach. As the Apostle saith, Whose judgement long agone is not farre off, and their damnation sleepeth not, 2.*Pet.*2.3.

Chap. XVIII.

1. The method and Argument.

THe summe of this Chapter is to shew the politike order of government instituted in Israel. 1. By whom it was brought in. 2. By what occasion. 3. And the manner thereof.

First, as touching the Author and adviser, it was Iethro, Moses father in law: of whom three things are declared. 1. His comming unto Moses, both upon what occasion, *vers.*1. whom he bringeth with him, Moses wife and his two sons, who are described by their names, *vers.*3.4. whether he commeth, *vers.*5. 2. His manner of entertainment, when shee was come, where these things are expressed: 1. His message to Moses. 2. His greeting, *vers.*7. and narration of such things, as the Lord had done for them, *vers.*8. 3. Iethro his gratulation, *vers.*9.10. and confession of God, *vers.*11. 4. His solemne admittance and joyning to the people of God, *vers.*12.

Secondly, the occasion followeth: wherein is shewed the fact, *vers.*13. and thereupon the conference betweene Iethro and Moses, consisting of his demand, *vers.*14. and Moses answer, *vers.*15.16.

Thirdly, in the manner and matter of this forme of government: 1. There is Iethro his reprehension of Moses order, with his reasons, *vers.*17.18. 2. His advice and counsell is propounded, what course should be taken in the greater and weightier causes, which hee would have reserved to Moses hearing, *vers.*19.20. what provision should bee made in chusing officers, and governours for the rest, *vers.*21.22. with the reasons of his counsell, *vers.*23. 3. Then followeth the putting in practice of this counsell, first by Moses, *vers.*24.25. in chusing of such officers, as Iethro prescribed: then by the officers Judges themselves, *vers.*26. And so Iethro is dismissed, *vers.*27.

2. The divers readings.

Vers. 1. The Prince of Midian. I. C. rather than, Priest. B. G. cum cater. cohen doth not onely signifie I.C. such but Princes: as Davids sonnes are called cohanim, not Priests, but chiefe rulers: for they being of the tribe of Iudah, could not be Priests. Toſtatus, Oleaſter.

Vers. 1. The father in law. I. V. cum cater. cognatus the kinſman. L. but chothen ſignifieth rather a fa- I.V. cum cater.
ther in law: as it is taken, Exod. 3. 1.

Vers. 2. Then Iethro Moſes father in law tooke. I.B.G. cum cater. then he tooke. L. here the former part I.B.G.cum cater.
of the clauſe is clipped off.

Vers. 11. For in that thing, wherein they were proud, he is above them, that is, ſuperiour unto them. Iun. I.
than, becauſe they dealt proudly againſt them. L. S. P. for here theſe words, in the thing which, are read, or, wherein he dealt proudly againſt them, did they periſh. V. or were deſtroyed themſelves. B. or recompenſed. G. All theſe words are added by way of explanation. But after the firſt reading:
above, is better tranſlated, above them, than, againſt them: and it is referred rather to the Lord, than to the Egyptians, and ſo the ſenſe is full, without any addition.

Vers. 23. If thou doe this thing, and God commande thee, both thou ſhalt be able to endure. G.I.B.A.P. I.G.B.
rather than, in theſe things, which God commandeth thee, thou mayſt ſtand. V. Here theſe things, is added;
If thou doe this thing, thou ſhalt fulfill the commandement of God. L. fulfill, is added; or, God ſhall command thee. S. But the word tſavah, ſignifieth to command. See the meaning of theſe words afterward, queſt. 23.

3. The Explanation of doubtfull and difficult queſtions.

Quest. I. Whether Iethro and Rehuel, or Reghuel were the ſame man.

Vers. 1. When Iethro the Priest, or Prince of Midian. 1. Some thinke, that Reguel mentioned, Exod. 2. Iethro here named, and chap. 3. 1. and Hobab, Numb. 10. were all one. Sic Ly- ranus, Toſtatus, Pelarg. So alſo the Latine tranſlator readeth, Exod. 2. for Reguel, Iethro: Lyranus from the Hebrewes giveth this reaſon, from the notation of the name Iethro, and Hobab: the firſt ſignifieth adji- ciens, adding; for he added unto other ordinances of Moſes, that of appointing officers; and the other word, ſignifieth diligens, loving, becauſe hee loved the law of God, and was converted to Iudaiſme. But that Hobab, Iethro and Reguel, are not the ſame, is evident, Numb. 10. 29. where Hobab is ſaid to be the Lyran. in 2. Exod.
ſonne of Reguel. 2. Oleaſter thinketh Iethro and Reguel to be the ſame, (ſo alſo Ioſephus) and that Hobab, or Chobab, was the ſonne of Iethro and Reguel, and brother to Zipporah: And his reaſon, that Iethro and Reguel are all one, is, becauſe the ſame title is given to them both: Iethro is ſaid to be the Prince of Mi-dian, Exod. 3. 1. and ſo is Reguel, Exod. 2. Contra. 1. The reaſon why in one place the father is called the father, in another the ſonne, is, becauſe the ſonnes ſucceeded the fathers in the principalitie and Prieſthood among the Gentiles, as they did among the Jewes. Lipoman. in 2. Exod. Which thing was uſuall in the primitive Church, as Polycrates Biſhop of Epheſus, writing to Victor Biſhop of Rome, there ſheweth, that ſeven of his anceſtors had beene Biſhops in that place before him, and he was the eighth; Euſeb. lib. 5.
cap. 22. Pelican. 2. Hobab could not be brother unto Zipporah, for Numb. 10. 29. hee is called chothen, that is, father in law of Moſes: which word, though Oleaſter contend to ſignifie a kinſman: yet ſeeing Ie- thro is called by the ſame word chothen, Exod. 3. 1. it ſeemeth in the ſame ſenſe alſo, to be given unto Hobab.
Therefore the truer opinion is, that Iethro and Hobab were all one, and Reguel was father unto Iethro, and grandfather to Zipporah Moſes wife. Iun. Pellican. as is before ſhewed, cap. 2. quaſt. 26. 4. Some thinke, that Reguel was a common name, both to the father, which was Reghuel, and to the ſonne, which was called Iethro, Exod. 3. 1. But that is not like, for Iethro onely hath this addition, Moſes father in law, as many times repeated in this Chapter: But Reghuel is not ſo called, Exod. 2. whoſe daughter Zipporah is named, becauſe the grandfathers with the Hebrewes are ſo called by the name of fathers. I reſt rather in the former opinion, as moſt probable. 5. Concerning the word cohen, which ſignifieth both a Prince and Prieſt, and whether Iethro were Prince or Prieſt, or rather both, ſee before, cap. 2. quaſt. 27. It was an ancient cuſtome, that they which were Rulers and Magiſtrates, to defend the people, did execute alſo the Prieſts office, by ſacrifices and prayer, to proteſt and direct them: ſuch an one was Melchiſedeck, as before here, Lipoman. 6. Likewiſe, whether Iethro were the worſhipper of the true God, is handled before, cap. 2. queſt. 28. where it is reſolved, that he was a worſhipper of the true God, though not purely, as Iunius ſaith, Mihi videtur vitiatum fuiſſe aliqua ex parte illius ſacerdotium: It ſeemeth to me, that his Prieſthood had ſome blemiſh, and was ſtained with ſuperſtition: But it is not like that he ſacrificed to Idols, and lived in all likelihood, would not have married his daughter then, or converſed with him ſo long. Pro- per ſaith, that they worſhipped the moſt high God, as Melchiſedeck did: Nec tamen interim abſtinebant ſe impuris. But yet they abſtained not from idolatrie. But as Calvin ſaith, there is difference betweene Ido-latrie & impurum Dei cultum & degenerem in una parte, And the impure worſhip of God, degenerating in one part. The religion then, which Iethro profeſſed, was principally the worſhip of the true God, commingled with ſome ſuperſtitions of the idolatrous heathen: though hee was not a profeſſed idolater.

Quest. II. How Iethro heard what the Lord had done for Moses and Israel.

When he heard all that God had done. 1. Some thinke, that Moses sent his wife out of the de… unto her father in law, and that by this meanes, Iethro had intelligence of Moses affaires. Cat… But this to be unlikely, shall be shewed afterward: seeing it is very probable, that Moses had sent ha… his wife from the place, where the child was circumcised by the way, Exod. 4. 2. Some thinke, that M… had sent some message unto Iethro, and so signified unto him what had happened. Simler. But the … of speech, When he heard, giveth rather, that he was led by some common fame and rumor; though … most like, that Moses being now not farre from Midian, would have sent to his father in law, to … and children, which were deare unto him, if Iethro had not prevented him. 3. Therefore the common … and rumor, which was spread among the nations, moved Iethro to come. Galat. Especially seeing M… was not far from Egypt, bordering upon the red sea. Simler. And now Moses was not far from M… being about mount Sinai, where he had beene before time accustomed to keepe his fathers sheepe. T… From whence the report and rumour of the Israelites, and their acts, as the late victorie obtained a… Amalek, might easily be brought.

Quest. III. The causes which moved Iethro to come unto Moses.

Vers. 2. Then Iethro tooke Zipporah, &c. The causes which moved Iethro to take this journey, w… these: 1. That he might congratulate and rejoyce for those great mercies and benefits … the Lord had vouchsafed unto Moses and all Israel. Simler. Which his joy is expressed afterward, … Some of those benefits concerned Moses, and the people in generall, as the deliverance out of Egypt, … passing thorow the red Sea, the giving of Manna: but some specially belonged unto Moses: as that … Lord had made him the Captaine and guide of his people, and had given him power to worke great … racles. Tostat. Therefore both these are put together in the text: When he had heard, what the Lord h… done for Moses, and for Israel his people. Iethro therefore came, to shew and expresse his joy in both the… respects. 2. Beside, another end of his comming was, to bring unto Moses his wife and children. Simler. For he was not now farre off from the host of Israel, the Citie of Midian being held to be but 16. mi… distant from Rephidim, where they had pitched last. Pelarg. 3. Further, though Iethro doubted not … the truth of those things, which he had heard, yet he is desirous to come to be an eye witnesse, and pres… beholder of those great works, which the Lord had done for them, as of the cloudie and fierie pillar, of t… Manna, that fell dayly, and the water that issued out of the rocke. Simler. 4. Yea he came to glorifie God … to whom he offered sacrifice, vers. 12. Pellican. and to joyne himselfe to the people of God: wherein a… peared Gods providence, both toward Moses and Iethro: that as he was a comfort and reliefe to Mos… in his exile, for outward things; so Moses should be a meanes for his spirituall good, to bring him to … knowledge of God. Ferus.

Quest. IV. When Moses had sent Zipporah away.

Vers. 2. After the sending her away. 1. Some read, after the sending, that is, of gifts, either of M… to his father in law: Simler. or, of Iethro with his daughter. Ex Lippoman. But the pronou… ha, is of the feminine gender, and cannot agree to either of them: some therefore understand it of … which Zipporah sent to Moses: but it is more like, she would first come her selfe, as she doth, Moses … so neere, then send unto him. 2. It is better therefore referred to Moses sending away of Zipporah, to … fathers house: which some thinke Moses did, after he was come into the desert, to see her father, … joyce with him: for (say they) it is not like but that Moses had his wife and children with him … Egypt, that they might bee partakers of that great deliverance, which the Lord was to worke for t… Calvin. But the manner of the description of this storie, how Iethro, when he had heard, &c. took … porah, and her two sonnes, sheweth, that Iethro was moved to take this journey, by the fame, which … heard, and not by any report or information by Zipporah, which should be sent unto him. And th… they went not downe into Egypt with Moses, yet were they partakers of that deliverance: even as … were, which were afterward borne in the desert: specially seeing Moses two sonnes, were by circu… sion graft into the people of God. Simler. 3. Therefore the most probable opinion is, that Moses … sent Zipporah with her sonnes, backe unto her father, at such time as the child was circumcised by the … in the Inne. Some thinke that she fell into a disease, by seeing that bloudie spectacle of the circum… of her sonne, and so could goe no further. Vatab. Some, that Noluit eum, amplius sequi, that he … to follow Moses any further. Ferus. Some, that Moses would not have her with him, because he … able to goe thorow such difficulties in Egypt: Abraham and Iacob went downe into Egypt, becau… were strong: Non potuit descendere in Ægyptum & subire agones Ægyptiorum, nisi ambas … None could goe downe into Egypt, and undergoe the agonies of the Egyptians, but a strong champ… ordinar. Ex Origen. But the truth is, that Zipporah her selfe, was offended with the circumcision … child, and so willing to returne, and that Moses also gave his consent therewithall: Dimisit … de voluntate Mosis, &c. We must say it was with the will of Moses, for hee perceived that his wif… children would bee but a burden unto him, in that businesse, which hee went about. Lyran. Ius. Gal… lican. Tostat.

Quest. V. Of Moses two sonnes.

And her two sonnes, &c. 1. We see that the Israelites did not abhorre or decline the marriage of strange women, so that they were instructed in the faith, and vertuously given: as Ioseph and Pinehas daughter, Booz, Ruth and here Moses Zipporah. 2. Mention is made onely of his sonnes, the holy Fathers and Patriarks are found to have had more sonnes, than daughters; or it is, because they use not to be counted in the catalogue and genealogie. 3. Moses in giving names to his sonnes, would put him in minde of Gods mercies and benefits toward him, doth teach us what names to impose upon our children: such as may both stir us and them up to a thankfull remembrance of the benefits, they receive. Lippom. Pellican.

Quest. VI. How Moses was delivered from the sword of Pharaoh.

Delivered me from the sword of Pharaoh. 1. Some doe here give credit unto that unwritten relation, that Moses escaped Pharaohs sword in this manner: He being convented before Pharaoh, and asked why he killed the Egyptian, boldly made answer, that he had done it justly: thereupon Pharaoh commanded him to be killed; the executioner was smitten with blindnesse, that seeing every one beside, he saw not Moses: and Pharaoh was taken with such stupiditie, that seeing Moses to escape, hee had power to bid any to lay hands of him to stay him. Tostat. 2 But wee need not run to any such devises, nor faine miracles, where no necessitie is: Moses is said to bee delivered, &c. because hee fled by flight, Ne Pharaoh de illo supplicium sumeret, That Pharaoh should take no punishment of him.

Quest. VII. At what time Iethro came to Moses before the law given in mount Sinai, or after.

And Iethro Moses father in law came, &c. 1. Some thinke, that Iethro came unto Moses, in the end of the first yeare of their departure out of Egypt, or in the beginning of the second, when they had received the law in mount Sinai, and that the historie is transposed. Tostat. Cajetan. Simlerus holdeth, that he came about the fourteenth moneth after their comming out of Egypt. The arguments brought to confirme this opinion are these.

1. Because it is like that before Iethro set forth, hee heard certainly where the Israelites encamped, namely by mount Sinai: for hee would not take an uncertaine journey, to wander up and downe in the wildernesse: now he could not come to mount Sinai, within lesse than two or three dayes journey, from that part of Madian, where Iethro remained: for when Moses went from Iethro with his wife and children, he lodged by the way, where that heavy chaunce befell touching the circumcision of his child, and after that hee went forward, and met with Aaron in the mount of God, Exod. 4. 27. It seemeth then that the mount of God, which was Sinai, was two or three dayes journey from Iethros place: Then could not Iethro come before the law was given, for the third day after they pitched in the wilderneſse of Sinai the law was given, chap. 19. 11. And if it were graunted, that Iethro came to mount Sinai, before the Israelites encamped there: yet this here described could not be done before the law was given: for this storie requireth entertainment one day, of viewing and seeing Moses order in judging the people, which was the next, and of chusing and appointing of officers and Judges, upon the third, all which required many dayes, could not be done in the three first dayes, after their encamping by mount Sinai: for the Lord God spake unto Moses, to sanctifie the people the next, which was no fit time to heare suites and controversies, and the third day when the Lord gave the law, they could not intend to chuse officers.

All this long discourse may bee answered in one word, that herein is their errour: they take the mount of God here spoken of, for Sinai, whereas it was mount Choreb, chap. 18. 6 from whence the Israelites were not yet departed; which is called the mount of God, chap. 3. 1. because of the vision of the Angell which Moses saw there. Iun. Genevens. Which Choreb was the generall name of all that hillie tract of land, in the which was situate more toward the East the mount Sinai: wherefore all this here mentioned in this Chapter, was done before the Israelites encamped by mount Sinai, and so all the former difficulty is removed, Iosephus therefore is deceived, that thinketh that Iethro came in the third moneth to the people: for by this meanes should all this businesse fall into that very time, when the people were occupied themselves to receive the law.

Neither is it like, that Iethro came immediately after the giving of the law, for Moses stayed 40. dayes with God in the mount, and then comming downe, he judged the people for their Idolatrie; which done to give entertainment to Iethro, all the host being in heavinesse: and after that, Moses stayed yet more: so that it was toward the end of the first yeare, or the beginning of the second, when Iethro came. This is Tostatus second reason.

All this is easily granted, and admitted, that Iethro came not immediately after the law was given: but this sheweth not, that he came not before the giving of the law, as is before declared.

Againe, seeing Iethro returned into his Countrie in the second yeare, the second moneth, when they began to remove their campe from mount Sinai, Numb. 10. 30. It is not like that hee would stay a whole yeare with Moses, out of his owne Countrie. Tostat.

That storie concerning Hobabs departure, who also is Iethro, is transposed: and that communication which Moses there hath with his father in law, was had before that time; which storie is here alledged, because it was there more fully to bee handled. Iun. Seeing therefore, that one of the stories must of neceſſitie be tranſpoſed, and ſet out of his place: it is for many reaſons more agreeable to the order of the things which were done, to referre that ſtorie, *Numb.*10. to this place, than to joyne this unto that: for immediately after that ſtorie there inſerted, of Hobabs departure, followeth in the next Chapter, Numb. 11. the conſtitution of the 70. Elders, which was a divers ordinance from Iethros device, of conſtituting Captaines over thouſands, hundreds and fiftie, and like not to have followed immediately upon the other, becauſe Moſes having made ſo many coadjutors ſo lately, by the advice of his father in law, which did helpe to beare the burden with him, would not ſo ſoone have complained, till he had had full triall and experience of that forme of government, that he was not able to beare the people alone, as he doth complaine, *Numb.*11.14.

4. Further it is objected, that at Iethro his comming hee gave that advice, for the appointing of inferiour officers and Judges; but this was done in the ſecond yeare, what time they were to remove from mount Sinai, as Moſes himſelfe ſheweth, that it was about the ſame time, when the Lord ſpake unto him to depart from Choreb, *Deut.*1.6,9. Toſtat.

Contra. Moſes indeed ſaith, I ſpake unto you the ſame time, ſaying, I am not able to beare you my ſelfe alone: but theſe words, The ſame time, muſt not be reſtrained to the time of the Lords ſpeaking unto them to remove from Choreb: for how could that choice of officers be made in the inſtant of their removing? but it muſt be underſtood generally of the time of their ſtay and abode by the mount Choreb. Iun.

2. Wherefore the more probable opinion is, that Iethro came unto Moſes, while they encamped about Choreb, before they removed to the wilderneſſe of Sinai, and there received the law, in that order, as it is here ſet downe by Moſes.

1. Becauſe no anticipation of time, or tranſpoſing of the ſtorie, is to be admitted in Scripture, where no neceſſity of the ſenſe enforceth it, now here is no ſuch neceſſity to urge us to thinke this ſtorie to be ſet out of the place, neither any inconvenience need to be feared, in admitting the ſame to be done in this order, as Moſes hath penned it, as is before ſhewed in the particular anſwer to the ſeverall objections.

2. The neareneſſe of that place doth perſwade as much: that ſeeing Midian was not far off from Choreb, where Moſes had uſed to keepe his father in lawes ſheepe, it is like that Iethro invited by the neareneſſe and opportunity of the place, tooke this journey. Lyranus. And though Moſes, when he departed with his wife and children, lodged by the way, that might be becauſe the children were young and tender, and ſo he tooke eaſie journeyes, or the day might bee farre ſpent, when he tooke his leave of his father in law: as when in the like caſe the Levite departed from his wives father, *Iud.*19.

3. Neither is it like, Moſes with the hoſt of Iſrael lying ſo neare unto Midian, ſo long together, well nie a yeare: that Iethro would deferre ſo long, to bring Moſes wife and children unto him, or that Moſes would all that while endure their abſence from him. Lyranus.

4. The text ſheweth, that the report of thoſe things, which the Lord had done for Moſes and Iſrael, brought him thither: it ſeemeth then, that as ſoone as he had heard of the fame of the late victory of the Amalekites, Iethro diſpatched preſently to goe unto Moſes: Ioſephus.

Quest. VIII. Wherefore Iethro ſent before to Moſes.

Verſ.6. And he ſaid to Moſes. 1. Iethro ſaid thus by ſome meſſengers, which he ſent before to Moſes, which both ſhewes his humanity, he would not preſſe upon Moſes unawares thoughhe were his father in law. Simler. And he did it, Vt honeſtius reciperentur, That they might be received in better manner, for Moſes honour. Lyran. Toſtat. It is like alſo, that Iethro came with ſome troupe and company, and therefore could have no ſafe paſſage or entrance, without ſome ſafe conduct from Moſes: for the Iſraelites did ſtand upon their watch and guard, becauſe of their enemies which were round about them. Simler. It might be alſo, that Iethro did this in humility, not preſuming to joyne himſelfe to the people of God, before he had made Moſes acquainted. Ferm.

Quest. IX. Of the manner of Moſes entertainment.

Verſ.7. And Moſes went out to meet &c. 1. Moſes humility joyned with humanity, appeareth in going forth to meet his father in law: whom hee reverenceth as his elder and his father in law, though in other reſpects, Moſes being the Ruler of ſuch a great people, and endued with ſuch an excellent gift, in the power of miracles, were the more honourable perſon. Toſtat. 2. Then Moſes ſheweth love in kiſſing him, which was uſed then, and is yet in ſome Countries, as a ſigne and teſtimonie of Marbach. 3. Then his courteſie appeareth, each in asking the other of their welfare and health. Iun. 4. His beneficence and hoſpitality is declared, in bringing him into his Tent. Pelarg. that they might better commune within of their affaires, than abroad. Lyran. This was Moſes peculiar Tabernacle, which was pitched without the hoſt, *chap.*33.7. and whereupon the cloud uſed to reſt, before the great Tabernacle was ſet up. Toſtat. It was not that great Tabernacle, where the Arke afterwards was put: for it was not lawfull for any Gentile to enter therein: Hugo de Sanct. Victor. neither was yet that Tabernacle ſo ſoone Quest. X. Why Moſes declareth all theſe things unto Iethro.

Verſ.8. Then Moſes told his father in law, &c. 1. Three things Moſes declareth to his father in law. Firſt the plagues and judgements, which fell upon Pharaoh and the Egyptians, for Iſraels ſake, that is, to the intent that they ſhould let the people of God goe. Secondly, the travell and labours which they indured, by famine, thirſt and warre. Thirdly, how they were relieved in all theſe neceſſities, and delivered from all their dangers. Toſtat. 2. Now Moſes declared theſe things to Hobab, to ſatisfie his deſire for he was desirous to heare more certainly of all these things. Simler. Likewise, he doth it that Iethro might rejoyce together with them, for all the mercies of God received. Tostat. quæst. 3. And beside, Moses hereby would draw him to the true knowledge of God, and further instruct him therein. And so Moses primo studuit socerum primo spiritualiter, Moses first of all seeketh to give spirituall food to his father in law. Iun.

QUEST. XI. Of Iethro his joy and rejoycing.

Vers. 9. AND Iethro rejoyced. 1. Iethro dealeth far otherwise than Amalek: for they envied the prosperity of Israel, and sought to doe them hurt: But Iethro rejoyced, and was glad: therefore afterward Saul was sent to take revenge of Amalek, but he spared the Kenites, which were the posteritie of Iabin, because they shewed mercy to the Israelites, 1 Sam. 15. 6. Borrh. 2. Iethro expresseth his joy in three degrees: first hee rejoyceth inwardly in heart, then hee testifieth and confesseth the same with his mouth, vers. 10. and further expresseth the same in act, in offering of sacrifices unto God. Tostat. Non solum confessus est fidem suam ore, sed etiam opere, He confessed his faith, not onely with his mouth, but in deed. Lyra. 3. And for very joy of heart, he repeateth the same thing twice, that God had delivered them out of the hand of the Egyptians, as men in passion doe use to double and treble their words. Tostat. Or the first delivering may signifie their saving from the sword of the Egyptians, which pursued them, the other from their thraldome and servitude. Cajetan.

QUEST. XII. Whether Iethro had before this the knowledge of the true God.

Vers. 11. NOW I know that Iehovah is greater than all gods. 1. Neither was Iethro before this, altogether ignorant of the true God, or was before a worshipper of Idols: as Tostat. For Moses would not have married a meere Idolaters daughter: and where he saith, Now I know, that sheweth not, that he knew not God before, as Tostatus concludeth, but it is meant of his experimentall knowledge, that he was now by these wonderfull works, and judgements of God, more confirmed in his faith. Calvin. 2. Neither yet was Iethro a perfect worshipper of God, and so circumcised, as the people of Israel were: for if he had beene circumcised, hee had beene bound to keepe the whole law, as the Apostle reasoneth, Gal. 5. 2. as all the festivities and other ordinances of Israel: and then he being incorporated by circumcision into the people of God, and so become a proselyte, would not have desired to returne to his people, as he doth, Numb. 10. Tostat. quæst. 4. 3. Therefore, though before this Iethro had the true knowledge of God, which was a long time preserved in Abrahams line, among those which were not of Israel, as appeareth in Iob, and his friends; yet, Non tam pure & sinceriter, & clare cognoscebant Deum, ut Israelitæ, &c. Ie they knew not God so purely and sincerely, and clearely, as the Israelites. Lippoman. And this speech in preferring Iehovah before other gods, may proceed from his errour, who had an opinion before of the multiplicitie of gods, as other of the heathen. Simler. Yet in another sense is this speech used by Moses, chap. 15. 11. Who is like unto thee O Lord among the gods? that is, Angels, or any other power whatsoever. Calvin.

QUEST. XIII. Of the meaning, and true reading of the 11. vers.

Vers. 11. IN that thing, wherein they dealt proudly, hee is above them. 1. The Latine translator readeth, Because they dealt proudly against them: but here the words bedabbar asher, in the thing which, are omitted: in this sense a reason is given in generall, of the destruction of the Egyptians, because they were proud and insolent against the people of God. Tostat. 2. Others supplie this word, indicavit, hee hath judged them, Simler. or perierunt, they have perished, in that thing, wherein they were insolent against them: which some referre to their destruction in the red sea, that as they had drowned the Hebrewes children in the red sea, so they perished there. Vatab. But as Calvin saith, Videtur nimis esse restrictum, This seemeth to be too much restrained: therefore in generall, rather the equitie of Gods judgements appeareth, that had measured unto them, as they had done to the Israelites. Galat. Borrh. 3. But the third reading is more preferred: that the prepositon ghal, here signifieth, not against, but above, and them must not bee referred to the Israelites, but to the Egyptians: that God was superiour unto them, in that, wherein they were proud, that is, in their great power, and glory. Iun. As they vaunted, when they pursued Israel: I will overtake them, I will divide the spoile, my lust shall be satisfied upon them, chap. 15. 9.

QUEST. XIV. Whether Iethro offered himselfe burnt offerings.

Vers. 12. THEN Iethro tooke burnt offerings, &c. 1. Tostatus hereupon gathereth, because Iethro observeth the difference of sacrifices instituted in the law, betweene burnt offerings, wherein all was consumed upon the Altar, and other sacrifices wherein part was reserved: that he came to Moses, after the law was given: quæst. 4. But this is no necessary collection: for even among the Gentiles, some sacrifices they offered whole, of some they reserved part for their sacred feasts: especially among them, which came of Abrahams line, where some seeds of Abrahams faith were still preserved. Simler. 2. This may serve as an argument against that opinion: that the law of sacrifices, and of the Priesthood of Aaron was not yet instituted, because Iethro a strange Priest was permitted to sacrifice: & therefore it is like that yet the Priesthood was not instituted. Simler. Cajetan. 3. Some thinke that Iethro onely tooke part of the sacrifices which were offered, and sacrificed not. Lippoman. But the phrase, He tooke them unto God, sheweth that he tooke them to offer unto God. Iun. 4. Oleaster thinketh, that he offered by the ministry of Aaron. But as Augustine well collecteth, Moses is not yet read to have sacrificed at all. 5. This is like to have have beene Primum ejus sincerum, & legitimum sacrificium: Iethros first sincere and legitimate sacrifice. Calvin. For although he had some knowledge of God before, yet he knew him not purely and perfectlie before now.

Quest. XV. In what sense they are said to eat bread before the Lord.

THey came to eat bread with Moses father in law, before God. 1. They did either eat Manna, that Iethro might see the bread, which God gave them from heaven: or such bread as hee might bring from Midian: beside bread, they did also eat of the remainder of the peace offerings. Tostat. 2. Before God. Oleaster expoundeth, before the Tabernacle, but as yet the Tabernacle was not built, as is shewed before quæst.7. nor Aarons Priesthood instituted: as Cajetan well noteth here, Non interfuit Aaron ut sacrificaret, sed ut convivа, Aaron was not present as a sacrificer, but as a ghest. 3. Others doe expound, before God, i. gloriam & honorem Dei, to the honour and glory of God. Simler. Calvin. So also Origen, Omnia, quæ Sancti faciunt, in conspectu Dei faciunt, All that the Saints doe, they doe in the sight of God: as the Apostle saith, Whether you eat or drinke, &c. doe all to the glory of God. 4. But somewhat more is insinuated here: that as after the Tabernacle was built, before the Arke, was said to be in the presence of God, so now, because they were assembled in Moses Tabernacle, where the cloudy piller rested, they are said to eat before the Lord who manifested himselfe in that piller. Tostat. quæst.4. in cap.18.

Quest. XVI. How the people came to Moses to aske of God.

Vers.15. THe people come unto me to seeke God, &c. and I declare the ordinances of God and his lawes. 1. Some expound it, that they enquired of God by Moses. Oleaster. But it is not like, that in every small matter, Moses consulted with God for them: for although the Lord cannot be wearied and he is ignorant of nothing, yet for reverence of the divine Majesty, they were to forbeare in small matters. Tostat. So also Augustine, Nunquid per singula credendum est eum consulere solere Deum: Is it to be thought, that for every thing he used to consult with God? 2. Some interprete, because the sentence of Moses, being their lawfull Judge, was the sentence of God, in asking of Moses, they asked of God. Cajetan. And to the same purpose, Augustine moving the question, how Moses maketh mention here of the lawes of God, seeing there were none as yet written, maketh this answer, Nisi præsidentem menti sua Deum consuleret, &c. Unlesse he had consulted with God the president of his mind, he could not have judged justly. Moses therefore, was the interpreter of the will and sentence of God, revealed unto him, & so judged according to his lawes. 3. But this phrase to seeke God, insinuateth a further matter: that when they had any weightie businesse, which either concerned God, or the state of the common-wealth, then they went to seeke an answer of God, as the phrase is used, 1 Sam. 9. 9. Iun. So then here is a distinction of causes noted: in the greater and weightie affaires, they consulted with God by Moses, as Iethro saith afterward, vers.19. Be thou unto the people to Godward, and report their causes unto God: but the smaller matters Moses judgeth himselfe, which were afterward by the advice of Iethro transmitted over to the inferiour officers.

Quest. XVII. Why the Lord would have Moses to take his direction from Iethro.

Vers.19. HEare now my voyce. Augustine here moveth a question, why the Lord would have his servant Moses, to whom he so often spake, to take this direction from a stranger: to the which he maketh this answere: that God hereby would teach us: 1. Per quemlibet hominem detur consilium veritatis, non debere contemni: That by whomsoever any true counsell is given, it should not bee contemned. 2. Againe, God would haue Moses thus admonished, Ne eum tentet superbia, &c. lest that sitting in the high seate of judgement, Moses might have beene somewhat lifted up: and therefore this was done to humble him. 3. Rupertus goeth yet further, and sheweth, that this fact of Iethro was answerable to that saying in the Gospell, That the children of this world are wiser in their generation, than the children of light. So Iethro for civill government, and worldly affaires, was wiser than Moses: but in things belonging to God, Moses went beyond him. Ferus addeth, that hereby Moses was humbled, Videns se non omnia scire, seeing that he knew not all things: but was advised by a stranger to take a better course, in politique administration, than he himselfe could thinke of.

Quest. XVIII What causes Iethro would have reserved to Moses.

BE thou for the people to Godward. 1. Some thinke that here is a distinction made by Iethro of the spirituall, and temporall power: the first he would have still reside and rest in Moses, as best exercised in spirituall things, the other to bee passed over to others. Ferus. But the chiefe temporall power remained in Moses still, after the choice made of the inferiour officers, hee was the chiefe Prince and Magistrate notwithstanding: nay rather hee resigned afterward his ordinarie spirituall power unto Aaron: reserving the temporall still. 2. Others thinke, that whereas Moses was both a Lawgiver to the people, and a Judge also: that the first power he reserved still, but the other part, of executing judgement in particular cases, according to those lawes, he transmitted over to the officers. Ex Simler. But this is not neither: for Moses gave the sentence against the blasphemer, *Numb.*24. and against him that violated the Sabbath, *Num.*5. 3. Wherefore the distinction here made, is neither of divers kinds of offices, as the spirituall and temporall, nor yet of divers parts and functions of the same office, as in making, and executing of lawes: but the difference was of causes small and great: the one to bee reserved to Moses judging, the other to be committed to the officers to be chosen: And so afterward they came to Moses, difficult and hard matter fell out: as when one blaſphemed God in the hoſt, *Levit.*24. they brought him to Moſes: likewiſe when they found one gathering of ſticks upon the Sabbath, they referred the matter to Moſes, *Numb.*15.33. In the cauſe alſo of Zelophehads daughters, they reſorted to Moſes, *Numb.*27.4. And in thoſe weightie matters, two things were required of Moſes, firſt that hee ſhould conſult with God, and then declare unto the people the will of God, and ſhew them the ordinances and worſhip of God, *verſ.*20. the ordinances or as the Latine Interpreter readeth, ceremonies, did onely appertaine to God: the lawes were of two ſorts, either ſuch as concerned both God, and man, as the morall commandements, the firſt table whereof, commandeth our dutie toward God; the ſecond, our dutie to our neighbour: or ſuch, which onely concerned the affaires and controverſies among men, as the Judiciall. *Toſtat. quæſt.*5. 5. Herein then conſiſted Moſes office: 1. That he ſhould report unto God, the requeſts and demands of the people, and ſo pray for them. 2. To report unto the people the will and ſervice of God: both Quantum ad cultum Dei, what hee required concerning his ſervice: and to ſhew them the way, which they ſhould walke, Quantum ad credenda, What they were to beleeve: and the worke which they ſhould doe, Quantum ad agenda, that is, what things they were to doe. Ferus.

Quest. XIX. Of the qualities and properties required in good Magiſtrates.

1. Provide men of courage. The firſt propertie required in a Magiſtrate, is, that he be valiant, chayl, which ſignifieth not onely valour or ſtrength of the bodie, but the induſtry of mind: Pharaoh would have Ioſeph ſet over his cattell, ſuch of his brethren as were valiant, that is, induſtrious and well practiſed and experienced among cattell.

In this firſt qualitie or vertue then, theſe things are required. 1. That they muſt be induſtrious, able to diſcerne and expedite cauſes. Simler. Valentes ingenio, men of good dexteritie and wit. Cajetan. There muſt be verus intellectus, a good conceit and underſtanding. Toſtat. 2. Conſtancie and ſtrength is required: Non deſerat potentiorum cauſam juſtam, That he doe not leave a good cauſe for feare of mightie men. Ecclus. As Eccleſiaſticus ſaith, Noli fieri Index, &c. Seeke not to be made a Iudge, leſt thou bee not able to take away iniquitie, and leſt thou fearing the perſon of the mightie, ſhouldſt commit an offence againſt thine honeſtie. 3. Alſo it is fit they ſhould be of greater power in riches, or by birth, and eſtimation in the world: for if they be baſe and poore, though upright, they are ſooner contemned: ſo *Deut.*1.15. they muſt be judges, knowne and famous men: if other vertues doe concurre withall. Toſtat. Among the Lacedemonians, one Demoſthenes, an obſcure and baſe fellow, gave wiſe and prudent counſell, which the Ephori, which were the counſellers of ſtate, willed to be propounded by another man of fame and eſtimation, leſt it might have beene contemned, becauſe of the firſt author. Simler.

Eccleſiaſticus cap.7.6.

2. They muſt be men fearing God. For the feare of God is the foundation of all vertues: and where it is not, Non ſunt veræ virtutes, ſed umbra, They are not true vertues, but ſhadowes of vertues. Simler. And if men of might ſhould not feare God, Cum ex poteſtate ſua homines non timeant, &c. When in regard of their great power, they feare not men, they will be readie to commit many wrongs. *Toſtat. queſt.*6. Oportet jus dicentem alium, rationem habere ſuperioris Iudicis, &c. It behoveth him, that judgeth others, to have reſpect unto his ſuperiour Iudge, to whom he muſt give account of all his acts. Cajetan. Deum ſpectent, cujus vicem gerunt: Let them looke unto God, in whoſe ſtead they are. Borrh. They muſt execute his will, whoſe place and perſon they ſuſtaine: for where no feare of God is, there juſtice is ſoone declined, as is evident Plato. Ferus.

3. They muſt be men of truth. Both underſtanding the truth, that they may be able to diſtinguiſh right from wrong: as alſo following the truth in their will and practice: for there is a ſpeculative truth in diſcerning and judging, and a practicall truth, in following a right judgement. Toſtat. There is veritas vitæ, when a mans converſation is framed according to the rule of truth; veritas juſtitiæ, in giving to every man his right: and veritas doctrinæ, in diſcerning the truth from errour, and right from wrong: Ferus. This love of the truth containeth theſe two things, both that in others he ſhould give way to the truth, that he ſhould ſeeke out the truth by witneſſes, writings, evidences: and in himſelfe having found out the truth, give judgement accordingly. Simler. Vt ſit vera tum dicendo tum faciendo: to be true in word and deed, both to ſpeake the truth and practiſe it. Cajetan. Veritas non tantum fraudibus & craſſis mendaciis, ſed ambitioni, &c. The truth is not oppoſed onely to fraud and groſſe lies, but to ambition, flattery and all art, and what other cunning ſoever may be uſed to corrupt judgement. Calvin. Stabiles ſint in ſententiis, immutabiles. They muſt be ſtable in their ſentences, not changeable. Oleaſter.

4. They muſt hate covetouſneſſe. Quantumvis ſufficiat homini non eſſe avarum, &c. Although it be ſufficient for a private man not to be a covetous: yet a Judge muſt be ſo far from covetouſneſſe, that he abhorre it. Cajetan. Some thinke, that the Hebrew word hatzah ſignifieth, to fill: a Judge then muſt not onely be filled with riches, for a covetous man will never be full, but to be content with things neceſſarie and convenient for his place. Oleaſter. For gifts blind the eies of the wiſe, and pervert the words of the juſt. *Deut.*16.19.

Other properties requiſite in Magiſtrates.

Theſe properties here required, there bee other alſo elſewhere ſet downe, as *Deut.*1.13. they muſt be men of wiſdome and underſtanding. The firſt of theſe belongeth to the ſpeculative and intellectuall part: he muſt be wiſe, both in the knowledge of God, for true religion maketh wiſe: and in humane affaires: there is a particular wiſdome, as of every artificer in his trade; but this muſt be a generall wiſdome, to rule and governe all ſorts of men.

The other, which is called binah, underſtanding, belongeth rather to practiſe, than ſpeculation: for hee that hath knowledge onely in generall, and knoweth not how wiſely to applie it to every particular occaſion, is not fit to be a ruler or governour. Ioſeph was wiſe in the unfolding and interpreting of Pharaohs dreame, dreame, hee was also prudent, and a man of understanding, in giving advice afterward, how to prov against the famine.

Further, they must not be of base and obscure condition, but such as are famous and well knowne no man will commit his money to an unknowne Banker, nor his bodie to an unexperienced Physitian neither should men of unknowne conditions be trusted with the common-wealth.

Lastly, their age must be respected, as Numb. 11. 16. Moses is bid to take such as he knew to be E of the people, not onely in yeares, but in manners: for age bringeth experience, and experience make wise. Yet young men, which are endued with the wisdome of the ancient, are not to be rejected f government: as David and Iosias were but young, when they came to the Kingdome. Simler.

Quest. XX. How that Rulers over thousands, hundreds, &c. are to be counted.

Vers. 21. Rulers over thousands, &c. 1. Some of the Hebrewes thinke, that this distribution was of the under Officers, and Ministers to the Judges: that some of them had 10. some some 1000. apparitors under them, for the execution of their sentence. Ex Simler. But this would bred a great confusion, that one Judge should have had so many ministers, neither should their causes beene dispatched, so many being brought to one Judge. 2. Others thinke that this division was of Judges themselves, that one session was of ten, another court above that, of 100. and a superiour to that 1000. Simler. But beside that it was inconvenient to have a Court consisting of so many, which wo have tended rather to confusion, than setling of order, the text saith, that all these were heads of the p ple, some were made rulers of 1000. some of 100. some of 50. &c. vers. 25. These divers names of r then, have not relation to the number of the Judges, but to the divisions of the people, over whom t were set. 3. The most usuall and received opinion is, that this distribution of Officers was made acc ding to the computation of those in the campe, which were fit for warre, who from 20. yeare to 60.
numbred to 600000. and above, Numb. 1. Lyran. Iun. But this is not like: for whereas these officers w appointed, not for military discipline, but for the deciding of controversies and questions, which m grow among them; by this account all under 30. yeare, and above 60. which were not meet for wa should be excluded: whereas questions might arise among both the younger, but especially the elder as well as among the rest. Tostat. 4. Some thinke that this division was not in respect onely of the of the Judges, but to reduce the people into order, and to distribute them into their severall ranks, and visions: because it is not like, that such a multitude of suits should arise among them, as that they need so many officers: for the rulers over tens, in 600000. would come to 60000. Simler. But it appeareth Iethros motion, that in this division he onely intended the peace and quietnesse of the people, and Mos ease, that they might without any great travell, have their controversies ended: neither is it like the were so many officers: for not over every ten persons or polles, was an officer set, but over every ten f milies, as now shall be shewed. 5. Wherefore, this account of thousands, hundreds, &c. might be m three wayes: either reckoning those onely, which were fit for warre, which kind of account is before moved: or by every single person, and poll, as they counted for the eating of the paschall Lambe, chap.
and for the gathering of Manna, chap. 16. But neither was this account here followed, for then wo and children should bee here reckoned: whereas the one were under their parents, and the other u their husbands government, and their controversies might be ended at home, and need not bee bro before the Judges. The third way remaineth, that this computation was made according to the fam that over every ten families an officer should bee set. Tostat. So by this meanes a goodly order established, that every Tribune or millenary officer, had under him ten Centurians, that is, officers hundreds: and every Centurian had under him two rulers over fifties: and every ruler over fiftie, ha der him five, which were set over ten. Ferus. Iosephus saith further, that there were bands appoint thirties, and twenties: but there is no such thing in the text.

Quest. XXI. Of the number of these officers, and of their continuance and succession.

Vers. 22. Let them judge the people at all seasons. 1. Concerning the number of these officers, it i certaine. Lyranus thinketh there were six hundred Tribunes or millenarie officers, a thousand Centurians, and three score thousand set over tennes: which number is rightly taken acc to the summe of six hundred thousand. But it is shewed before, that in that number, contain summe onely of those which were fit for warre, divers are not comprehended, over whom the were set, for compounding of their controversies: and therefore by that proportion the sum number of the Judges cannot be taken. And so it cannot certainly be defined, the number of the being not knowne, over the which these officers were appointed, how many these Rulers were in Tostat. 2. In that they are said to judge at all seasons, both the time of continuance in their office is fied, which was during their life, untill they were made unfit by reason of their age: for then it they gave over their government, as the Levites were freed at fiftie yeares from the service of the T nacle? As also their diligence and attendance upon their office is noted: that dayly and continually lesse upon solemne and festivall dayes, they attended the causes of the people. 3. It is also evident, th Magistracie did not descend by succession from the father to the sonne, but was conferred by elect whereas it is required, that they should be good men fearing God, and endued with other vertues could not be perpetually observed, if the sonnes had succeeded their fathers, for a good father may time have a bad sonne, as Hezekiah had Manasseh: and an evill father may have a good sonne, as mon begat Iosias. Ex Tostat.

QUEST. XXII. The difference betweene Moſes office, and the reſt.

Verſe 22. BVt every great matter let them bring to thee. 1. There were two reaſons why the great cauſes were reſerved unto Moſes hearing, both becauſe he was a Prophet, and ſo conſulted with the oracle of God: and beſide he was the chiefe Magiſtrate: as in all Common-wealths appeale is made unto the Prince. Simler. 2. The greater matters were of two ſorts, either ſuch as were of a divers kinde, which concerned the worſhip of God, and ceremonies of religion, which wholly belonged unto Moſes, and the other Officers were not to meddle with them: or elſe they were of the ſame kinde, wherein the other uſed to deale: but difficult and hard matters, wherein they were to require Moſes judgement, as they did about the puniſhment of the blaſphemer, Levit. 24. and the violater of the Sabbath, Numb. 15. Idol. 2. The ſmaller cauſes which were referred to the under Officers, were pecuniary and civill cauſes, the greater as capitall were reſerved for Moſes hearing: for in theſe cauſes, if there were any aggrievance the ſentence might be reverſed: but when the ſentence of death was inflicted, it could not bee revoked: therefore it is like that none was put to death without Moſes conſent and direction. 3. In giving this counſell Iethro intendeth two things, both the eaſe of Moſes, in dividing the burthen with others, and the reſt of the people, that ſhould not be wearied by this meanes by long attendance. Toſtat. qu. 8.

QUEST. XXIII. Of the meaning of theſe words, And God commmand thee.

Verſe 23. IF thou doe this thing, (and God ſo command thee.) 1. The Latine Tranſlator readeth thus: If thou doe this, implebis imperium Dei: thou ſhalt fulfill the commandement of God; whereof there may bee two ſenſes given: firſt that Iethro doth inſinuate that this device and councell is of God: the reaſon that by this meanes he ſhall be able to diſcharge his office in governing, and taking care for the people, which thing God had commanded him: Toſtat. But this tranſlation differing from the originall, which ſaith, and God command thee, neither of theſe interpretations can ſtand. 2. Some make this the ſenſe: if thou doe as I counſell thee; poteris audire præcepta Dei, thou ſhalt have time to heare what God commandeth thee, that is, to conſult with God, which his leiſure would not now permit him to doe: Oleaſt. Oſiand. But this clauſe ſeemeth to depend of the firſt word (im, if) ſo that the meaning rather is this, if God doe approve this my councell: Iun. Wherein appeareth the piety of Iethro, that would not obtrude his councell upon Moſes, no otherwiſe than it ſhould have the divine approbation. Simler. Calvin.

QUEST. XXIV. In what ſenſe the people are ſaid to goe quietly to their place.

Verſe 23. AND all this people ſhall goe quietly to their place. 1. Some take this to be the meaning: that this order deviſed by Iethro, was but to ſerve during the time of their travell: but when they were come to their place, that is, to the land of Canaan, then they ſhould have Officers and Judges ſet in their Cities. Ex Siml. But Iethro in theſe words ſheweth the preſent benefit which ſhould redound unto them, by this order, both Moſes ſhould be eaſed of much labour, and the people of their attendance. 2. In theſe words therefore, Iethro doth inſinuate two things, both that the people ſhould diſpatch their buſineſſe, whereas they were conſtrained before to goe home, their controverſies undecided, becauſe Moſes was not at leaſure to heare all, and ſo they ſhould goe home quietly. Simler. And againe, they ſhould not need to hang ſo long, to give ſuch attendance, as they did. Iun. For Moſes ſhould bee able to diſpatch their greater cauſes, which they brought unto him in time, and their ſmaller controverſies ſhould be taken up at home. Toſtat. qu. 8.

QUEST. XXV. Whether theſe Officers were choſen by Moſes.

Verſe 25. AND Moſes choſe men. 1. Theſe Officers and Magiſtrates, were taken out from the reſt of the people by election: ſo that the government of Iſrael was in reſpect of Moſes, Monarchicall: for the ſupreme authority ſtill remained in him: but in reſpect of theſe inferiour Magiſtrates, it was Ariſtocratical: which forme of government is ſo called, becauſe the beſt and moſt worthy are elected to rule the reſt. 2. Moſes is ſaid to have choſen them, becauſe he confirmed the peoples choice, and admitted them, whom they preſented: for ſo hee ſaid unto the people: Bring you men of wiſdome, &c. and I will make them Rulers over you, Deut. 1. 13. For it was the ſafeſt way for the people to make choice of them, becauſe they were better knowne unto them, and they would the more willingly obey them. Toſtat. qu. 9. 3. Further, whereas Moſes ſaith, Deut. 1. 8. I am not able to beare you my ſelfe alone: as though Moſes himſelfe firſt thought of this device, it muſt be underſtood, that after Iethro had given this counſell unto Moſes, then he propounded it unto the people. Genevenſ.

QUEST. XXVI. Whether theſe Officers were of equall authority, or one ſubordinate to another.

Verſe 25. AND make them heads over the people. 1. It is not like, that theſe Officers, whereof ſome were ſet over thouſands, ſome over hundreds, ſome over fifties, ſome over tennes; that they had their ſeverall diſtinct regiments, ſo that they which were not under one Officer, as under the Ruler of thouſands, were not alſo under his ſuperiour Officer, that was ſet over fifty: for then, if they had beene all of equall authority, this diſtinction needed not to have beene, that ſome were Rulers of thouſands, ſome of hundreds, &c. But it had beene better for them, all to have beene of one ſort, as all over hundreds, or tennes: and againe, if theſe Officers had not beene ſubordinate one under another, that inconvenience should not have beene prevented, which Iethro intended, to deliver Moses of trouble: for by the meanes, if the people might not appeale from one Judge to a superiour; a multitude of causes still should have beene devolved to Moses. 2. Therefore it is resolved, that these Officers were one under another the Ruler of ten under the Ruler of fifty, and he under the Centurion, and this also under the tribune millenary Officer: so that there was none of the people, which was not subject, to a Ruler of ten, tithing man, to a Ruler of fifty, a Ruler of an hundred, and a Ruler over a thousand. And this subordination served to two purposes: both for the Officers themselves, that if any controversie fell out among them, it might bee ordered by the superiour Judge: and if the people found themselves agreeved with their tithing men, and inferiour Officers, they might appeale for redresse to their superiour Judges. And so the appeale ascended, from the Ruler of ten, to the Ruler of fifty, from the Ruler of fifty to the Centurion, and from him to the millenary Judge or Tribune: and thus their causes were decided, before they came at Moses; only the hardest and most difficult matters were reserved for his hearing, and from him there was no further appeale. Tostat. quæst. 11.

Quest. XXVII. Of the difference betweene these Officers, and the 70. Elders, Num. 10.

FUrther, it is here to be considered, that this institution of Officers, which was brought in by the counsell and advice of Iethro, was divers from that order of 70. Elders, which was instituted afterward by the Lord, Numb. 10. For they differ both in order of time: these were appointed before they came to Sinai, the other after they removed thence; and in number, these were many, no doubt divers thousands, the other onely 70. Iethro gave the advice for the choice of the first; but the Lord himselfe of the other. Their office also and administration was divers; the seventy were the Councell of State, which consulted only of the publike affaires of the Kingdome: the other attended upon the private causes and suits of the people. This difference betweene the Senators, and Counsellers of State, and inferiour Judges was observed in all well ordered Common-wealths, among the Athenians, Lacedemonians, Romans, and is to be seene in our State. This was the συνέδριον or Senate of the Jewes, which at the first consisted indifferently of men taken out of all the tribes, six out of each of the eleven tribes, the Levites excepted, and the other foure to make up 70. were supplied by Levites and Priests to direct the rest. This indifferent choice out of all the tribes, continued untill the time of the Kings, when the choice of these Elders was overruled by their authority: then after the captivity, because of the prerogative of the tribe of Iudah, to whom the principality of right appertained, most of the Elders were taken out of that tribe, and so it continued, till Herod dissolved that honourable and grave Senate of the Elders, making havocke of them, and putting most of them to death. Iun. ex Ioseph. Analys. in Num. cap. 11.

Quest. XXVIII. At what time Iethro tooke his leave of Moses.

Vers. 27. AFterward Moses let his father in law depart, &c. 1. Some thinke, that Iethro neither came unto Moses in this order, or at this time, as the story is set downe, that is, before the giving of the Law, but that hee came in the end of the first yeere, or in the beginning of the second, and stayed with him about two moneths, till the campe removed, which was the 20. day of the second moneth. Numb. 10. Tostat. Contra. But this opinion is before refuted, quæst. 7. For it is not like, that the campe of Israel lying almost a yeere, from the first day of the third moneth in the first yeere, chap. 19. 1. to the 20. day of the second moneth in the second yeere, Numb. 10, 11. that either Iethro would stay so long from visiting Moses, or Moses all that while not desire to see his wife and children: and seeing the fame and report of the great workes, which God had done for Israel, and of that late victory against Amalek brought Iethro thither, it is no doubt, but that as soone as this same came to his eares, that hee hasted his journey.

2. Some are of opinion, that Iethro Moses father in law went away at this time, but he left Hobab his sonne, and brother to Zipporah with Moses still, who also departed, when the campe removed from Sinai, Numb. 10. Oleaster, Simlerus, Osiander. Contra. But it is proved before, that this Hobab and Iethro were all one man, quæst. 1. for there is no mention made of any kinsman that Moses had by his wife, but his father in law, and her grandfather Reguel: and that speech of Moses, Thou mayest bee a guide unto us, that is, our guide, best agreeth unto his father in law, a man of age and experience, and if Reguel had any sonne, it is like, where hee is said to have had seven daughters, Exod. 2. 16. mention would have beene made of his sonne: seeing the Scripture useth rather to note the genealogy of the males, than of the other sex.

3. Some other thinke, that Iethro came at this time in the first yeere, and stayed a whole yeere, that he might be full instructed in the faith and religion of Gods people. Lyran. But it is not like, that he being neere his countrey, not above a dayes journey or two, would so long be absent from thence: being so desirous to returne thither. Tostat.

4. Nor yet is it probable, that Iethro went away so soone, before the Law was given: for it is like, that before hee went, Moses put his councell in practice, which could not bee done in so short a time: Delican. for the people were first to bee numbred before the Officers could bee set over thousands, hundreds, &c. Now there were but fifteene dayes from their first comming to the wildernesse of Sin, chap. 16. 1. and their removing to the wilderneſſe of Sinai, chap. 19. 1. In which time Manna was given them, and the water out of the Rock, and they fought with Amalek: so that they could have no time to number the people.

5. Where

5. Wherefore this may be ſafely held, that Iethro came at this time, while they camped in Rephidim: neither went away ſo ſoone, ſtaying but only a few dayes; nor yet remained ſo long, as a whole yeere: ſeeing that Moſes preſently went up to the mount, and ſtayed twice forty dayes: it is like that Iethro heard his comming downe, and preſently Moſes ſet cunning men aworke to make the Tabernacle, at the time the people were numbred, Exod. 38.25. when they contributed ſilver, gold and braſſe toward the holy worke. Then it being like that Iethro ſtayed to ſee his councell put in practice, which could not be done without the numbring of the people, and they were not numbred untill the Tabernacle began to be made, which might be ſome foure moneths after his comming: ſo long it is probable that Iethro abode; how long after it is uncertaine. That ſtory then of Hobabs departure, Numb. 10. is tranſpoſed; for it belongeth not all to this place, as Iunius thinketh, for the reaſons before alleaged; yet it is evident enough that it fell not out in that very time and order there ſet downe: for before Moſes is there mentioned to have ſpoken to Hobab, the cloud was lifted up from the Tabernacle, and the hoſt began to march forward according to their armies: So I here ſubſcribe unto the opinion of Galaſius, upon this place: Non ſubaudi it Iethronem ſtatim abiiſſe, &c. Hee underſtandeth not that Iethro preſently went away, but that he departed not with the Iſraelites, and at length returned into his country.

4. Places of doctrine.

1. Doctr. No mans actions are perfect in this life.

17. This thing, which thou doeſt, is not well. Moſes though an excellent man, yet in this action of judging the people, tooke not a good courſe, neither for his owne eaſe, nor the peoples good: which ſheweth, that in the beſt mens actions, there are imperfections. And if all Moſes acts were imperfect, what are ours? Simler. So the Apoſtle confeſſeth of himſelfe, Not as though I had already attained, or were already perfect, Philip. 3.12.

2. Doctr. The Prophets had not an habit of propheſying, but an actuall and preſent illumination.

Further, in that Iethro as a prudent man, ſeeth more for the politike government than Moſes, who was a great Prophet: it ſheweth, that the Prophets had not an habituall knowledge or propheticall inſight alwayes remaining with them; for then they ſhould not be ignorant of any thing: but they propheſied, Ex actuali quadam illuminatione: By an actuall illumination for the time: which as ſoone as it ceaſeth, Redeunt ad ſenſos: They returne to themſelves, and ſee no more than they did before; as here Moſes, though a Prophet, becauſe hee had no preſent revelation, ſeeth no more than another in this matter, nay, he ſeeth not ſo much as Iethro, who was no Prophet. Toſtat. quæſt. 8. So Ieremy, after hee had talked with the King, was adviſed by him what anſwer hee ſhould make to the Princes, and followed his direction accordingly, Ierem. 38.28.

3. Doctr. The wiſe ſayings of the Heathen not to be rejected.

24. So Moſes obeyed the voice. Upon this example of Moſes harkening to the voice of Iethro, who was a ſtranger from Iſrael, Origen thus collecteth, Unde & nos, ſi forte invenimus aliquid apud Gentilibus dictum, &c. Whereupon wee alſo learne, that if wee finde any thing well ſpoken of Heathen, we muſt not preſently reject it with the Author. Ex Lippoman. As thoſe profitable inventions of the liberall ſciences, which were found out by the Heathen, are ſtill commendably retained among Chriſtians, and are made to attend as handmaids upon religion, as the Egyptian Jewels ſerved to adorne the Iſraelites: So Saint Paul uſeth the teſtimony of Aratus, Act. 17.28. of Menander, 1. Cor. 15.33. and Epimenides, Tit. 1.12.

4. Doct. Princes may have Officers and Miniſters under them.

Made them heads over the people. It is fit therefore that Princes ſhould not thruſt themſelves upon all cauſes, but make choice of grave and vertuous men to governe under them: yet they muſt have their owne eares open alſo to the complaints of their ſubjects, as here Moſes hath. The councell of Iethro approved of God, and accepted by Moſes, wee ſee it both lawfull, and neceſſary for Princes and chiefe Magiſtrates, to have their inferiour and helping Miniſters of the Kingdome. Oleaſter. And that we are bound to yeeld obedience both unto the King, As to the ſuperiour, and unto governours ſent of him, for the puniſhment of evill doers, and for the praiſe of them that doe well, 1. Pet. 2.13.14.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. That wife and children are no impediment to the calling of Miniſters.

Then Iethro tooke Zipporah Moſes wife. Some hereupon give this note, Quòd Moſes ex illo tempore, quo prophetare incepit, uxorem concubitu non cognovit: That Moſes from that time, when he began to propheſie, did not know his wife carnally. Lippoman. ex Epiphan. And another ſaith, Moſes non accedebat cedebat ad uxorem propter frequens colloquium Dei; That Moses came not to his wife, because he often talk with God. Toſtat. quæſt. 2. in margine. Oleaſter alſo doth collect thus, Quam oneroſum ſit matrimonium oſtenditur, &c. Here it is ſhewed how burdenſome marriage is, ſeeing Moſes after he had ſent his wife had no great care to fetch her againe.

Chryſoſt. ſerm. de Evang. nuptiæ facta ſunt.

Contra. 1. Againſt Epiphanius, may bee oppoſed the judgement of Chryſoſtome, who concludeth contrary upon this example of Moſes: Vis cognoſcere, quod nihil nocet uxorem habere & pueros? Moſes nonne uxorem habuit & liberos? Wilt thou know, that it hindereth not to have wife and children? Moſes had both wife and children. And then he maketh an eloquent compariſon, betweene married Moſes, and married Elias: Moſes brought Manna from heaven, Elias fire: Moſes divided the ſea, and Elias was taken up by a fiery chariot into heaven: Vidiſti Heliam aurigam in aëre, vidiſti Moſen in mari viatorem: Thou haſt ſeene Elias a chariot man in the aire, and thou haſt ſeene Moſes making a way in the ſea: did wife hurt the one, or wife and children hinder the other? He addeth further, Vides, quòd & Petrus uxorem habuit, ne incuſes nuptias: You ſee that Peter had a wife (becauſe mention is made of his wives mother in the Goſpell) then blame not marriage. By this teſtimony it plentifully appeareth, that Moſes after hee was entred into his propheticall office, found no impediment by having wife and children, and therefore did not abandon their company.

2. Concerning Toſtatus aſſertion, I anſwer him out of his owne words; for though his marginall note be generally and at large ſet downe, That Moſes came not to his wife, that is, at all: yet it is qualified in his text: Rariſſimè accedebat ad uxorem: Hee very ſeldome came to his wife: he did not utterly then forſake her company. And that inſtance which hee giveth of the exception, that Aaron and Miriam tooke againſt Moſes, becauſe of his wife, maketh flat againſt him, Num. 12. For if Moſes had not uſed her ſtill as his wife, they could not have pretended nor taken any ſuch occaſion to quarrell.

3. Oleaſter may be anſwered out of his owne words: for in the ſame place, upon Iethros bringing of Moſes wife he giveth this note: Ubi ſimul docemur, non eſſe permittendam uxorem ſine viro ſuo eſſe: Where we are alſo taught, that a wife is not to be permitted to be without her husband. But to what end is the cohabitation of the husband and wife elſe required, then that they ſhould the one enjoy the other? for otherwiſe it is all one, as if they were apart, or aſunder.

4. Only this example of Moſes, in ſending backe his wife before, upon her diſcontent, and abſenting himſelfe from her for a while, ſheweth, that it is the duty of all that are called, To remove from them in lawfull ſort thoſe hinderers, preferring the Lords worke before their affection. B. Babington. As Moſes did but for a time leave his wife while he was imployed in that waighty embaſſage to Pharaoh in Egypt: which kinde of ſequeſtration for a time, for holy workes, the Apoſtle alloweth, not a finall ſeparation; but willeth that they come together againe: Defraud not one another (ſaith the Apoſtle) except it be with conſent for a time, that you may give your ſelves to faſting and prayer, and againe come together, that Satan tempt you not, for your incontinency. Likewiſe this example ſheweth, That it is a grievous offence, for either wives or others, to be an hinderance to men in their duties enjoyned them by God. B. Babington.

1. Cor. 7. 5.

2. Confut. Againſt the hereſie of the Manichees, of two contrary natures.

Verſ. 19. Heare now my voyce, and I will give thee councell, &c. By this example, Hierome confutes that hereſie and wicked opinion of the Manichees, that did hold there were two natures contrary the one to the other, the good and bad: If a good tree, ſaith he, never bringeth forth evill fruit. Quomodo Moſes arbor bona peccaverit ad aquam contradictionis? How did Moſes a good tree, ſinne at the waters of ſtrife? Aut qua conſequentia Iethro ſocer Moſes arbor mala. &c. dederit Moſi conſilium bonum? Or what conſequence is there, that Iethro Moſes father in law, being an evill tree, who believed not in the God of Iſrael, gave unto Moſes good councell? Hieromes argument ſtandeth thus: the nature of a thing cannot be changed; but a good man may be changed to evill, and an evill tree to be good; therefore it is not their nature that they are evill, that is, as their nature was created of God: wherefore that a man is evill it is not by his created nature, but his corrupted nature; that he is good, it is not by his corrupted, but corrected nature.

Super Matth. cap. 7.

3. Confut. Of Cajetane that condemneth the regiment of women.

Verſ. 21. Provide men of courage, &c. Cajetane here giveth this corrupt note: Viros inquit, non mulieres, quia regimen mulierum peſſimum eſt: Men, ſaith he, not women, becauſe their government is worſt of all: ſo that to ſpeake according to the common courſe of nature, no vertue is ſaid to be in women. Ariſtot. Ethicor. Contra. 1. This is but a bad conſequent, Women are not to bee elected or choſen to government, therefore their government is bad: for though women come not by election to the place of government, yet either it may fall to them by ſucceſſion, as Zelophehads inheritance deſcended to his daughters Numb. 27. or they may be extraordinarily deſigned and appointed to be governours, as Deborah, and directers, as Huldah the Propheteſſe under Ioſias. 2. Neither doth it follow, Women are not fit to be choſen Judges and Officers of a Kingdome, therefore they may not be Queenes and Princes: theſe being choſen, were elected to be Officers of miniſtry, not of regality, and principality. 3. As for that heathenish conceit of the Philoſopher, that vertue is not properly ſaid to be in women, it is contrary to that poſition of the Apoſtle: that in Chriſt there is neither male nor female, Galath. 3. 28. the ſpirit of God can plant grace and vertue in the hearts of women, as well as of men: nay often the Lord chuſeth the weake things of this world to confound the mighty things, 1. Cor. 1. 27. And the examples of ſo many vertuous ul women in the Scriptures, of Sara, Rebecca, Anna, the Shunamite, and the reſt in the old: of Marie, Martha, Lydia, Dorcas, and many other in the new Teſtament, doe evidently confute that prophane ...ax of the Philoſopher. 4. And to deliver the regiment of women, from the Cardinals vile and im- ...ſlander; this country and nation of ours, as is hath found the government of a woman the worſt, ...late Marian perſecutions, when more good men and women, Saints of God, were put to death, ...n any three Kings reigne beſide: ſo have we ſeene it in the next change, the beſt of all other Princes ...s that went before: famous Queene Elizabeths government, as for flouriſhing peace, honourable ...nd name, enriching of the Land, ſubduing of forraine enemies, enacting of good lawes, may be com- ...with the reigne of any former Kings. So for the advancing of true religion, increaſing of learning, ...ting the Goſpell, none of her predeceſſors came neere her: That as the refining of coine, being ...ed from baſe money to pure ſilver and gold, was her honour in the Civill State: ſo the purging of ...on, according to the purity of the word of God, in the Church ſhall bee her everlaſting fame in the ...and is her eternall reward with God.

A defence of Queene Elizabeths government.

4. Confut. That Chriſt ſhall have no Iudges under him at the latter day, but ſhall be the only Iudge himſelfe.

Vers. Let them judge all ſmall cauſes. Origen upon theſe words hath this private conceit: Hanc figuram Iudicum non ſolum in hoc ſeculo, ſed etiam in futuro ſervandam, &c. That this forme of ...ſhall be obſerved, not only in this world, but in the next. And then he alleageth that text, Matth. 18.28. ...when the Sonne of man ſhall ſit in the throne of Majeſty, yee which have followed me in the regeneration, ...ſhall ſit upon twelve ſeats, and judge the twelve tribes of Iſrael: Whereupon he inferreth, that Chriſt at the ...t judgement ſhall appoint other Judges beſide himſelfe, Qui judicent populum de minoribus cauſis, ...which ſhall judge the people in ſmaller cauſes, referring the greater to him. The Rhemiſtes, and Roma- ...ſt (whoſe manner is to ſcrape all the refuſe of the Fathers) affirme likewiſe, That the faithfull ſhall ...and give ſentence with Chriſt at the latter day, wreſting the ſame text in Matthew, to the ſame ...purpoſe.

Contra. 1. The Apoſtles and Saints, are ſaid indeed to judge the world, but not in that ſenſe, as Chriſt ...is to be the Iudge of the world: but as he ſaith, his Word ſhall judge them at the latter day, Ioh. 12. ...that is, be a witneſſe againſt them: ſo the Word preached by the Saints in their life, and their conver- ...ſion following the ſame, ſhall be a witneſſe againſt the world, and ſo their condemnation: like as in the ...proceſſe of judgement here in earth, the evidence that is brought in, and the witneſſes produced, are ſaid ...to condemne the guilty partie, and to judge them, though the Iudge only give ſentence. Thus Ambroſe ...fully expoundeth this phraſe: Iudicabunt Sancti hunc mundum, quia exemplo fidei illorum perfidia mundi ...damnabitur; The Saints ſhall judge the world, becauſe by example of their faith, their perfidiouſneſſe ſhall be ...condemned. 2. For otherwiſe, if Chriſt ſhould obſerve the ſame forme, which Moſes did, to appoint coad- ...iutors, becauſe he alone ſufficed not, this were to derogate from his all ſufficient power, who needeth not ...man, any aſſiſtants or fellow helpers.

Vers. 22. Every great matter let them bring to thee. Upon this preſident, the Romaniſtes would ground ...papall reſervation of caſes, from whom no appeale, ſay they, is to be made, as there was not from Moſes. ...Quæſt. 11. in 18. cap. Exod.

Contra. 1. There is great difference betweene the reſervation of matters to Moſes, and of certaine ...to the Pope: for Moſes was ſet over but one nation, which at this time encamped together, within ...compaſſe of not many miles, and ſo they might with eaſe bring the weighty cauſes to him. But the ...Pope challengeth to be the ſupreme Judge over all the world: and ſo without infinite trouble, the grea- ...teſt cannot be brought unto him. 2. Moſes judgement was ſought for, becauſe hee could not erre, ...by often conference with God, to direct him, as the Pope hath not: and this Toſtatus confeſſeth; Ro- ...manus pontifex, &c. The Roman Biſhop, though he have great power, ſometime is not a man very vertuous, ...though he be, becauſe he hath not God preſent to anſwer unto all his demands, facilius errare poteſt, he may ...eaſily erre: therefore that is but a foppiſh and fawning concluſion of the Canoniſts: that the Pope ...habet jura in ſcrinio pectoris: All lawes in his breaſt. 3. Whereas Iethro intended in this device the ...eaſe of Moſes, not to goe farre for their cauſes, and Moſes ability to performe his office: neither of theſe ...conſequences is helped in making appeales to Rome: for neither is the Pope able to amend all ſuch ...wrongs, and the people would be infinitely moleſted to be hurried to Rome. 4. And if it were not for the ...gaine of the Court and Conſiſtory of Rome, they would deſire to bee eaſed rather of, than cumbred ...with appeales: But Moſes herein only ſought the profit of Gods people, not his owne. Simler.

6. Morall Obſervations.

1. Obſ. To take heed of idle and vaine talke.

Vers. THen Moſes told his father in law, &c. Moſes did conferre with Iethro about the wondrous ...workes of God, which the Lord had wrought for them: Unde arguuntur hi, qui vanis collo- ...quiis delectantur: They then are reproved, which are delighted with vaine talke. Ferus. Which may ſerve as ...a motive in our dayes, to cut off idle, if not very prophane conference when wee meet; remembring every ...idle words we muſt give an account. B. Babington.

2. Observ. Workes must be joyned with faith.

Vers.12. Then Iethro tooke burnt offerings,&c. Having beene thankfull in words, now he addeth deeds: for S. Iames calleth that a dead faith, where workes want; if we joyne both these together, as Iethro did, we shall fully give assurance both to others, and to our selves of our true faith, B. Babington.

3. Obs. That we should doe all our workes as in Gods sight.

Vers.12. They came to eat bread with Moses father in law before God. Hereupon Origen well noteth: Sancti manducant & bibunt in conspectu Dei, &c. The Saints doe eat and drinke in the sight of God, and all that they doe, they doe in his sight: And so the Apostle saith, Whether ye eat or drinke, or whatsoever ye doe, doe all to the glory of God; 1. *Cor.*10.31.

4. Obs. Diligence is required in a Magistrate.

Vers.13. The people stood about Moses, from morning to even. Moses singular diligence and paines is here set forth, in attending upon the causes of the people: Audiant hoc delicios Iudices nostri, qui vix ad horam, &c. Let our delicate Iudges heare this, which scarce indure an houre to heare the suiters causes. Diligence in the charge commited to us, is sweet unto God, and good to our selves: Come thou good and faithfull servant, will God say to the Magistrate, as well as to the Minister, Enter into the Lords joy, B. Babington.

5. Obs. Iudges and Magistrates specially must be men fearing God.

Vers.21. Fearing God, &c. The feare of God is a vertue most necessary in Judges, for hereupon hang all vertues: Abraham thinking that the feare of God was not in Gerar, despaired of any other vertue there to be found, *Gen.*20. B. Babington.

6. Obs. Good counsell is to be received at any hand.

Vers.24. So Moses obeyed, &c. In quo mite & modestum ingenium declarat, &c. Wherein Moses shewed a milde and modest disposition, not to refuse to receive wholesome counsell at any mans hand. Marbach. As the Apostle saith, Set up them which are least esteemed in the Church, 1. *Cor.*6.4. Good counsell proceeding even from simple and meane people, is not to be despised.

LONDON,

TO THE RIGHT HONOVRABLE HIS SINGVLAR GOOD LORD, SIR THOMAS EGERTON, Lord Ellesmere, Lord Chancellor of England, and of his Majesties most honourable privie Councell.

RIght Honourable, there is a saying, That nothing so soone waxeth old, as thankes for a benefit received: This imputation of unthankfull oblivion might justly fall upon mee, it having occasion to use my penne, I should in silence passe over your Honour: I cannot therefore forget your Honourable favour and bounty, which I have some yeeres past felt and found. The eye better seeth the object removed in equall distance from it, than when it is put close unto it: so a thankfull heart will as well consider of a benefit after, as in the first time when it is received. I hate flattery, neither have I used to fawne upon great men, in praising above desert, or blazing their names, whom their vertues commend not: yet I hold it as great a wrong not to ascribe praise where it is deserved, as it is follie to give it where it is not due. It is a good saying, It is seemely to give incense unto God, and praises unto good men: for the praise of the instrument redoundeth to him that handleth it, and the industry of the Minister commendeth the skill of the chiefe worker: and the acknowledging of the gifts and graces of men, setteth forth the praise of God that giveth them.

ἐὰν πάχεται ὑποδέσει ὡς χάρις.

Plutark. τὸν μὲν ἀληθινὸν τοῖς θεοῖς καὶ ἔπαινον τοῖς ἀγαθοῖς.

This therefore I cannot conceale, that I have found your Honour the great respecter, and only rewarder of my poore travels and labours. This I speake not, as though wee which by preaching and writing keepe the watch-tower against the enemy, ought to make the reward of the world the end and scope of our paines taken in the world: I hold it Pharisaicall to doe any thing, for the praise or recompence of men. This is sufficient for the servants of Christ, that their Lord hath promised; Thou shalt be recompenced at the resurrection of the just. Of his minde, that when one had said, It is an excellent thing for a man to obtain all that he desires: made this answer: Multò majus est non desiderare ea, quibus indiges: But it is a greater matter, not to desire at all the things which thou needest. But this I have mentioned, to note by the way the strange humour of this age of all presents, least esteemeth bookes, and vilipendeth no gift, as it doth the fruits of Scholars studies. I have read that the women among the people called led Iberi, did use every yeere to shew publikely their spinning worke, and that she was most honoured, which in the judgement of the men had laboured most.

Act. 9. 2. Cor. 11, 2.

If the Spinsters of these times, which spinne and weave garments, not with Dædala to cloathe the body, but with Paul to adorne the soule, were had in such regard, we should have more spinners, and better worke. Such bookes I confesse as feede mens fansies, and breed wanton delight, are had of some in price, when graver treatises are set light by: as one of Terentius Comedies, called Eunuchus, was valued at eight thousand peeces of money, which make two hundred crownes: more than all Tullies Orations, and other his learned workes were esteemed at. But the choice of bookes should bee as the choice of Physicians: Medicus non jucundior, sed utilior eligitur: A man will have a Physician rather profitable, that can doe him good, than pleasant to feede him with words. Such difference there is in bookes: they which please the eare doe flourish with leaves, but such as instruct the minde doe yeeld the fruit: the one as a song of Musicke, that endeth with the sound, the other as wholsome physicke, that worketh after it is gone: the bookes of the one are ὑπομνήματα, Commentaries to instruct, the other are μνήματα, Commemoratives of mens folly. Now what should be the reason, why bookes of Divinity are so much at many hands contemned, and treatises of vanity so highly commended, may easily be conjectured: for as Diogenes being asked, why men used to give unto the blind and lame, but not unto Philosophers, made this answer, Because they may thinke they may one day become blind and lame themselves, but never hope to be Philosophers: So mens affections being blind and lame, and their phantasies vainly bent, must needs delight in vaine and lame pamphlets which feede their humours, and cannot brooke that which would purge them. But leaving to complaine of that which I cannot helpe, I cannot but commend that which I heare, and have my selfe found: that your Lordships respective care in preferring freely men of desert, (a rare president in these corrupt times) and protecting and patronizing their labours, is not the meanest flower in your garland, nor the smallest pearle among your jewels, nor of the least grace among your vertues. But as Plutarke saith, The Moone never sheweth fairer, than when it is at the full: so your beneficence and favour toward such, sheweth your fulnesse, which with all other honourable parts I wish may still increase with you as the Moone, and never decrease as the Sunne.

Diogenes so distinguisheth the bookes of the learned and unlearned.

Luna nunquam pulchrior apparet quàm cum plena est.

Now in one word I will touch the occasion of my writing. As before handled, in my Commentary upon Genesis, the holy histories of Abraham, Izhak, Iakob, Ioseph: So observing the same method, I have entred into the history of Moses life and acts. I have chiefly handled the obscurer questions, which fall out in this booke of Exodus, not to bee inferiour (in mine opinion) either in depth of knowledge, or weight and pithinesse of argument or variety of light, to any in all the Scripture: Neither have I omitted the plainer observations (of most speciall note) fit for edifying: for, as Augustine well saith, omni copia scripturarum sanctarum, pascimur apertis, exercemur obscuris: illic omnes pellitur, hic fastidium: In the great plenty of the sacred Scriptures we are nourished with the plaine places, and exercised with the obscure; that driveth away hunger, and this satiety. Of Moses therefore the Writer of the Law, I thought good to write to a Moses in our times, a most honourable Professor and Iudge of law. Three things in Moſes are worthy of all eminent perſons to be imitated: his beginning without ambition, his proceeding without corruption, his ending with glory.

For the firſt, Moſes preſumptuouſly aſpired not to that high calling, to be the deliverer and Iudge of the Lords people, but by all meanes would have declined it. And as the Apoſtle noteth of Aaron, that no man taketh this honour to himſelfe, but he that was called of God, as Aaron: So was it true of Moſes: and therefore as Hierome ſaith, Indignum ſe judicans miniſterio Dei, major effectus eſt: While hee accounted himſelfe unworthy of the ſervice of God, he became greater. Heb.5.4.

Secondly, in the execution of his office, Moſes was moſt faithfull: as the Scripture giveth teſtimony of him, that he was faithfull in all his houſe, *Heb.*3.2. Hee delivered the oppreſſed, delayed not [b] the right of the poore, [c] received no gifts, corrupted not judgement, ſought not himſelfe. The people waited upon Moſes, but from morning to even, Exodus 18.14. which Iethro his father in law thought to be too much, that the people ſhould ſtay ſo long for judgement, and therefore adviſeth him to take a more ſpeedy courſe for expedition. It was ad- Exod.18. [a] Exod. 2.12. [b] Exod. 18.14. [c] Deut.16.19. [d] Ibid.

mirable that Moſes having ſix hundred thouſand people to attend upon him for their cauſes, held them no longer, than from morning to even. Herein your Honour, with other of your honourable place, ſhall doe well (as your Honour hath well ſhewed heretofore your care that way) to imitate Moſes, in abridging the tediouſneſſe and length of ſuits, and in taking care that poore ſuters bee not wearied with long attendance. But this is more to bee wondred at, that Moſes having two ſonnes, Gerſhon and Eleazar, ſought not their advancement, nor to make them great, ſeeing he conſecrated Aaron and his ſonnes for the Prieſthood, and ordained Ioſhua his miniſter and ſervant, to ſucceede him in the government, making no mention at all, nor commending his ſonnes unto God for either place. Wherein hee well declared, that hee affected not the greatneſſe of his owne houſe, but ſtudied wholly for the welfare of the people of God. And hereof Iehonadab followed his maſters ſteps, who divided the land of Canaan among the tribes, and left nothing for himſelfe, but that the people laſt of all caſt him out a part, and that but a meane one in the barren mountaines: as Hierome noteth, writing of that Chriſtian Matron Paula, how ſhee viſited the ſepulchre of Moſes: Satiſque mirata eſt, quod diſtributer poſſeſſionem ſibi montana & aſpera deſegit: And marvelled very much, that the divider of the poſſeſſions choſe the hilly and craggie places for himſelfe: and he addeth further: Imo Ioſua nihil ſibi reliquit, quod non ab Iſraelitis illi conceſſa: Ioſhua left nothing for himſelfe, but a portion was given him by the Iſraelites: as is evident Ioſh. 19.49. Whence it cannot be inferred that it is unlawfull for Governors to provide for their kindred and poſterity: Ioſeph being in authority nouriſhed his father and brethren: but hereby it appeareth, that the chiefeſt care of Magiſtrates, who are Fathers of the Common-wealth, ſhould be for the publike weale, more than for their private wealth: As the Apoſtle ſaith, I ſeeke not yours but you, for the children ought not to lay up for the parents, but the fathers for the children. And Bernard ſaith well: Præes, nunquid ut Hieron.epitaph. Paulæ. 2.Cor.12.14. Bernard. de conſiderat. lib.3.

THE SECOND PART OF THIS BOOKE OF EXODVS, OF THE CONSTITUTION AND SETling of both the Ecclesiasticall and civill State of Israel, by most just and godly Lawes.

The first part of this booke concerneth the deliverance and redemption of the people, both from the cruell bondage of the Egyptians, and from other dangers, which befell them in the desart. Now followeth the other generall part, of the constitution and setling of their State, by wholesome and good Lawes, both morall, judiciall, and ceremoniall, to chap. 30. with the execution and practice of the people, to the end of the booke.

CHAP. XIX.

1. The Method and Argument.

This Chapter containeth a description of the preparation of the people, to receive the Lawes afterward given them: which preparation is both generall to *vers.*9. then particular to the end of the Chapter.

In the generall preparation, first the circumstances are set downe, both of time, place, and persons, when they removed, from whence and whither, and who, the whole host of Israel, *vers.*1,2.

Secondly, the generall preparation followeth. 1. Here is set downe the Lords loving invitation of Israel to be his people, propounded to Moses, consisting both of a rehearsall of the benefits, which the Lord had done for them, *vers.*4. of the condition of their obedience required, *vers.*5. of a most ample promise, to make them his peculiar people above all the earth, *vers.*6. 2. Then is shewed the acceptance by the people of this gratious offer, propounded unto them by Moses, *vers.*7. thankfully received by the people, *vers.*8.

The particular preparation sheweth partly what was done the two dayes before the Law was given, to *vers.*15. and what upon the third, to vers. 25.

In the first, there is: 1. The Lords prescription to Moses, both how he will talke and commune with him, *vers.*9. then that he should sanctifie the people, *vers.*10. with the end thereof, *vers.*11. that they may be ready: thirdly, the interdict followeth, of not comming neere the mountaine, *vers.*12. with the perill and danger thereof, *vers.*13.

2. The obedience of Moses, and the people to the Lords commandement, *vers.*14,15. Upon the third are declared, 1. the manner of the Lords appearing in mount Sinai, with thunder and lightning, *vers.*16,18. 2. The placing and disposing of the people, *vers.*17. 3. The communication of the Lord with Moses. First in generall, *vers.*19,20. Then in particular: which containeth the Lords charge to Moses, concerning the people and Priests, *vers.*21,22. The exception of Moses and Aaron, *vers.*24. interposed by the meanes of Moses answer, *vers.*24. Then the execution hereof by Moses, *vers.*25.

2. The divers readings.

*vers.*1. In the third new moone. I. better than, in the third moneth. cater. for he saith afterward, in the same day it is, when the new moneth began. I.

*vers.*6. A kingdome of Priests. B. G. A. that is, a Priestly kingdome. V. L. P. that is, a sacred and holy kingdome: not, a royall Priesthood. for the latter substantive is put for the adjective, not the first. B. G. A.

*vers.*7. Proposed all these words. B. V. cum cater. all these things. G. debharim, words. B. cum cater.

I. G. Vers.9. After Moses had reported, &c. or, for Moses had reported. G. better than, and Moses reported. A.P. or, Moses therefore reported. L. or, but Moses reported. S. It is better read in the preter-pluperfect tense, for Moses had reported their words before, *vers.*8.

B.G. cum cæter. Vers.19. God answered him by voice. B.G. cum cæter. God answered him. L. Here these words, by voice, omitted.

V.I.A.P. Vers.25. Lest he breake in upon them. V.I. or, make a breach upon them. A.P. better than, lest he destroy them. B.G.L. or, destroy of them. S. ham, signifieth in or upon them.

3. The explanation of doubtfull and difficult questions.

Quest. I. Of what yeere this was the third moneth.

Vers.1. In the third moneth, &c. 1. It is not expressed here, of what yeere this was the third month. But it is easily gathered, that it was in the first yeere of the departure of the children of Israel out of Egypt: for although the Scripture usually in the computation of time, doth expresse the yeere as well as the moneth: yet sometime the yeere is omitted: when either by the circumstance and order of the story, it may be gathered, as Numb. 20. vers. 1. The first moneth is named, but the yeere is omitted, which was the 40. yeere, because the order of the story, and course of time will leade us to that yeere: else, when as by conference with other places, the yeere may be found out, as seeing *Numb.*10.11 they departed from Sinai in the second yeere, and second moneth; it must needs be, that they came thither in the third moneth of the first yeere. Tostat. 2. For in this place were all those things done, which are described by Moses, in the rest of this booke of Exodus, and in the booke following of Leviticus. Which things could not bee done in a short time: therefore they here encamped almost a whole yeere before they removed.

Quest. II. What day of the moneth the same day was.

The same day. 1. Some thinke, the same day is named, wherein they came from Rephidim: because they tooke a longer journey than usuall upon that day, even from Rephidim to Sinai. Lippom. Vat. 2. Some, because upon that day the three moneths were expired, after their departure out of Egypt. Oleaster. But there were only two moneths expired, and the third now begun. 3. On the same day, that is, the third day, as it was the third moneth. Hugo de S. Victor. But upon the third day of the moneth was the law given, against which day the people are warned to prepare themselves, *vers.*11. 4. The same day then hath relation to the words before, the third moneth, or rather the third new moone, when the moneth began: for chodesh doth as well signifie the new moone, as the moneth, as 1. Sam. 20.5. to morrow is chodesh the new moone, which is the first day of the moneth: The same day, when it was new moone, when the third moneth began. Iun. For of no other day hath the moneth the denomination but of the first. Tostat. And because the day is certainly expressed, as is usuall in Scripture, it must needs have reference to the third new moone, rather than moneth before spoken of, Piscator. 5. Moses is so diligent to describe the moneth and day, when they came to Sinai, because this was the place to the which the Lord called them, and wherein the Law was given, and the Tabernacle erected; and where the Lord entred into a league, and covenant with his people. Ferus.

Quest. III. Whether this first day of the third moneth, were the 47. day from the passeover.

Now how many dayes this was from the pasch, there are divers opinions: 1. Cajetane thinketh it was the 45. day, counting together 15. dayes remaining of the first moneth from the passeover, and 29. of the second, and so the first day of the third moneth maketh 45. But beside, that the Hebrewes counted 30. dayes to a moneth: by this account, the day of giving the Law, which followed the fourth day after at the furthest, should not be the Pentecost, that is, the 50. day. 2. The most received opinion is, that this was the 47. day from the passeover, accounted thus, 16. dayes remaining of the first moneth, 30. of the second, and the first of the third, which make 47. Iun. Simler. Rupertus. But by this reckoning, the day wherein the Law was given, which was the third day after, as some held, as Tostatus, should be but the 46. day: which is generally held of all to be the 50. which is called Pentecost, upon which day the holy Ghost came downe upon the Apostles, that the type and shadow may agree with the substance. To remove this doubt: 1. Some say, that the Law was given on the 49. day; but the tables of stone were delivered on the 50. *Rupertus l.3. in Exod. c.*23. 2. Some that 49. is counted for 50. Simler. Or that the Law was given not upon the third day, but the fourth day of the moneth: or that 31. dayes must bee reckoned to the second moneth. Simler. But the best answer of these is, that the Law was not given before the fourth day of the moneth, which was the third day from the time taht the Lord spake to Moses, to sanctifie the people, *vers.*10. as shall be further shewed, *quest.*16, following. 3. Augustines computation is, that wee must take 17. dayes of the first moneth, because they eat the Passeover upon the 14. day at even, and 30. of the second moneth, and three of the third, and so have we full 50. dayes: So account also Gloss. ordinar. Ferus. Saving that they make this first day of the third moneth, but the 47. day, which is this last account must bee 48. for 17. of the first, and 30. of the second moneth, make 47. dayes, and then the first day of the third should be the 48. But there remained not 17. dayes of the first moneth to be counted, as shall be further declared, *quest.*16.

Quest. IV. Of the place where they encamped.

Vers. 2. They came to the desert of Sinai, and encamped, &c. 1. It is not said as before, they came by their journeyes to Rephidim, chap. 17. 1. because they had other stations before, there omitted, as Marah and Alush: but here they came without any stay, from Rephidim to the desart of Sinai. Tostat. 2. This was the 12. station which the Israelites had after they came out of Egypt. Hieron. This place was distant from the red sea about 90. miles, so that the Israelites might march some 8. miles a day: which considering their carriages, and their little ones, which went with them, was sufficient for a dayes journey. Simler. 3. There was both the mount Sinai, and the desert of Sinai, which was the region, which lay about Sinai, so called of the mountaine. Lippoman. 4. Whereas they are twice said to have encamped, which the Latine interpreteth by two words, castrametari, to encampe. and tentoria figere, to pitch their tents, though the same word chanah, be repeated in the originall. Some make this difference: that the first encamping was the appointing unto every one his standing places by certaine Officers: and then, according to this designement, they pitched their tents, Tostat. Lyran. But this is more curious than needfull, the reason of this repetition is, because, first the place in generall is described, where they camped, namely, in the wildernesse, secondly, the particular place is designed, they camped before the mount.

Quest. V. Whether the Israelites encamped on the East side of the mount Sinai.

Vers. 2. They encamped before the mount. 1. Lyranus thinketh that the Israelites pitched on the East side of the mount: so that the mount it selfe lay Westward from them, that they might bee ready to worship the Lord, descending upon the mount: for the Jewes used to worship toward the West: the Tabernacle being so placed, that the doore was Eastward, and the most holy place toward the West: and the starres in the heavens take their course from the East toward the West, as Nehemiah saith, All the host of heaven worshipped thee, Nehem. 9. 6.

But this opinion of Lyranus is confuted by Burgens. and Tostatus: their reasons are these: 1. The people when they came to mount Sinai, did not know, whether the Lord would appeare in any such visible manner as he did; and therefore it is not like, they did so dispose themselves, or to such an end. Tostat. 2. The Israelites indeed did worship toward the West, when they were in the Tabernacle; but when they were out of the Tabernacle, which was pitched in the middest of the campe, then they all worshipped toward the Tabernacle, whether it were East or West, otherwise some should have turned their backes upon it. So before the Tabernacle was set up, when Moses went unto his Tabernacle, all the people worshipped at their tent doores, Exod. 33. 10. but all their tent doores could not open one way toward the West. Tostat. 3. The Israelites in captivity worshipped toward Jerusalem, as Daniel opened his window that way, which was Southward from Babylon, and Babylon lay North from Jerusalem. Tostat. And wheresoever the Jewes are at this day thorow Europe, they worship toward Jerusalem Burgens. And Salomon prayeth, that when the people went to battell, and prayed toward the house of God, that the Lord would heare them, 1. King. 8. 44. But being abroad in battell, the Temple could not be alwayes Westward from them. 4. Beside, though at other times they prayed toward the West, yet wheresoever they saw the visible presence of God, they were notwithstanding their usuall custome, to turne themselves that way. Tostat.

2. Tostatus opinion then is, that they pitched on the South side of mount Sinai, because they came from Egypt, which lay Southward from mount Sinai. 3. But the more probable opinion is, that they lay round and compasse about the mount, as Paul. Burgens. That they might the better heare and see what was done: as the Lord saith to Moses, That the people may heare, while I talke with thee, vers. 9. and Moses is commanded to set markes for the people round about the hill, vers. 12. so that it seemeth the campe of Israel compassed the mountaine, though not round about, yet on more sides than one. But Andreas Thoring the Replier against Burgensis, taketh this exception, that the host of Israel could not lie about mount Sinai: because on the one end toward Egypt, the hill is continued, and Iosephus calleth Horeb a part of it; and on the other side some thinke, that mount Sinai is extended even unto the land of promise, because of the Apostles words: Sinai mons est in Arabia, & conjunctus est ei, qua nunc est Hierusalem: Sinai is a mountaine in Arabia, and is joyned unto that which is now Ierusalem: Galath. 4. So the Replier, Repl. in 19. cap. Exod.

Answ. 1. We grant that the hilly tract, where Sinai is situate, reacheth a long way toward Egypt, and is called Horeb: but Sinai was an high hill over all the rest, of such an height, as that they could scarce see to the top of it, as Iosephus writeth, lib. 3. cap 4. This need bee no let, but that some part of the host might lie on that side toward Egypt, though it were somewhat hilly: and admit they did not; this maketh against Tostatus opinion, that thinketh they incamped all on the South side toward Egypt: they lay round about on the other sides, the South side only excepted. 2. That Sinai is not continued unto the land of Canaan, it is evident by all mappes and descriptions of that country: the word συστοιχεῖ, which the Apostle useth, signifieth the answering or correspondencie of Sinai, nnto the earthly Jerusalem, in that allegory, which the Apostle maketh, not any conjunction, in situation. And so the Replier is answered.

Quest. VI. How Moses is said to goe up unto God.

Moses went up unto God, &c. 1. Some thinke that Moses went aside to give himselfe to prayer and meditation, as he was wont. Calvin. But this phrase of going up unto God, sheweth, that it was some extraordinary calling of Moses unto that place. 2. Others thinke that Moses went up into this mount uncalled, because there the Lord sometime appeared before in the fiery bush, and had appointed that to be the place, where they should sacrifice unto him: and therefore Moses went up to the mountaine, but not to the top of the mountaine, remembring that hee was before reproved for approaching so neare. Lyran. Tostat. 3. But it is more likely, that Moses for the same reason went not up into the mount, till the Lord called him, because of the reverence of the place; and so the words are to be read. Vnto the Lord had called him. Simler. Genevens. So also Oleaster. And then, hee is said to goe up to God; not because it was the mountaine where God had appeared: Vatab. Or because there was the cloud, or some visible signe of Gods presence. Simler. But for that he heard Gods voice calling unto him from the top of the hill: Quamvis nulla species sensibilis scribatur apparens in monte, ipsa tamen vocatio, &c. Although no sensible shew is written to have appeared in the mountaine, yet the very calling of God put Moses in hope there to find God. Cajetan.

QUEST. VII. Why both these names of Iacob and Israel are joyned together.

Vers. 3. THou shalt thus say to the house of Iacob, and tell the children of Israel, &c. 1. Hee calleth them the house or family of Iacob, because as one house is to the master and father of the house, so all that people were in respect of Iacob. Tostat. They had all their beginning out of that family. 2. He calleth them the house of Iacob, rather than of Abraham, or Izak, because they had each of them but two sonnes, nay in effect but one sonne a piece, because the other were not counted their seede: which were not sufficient to make a family, but Iacob had 12. sonnes. Oleaster. 3. Both these names are joyned together, Iacob, and Israel: to shew, that as the first was Iacobs naturall and originall name, the other was given him by grace, so there were two sorts of Israelites, those, which were such only after the flesh, others that were true Israelites according to promise. Simler. And that as Iacob had that name of supplanting, and Israel for prevailing with God, so they should seeke to be answerable to both these names in supplanting of vice, and being strong with God. Ferus. And as Israel was a name given of God, so they bearing this name, should assure themselves, they were the people of God.

QUEST. VII. How the Lord is said to carry them upon Eagles wings.

Vers. 4. I Carried you upon Eagles wings, &c. 1. Some by these two wings understand Moses and Aaron, by whom the people were led: Gloss. interlinear. but Moses and Aaron themselves were carried upon these Eagles wings. 2. Some understand the two Testaments: Gloss. ordinar. but they as yet had received neither of the Testaments. 3. Therefore hereby is metaphorically described, the singular protection of this people, and their mighty defence: and in divers respects: 1. In respect of their speedy deliverance, that all of them in one day, being such a great multitude, came out of Egypt, which was an admirable thing. Cajetan. 2. In that they passed many difficulties, in going thorow the red Sea, in travelling thorow the wildernesse: they went thorow all these hazards and difficulties, as though they had been carried upon Eagles wings: Tostat. 3. The Hebrewes here write, that the Eagle taketh her young ones and carrieth them upon her backe, whereas other birds carry them in their talants, whereby the Lord shewed his love: Genevens. and their safe and secure defence: that they were extra omnem telí jactum without the compasse of all danger. Tostat. Lippom. But this conjecture of the Eagles carrying her young ones upon her shoulders, frivolum videtur, seemeth to be of no great credit; Calvin: filitium &c. it may be thought to be fained: Oleaster. The Eagle is said to beare them on her wings, because, when the young ones begin to fly, shee doth support them with her wings, lest they should fall: Oleaster. and she soareth with them aloft, using them to flie against the Sunne. Calvin. And so the meaning is, that as the Eagle supporteth and protecteth her young ones, while they flie aloft, that no danger can come neere them: so the Lord protected his people. 4. And as the Eagle stirreth her nest, and provoketh the young to fly, and defendeth them in flying, when she changeth her place and nest: so the Lord transported and removed his people, stirred them out of their uncleane nest in Egypt, to bring them to Canaan. Oleaster. As Moses setteth forth this similitude at large, Deut. 32. 11. As an Eagle stirreth up her nest, fluttereth over her birds, stretcheth out her wings, taketh them and beareth them on her wings. 5. And as the Eagle taketh her young ones aloft: sic Deus eduxit eos elevatos in filios Dei: So God tooke them, advanced or lifted up to be sonnes of God: and as the Eagle from aloft defendeth her young ones, so God de superna nubi pugnavit eis: did from the cloud above fight for his people. Cajetan.

QUEST. VIII. How they are said to be the Lords chiefe treasure.

Vers. 4. YE shall be my chiefe treasure, &c. 1. The word is segulah, which signifieth a speciall and peculiar treasure above the rest: as that is called peculium which the sonne and heire of the house hath of his owne, beside the right of his fathers inheritance, which he may dispose of as he thinketh good: so the meaning is this, that although the whole earth be the Lords by the right of creation, yet this people should have a speciall interest in God before all other. Tostat. 2. Beside, the Lord had given unto them his law, as to no other people in the world, which he had committed unto them as a chiefe and principall treasure. Vatab. 3. And herein as the Lord sheweth what prerogative they had over other people: thereby is signified how deare and precious they were in the sight of God: Vos veluti populum quem eximium mihi consecravi: I have consecrated you to my selfe as an excellent people. Theodoret.

Quest. IX. How they are ſaid to be a kingdome of Prieſts.

Verſ. 6. Ye ſhall be unto me a kingdome of Prieſts. 1. That as the Levites and Prieſts were choſen out of all the tribes of Iſrael, to bee peculiar unto the Lord for his ſervice: ſo the Lord had choſen the ſeede of Abraham out of all the nations of the world. Theodoret. 2. Or as the Prieſts did ſpecially attend the ſervice of God, ſo the people of Iſrael ſhould all be as Prieſts, in reſpect of other nations, addicted to the worſhip of the true God. Toſtat. So that all other kingdomes were but profane in reſpect of them. 3. Hereby alſo is ſignified their principality above other nations, as Prieſts were reverenced and honoured of all; and the ſpeciall care which God had of them, as they themſelves had ſeene in Egypt, how the Prieſts were reverenced of all, and maintained out of the common Treaſury. Cajetan. 4. The Chalde readeth, ye ſhall be Kings and Prieſts, that is, they ſhould under the regiment and kingdome of God be as Kings: Quia nullum optabilius, & felicius regnum, quam nos Deo ſubjicere: Becauſe there is no more happy kingdome, than to ſubject our ſelves unto God. Calv. for God was their King, as the Lord ſaith to Samuel, They have not caſt thee off, but caſt me off, that I ſhould not reigne over them. Cajet. 5. They are alſo ſhall be a kingdome of Prieſts, becauſe Chriſt was to bee borne of that nation both King and Prieſt: Jeſus; which his ſpirituall kingdome and prieſthood by faith is communicated to his members: whom he hath made Kings in ſubduing ſinne and Satan, and Prieſts in offering ſpirituall ſacrifices unto God: as S. Peter expoundeth, and applieth this place, 1. Pet. 2. Cajetan. Lippoman. 6. Oleaſter bringeth foure interpretations of theſe words: 1. That they ſhould be a kingdome governed by Prieſts: for the Lord was angry that the people had caſt off the government of Samuel. But it was never the Lords meaning, that Levi ſhould have the civill government of his people, though ſome of Levi were extraordinarily raiſed up as Moſes, Samuel, to judge his people, becauſe the ſcepter was promiſed to Iudah, Gen. 49. 10. 2. The word elohaim may be tranſlated, Princes, as well as Prieſts, and then the meaning is, they ſhould all bee as Princes, that is, ſubject to none but unto God; But it is not like that two words of like ſignification ſhould be put together, as Kingdome and Princes: therefore the other ſenſe, of Prieſts is here more fit. 3. They ſhould be a kingdome of Prieſts, that is, all of them addicted and devoted to the ſervice of God, as if they were all Prieſts. 4. Or they ſhould be an holy people in reſpect of other nations: and in compariſon of them as Prieſts. Theſe two laſt ſenſes are moſt fit, and agreeable to the reſt before alleaged.

1. Sam. 8. 7.

Quest. X. By what reaſons the Lord perſwadeth the people and why.

Verſ. 8. And the people anſwered. 1. Thus by theſe perſwaſions before propounded, the Lord thought good to winne the obedience and hearts of the people: for ſeeing the Lord was to impoſe upon them a law: & lex eſt quoddam onus, and the law is a certaine burthen: for where a law is ſet, the will of man is limited, which man naturally deſireth to be left free: and therefore it was requiſite that the people ſhould be thus prepared to obedience: Toſtat. quæſt. 2. 2. The Lord perſwadeth them partly with the commemoration of benefits paſt, their deliverance out of Egypt, and their protection in the wilderneſſe, which is ſet forth by an elegant ſimilitude taken from the Eagle, which ſupporteth her young ones with her wings: partly with the promiſe of future bleſſings, that they ſhould be a peculiar people to himſelfe. Simler. 3. Then whereas men naturally partim faſtu & altitudine turgent, partim ſecuritate torpent: partly doe ſwell with pride and haughtineſſe, partly grow ſlothfull by ſecurity: Calvin. Theſe perſwaſions as ſoveraigne medicines doe meet with both theſe inconveniences: the remembrance of Gods benefits doth farre abate their pride, that they ſhould not aſcribe their deliverance to themſelves: the promiſe of further bleſſings would provoke them not to bee idle. 4. If the remembrance of theſe temporall benefits was effectuall toward them; how much more ought wee to remember, Quod nos abundantiore gratia liberet à peccatis noſtris, portavit Deus, homo factus, &c. That God made man hath delivered us by more abundant grace from our ſinnes, and carried us unto mount Sion to the celeſtiall Ieruſalem? &c. Rupertus.

Quest. XI. Whether the people unfainedly here promiſe obedience.

Verſ. 8. All that the Lord hath commanded, will we doe. 1. It ſeemeth, that at this preſent, the people had a good deſire and full intent to keepe all the commandements of God: for otherwiſe the Lord would not have commended them: thus ſaying, Deut. 5. 28. I have heard the voice of the words of this people, which they have ſpoken unto thee: they have well ſaid, all that they have ſpoken: O that there were ſuch an heart in them to feare me, and keepe my commandements alway. The Lord would not both for the preſent have approved their ſaying, and wiſhed a continuance of their diſpoſition, if it had not proceeded from a good affection. Toſtat. quæſt. 3. Nec eos quicquam ſimulaſſe credibile eſt: It is not credible or like, that they diſſembled at this time. Calvin. 2. But although this their readineſſe to obey, were not without the motion of the ſpirit of God: in pleriſq; tamen temporariam fuiſſe promptitudinem, &c. yet that it was but a temporary promptitude, a willingneſſe for a time in the moſt of them, their doings, which followed, declare. Simler. So their firſt fault here committed is their frailty and inconſtancy: Propenſus eſt populus, ſed fragilis & inconſtans: The people ſeeme to bee ready, yet fraile and inconſtant: Pellican. Caro ſolet multa promittere, nihil præſtare: The fleſh uſeth to promiſe much, and performe nothing. Ferus. So that herein appeareth their temerity and raſhneſſe, that promiſe great things as Peter did: Sic faciunt, qui propriis confidunt viribus: As all they doe, which truſt in their owne ſtrength. Lippoman. 3. And ſeeing the people doe of themſelves vow obedience to the law: they afterward are moſt juſtly puniſhed for the tranſgreſſion of the law, quaſi voti rei, as breakers of their vow and promiſe made unto God. Gloſſ. ordinar.

Quest. XII. How the Lord is said to come in the thicke cloud, when, and in what thicke cloud it was.

Vers. 9. Loe I come unto thee in a thicke cloud. 1. Before the Lord came and appeared in the cloud, but not to this end, to speake to Moses in the hearing of the people, and to give them a law: for before the people had promised their obedience the Lord would thrust upon them a law, against their willes. Tostat. 2. Some thinke that presently the Lord came to Moses in a thicke cloud: Intelligendum absque omni hæsitatione est: It must be understood without any deferring. Cajetan. But the cloud came not presently: for the Lord thus spake to Moses upon the first or second day: the cloud came not before the third day, vers. 16. Tostat. And when the cloud appeared, the Lord talked with Moses out of the cloud, but that was not before the third day. 3. Neither is it like that this thicke cloud was the cloudy piller which used to goe before the host: as the Septuagint reade, ἐν στύλῳ νεφέλης, in the piller of the cloud: and so the Chalde also: for this cloud was major & densior, both greater and thicker, for it covered all the mount: and by way of distinction it is called a thicke cloud. Lippoman. 4. In that he calleth it a thicke cloud, quadrat patefactionibus veteris testamenti, &c. it agreeth to the revelations of the old Testament, Simler. Tunc enim Deus in caligine apparuit, id est, in umbra & figuris: For then the Lord appeared in a darke cloud, that is, in shadowes and figures. Ferus. 5. Beside hereby is shewed, quod in præsenti non habemus nisi cognitionem ænigmaticam in divinis: That in this present world wee have but a darke knowledge in divine things: as the Apostle saith, Now wee see thorow a glasse darkly, 1. Cor. 13. 12. Lyran. 6. But God is said in Scripture to come, metaphorically: Sicut sol dicitur intrare domum, vel exire: As the sunne is said to come into the house, or goe out, when his beames only enter: so God is said to come, per influentiam bonitatis, by the influence of his goodnesse, and by illuminating the minde: as here he commeth to Moses. Lippom. ex Thom.

Quest. XIII. Why the Lord talketh with Moses in the hearing of the people.

That the people may heare while I talke with thee. 1. The Lord then spake not to the people out of the mount, but he spake to Moses in the hearing of the people, as vers. 19. it is said, Moses spake, and God answered him by voice: for God spake to Moses to this end, that hee might get him credit and authority with the people, which could not have beene, if the Lord had spoken to all the people. Tostat. 2. Beside, here is a difference made betweene the Lords speaking to Moses now, and afore time: for then hee spake unto him secretly, but now in the audience of the people. Lippo. 3. And whereas before God had confirmed Moses authority with miracles, so now hee would by a more certaine way give him authority in speaking to him by his owne voice in the hearing of others: for there may bee false miracles, as it is said, Antichrist shall come with lying signes, 2. Thes. 2. But when God himselfe speaketh there can be no errour, or doubt: Tostat. 4. The makers of lawes among the Heathen to winne credit to their lawes, have imagined the Gods to be the authors of them: as Minos ascribed the Cretensian lawes to Iupiter: Lycurgus the Lacedemonian lawes to Apollo: Zoroastres the Bactrian lawes to Cramases: Zamulxis the Scythian lawes to Vesta. But those were onely devices. This Law-giver Moses, most certainely received his lawes from Iehovah: Borrh. 5. And in that it is said, that they may believe thee for ever, God would not, ad breve tempus fidem servo suo Mosi adstruere, &c. God would not for a short time only get credit unto Moses: but that they might also beleeve him being dead: Calvin.

Quest. XIV. Why Moses is said twice to have reported the peoples words unto God.

Vers. 9. For Moses had told the words of the people to the Lord. Whereas it is said also before, That Moses reported the words of the people to the Lord, vers. 8. 1. Some thinke this to be a repetition of the same thing, which is usual in Scripture. Tostat. But the Scripture useth no needlesse repetitions, such as this should seeme to be, if it were a bare iteration of the same thing. 2. Some thinke the sentence is transposed, and that both these clauses should be put together: Moses told the words of the people to the Lord: And when Moses had reported the words of the people, &c. Hug. de S. Victor. But this were to teach the spirit of God to speake. 3. Cajetan will have the first not to be Moses relation, but onely Moses returning or intendment to report unto God the words of the people: but that, Moses was Præoccupatus à Deo, antequam relationem faceret: Moses was prevented of God, before he made relation. But the words of the text are against this exposition, for in the first place it is said, that Moses did report their words, as it is expressed afterward. 4. Therefore the last clause is better thus read, in the pleterpluperfect tense: for Moses had reported. Simler. Genevens. Or, after Moses had reported: so that this is the meaning: that when Moses had related their words unto God, then the Lord thus spake to Moses. 5. And Moses declareth the peoples words unto God, not as though the Lord was ignorant: Sed ut bona voluntas populi tanquam Deo placita præsentetur: But that the good mind of the people should bee presented unto God, as pleasing unto him. Lyran. And herein Moses shewed his good affection, Gaudet de profectu populi, &c. As a good Prince hee rejoyced to see the people profit. Ferus.

Quest. XV. Why they are bidden to wash their garments.

Vers. 10. Sanctifie them, and let them wash their cloathes. 1. This washing of the garments, though in it selfe it was of no force to sanctification, yet it had a double profitable use: pertinuit ad disciplinam, &c. it belonged to the externall discipline, to shew their reverence in the presence of God. Simler. As it is noted for a contempt, to come with filthy garments before a great man. Tostat. Beside, it was Symbolum internæ sanctificationis, it was A symbole of their inward sanctification. Simler. Ex his enim intelligere

potest

...multo magis mentem expurgari debere, &c. For hereby they might understand, that their minde was much more to be purged. Theodoret. 2. Beside, admonendi erant suæ immunditiæ: They were to be admonished of their impurity. Simler. That they should remember how they had beene defiled and polluted with the idolatry, and other corruptions of Egypt: As Iacob, being to go up to build an Altar in Bethel, doth purge his family, and biddeth them cast away their strange Gods, and change their garments. Tostat. quæst. 5. But why they are not bid to change their garments, as Iacob spake to his houshold, but onely to wash them: these two reasons may be yeelded: because in Iacobs family there were not many, and he was rich, so his servants might have change of rayment: but the Israelites were many, and among them divers were that had not double rayment. Tostat. quæst. 6. Beside, the Israelites garments did not wax old all the time of their travell in the wildernesse: therefore the Lord would not have these garments changed, that thereby they might have experience of the power and providence of God, that watched over them. Lyran.

Quæst. XVI. Whether this were the third day of the moneth when the law was given.

Let them bee ready on the third day, &c. 1. The opinion of some of the Rabbines is, that this was not the 3. day of the moneth, but the 6. day: and the third from that time, when the Lord spake to Moses: for they say that upon the first day of the moneth, Moses went up to God, and received that message to bee delivered to the people, and came downe the same day and stayed the next and received not the answer of the people untill the 3. day. R. Salom. Lyran. Cajetanus is of the same opinion, that the first day of the moneth, was but the 45. day after their departure out of Egypt, and that the Lord spake the 48. day, bid the people to bee ready against the third day after. Contra. But this is not like, for so he would have shewed great negligence in Moses, if he should have stayed so long, before hee delivered the peoples minde to the Lord, seeing mount Sinai was so neere unto the host. 2. Some thinke that it was the third of the moneth, and that it hath relation to the first day mentioned, vers. 1. Tostat. quæst. 10. Lodo. Ferus. But this cannot stand neither: for both Ferus, and Gloss. interlin. doe make the first day of the moneth but the 47. day: then the third day wherein the law was given, was but the 49. day: but the day wherein the law was given, is held of all to bee the Pentecost, the 50. day. Some to take away this doubt, would borrow 17. dayes of the first moneth, and 30. of the next, and 3. of the third: and so the giving of the law shall fall out upon the 50. day: So Augustine, Gloss. ordin. But there remained onely 14. dayes of the first moneth to be counted, the Passeover being kept upon the 14. day at even: therefore they cannot make their reckoning of 17. dayes remaining in that moneth: and to account 31. dayes to the next moneth, as some doe, it was against the custome of the Hebrewes. 3. Therefore it must thus stand: that on the first day of the moneth, when the host was come into the wildernesse of Sinai, Moses went up to the Lord, and came downe with the message to the people: and then the next day went up with the peoples answer unto God: for it is not like that all the host came thither, and Moses went up, and came downe, and propounded the Lords words to the Elders, and they to the people, and received their answer, and returned the same, all upon one day. And Cajetanes conceit herein is not to be refused: that, where the Lord saith, To day and to morrow sanctifie them, Insinuatur, quid hæc dicta fuerint mane: It is signified that this was said in the morning. This then was spoken upon the second day in the morning, and the third day from thence the law was given, which was not the third, but the fourth day of the moneth. In Simler. Rupertus also agreeth, that the first day of the third moneth was the 47. day after the departure: and that the fourth day after, which was the 50. day, Moses received the tables of the law: but he gathereth, that the thicke cloud, with the thunder and the lightning, were seene and heard the day before, which was the 49. But it is evident by the text, that upon the third day was the voice of the Lord heard talking with Moses, vers. 19.

Quæst. XVII. Whether the 15. day of the moneth were one of the fifty which went before the giving of the Law.

Hee ariseth another doubt, whether in the computation of these 50. dayes after the Passeover, the next day after they had eaten the paschall lambe, be included in that number, or that there were fifty dayes. 1. Some doe hold that the 15. day, being the morrow after the Pasch, must bee excluded, because in the law of the Pentecost, they began the account of seven weekes upon the 16. day, the day after the Sabbath, or first solemne day of the Passeover: as is further to be seene, Levit. 23. 11. and seven weekes complete, the which make 49. dayes, the next day which was the 50. was the day of Pentecost. Cajetan. But it is not necessary, that this first 50. day should be accounted after that rule, excepting the morrow after the Passeover: as it may appeare partly by the text: When yee bee come into the land which I give you, vers. 10. that law is made to bee kept after they were come to Canaan: and the reason of this alteration was, because they were to begin the account of the seven weekes from that day, wherein they first put the sickle into the corne, whereof they should bring a sheafe to shake before the Lord, Levit. 23. 9. which could not be done upon the first day of unleavened bread, it being a solemne day, and a time of a Sabbath, wherein they were to doe no servile worke. Levit. 23. 7. Rupertus here saith, that the Pentecost was not yeerely kept the just fiftith day after the Passeover, as the law was given, but the fiftith day after the Passeover. But herein he is deceived, that upon what day soever the Passeover fell, the next weeke, they did expect the morrow after the next Sabbath, when they were to bring in their sheafe, and then beginne to count their seven weekes: for herein is his errour, he taketh the Sabbath there spoken of, Levit. 23. 10. for the seventh day of rest, where it is understood to be the first day of unleavened bread,

Rupert. lib. 3. in Exod. cap. 24.

bread, which was a solemne day of rest, as the Sabbath was, Iun. Borrh. And by the way, Rupertus in the same place slippeth in another point, Prima dies azymorum Iudæis in quintam feriam illo anno evenit: The first day of unleavened happened to the Iewes that yeere, upon the fifth day of the weeke. For true it is, that our blessed Saviour did eat the Passeover according to the law, upon the 14. day, which was as our Thursday at even: but the Jewes following a tradition of their owne, to avoid the concurrence of two Sabbath dayes, did put off the eating of the Passeover, untill the 15. day of the moneth at even, which was the sixth day of the weeke, because the next day was the Sabbath: for if they had eat the Passeover, when Christ did eat it with his Disciples, then the next day should have beene kept holy, neither were they to doe any worke therein: but upon that day they put Christ to death, which could not be done without more than servile labour in carrying the crosse, and nailing Christ unto it, and such like: beside, the text saith, they would not put Christ to death upon the feast day, lest there should bee some tumult among the people, Mark. 14. 2. But this point is elsewhere handled more at large, whither I referre the Reader.

Whether our Saviour with his Disciples and the Iewes kept the Passeover together.

Synopf. controv. 13. qu. 4.

2. Some againe, as Cajetane before excludeth the 15. day of the moneth, out of the number of the dayes: so they include and take in, both the 14. and 15. dayes; borrowing 17. dayes of the first moneth to make up the summe of 50. Augustine, Ferus, Gloss. ordinar. as is shewed before, quæst. 16. But this account cannot bee admitted: for thus should they begin the 50. dayes both before the Passeover was eaten, which was upon the 14. day at even, whereas they must be accounted from the Passeover; and before they were delivered and went out of Egypt, whereas the Pentecost was kept in remembrance of their deliverance out of the servitude, and hard bondage of Egypt, as the reason of the institution thereof is yeelded, Deut. 16. 12. Thou shalt remember, that thou wast a servant in Egypt, therefore thou shalt observe and doe these ordinances.

3. Wherefore this remaineth, as the most probable, that the 15. day of the moneth, the next day after they had eaten the pasch, was the first day of the fifty, howsoever in the anniversary Pentecost, afterward there were some innovation. Iun., Piscat. Simler. And that for these reasons: 1. Because this was the day of their deliverance, and going out of Egypt, from the which they count their moneths and dayes, Exod. 16. 1. 2. And againe, this first day of unleavened bread, was not in respect of the present necessity and occasion, of their sudden departure out of Egypt, kept a solemne festivall day, as afterward, wherein they were to doe no servile worke. This being then the first day of the fifty, there are to bee accounted 16. dayes of the first moneth, and 30. of the second; so the first of the third moneth falleth out to bee the 47. and the 50. day was the fourth of the moneth.

4. I cannot here omit the mysticall application of Rupertus, of these three dayes of sanctification and preparation prescribed to the people, which he wil have to signifie, that sanctification of Christ in his death and passion, and buriall, Quam consummavit die tertia: Which he finished upon the third day: of the which sanctification our Saviour speaketh, when he saith, For their sakes doe I sanctifie my selfe, Ioh. 17.

Rupert. lib. 3. in Exod. cap. 28.

Quest. XVIII. How the Apostles Pentecost, and the Iewes Pentecost, fell out all upon one day.

HEre further it will be enquired, how the Apostles Pentecost, which was 50. dayes from Christs resurrection inclusively, and the Jewes Pentecost which was 50. dayes from the Passeover exclusively, that is, not reckoning the morrow after the Pasch, which was the first solemne day of the feast, according to the law, Levit. 23. 10. would fall out together on the same day.

1. Here Rupertus hitteth upon the right answer in generall: that the same day, wherein Christ arose againe, the Jewes brought in their bundle or sheafe to be shaken before the Lord: which bundle of the first fruits, did prefigure Christ, the first fruits of the dead, who also in the Canticles is called fascis myrrhæ, a bundle of myrrh, Cantic. 1. 12. From this day of shaking the sheafe, the Jewes began to count seven weekes complete, which is 49. dayes, and then the next day was the Pentecost, which was the 50. dayes from the resurrection of Christ (including also that day) came downe the holy Ghost upon the Apostles, by the which the will of God is written in our hearts, as here the law of God was written in tables of stone. Thus far Rupertus proceedeth well.

2. But his mistaking is in this, partly touched before: where the law prescribeth that they should begin to account the seven weekes from the morrow of the Sabbath, Levit. 23. 10. he understandeth the seventh day only, that they were to expect the next Sabbath day after the Pasch, and the morrow to begin their account of seven weekes: By which meanes a great errour would fall out, that the feast over fell out upon the first day of the weeke, there would be not onely seven, but eight weekes between the Passeover, and Pentecost, which was against the meaning of the law. By the Sabbath therefore in this place, is not precisely meant the Sabbath day, but that solemne day of rest, which was the 15. day of the moneth, which was commanded as strictly to be kept as the Sabbath, without doing any worke therein, and therefore it is better translated, Postridie cessationis: The next day after that solemne rest, the next day or morrow after the Sabbath. Iun. But yet at this time when our blessed Saviour rose again, the day of shaking the sheafe, fell out the morrow of the seventh and Sabbath day, but not according to Pertus rule, but by this occasion: This yeere wherein Christ the true Passeover was sacrificed, the solemne day was the 15. then followed the Sabbath, which was the 16. day: wherein because they were forbidden to doe any worke, they could not that day put the fickle into the corne, as is prescribed, Levit. 16. 4. And therefore in such cases, they put it off, till the next day following the Sabbath.

Quest. XIX. How the Lord is ſaid here to deſcend.

Vers. 11. The third day the Lord will come downe. Three wayes this terme of deſcending is uſed in Scripture, when mention is made of God, or his Angels: 1. It is attributed unto God improperly: for he being an infinite eſſence cannot be contained in any place: as that which is of infinite quantity and magnitude cannot goe from place to place, becauſe it occupieth all places. So neither can God, who is of an infinite and incomprehenſible nature, either aſcend, or deſcend. Therefore when God is ſaid to deſcend, it muſt not be underſtood properly, ſed quantum ad aliquam demonſtrationem effectus in aliqua parte orbis, &c. But in reſpect of the demonſtration of ſome effect in ſome part of the world, where God did not manifeſt himſelfe before. Toſtat. Deſcendere Deus dicitur, quando aliquod novum, quod antea non fuerit, in aliqua creatura operatur: God is ſaid to deſcend, when hee worketh ſome new and ſtrange thing in the humane nature, which was not before. Eucherius. As the holy Ghoſt is ſaid to deſcend upon Chriſt, becauſe of the demonſtration, and repreſentation in the likeneſſe of a Dove, which lighted upon Chriſt: and here God is ſaid deſcendeth in a thick cloud. 2. Chriſt alſo is ſaid to deſcend from heaven: ſecundum idiomatum communionem: becauſe of the unity of his perſon, and mutuall communicating of the properties of his natures: whereas his Godhead could not properly deſcend: but it is ſaid ſo to doe, propter humanam naturam aſſumptam, in reſpect of the humane nature, which hee had aſſumed. Toſtat. 3. Theſe two are improper kindes of deſcending: but Angels may be ſaid properly to deſcend, becauſe they are finite ſpirits, although nullum occupent, locum ſibi tamen definiunt: though they occupy no place, yet they are bounded and limited in a place: ſo that when they are preſent in one part of the world, at the ſame inſtant they cannot bee in another. Toſtatus will have the deſcending here ſpoken of to bee of this third kinde, becauſe hee thinketh, that the law was not given by God himſelfe, but by an Angell repreſenting his perſon, and ſpeaking in his name: which is his errour, that now followeth in the next place to bee conſidered.

Quest. XX. Whether Iehovah Chriſt Ieſus appeared not in the old Teſtament, but only, or uſually the Angels.

Toſtatus opinion is, that this was not the Lord himſelfe that came downe in this thicke cloud in the mount, but an Angell in the perſon of God. And he hath beſide theſe poſitions concerning the apparition of Angels in the old Teſtament:

1. Not only in this place but in all other, where any act is ſaid to be done by God; we muſt underſtand that the Angels did it: Niſi ſit talis actus, qui excedit potentiam creatam: Unleſſe it be ſuch an act which exceedeth the power of a creature.

2. The reaſon why notwithſtanding God is ſaid to doe thoſe things, though they were performed by the Angels: is, leſt the Hebrewes hearing that the Angels wrought ſuch great workes for them, as in bringing them out of Egypt, in giving them the law, and ſuch like, ſhould have worſhipped the Angels as authors of theſe benefits. As in like manner the Heathen made them Gods, that had beene meanes to bring ſome benefit: as Minerva for the invention of divers arts, Ceres in Grecia, for finding out the art of plowing: Saturne in Italy, for teaching of husbandry: Phœbus for ſoothſaying; Aeſculapius for phyſicke.

3. Yet ſometime the Angels are ſaid to doe thoſe acts, when as either they are but ſmall matters, and not admirable or great workes as when the Angel appeared to ſend Hagar home againe to her miſtreſſe, which was no great matter: and when the Angels were ſent to deſtroy Sodome, which was no admirable thing to deſtroy a City: or when the worke, though it be a great worke, concerne but a private perſon, and not the whole nation, as when the Angell came to purifie the Prophet Iſayes lips, Iſay 6.

4. Yet ſometime God is ſaid to doe thoſe things, which were not in themſelves ſo great, becauſe the men were but weake, with whom the Lord had to deale, for the ſtrengthning of their faith.

5. Sometime great workes are ſaid to be done by the Angels, but then mention is made alſo of God in the ſame place: as in the viſion of Iacobs ladder, the Angels are ſaid to aſcend and deſcend, but God ſtood above the top of the ladder.

6. And though while yet the Hebrewes were weake, and as it were in their nonage, the greater workes done by Angels are aſcribed unto God: yet afterward, Cum Hebraicus populus in cognitione Dei firmior eſſet: When the Hebrew people were more confirmed in the knowledge of God. Angelus illa magnalia, quæ Deo competebant, ſe feciſſe dicebat: The Angell is ſaid to doe thoſe things, which appertained unto God, as the Angell of the Lord, &c. ſaid, I made you to goe up out of Egypt.

7. But concerning the law, it was given by Angels, as the Apoſtle ſheweth, Galath. 3. they made the noiſe, and cauſed the voices in the mount, they wrought the wonders in Egypt, and brought out the preſence, and conducted them in the wilderneſſe. To this effect Toſtat. quæſt. 6. & 7.

But all theſe are untrue and uncertaine poſitions, as ſhall be ſhewed in their order.

1. Stephen ſaith, that the God of glory appeared unto Abraham in Meſopotamia, and bid him come out of his country, Act. 7. 2. This was a matter, which exceeded not the power of an Angell, to bid him to goe out of his country: yet was it done by the Lord himſelfe, and not by an Angell: for that without blaſphemy cannot be ſaid to be the God of glory. Againe, to appeare in the likeneſſe of a flame of fire in a buſh, and the buſh not conſumed, is not an impoſſible worke to a created Angell: but it was God himſelfe even Chriſt the Sonne of God, that ſo appeared: for he is called the God of Abraham, the God of Izhak, Exod. 3. 6. which could bee no Angell. And Moſes pronouncing a bleſſing upon Ioseph, saith, The good will of him that dwelt in the bush, shall come upon the head of Ioseph, Deu. 16. but God only hath the power and authority of blessing: as Iakob also saith concerning Ioseph: by the God of thy father who shall helpe thee, and by the Almighty, who shall blesse thee, Gen. 49.24. To blesse belongeth properly, and originally (for ministerially wee deny not, but that both Angels and men may blesse) to him that is able to effect the blessing, but so doth only the Almighty, to whom nothing is impossible. But Angels are not omnipotent, or Almighty: It was God therefore, and not an Angell, that appeared in the bush. Now then by these places given in instance it is evident, that some things said to be done by God in the Scriptures, not exceeding the power of Angels, were so done by the Lord himselfe, and not by the Angels. And so the first position of Tostatus faileth.

upon

Tostatus his reasons answered.

2. Neither is that a good reason, why in the rehearsall of the great workes the name of the Angels concealed, and they are ascribed unto God, lest the Hebrewes might have worshipped the Angels, as their patrones, and authors of those benefits: 1. Because there is no such danger, when as the Angels doe shew themselves to be but the ministers and messengers of God, and speake in the name of God: As Lot could make a difference betweene the Angels, who were but Gods ministers, as they say, Iehovah hath sent us to destroy the City, Gen. 19.13. and Iehovah himselfe, to whom Lot afterward turneth himselfe, vers. 19. No my Lord, &c. whereas speaking before to the Angels, he calleth them Lords in the plurall. 2. Rather this meanes, if the Angels did the workes, and the Scripture saith God did them: they ignorantly should have worshipped the Angels in Gods stead, knowing none other, but that God himselfe appeared, when it was but his Angell. 3. And beside, where in the same place mention is made both of the Angell of Iehovah, and of Iehovah himselfe: as Exod. 3.22. it is said the Angell of the Lord appeared, who is called Iehovah, vers. 7. If it had not beene the Lord himselfe but an Angell, this would have given them occasion to thinke that the Angell was the Lord.

3. It was Iehovah the Lord Christ, and not a ministring Angell, that appeared to Hagar, Gen. 16. as it is evident, vers. 13. she called the name of Iehovah that spake unto her: and the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah was the Lords worke, wherein notwithstanding hee used the ministry of the Angels: as it is expressly said, Iehovah rained upon Sodome and Gomorrah brimstone and fire from Iehovah, &c. These places therefore are impertinently alleaged. And further wee shall finde in Scripture, that in small workes and such as concerned particular persons, God is said to have done it, and not the Angels: as it is said God prepared a worme to smite Ionas gourd, Ion. 4.7. Therefore this observation also of Tostatus untrue.

4. But this evasion he hath: that if the name of God be used, and not of the Angels in such small and particular workes, it is for the confirming of those that be weake: but they which are weake, because they cannot ascend at the first, or comprehend the majesty and omnipotency of God, had so much the more need by the secondary ministration of Angels, to bee brought unto that high and deepe apprehension of God. And indeed the ministry of Angels serveth especially for the comfort and supporting of the weake, whose faith not serving them immediatly to depend upon God, are the more easily brought to have confidence in him by the subordinate deputation and ministry of Angels. So, when Daniel was in great distresse and perplexity in the lions denne, God sent his Angell to stop the mouth of the lions, and to comfort Daniel, Dan. 6.22. So when Ioseph was doubtfull what to doe concerning Mary, an Angell of the Lord appeared unto him in a dreame, to confirme him, saying, Feare not to take Mary for thy wife, Matth. 1.20.

5. That instance of Iakobs vision of the ladder directly proveth, that it was God that appeared unto Iakob, and not an Angell: 1. Because it is said that Iehovah stood upon it and said: by which name of Iehovah no Angell is called in Scripture. 2. He that speaketh to Iakob, nameth himselfe the Lord God of Abraham. 3. He that speaketh is but one, but the Angels which ascended and descended were many. He saith, The land whereon thou sleepest will I give thee and thy seede: but the earth is only the Lords. Iakob himselfe saith, that Iehovah was in that place, Gen. 28.16.

6. 1. The people were but yet weake, while they were in the wildernesse, yet then and there the great worke of leading and keeping the people, and bringing them to the land of Promise, is ascribed to an Angell, which was none other but Christ, the Angell of Gods presence, Exod. 23.20. 2. Yea wee finde, that mention is made oftner in the stories of the Patriarkes and first Fathers of Israel, as in the bookes of Genesis, and Exodus, when they were yet (as it were) in their infancy, of the apparition and ministry of Angels, then afterward: for it was fit that they should be confirmed, by such visible and sensible meanes: therefore this reason here alleaged by Tostatus holdeth not. 3. And in that place, wherein instance is given: by Angel is understood some Prophet and man of God, not any of the celestiall spirits: because the place is named from whence he came, from Gilgal: and hee is said to ascend or goe up: but Angels descend from heaven: and it is not unusuall in Scripture to call Prophets the Lords Angels, Hagg. 1.13. and Apocal. 2. and 3. chapter thorowout.

Quest. XXI. Whether it were Iehovah the Lord Christ, or an Angell that came downe upon mount Sinai.

7. But that it was Iehovah himselfe, the Lord Christ that appeared in mount Sinai, and talked with Moses, and gave them the law, it is thus proved: 1. Because he is called Iehovah, which name is never in Scripture given unto Angels. 2. Hee saith, vers. 5. Though all the earth bee mine: but the earth is the Lords, Psal. 24. not the Angels. 3. The Lord here maketh a covenant with his people, vers. 5. God himselfe, not the Angels, make a covenant with men, to bee his people. And so the Lord saith ...an husband unto them, Iere. 31.32. but Christ and not the Angels, is the husband of the Church: and the Church is not the spouse of the Angels, but Christs. 4. He which writ the Law in tables of stone, was the same that gave the Law to Moses: but those tables were written by the finger of God, Exod. 31.18. the same finger that writeth in the fleshy tables of mens hearts, Ierem 31.33. 2. Cor. 3.2. 5. S. Paul saith, it was ordained by Angels, in the hand of a Mediatour, Gal. 3.14. The Angels attended as ministers, and as the Lords instruments were used in those thunders and lightnings. But the Lord himselfe the Mediatour both of the old and new Testament was there present, as the Author of the Law: as Moses saith, The Lord came from Sinai, &c. he came with ten thousand of Saints, and at his right hand a fiery Law for them, Deut. 33. 2. 6. He that wrought those wonders in Egypt, and carried the people as upon Eagles wings, was the same that delivered the Law, vers. 4. But Iehovah himselfe did the first: for many of the wonders in Egypt could not be done by any but the Lord, as in converting and changing of one substance into another, as of a rod into a Serpent, of water into bloud, of the dust into lice. And so much Tostatus himselfe confesseth: Fiebant talia portenta, quæ nullus poterat facere, nisi Deus: Such wondrous things were done, as none could doe but God. So it was Iehovah himselfe that did leade the people thorow the red Sea, and destroyed the Egyptians: as chap. 14.24. Iehovah looked unto the hoast of the Egyptians, out of the fiery and cloudy piller: who is before called the Angell of God, vers. 19. which was the Lord Christ, called the Angell of the covenant, Malach. 3.1. So chap. 15.14. Iehovah brought the waters of the Sea upon them. And further that Iehovah himselfe conducted the Israelites is evident, Exod. 33.15. My presence shall go with thee. And yet the Lord saith, Exod. 23.20. Behold I send an Angell before thee, to keepe thee in the way: but what Angell this was, is expressed afterward, my name is in him. This great Angell of the covenant, in whom was Gods name and his presence; who else could it be but the Lord Christ, the Iehovah? And that Iehovah himselfe appeared unto the Patriarkes and Prophets, and not the Angels onely, it is evident. Numb. 12. where the Lord saith, Unto Moses I will speake mouth to mouth, &c. he shall see the similitude of the Lord: and the Apostle witnesseth, that he (that is, Moses) endured as he which saw him, which is invisible, Heb. 11.27. Not that Moses did see the very glory and substance of God, who is invisible, and whom never man saw, nor can see, 1. Tim. 6.12. but he saw only his backe parts, Exod. 33.14 that is, some part of his glory, as the Lord thought good to reveale, according as Moses was able to apprehend. And that in this sort it was Iehovah himselfe that came downe in Mount Sinai, beside these reasons before alleaged, it is the generall opinion of Divines both old and new. Gregor. Nyssen. Præcepit Deus populo per Mosen, ut tam corpore quam animo mundus fierit: God commanded the people by Moses, that they should be cleane both in body and soule. Hierom. Accessuri ad audienda verba Dei sanctificari jubentur ab uxoribus: Being to come to heare the words of God, they are bidden to be sanctified, in abstaining from their wives. Cyril. A Deo ad Mosen dicitur, vade ad populum, &c. God said to Moses, Goe unto the people. Origen. Audiat, quid præcepit Dominus, &c. He that will come to heare the word of God, let him heare what the Lord commanded, that they should wash their garments. Rabanus: Dominus Mosi præcepit, ut populum sanctificet: God commanded Moses to sanctifie the people. Rupertus: Docendus erat, quod Deus patrum ipsorum non erat talis, ut Dii Egyptiorum: They were to be taught, that their God was no such, as the Gods of the Egyptians. Theodoret: Vestimenta mutare à Deo jubentur: They are bidden of God to wash their garments. Ex Lippoman. And many other to the same purpose might be produced, which is not necessary in so cleere a matter: so that this seemeth to be a vaine private conceit: that it was not the Lord, but an Angell, that came downe in the thicke cloud upon mount Sinai.

QUEST. XXII. Why the people are forbidden to come up into the mountaine.

Thou shalt set markes unto the people: 1. The people are forbidden to goe up to the mountaine, or to come neere the skirts of it, first, reverentia causa, for reverence sake: For if it be not lawfull to thrust in upon Princes uncalled, how much more into the presence of the divine Majesty? Simler. 2. To stay their curiosity: not that it is evill to see God: sed malum est ei, qui illum per curiositatem vult videre: but it is evill unto him, that seeketh him of curiosity. Rupert. 3. If they had beene admitted to see and gaze, it would have hindred their attention, in hearing of the voice of God, which proceeded out of the middest of the fire. Tostat. 4. The Lord hereby also would make a difference betweene Moses and the rest of the people, to heare him before them: Ut cognoscant pro summo honore ducendum esse apud Deo: That they should take it for a great honour to draw neere unto God: Procop. 5. And they were forbidden, not only to come up into the mountaine, but to touch the very borders and skirts of it: because all the mountaine was covered with smoake, and all over there were signes of Gods presence: which, if they had beene admitted to come unto the nether parts of the hill, they would have presumed further, and therefore the Lord would cut off all occasion: as before chap. 12. that they should eate no unleavened bread for seven dayes together, they are charged not to have it in their houses. Exod. 8. 6. Some doe thus allegorize this prohibition of not ascending into the mountaine: Nemo intelligentiam suam, ad montem sacræ scripturæ conscendere audeat: That no man beyond his capacity enterprise to ascend unto the hill of the Scriptures. Gloss. interlinear.

QUEST. XXIII. Why he shall be killed that toucheth the mountaine

Whosoever toucheth the mount, shall surely dye, &c. 1. Of this terrible precept, causa fuit ipse populi status, the state and condition of the people was the cause: who because they were not come to the love of God, oportebat ut timore stringerentur: It was meete they should bee constrained. Rupert. 2. And beside, the Lord would make a difference betweene his service, and the Idolatrous

Rupert. lib. 3 in Exod. cap. 28.

Idolatrous ſacrifices which they had ſeene in Egypt, wherein they uſed dancing and ſporting, eating drinking, which the people imitated afterward, when they ſet up their golden Calfe: the Lord therefore hereby would let them underſtand, that he required another manner of ſervice of his people. Rupert. 3. It is ſet downe, that whoſoever toucheth the mountaine ſhould dye: either by the hand of God, or the people: for if any one went neere to touch the mountaine, then the people were to ſtrike him with darts or ſtones: but if either the Prieſts, or many of the people approched, then the Lord would deſtroy them, verſ. 24. Toſtat.

Quest. XXIV. Why no hand was to touch him that came neere the mountaine.

Verſ.13. NO hand ſhall touch it, but hee ſhall bee ſtoned &c. 1. Some expound it thus, that the hand of man ſhall not need to be upon him: ſed intelligitur lapidum ictibus ex eum divinitus venientibus necandus: But he is underſtood to be killed with ſtones flying downe from God. Hugo de S. Victor. becauſe the manner is deſcribed, he ſhall be ſtoned, or ſtriken thorow with darts: and it is uttered paſſively, not actively, as afterward verſ. 24. leſt he deſtroy them: it is better referred to the people, that hee ſhall be ſtoned, or ſtriken thorow by them. 2. If hee were neere hand hee ſhould be ſtoned, if further off, that they ſhould hit him with darts, be it man or beaſt: Lippoman. 3. They are forbidden with their hands to touch not the mountaine, but it, whatſoever came neere the mountaine, leſt they alſo might by this occaſion of apprehending the offender, tranſgreſſe themſelves in comming neere the mountaine. Toſtat. alſo, no hand ſhall touch it: tanquam polutum & immundum, as a filthy and uncleane thing: Rupert. Fo. Tanquam execrabile eſto: It ſhalbe as an execrable and accurſed thing: Iun. 4. No hand ſhall touch him, that is, to reſcue or deliver him. Vatab. But it is not like, that any durſt be ſo bold, when all the people in the campe was afraid, verſ. 16.

Quest. XXV. Why the beaſt, that touched the mountaine is commanded to be ſlaine.

Verſ.13. WHether beaſt, or man, hee ſhall not live. 1. The very beaſt ſhall be ſlaine that commeth neere to touch the mountaine. 1. Becauſe, although beaſts doe but their kinde, and cannot ſinne, yet the thing in it ſelfe was evill in touching the mountaine: as likewiſe if a man did lye with a beaſt, they were both to dye, Levit. 20. 15. though the beaſt therein could not ſinne, yet the fact was enormous and odious, and to bee puniſhed therefore in the beaſt. Toſtat. 2. Another reaſon was, that by theſe meanes, men ſeeing this ſeverity extended unto bruit beaſts, ſhould themſelves thereby become more circumſpect and carefull, not to tranſgreſſe their bounds. Simler. 3. Likewiſe, the owner of the beaſt, was therein alſo puniſhed in the loſſe of his beaſt, becauſe he had no greater care to keepe it in. Ferus. 4. Some doe allegorize this edict concerning the killing of the beaſt, that toucheth the mountaine: as Greg. Beſtia montem tangit, cum mens irrationabilibus deſiderijs ſubdita, &c. The beaſt toucheth the mountaine, when the minde being ſubject to unreaſonable deſires, doth preſume to high things. Rupertus. Si quis luxurioſe vivit, alta divinitatis audeat ſcrutari: If hee which leadeth a beaſtly life, preſume to ſearch the high things of God, he ſhall be but further blinded and darkened. Gloſſ. interlinar. Si quis lapſus in hereſim aut blaſphemiam, any being fallen into hereſie or blaſphemy, doe abuſe the ſacred Scriptures, he ſhall periſh eternally. But there is no certainty in theſe deviſed allegories, neither will the text warrant them: therefore I will not inſiſt upon them.

Gregor. 6. moral. cap. 27.

Quest. XXVI. Whether at any time it were lawfull for the people to goe up to the mountaine.

Verſ.13. WHen the horne bloweth long, they ſhall come up into the mountaine. 1. Some thinke that after the Lord was gone from the mount, then Moſes commanded by the ſounding of the horne, to give notice to the people thereof, that the people might then come up into the mountaine. Sultan. Simler. But it is rather to be underſtood of the ſound of a trumpet, which the Lord cauſed to be heard by the miniſtry of the Angels. Oſiand. Hugo de S. Victor. As verſ. 16. mention is made of a ſound of a trumpet, which was a ſigne of Gods preſence. 2. The Septuagint and Chalde reade, When the horne ſhall ceaſe, then the people may goe up: but the word is maſhac, which ſignifieth to protract. When the ſound of the trumpet ſhall be protracted, or blow long, they ſhould goe up: and to what end ſhould the people goe up, when the Lord was gone? it would but have ſhewed their curioſity, to gaze upon the place, where the Lord ſhewed himſelfe: eſpecially ſeeing, as Ioſephus writeth, it was ſuch an high hill that it did not only, Aſcenſus hominum, ſed aſpectus defatigare: Weary not only their going up, but their very ſight. And after the trumpet had ſounded, the people were bid to returne into their tents, Deut. 5. and ſo to goe from the hill: therefore not to come up to the hill. Toſtat. 3. Iuxius thinketh that the blowing long of the trumpet, did ſignifie an end of that ſacred action, as in the end of ſongs the muſick conclude with a long and protracted ſound; and this he thinketh was done, when the campe removed from before Sinai, Numb. 10. But it was needleſſe to give them a ſigne by the ſound of a trumpet, ſeeing the cloud removed, and the Lord ſpake alſo to Moſes to depart from that place: and this a yeere after: but this thing, which is here ſpoken of, was by all likelihood preſently done. 4. Some think that they were not ſimply forbidden to come up into the mountaine, but that they ſhould not do it of themſelves, they were to expect till they were called, Humanam audaciam compeſcens premit, &c. doth keepe under humane audacity, and ſtirreth them up to obedience to the voice of God. Rabanus. Pomar. But it is cleare, that the people were abſolutely bidden to keepe their bounds, and not to the mount, verſ. 24. 5. Therefore the meaning is, that the people, when they heard the ſound of trumpet, ſhould then come out of their tents, unto the bottome of the hill, ſo farre as their limits and ſ extended, but not beyond. Rupert. Hugo de S. Victor. And this to bee the ſenſe the words following , that when the ſound of the trumpet was exceeding loud, verſ. 16. which is the ſame mentioned be- verſ. 13. when the horne bloweth long, then Moſes brought the people forth of the tents to meet the verſ. 17. that the people might heare the Lord talke with Moſes, verſ. 9. and that this was the aſcen- unto the mount, ad ejus radicem, non ad cacumen, to the bottome, not to the top, Hugo: it may be ed, chap. 24. 9. where it is ſaid that Nadab and Abihu, and 70. of the Elders went up, with Moſes Aaron: and yet Moſes onely with Ioſhua went up to the mountaine, verſ. 13. that is, to the top of the the other might aſcend to ſome part of the hill about the bottome, which was higher than the place, the hoſt was encamped: but the bounds and limits, which were ſet, they exceeded not. Toſtat. 6. The morall application is this: that as the people came not up to the mount, or toward the till the trumpet began to ſound loud: ſo Ad ſacram prædicationis vocem ad ſuperna debet ſe erigere auditorum: ſo the minde of the auditors muſt be lifted up to things on high, at the voyce of preaching. The myſticall interpretation alſo is this: This loud ſound of the trumpet ſignifieth the loud of the Goſpell over all the world, whereby wee are called to more full and perfect knowledge of Lex non ad montem adducere poteſt illos, quos informavit, The law cannot bring them to the hill, whom teacheth, but the trumpet of the Goſpell. Procopius. Chriſt alſo ſhall call us by the ſound of the trump the laſt day, and we ſhall meet him in the aire, and aſcend up unto him, and ſo ever remaine with as the Apoſtle teacheth, 1 Theſſ. 4. 17.

Quest. XXVII. Why Moſes is not ſet downe to have reported all to the people, which was given him in charge.

15. And he ſaid unto the people. Moſes received two commandements from God, that he ſhould ſanctifie them, and ſet them marks and bounds with a penaltie of death to them, that went them: but of this latter hee ſaith nothing; and for the former, he maketh mention, of not com- their wives, which was not mentioned before. But it is not to be thought, that Moſes, being ſo commended for his faithfulneſſe, did either conceale any thing of that which was given him in charge, or any thing. But the Scripture uſeth to avoid needleſſe repetitions, not to make mention of the ſame twice: therefore becauſe this is ſet downe before in the Lords charge unto Moſes, it is not rehearſed : but it is evident, verſ. 23. that Moſes had declared that alſo unto the people, what danger there in paſſing their bounds. And as here in Moſes report to the people ſomewhat is omitted, which is in the charge: ſo at other times ſome things are reported by Moſes, which were given in charge, not expreſſed: as chap. 12. 22. that clauſe of ſprinkling the doore-poſts with hyſſop dipped in the was not mentioned in the law of the Paſſeover before preſcribed, but onely in Moſes relation to people. Toſtat.

Quest. XXVIII. With what water they waſhed their cloaths.

14. He ſanctified the people, and they waſhed their cloaths. 1. Moſes is ſaid to ſanctifie the people, becauſe he declared unto them the will and commandement of God, that they ſhould ſanctifie themſelves, and ſo they did accordingly. Toſtat. Nihil aliud feciſſe legitur, quam monuiſſe ad munditiem, Moſes is not read to have done any thing elſe, but to have admoniſhed them unto puritie and cleanneſſe. Ca- 1. by the waſhing of their cloaths, the puritie of their manners is ſignified: Cyrillus: Lotione in- corporis puritatem oſtendit: By the waſhing of the garments, he ſheweth the puritie of the bodie: anima corpus quodam modo eſt: For the bodie is as it were a garment to the ſoule. Rabanus. lavare eſt opera mundare, To waſh the garments, is to cleanſe the works: Veſtimenta lavare, eſt vera fide imbuere, to waſh the garments, is to endue the conſcience with faith. Lippom. By the of the garments is underſtood, Caſtitas mentis & corporis, The chaſtitie both of bodie and minde. See more hereof before queſt. 15. 3. Some thinke that they waſhed their garments with ſprinkling water, which was made of the aſhes of the red Cow, preſcribed Numb. 19. But that is not that water was to bee ſprinkled againſt the Tabernacle, which was not yet made: and Eleazar of the bloud of the Cow with his finger, &c. But neither Eleazar, nor Aaron his father were conſecrated to the Prieſthood: therefore they waſhed their garments, with no other than common at this time. Toſtat. quæſt. 9. in 19. cap.

Quest. XXIX. Why they are commanded not to come at their wives.

15. And come not at your wives, &c. 1. The Latine tranſlator readeth, Come not neere your wives: but your is not in the originall, yet it well expreſſeth the ſenſe: for at no time was it lawfull to heare unto other mens wives. Lippom. Some thinke, that hereby is meant, that wee ſhould not approach, Alicui carnali voluptati, vel mundanæ, Any carnall or worldly pleaſure, when we come neare God. Gloſſ. interlin. Indeed by this one particular inhibition of one carnall pleaſure, by the like ana- all other were forbidden: but there is a literall inhibiting alſo, of companie and ſocietie with their 3. Some give this ſenſe, Conjux hic ſenſum intelligitur, &c. The wife is here underſtood to bee the which is joyned unto our nature, &c. Gregor. Nyſſen. ex Lippom. And ſo we are bidden to lay aſide all ſenſualitie, when we appeare before God. But this is to goe from the letter of the text. 4. Some it onely a morall precept, that men ſhould abſtaine even from lawfull things, when they preſent themſelves themselves before God: as the Apostle requireth the like of the married couple, to abstaine for a time, that they may give themselves to fasting & prayer, 1 Cor.7. Hieron. Rupert. Galat. but this being a legall injunction, contained a further reason than is enforced now, in respect of those times. 5. So that beside the morall equitie, even from lawfull pleasure, which bindeth now also, in the abstinence for a time, from the marriage bed, upon occasion of more fervent and extraordinary prayer: Marbach. there was then also a Levitical kind of impuritie and pollution, even in the lawfull use of marriage, which came by the issue of seed, Levit.15.18. from which kind of Legall pollutions the people were to be sanctified, and cleansed at this time. Oleaster. 6. But that saying of Lyranus is somewhat harsh: Licet matrimonialis actus sit licitus, tamen annexam habet quandam turpitudinem, &c. Though the act of the matrimonie be lawfull, yet it hath annexed unto it a kind of filthinesse, which is excused by the good things in marriage. But the Apostle speaketh otherwise, That marriage is honourable, &c. and the bed undefiled, Hebr.13.4. There is then in the undefiled marriage bed, no filthinesse or uncleanesse. But that other assertion of Lyranus is not much to be misliked: Habet annexam depressionem mentis, &c. It hath also annexed a certaine depression and abasing of the minde, because of the vehemencie of carnall delight: And therefore they were commanded these three dayes to be sequestred from their wives, that their minds might wholly be weaned from carnall delight, and be fixed upon God.

QUEST. XXX. Why Moses maketh such an ample and full declaration and description of the Lords glorious appearing in mount Sinai.

Vers.16. AND the third day, &c. there was thunder and lightnings, &c. 1. Moses in many words describeth the comming of the Lord, and his appearing in mount Sinai: Cupiebat enim vir pius quam amplissimis posset verbis, &c. For this godly man desired in the best manner he could, to set forth the magnificence of the comming of the Lord. Ferus. Sometime Moses goeth up, sometime he commeth down, sometime he goeth up alone, and another time Aaron with him: and all this he doth, Ut pararet Deo populum dignum & acceptabilem populum, &c. To prepare a meete and acceptable people for the Lord. Lippom. 2. Beside, this large description also delivereth Moses from all suspition of deceit and counterfeiting: as though he had fained, as other lawgivers among the Heathen, that he had conference with God: for first this preparation of the people against the third day, then the talking of the Lord with Moses, in the hearing of all the people, which were divers hundred thousands, doth shew the truth of this narration. Lippom. And these prodigious and extraordinarie signes raised upon the suddaine, to cleare Moses: In serenum diu subito mons tenebris circumdatus, &c. On a suddaine in a cleare morning, the hill was beset round with darknesse and fire burst forth of the middest thereof. Gregor. Nyssen. As it is observed in the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrha, by the rising of the Sun, and shining upon the earth, when Lot entred into Zoar, Gen. 19.23. that it was a goodly Sun-shine morning, when it rained fire and brimstone upon those Cities.

QUEST. XXXI. Why it pleased the Lord in this terrible and fearefull manner, to appeare, with thunder, and lightning.

Vers.16. THERE was thunder and lightning, &c. 1. Foure signes the Lord sheweth of his comming, two were heard, the thunder, and the sound of the trumpet; and two were seene, the lightning, and the thicke or darke cloud: and these appeared in the top of the hill, not all over: for if the cloud had covered all the hill, the people could not have discerned the smoake, which was round about upon the hill. Cajetan. 2. It pleased God in this terrible manner to shew himselfe at the giving of his law, for these reasons: 1. Because the rude world doth onely esteeme of those things, which are done with great shew, and magnificence, the Lord would in this glorious manner appeare, Vt discerent populi eum magni æstimare: That the people should learne highly to esteeme of God. 2. Commovit omnia elementa. He moved all the elements, that they might know, that he had power over all: 3. That the ignorant people might know a difference betweene the true God, and the false gods, whom the Heathen, and especially the Egyptians worshipped, that they could doe no such things: 4. Vt populo carnali timorem incuteret. To strike feare and terror into the carnall people: that they which would not be wonne by love, should be constrained with feare: 5. Vt ostenderet se vindicem legis, &c. To shew himselfe a Judge and revenger of those, which transgressed his law: and in what fearefull manner he would come to judgement, to take account of men, how they had kept his law. Ferus. 3. Chrysostome toucheth another reason: Negligens humanum genus & segne; oportet igitur ut corrigeretur ipsis, & redderetur attentum: Mankind was negligent and slothfull, and therefore it was meete, that they should bee rousted up by this meanes, and made attentive. 4. Another reason, why the Lord did thinke good, thus to shew himselfe in smoake and fire, was this: Quia talis apparitio in nube & igne non habet figuram: Because such an apparition in fire and a cloud, hath no representation: that by this meanes, the people should have no occasion to commit idolatrie. Lyran. As the Lord himselfe saith, Take heed to your selves, for yee saw no image in the day, that the Lord spake to you in Horeb, Deut.4.15. Tostat. quæst.11. 5. The morall application is this: The Lord appeared partly in the brightnesse of fire, partly in the darknesse of a cloud: Quia humiles per claritatem sui ignis illuminat, Because he doth illuminate the humble by the brightnesse of his appearing: Et superbos per caliginem erroris obscurat, And he obscureth the proud by the darknesse of error. Gloss. interlin. Some fathers make this mysticall application: by the thunder and lightning we may understand God the Father, by the cloud the Sonne, who assumed our humane nature, which shadowed the glorie of his Deitie: by the sound of the trumpet, the holy Ghost, which worketh in the hearts of faithfull people, by the trumpet of the Gospell. Simler.

Quest. XXXII. Whether this thunder and lightning were naturall.

There was thunder and lightning. 1. These signes were not naturally caused, in respect both of the time and place: for now it was about the middest of Summer, in the beginning of June, the third moneth after the spring, when such meteors use not to be ingendred: and for the place it was in an hot region in Arabia, where the extreme heate doth drie up such exhalations, whereof thunder and lightning doe consist. And beside, the naturall place of these meteors is above in the middle region of the aire, where the aire is very cold: and so the beating of the aire, by an antiperistasis, a concurrence and resistance of contrary qualities procureth such thunder-claps, and flashings: but these signes were shewed below upon the top of the hill, in the lower region of the aire. Tostat. 2. Neither yet doe I thinke with Tostatus, that it was neither verus ignis, nor vera fulgura, true fire, or true lightning, but that they so seemed to be: because then (saith he) the fire and lightning would have burned and consumed those that came neere it. But this is no good reason: for it was no hard matter for the Creator, to abate the ordinarie force of these elements: as the fire consumed not the bush, Exod. 3. neither yet had it any power upon the three children when they were put into the fierie fornace, Dan. 3. Therefore it was more than an imaginary fire, or in shew onely: Nihil simplex natura per duplicitatem facit: The single and simple truth doth nothing doubly: Lyran. Wherefore I rather preferre the resolution of Thomas, that this was, Ignis corporalis, & ideo palpabilis & sensibilis, &c. A corporall fire, palpable and sensible. It was a true fire, yet not naturall, neither yet without naturall meanes altogether, but the same supernaturally caused: for here was a thicke and darke cloud, such as the thunder and lightning useth to breake out of: but it was extraordinarily raised out of time and place by the power of God. Thom. in Epist. ad Hebræos cap. 12. lect. 4.

Quest. XXXIII. Why the Lord appeared in a thicke and darke cloud.

Vers. 16. And a thicke cloud upon the mount, &c. 1. This appearing of a thicke and darke cloud, was convenient for those times: Congruit nubes in functionem legalem, quæ tenebrarum est non lucis: The cloud is agreeable to the function of the law, which is of darknesse, rather than light. Borrh. For all things were folded up in the law in shadowes, as in a cloud, but the revelation of the true light came by Jesus Christ. 2. This also sheweth the infirmitie and weaknesse of man; who cannot see the brightnesse of Gods glorie, who dwelleth in light, that none can attaine unto, 1 Tim. 6. but wee see it as thorow a cloud: as here the Lord appeareth in fire, yet in the middest of smoake, and shining thorow a thicke cloud. Simler. To this purpose also Lyranus saith, that therefore God appeared in a darke cloud, Quia tales apparitiones fiunt communiter secundum eorum dispositiones, quibus fiunt: Because such apparitions commonly are made according to their disposition, to whom they are shewed. Now we have here but a darke and obscure knowledge of divine things: and as the eye of the Owle is to the Sunne light, so is the minde and understanding of man, in respect of divine things. Sic Lyran. 3. Unto this assertion of Lyranus two exceptions are taken, one by Paulus Burgens. the other by Tostatus: but both of them without any good ground. Burgensis thus objecteth, that Lyranus in this note maketh no difference betweene the knowledge of Moses, and of the rest of the people: whereas he appeared unto Moses onely in a cloud, Numb. 12. 5. but unto the people in a thicke cloud: because Moses clariorem habuit de divinis notitiam, quàm populus: had clearer knowledge of divine things, than the people: Burgens. addit. 3. Contra. 1. Howsoever the Lord appeared at other times to Moses, it is not here the question: Now the Lord appeared unto all, as well to Moses, as to the rest of the people, in a thicke and darke cloud: which sheweth, that although there is difference of gifts, and illumination among men: yet being compared to God, there is no difference: Moses himselfe here quaked and trembled, as the Apostle observeth, Heb. 12. 21. as the rest of the people did. 2. And that other place is not fitly alleaged, for the Lord came downe in the piller of the cloud at that time, and spake not onely to Moses, but to Aaron, and Miriam also. 4. Tostatus hath no exception, because Lyranus doth not distinguish betweene the apparitions of the old and new Testament: whereas the apparitions in the old were obscure: Apparitiones autem factæ in novo sunt clariores, the apparitions made in the new, are more cleare: As the holy Ghost came downe upon the Apostles, not onely with the darknesse of a cloud, but in bright fire like unto cloven tongues. Tostat. quæst. 11. Contra. This is true, which is here alleaged, that the apparitions of the new Testament are clearer, and more full of light, than the visions of the old; neither is it denied by Lyranus: yet it followeth not, but that in respect of the knowledge, which we shall have in the life to come, we see now but darkly, and as in a cloud: and to this purpose he alleageth that saying of the Apostle: Now we see thorow a glasse darkly, but then shall we see face to face: now I know in part, but then shall I know, even as I am knowne, 1 Cor. 13. 12. Lyranus opinion therefore being so evidently grounded upon the Apostles direct words, they had small reason to carpe at him. Lyranus defended against Burgens. and Tostat.

Quest. XXXIV. Of the blowing of the trumpet at the giving of the law, what it signifieth.

And the sound of the trumpet exceeding loud. 1. There was not there any such materiall trumpet, as the Jewes imagine, that it was an horne made of the Rammes hornes, which was sacrificed in stead of Isaac. Lyran. But such a sound was made by the ministry of Angels, as if it had beene the blowing of a trumpet: Tostat. for, as S. Stephen sheweth, they received the law by ordinance of Angels, Act 7. 53. The Angels attended upon the Lord, as Ministers, when the law was given. Simler. 2. This sounding of the trumpet was a signe of the presence of God, tanquam imperatore præsente, as if a great Emperour were coming, before whom they use to blow trumpets. Chrysost. 3. Sonitus tubæ significat gravitatem præceptorum, Chryſoſt. in Epiſt. ad Hebræos hom.32. Thom. in Epiſt. ad Hebræos cap.12. le. 4.

vum, &c. The ſound of the trumpet betokened the heavineſſe of the commandements, quibus indicebatur bellum hominis contra ſeipſum : by the which warre is proclaimed to man againſt himſelfe : Thomas. 4. As the ſounding of this trumpet made a terrible and fearefull noiſe : Sic lex tumultum excitat in conſcientia peccatorum. So the law raiſeth a tumult in the conſcience of ſinners : Lippoman. Tales terrores in conſcientia peccatoris lex Dei operatur : Such terrors the law of God ſtirreth in the conſcience of the ſinner. Oſiand. 5. Here alſo was prefigured the office of the Levites, that ſounded afterward with ſilver trumpets, which alſo was a figure of the ſilver ſound, which the living trumpets of the Prophets and Apoſtles ſhould give, in gathering together the faithfull by the preaching of the Goſpell ; as Iſaias was bidden to lift up his voyce like a trumpet, *Iſai.*58.1. Simler. Herein alſo is ſet forth the forme of Chriſts comming to judgement, when the trump ſhall blow, and ſummon all both the living and dead to give account how they have kept the law, which was firſt given with the ſound of a trumpet : of the blowing of this laſt dolefull and dreadfull trumpet ſpeaketh the Apoſtle, 1 *Cor.*15.52. 1 *Theſſ.*4.16. 6. Oleaſter thinketh, that the ſounding of this trumpet was a ſigne of the departing of the Lord from the mount, and of the libertie of the people to come up : but it ſhewed the contrary, that God was then come downe upon the mount, and therefore Moſes bringeth the people out of their tents to meet God, in the next verſe. Hereof ſee more before queſt. 26.

Quest. XXXV. Of the different manner of the delivering the law, and the Goſpell.

Verſ.16. And all the people, that was in the campe, was afraid. 1. By this terrible apparition, which wrought in the people ſuch terror and feare, the nature of the law is expreſſed, which as it was delivered with feare and trembling, ſo it worketh terror in the conſcience : for divine apparitions are made agreeable to the thing, for the which they are ſhewed : ſo the Angels appeared to Abraham in humane ſhape, becauſe they came to tell Abraham that he ſhould have a ſonne. When the Iſraelites were in the fierie fornace of affliction in Egypt, the Lord appeared in a flame of fire in a buſh : When Ioſhua was to warre againſt the Cananites, an Angell appeared with a naked ſword : ſo becauſe a law here is given, which ſhould reveale ſinne, and the wrath of God againſt the tranſgreſſors thereof, it is delivered with feare and terror. Ferus. 2. Herein then appeareth a manifeſt difference betweene the Law and the Goſpell : 1. In the Law-giver : then the Lord appeared in fire and ſmoake, and terrible manner : but Chriſt came low and meeke, to preach the Goſpell. 2. In the place : the Law was delivered in Sinai, a place of ſervitude : the Goſpel began to be preached in Jeruſalem, which was a figure of the new Jeruſalem, *which is above, which is free, Galath.*4.26. 3. In the Law it ſelfe, which is a killing letter, threatning curſes and damnation to all the diſobedient : but ſpirit and life is given by the faith of the Goſpell of Chriſt. 4. In the people, which received it : they were then rude and ignorant, as children under tutors and governours ; they could not ſee the brightneſſe of Moſes face, but under a vaile : we now under the Goſpell, are as the heire which is come to age : and now the vaile is removed, and we ſee the glory of the Lord with open face. Simler. 5. Auguſtine therefore well ſaith : Brevis differentia legis & Evangelii, timor & amor : There is a ſhort difference of the Law and Goſpell, feare and love : for Chriſt did teach the Goſpell in great tranquillitie : Incepit ſuaviter dulciter tradere documenta legis novæ : He began, being ſet, to deliver ſweetly the precepts of the new law. Toſtat. ſaying, Bleſſed are the poore in ſpirit, &c. bleſſed are the meeke. Ita lex vetus data eſt cum terroribus : So the old law was given with terrors. Lyranus. 6. Yet we are not ſo to conceive, as though the Goſpell were altogether void of feare, or the Law of comfort : Hic timor Evangelio quoque fuit communis : This feare was alſo common to the Goſpell : as the Apoſtle ſheweth : *Whoſe voyce then ſhooke the earth, and now hath declared, ſaying, Yet once more will I ſhake, not the earth onely, but alſo heaven, Heb.*12.26. Calvin. And again : *If the word ſpoken by Angels was ſtedfaſt, and every tranſgreſſion and diſobedience received a juſt recompence of reward ; how ſhall we eſcape, if we neglect ſo great ſalvation? Heb.*2.2. Neither was the law altogether void of comfort : for in that the people are not fraied away by theſe fearefull ſignes, but are brought by Moſes to meet the Lord : it ſheweth, Fœdus Dei tam amabile fuiſſe, quam metuendum : That the covenant of God was as amiable, as it was terrible and fearefull. Calvin. But here is the difference : The law of it ſelfe, properly wrought feare and terror, and the Goſpell peace : but accidentally alſo there was comfort in the law, as it was a School-maſter, to bring us to Chriſt, and terror in the Goſpell, to them which contemned and refuſed it. 7. Some thinke that in this generall and great feare of the whole campe, yet that Moſes feared not, and was therein a type and figure of ſuch as are perfect. Pellican. But the Apoſtle ſheweth the contrary, that even Moſes alſo trembled and quaked, *Heb.*12.21. But yet Moſes was not afraid, as the people were : Timuit Moſes, ſed non timore ſervili, ut populus, &c. Moſes feared, but not as the people with a vile feare, but with a filiall, which was nothing elſe, but a religious reverence and obſervance. Ferus.

Quest. XXXVI. What it was that Moſes ſpake, and the Lord anſwered.

Verſ.19. Moſes ſpake, and God anſwered. 1. Some thinke, that this which God anſwered, was the decalogue or ten commandements which follow in the next Chapter, Oſiand. But then God is ſaid firſt to ſpeake, he anſwered not Moſes, when he gave the law. 2. Some thinke that Moſes ſpake, and the Lord anſwered, Ille interrogando, & Dominus docendo : Moſes in asking the Lord, and the Lord teaching him. Gloſſ.interlin. But it is not like, that Moſes in this great feare, and terrible ſight, would firſt begin to ſpeake unto God. 3. Ferus ſaith, Quid aliud loquitur pius cum Deo quam orando, confitendo & laudando? What other thing doth the godly ſpeake with God, than in praying, confeſſing, praiſing ; and what doth God anſwer, than in hearing their prayers? But it is like, that not Moſes onely, but Aaron and other the faithfull ſo ſpake, as well as Moſes, in praying and confeſſing unto God : therefore ſome ſpeciall ſpehere ſignified, that Moſes uttered. 4. Some adde further, that God gave authoritie here to Moſes in theſe words, that the people might underſtand. Genevenſ. But the charge and authoritie given to Moſes, after he was come up to the mount, *verſ.*24. but this was before. 5. Therefore, though it be not here expreſſed, what words Moſes ſpake, it is moſt like they were thoſe words which the Apoſtle maketh mention of, *Heb.*12.21. I feare and quake: and that the Lord anſwered Moſes with comfortable words, animating and encouraging him. Iun. As in like manner, The Lord ſpake to Elias, in a ſoft and ſtill voyce, after that he had ſent before, a terrible wind, earth-quake, and fire, 1 *King.*19. 6. This conference then betweene the Lord and Moſes, was before he was called up to the mount, contrary to the opinion of Cajetane, and Hugo de S. Victor. who thinke, that this clauſe is tranſpoſed, and that Moſes was firſt called up, and then the Lord had this ſpeech with Moſes. But beſide that, no tranſpoſing of the hiſtory is to be admitted in Scripture, but where neceſſary occaſion enforceth it in the preventing of ſome inconvenience: it is not like that Moſes would have uttered ſuch words of feare, as is before ſhewed out of the Apoſtle, after the Lord had called him to come up into the mountaine. 7. Beſide we refuſe their conceit, that thinke this voyce ſhould have beene underſtood of Moſes, and not of the people. Pellican. For if Moſes were yet below with the people, and not gone up, it is moſt like, that all the people heard the Lords voyce anſwering Moſes, and therefore it is ſaid he anſwered by voyce, that is, in an audible voyce & in plaine words. Genevenſ. because the Lord had told Moſes before, *verſ.*9. that the people ſhould heare, while the Lord talked with him. And herein the Lord would ſhew, how gracious Moſes was in his ſight, with whom he talked, as one friend with another, *Exod.*33.11. Ferus.

QUEST. XXXVII. Whether God himſelfe, or an Angell ſpake to Moſes in the mount.

AND God anſwered by voyce. 1. Toſtatus is of opinion, that God himſelfe ſpake not to Moſes, but that this voyce was framed by the miniſtry of the Angels. Gregorie alſo before him, ſeemeth to have held the ſame: for he maketh but two wayes, whereby God ſpeaketh: Aut per ſeipſum Dominus loquitur, aut per Angelicam creaturam, God ſpeaketh either by himſelfe, or by his creatures the Angels: when hee ſpeaketh himſelfe, Sine verbis cor docetur. The heart is taught without words or voyce: As the ſpirit ſpake immediately to Philip, to goe and joyne himſelfe to the Eunuches chariot, *Act.*8. 29. and ſo the Spirit ſaid to Peter, *three men ſeeke thee. Act.*10.29. But when God ſpeaketh by an Angell, ſometime they doe it by words, as when that voyce came from heaven, *Ioh.*12. 28. I have both glorified it and will glorifie it againe: ſometime by things done, and ſignes; ſuch was the viſion of Ezechiel, chap. 1. ſometime by words, and ſignes together: as Adam in Paradiſe heard both the voyce, and the noiſe of God walking in the garden: ſometime the Angels ſpake by repreſentations, ſhewed unto the inward ſight: ſuch was the viſion of Iacobs ladder, *Gen.*28. ſometime by outward demonſtration to the eyes, as when the Angels appeared in humane ſhape to Abraham, *Gen.*18. ſometime the Angels ſpeake by the inſtrument of celeſtiall ſubſtances, as when that voyce came out of the cloud in the Baptiſme of Chriſt: This is my beloved Sonne. &c. ſometime by ſenſible creatures, as when the Angell opened the mouth of Balaams Aſſe to ſpeake: ſometime, Per Angelum tantùm cordibus loquitur Deus, God ſpeaketh by an Angell to the heart of man: as Zacharie ſaith, The Lord anſwered the Angell that talked in me, *Zach.*1.13. To this purpoſe, *Gregor.*28. *lib. Moral. cap.*2.

1. Contra. To ſome things here handled by Gregorie, exception will be taken: 1. Though ſometime when a voyce is heard from heaven, it is done by the miniſtry of Angels, as when the Angels have appeared, as Hugo, *Gen.*16. to Abraham, *Gen.*22. yet it followeth not, that alwayes when a voyce is ſo framed, that it's the worke of an Angell: for have Angels power to make a ſound and voyce, without Organes and inſtruments, and hath not the Lord, which made the Angels? and ſhall we tie the Lord ſo ſhort, as that he ſhall not ſpeake by voyce and words unto mortall men, but the Angels muſt be called for, to helpe him in the worke? 2. That voyce, which was uttered to Chriſt, *Ioh.*12. was the voyce of God, and not of the Angell: the people that ſtood by, ſome ſaid it was a thunder, ſome that an Angell ſpake, but they were deceived the one, as well as the other: for Chriſt prayeth to his Father, Father glorifie thy name, and his Father anſwereth him. 3. And it is evident, that the voyce which Adam heard in Pradiſe, was the voyce of God himſelfe, for ſo God ſaith unto him, *Haſt thou eaten of the fruit of the tree, whereof I commanded thee that thou ſhouldeſt not eat? Gen.*3.11. but it was God himſelfe that made man, and not an Angell, that gave him that commandement. 4. Neither was it the voyce of an Angell, but of God himſelfe, which came from heaven, ſaying, This is my beloved Sonne: for Chriſt is the Sonne not of Angels, but of God the Father. And S. Peter teſtifieth, that the voyce came from the excellent glorie, 2 *Pet.*1.17. 5. And that place taken in Zacharie: where though the Latine interpreter, whom Gregorie followeth, read, qui loquutus eſt in me, which ſpake in me: yet it is better tranſlated, which ſpake to me: Vatab. Iun. For although the originall the word be (bi) in me: it ſignifieth as well to, as in, as the prepoſition (in) is taken in the 5. And the circumſtance of the place ſheweth it to be ſo: for the Angell of Iehovah which ſpake to Moſes, was the man that ſtood among the myrrhe trees, called the Angell of Iehovah that ſtood among the myrrhe trees, v10.11. If he were among the myrrhe trees, then was he not in Zacharie to ſpeak within him. And if Angels could ſpeake to the heart, it muſt needs follow that they know the heart: which is contrary to the Scriptures, for God onely knoweth the hearts of all men, 1 *King.*8.39. And whereas the Lord ſaith he ſpeaketh to the heart, herein the miniſtry of Angels ſhould be ſuperfluous. Further alſo, if the former reading be admitted, that the Angell ſpake in the Prophet: it was no created Angell, but the great Angell of Iehovah the Mediatour of the covenant, Chriſt Jeſus, who maketh interceſſion for his people: for in this place, this Angell ſaith unto the Lord: O Lord of hoſtes, how long wilt thou be unmercifull to Jeruſalem? &c. verſ. 12. and then it followeth in the next verſe: The Lord anſwered the Angell that that talked with me, with good and comfortable words. Beſide, that it was the great Angell of Iehovah the Mediatour, the commander of other Angels, it appeareth verſ. 12. The other Angels, which were ſent abroad into the world, returne their meſſage unto him, They anſwered the Angell of Iehovah, and ſaid, &c. We have gone thorow the world, &c. This Angell of Iehovah could talke within and to the heart of the Prophet, as in the dayes of his fleſh, he could deſcrie the very inward thoughts and reaſoning in the mind. Mark. 2.8.

How Chriſt was the mediatour of the old Teſtament.

3. But that God himſelfe, Iehovah, Chriſt, the Mediatour both of the old and new Teſtament, was the giver of the Law: and that it was he himſelfe that talked with Moſes, by theſe reaſons it is made plaine. 1. Becauſe he is called Iehovah, verſ. 2. Iehovah came downe upon mount Sinai: which is proprium & eſſentiale nomen Dei, & nunquam ad creaturas transfertur, &c. which is the proper and eſſentiall name of God, and never transferred to any creature. Calvin. in 3. ad Galat. Toſtatus thinketh otherwiſe: that an Angell for time in the old Teſtament, appearing in the perſon of God, is not onely called God, but Dominus, Lord alſo, quæſt. 6. in Exod. But herein he is deceived: the Angels indeed are called Elohim, God, which title is ſometime given unto men and excellent perſons here, as Judges are called Elohim, Gods, Exod. 22.28. And as Dominus, Lord, is the interpretation of Adonai, ſo alſo it is given unto Angels, and unto men: as Abrahams ſervant calleth him Adonai, his Lord or maſter, Gen. 24. But as Iehovah is tranſlated Dominus, the Lord, weo, as both the Latine and Septuagint interpret: ſo it is not competible to any, but unto God. The Lord ſaith, it ſhall be his name for ever, Exod. 3. 15. Neither can it be ſhewed thorowout the whole bodie of Scripture, that the name Iehovah was ever given unto any, but unto God onely. 2. Moſes himſelfe ſaith, that Iehovah ſpake unto you out of the middeſt of the fire, Deut. 4. 11. It was the voyce then of God himſelfe, Deut. 4. 12. Simler. 3. Another reaſon may be taken from the office of Chriſt, who was the Mediatour both of the old and new Teſtament: as the Law is ſaid to bee ordained by Angels in the hand of a Mediatour, Galath. 3.19. which though Beza contend to be underſtood of Moſes, yet the exposition of Chryſoſtome and Calvine upon that place is to bee preferred, which interpret it of Chriſt: both becauſe of the words following: A Mediatour is not of one, that is, but both of Jewes and Gentiles: But Moſes was not the Mediatour of the Gentiles: as alſo, the title of Mediatour betweene God and man in the new Teſtament is given onely unto Chriſt, 1 Tim. 2.5. So Chryſoſtome: Mediatorem hic appellat Chriſtum declarans, quod ipſe ante legem fuerit, & legem tulerit: He calleth Chriſt the Mediator, declaring, that he was before the law, and that he gave the law. And Origen thus expoundeth the ſame place: In fine ſeculorum homo factus eſt Ieſus Chriſtus, ſed ante hunc manifeſtum in carne adventum, mediator quidem erat hominum, ſed nondum erat homo: In the end of the world Ieſus Chriſt became man: but before his manifeſtation in the fleſh, he was the mediatour of men, though yet he was not man. Wherefore that is a ſound aſſertion of maſter Calvine: Nullam ab uſq; mundi initio Dei fuiſſe communicationem cum hominibus &c. That there was not from the beginning of the world any entercourſe betweene God & man, but by the interceſſion of the eternall wiſdome of God, the Son of God: That as he is now the Mediatour of interceſſion, & reconciliation; ſo he was alwayes of inſtruction and doctrine. And ſo that ſaying of Ambroſe may conclude this point: Quis tantus eſſet dux, qui prodeſſet omnibus niſi ille, qui ſupra omnes eſt? quis me ſupra mundum conſtituere poſſet major eſt mundo? Who is ſo great a Captaine, to profit and do good to all, but he which is above all? who could ſet me above the world, but he that is greater than the world? Lib. 4. in Luc. Seeing then the morall law was given to profit all people, and not the Jewes onely, and to remaine as a rule of righteouſnes, as long as God hath his Church upon earth, Moſes could not be that mediatour of the law, which was but the Captaine of that one people: but he which is the Prince and Captaine of the whole Church of God for ever.

That place expounded, Heb. 2. 2. how the word and the law, was ſpoken by Angels.

4. But that place will be objected, Heb. 2. 2. If the word ſpoken by Angels was ſtedfaſt, &c. In which words the Apoſtle ſeemeth to affirme that the law was uttered and delivered by the Angels. This place is diverſly expounded:

1. Some by Angels underſtand the Prieſts, Prophets and other Miniſters of the old Teſtament: Chryſoſtome toucheth this expoſition, upon the like place, Galath. 3.19. that the law was ordained by Angels. But this interpretation cannot ſtand: for the Apoſtle ſheweth afterward, what Angels he ſpeaketh of: He hath not put in ſubjection unto the Angels the world to come, verſ. 5.

2. Some by Angell underſtand Chriſt, Simler. But the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of Angels in the plurall. And the Apoſtle compareth together the word ſpoken by Angels, and the word preached by the Lord himſelfe: which compariſon will not hold, if the Lord Chriſt ſhould be underſtood to be the Angell, by whom the law was ſpoken.

3. Some thinke that the thunder and lightning and voyce of the trumpet were cauſed by the miniſtery of Angels, but the voyce which delivered the law was from God himſelfe. Simler. But the Apoſtle ſaith more, that the word was ſpoken by the Angels.

4. Some applie this text to the whole miniſtration of the old Teſtament, and not to the law onely. Quis dubitat per Angelos miniſtratam fuiſſe omnem veteris Teſtamenti diſpenſationem? Who doubteth that all the diſpenſation of the old Teſtament was miniſtred by the Angels? Marlorat in 3. Galath. v. 19. Iunius in his Parallels upon that place, Act. 7. 53. ſaith to this effect, that the Angels were miniſters ſermonis ad populum, non authores legis: that the Angels were miniſters of the word afterward to the people, but not authors of the law. But this place being compared with Act. 7.53. and Galath. 3.19. where it is ſaid that the law was ordained by Angels, it will draw alſo, the word here ſaid to be ſpoken by the Angels be underſtood of the law.

5. Iunius hath another expoſition: that the law was ordained, inter Angelos, among the Angels: not. Galath. 3.19. and in his Parallels he ſaith, the law was exhibited onely by Chriſt, inter ordines Angelorum among the orders of the Angels: but the phraſe it ſelfe, ſpoken by the Angels, giveth more to be underſtood, then among the Angels.

6. Wherefore, I preferre Chryſoſtomes expoſition, upon that place, Galath. 3. 19. Sentit ipſos Angelos miniſtraſſe ferendæ legi: He meaneth that the Angels did miniſter at the giving of the Law: It is one thing for the Angels as Gods deputies, to deliver the Law, another as miniſters and inſtruments. As ſometime a Prince may ſend Commiſſioners to execute his Edicts, who doe ſupplie his perſon and authoritie: ſometime he being preſent in Majeſtie, may by the mouth of another proclaime his Edict. So at other times the Angels did ſpeake in the name and perſon of God, as the Angell did call to Abraham, *Geneſ.*22. ſometime they did attend as miniſtring ſpirits, upon the Majeſtie of God, as his Criers and Proclaimers. So the Law was delivered in mount Sinai, by the authoritie of God himſelfe appearing in Majeſtie, who endited and framed the law; but it might be proclaimed by the Angels, concurring by their miniſtrie, in the frame of that audible voyce and ſound, which was heard.

Quest. XXXVIII. Why Moſes is commanded to charge the people againe.

Vers. 21. GOe downe, charge the people. 1. Though this charge was given before, yet the Lord commandeth it to be done againe, Imminente jam hora ad majorem certitudinem, The very houre being now inſtant for more certaintie. Lyran. For they would the rather take heed, Cum recentius, & in Dei præſentia mandarentur, Being charged afreſh, and in the preſence of God. Toſtat. 2. Another reaſon of repeating this charge, was the ſtubborne nature of the people, who had need often to be admoniſhed: and although Moſes thought it not needfull againe to charge them, as it appeareth by his anſwer, and in a manifeſtfall, *verſ.*23. yet the Lord, Sciebat ſibi cum præfractis eſſe negotium, Knew that he had to deale with a people ſtubborne. Calvin. 3. And further, though they had beene ſtraitly charged before, not to exceed their prefixed limits and bounds: yet, they would have adventured, Ipſo abſente, & mora tamdiu, & ob impatientiam vitii, In Moſes abſence, partly not enduring longer delay, partly of a curious deſire, to have ſeene beyond their marks. Galaſ. 4. As alſo the charge is iterated in reſpect of the ſpeciall interdict of the Priſts, who might have preſumed, being not before ſpecially and in particular named, the charge being given to the people in generall. Simler.

Quest. XXXIX. What Prieſts are here underſtood.

Vers. 22. AND let the Prieſts alſo. 1. Becauſe the order of Prieſts was not yet inſtituted, ſome thinke that is ſpoken by anticipation, and prevention, that afterward, when the Prieſts ſhould be ordained and conſecrated, they ſhould be ſanctified, when they came into the preſence of God. Ex Lyran. But it ſeemeth by the ſending downe of Moſes, that this charge was preſently to be given by Moſes, and by the other to be executed. And further it is ſaid, Let the Prieſts, which come to the Lord, be ſanctified: The Lord then ſpeaketh of thoſe Prieſts, which already had acceſſe unto God, not of thoſe, which ſhould be aſſigned afterward. Toſtat. 2. Some thinke that by this word, cohanim, which ſignifieth, as well Princes as Prieſts, are underſtood the Tribunes, Officers, and Judges of the people, which were before appointed by the counſell and advice of Iethro. Lippom. Genevenſ. But their office was to judge the people, and heare their controverſies: the office of thoſe Prieſts, was to have acceſſe unto the preſence of God in offering of ſacrifice. 3. Some thinke that the Prieſts were conſecrated now, but that it is ſet downe afterward. Malvend. But this were without any neceſſitie to diſturbe, and tranſpoſe the order of the ſtorie. 4. Therefore their opinion is moſt probable, who thinke that theſe Prieſts were the firſt borne, to whom the prerogative of the Prieſthood belonged, till it was by Gods appointment ſetled in the Tribe of Levi: But neither the firſt borne in Iſrael, that were conſecrated unto God, were Prieſts, as Iun. Borrh. For it is not credible in ſo great a multitude, Singulis domibus proprios fuiſſe Sacerdotes, That every houſe had his peculiar proper Prieſt. Calvin. Neither were they onely *Primogeniti Principum duodecim tribuum, &c. The firſt borne of the Princes of the twelve Tribes, which offered ſacrifice, chap.*24. 5. As R. Salomon, Lyran. For ſmall a number of Prieſts ſufficed not for the whole multitude. They were then as well Filii primogeniti eorum magnorum virorum, The firſt borne ſonnes of other great men, which were the Princes of their families, as the firſt borne of the Princes of the Tribes. *Toſtat. queſt.*12. 5. And by drawing neere unto God, is not here meant, that ſpeciall kind of acceſſe, to enquire of God, which Moſes did onely then, and the high Prieſt afterward, by his Vrim, and Thummim, but the comming unto God to miniſter, as the Chalde interpreteth. Toſtat. Lippom.

Quest. XL. Why Moſes replieth, as unwilling to goe downe.

Vers. 23. AND Moſes ſaid unto the Lord. 1. Some thinke that Moſes thus replied, Quod non videbatur neceſſarium, ut iſta conteſtatio fieret: As though it ſeemed not neceſſarie, that this conteſtation ſhould be made. Toſtat. But it is not to be thought, that Moſes would ſo contradict the Lord, having beene now in ſo great feare, that the Lord ſpake unto him to comfort him. 2. Some ſay, that Moſes thus replied, as though he tooke this charge to be ſuperfluous, but to ſhew his faithfulneſſe, that he had carefully before intimated to the people the will and pleaſure of God therein. Simler. But the Lord was not ignorant, what Moſes had done, that he needed to make repetition of his ſervice. 3. Some thinke that Moſes, Audendo populo mandatum refricat: That Moſes thus anſwereth, that hee might in hearing of the people, rubbe their memorie, leſt they might forget any thing of the charge. Pellican. But Moſes was not yet gone downe to the people, and therefore not within their hearing. 4. Rupertus ſaith, Moſes Deum reddere voluit divina inhærens viſioni: That Moſes being deſirous to continue there ſtill, to ſee that that heavenly vision, would have put the Lord out of doubt for that matter: But this had beene to make him selfe wiser than God, to give him securitie in that, which the Lord himselfe made question of. 5. But is most unlike, that Moses should find fault with this charge, as somewhat hard, and that in effect he should say thus, Si non licet eis ascendere, & audire te, quis ergo audiet: If it be not lawfull for them to ascend, and heare thee, who then shall heare thee? Hugo de S. Victor. 6. Moses therefore replieth, not as discontented with this charge, but, seeing that the Lords commandement was so generall, and so strict, that no not the Priests were exempted, he is therefore desirous to be satisfied, whom it was the Lords pleasure to admit to come up into the mount, and so the Lord presently giveth Moses satisfaction herein, giving unto him and Aaron onely liberty to come up. Iun.

QUEST. XLI. Why the Lord not withstanding Moses answer, still chargeth him to go downe.

Vers.24. AND the Lord said unto him, go get thee downe. 1. Tostatus thinketh, that this replie of the Lord is a correction of Moses answer; Videbat enim Deus, quod Moses non videbat: For God saw that, which Moses did not see: that is, that it was needfull for him to goe downe, and charge the people againe: but the mentioning of Aaron afterward, whom Moses spake not of before, sheweth that the Lords speech was not a correction, but rather a satisfaction given unto Moses. 2. Cajetane saith, Imperfecta responsio Aaron, & mutila meruit non admitti: The imperfect and lame answer of Moses, deserved not to be admitted: for Moses in his answer, neither maketh mention of the Priests, nor of the punishment, both which the Lord had spoken of: But Moses was not refused here of God, he received satisfaction of his doubt. 3. Therefore it appeareth by the Lords answer unto Moses, giving him and Aaron onely libertie to come up, that the Lords intendment was to satisfie Moses in that behalfe, who seemed to make question upon the Lords straite charge, whether any should be admitted to come up at all: and therefore the Lord telleth him, that though the people and Priests were inhibited, yet it should bee lawfull for him and Aaron to come up. Iun. 4. So here two other reasons may be gathered, why Moses is sent downe from the hill: the one that Moses should goe downe, Ut sit unus de populo audiendo legem, To be as one of the people, to heare the law among the rest; and that he should bring up Aaron with him. Cajetan.

QUEST. XLII. Why Aaron is bid to come up with Moses, wherefore he went up, and when.

Vers.24. COME up, thou and Aaron with thee, &c. 1. This was not that comming up, when Moses went to receive the Lawes of God: for then not onely Aaron, but Nadab and Abihu, and 70. of the Elders went up also, chap. 24. 2. Neither did Moses and Aaron goe up together, when the ten commandements were delivered by voyce: for then Moses was below, and not farre off from the people; for then they could not have spoken to Moses, as they did immediately after the delivering of the Law, *chap.*29.19. 3. Nor yet did Aaron goe up with Moses into the top of the mountaine, into the midst of the darknesse: for thither Moses onely went up, leaving Aaron and Hur behind, to heare the peoples controversies, *chap.*24.14. 4. Therefore Moses and Aaron went up to some place of the mountaine, not to the top, but as it might be to the middle, not far from the people: from which place Moses might heare the people calling unto him. Tostat. 5. The Lord thought it fit to joyne Aaron with Moses, because he was appointed to the Priesthood, that he might be better prepared by those heavenly visions and revelations unto it. Simler.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. One faith, one Church of the beleeving Iewes and Gentiles.

Vers.6. YOU shall be unto me a Kingdome of Priests. S. Peter applieth this Scripture, which is here uttered by the Lord to the people of Israel, to the faithfull and beleeving Gentiles: Ye as lively stones be made a spirituall house, and holy Priesthood to offer up spirituall sacrifices unto God, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ, 1 *Pet.*2.5. Whereby we see, that there is Vna Iudæorum & Gentium credentium fides, una Dei una Ecclesia: One faith of the beleeving Iewes and Gentiles, one God, one Church. Ferus.

2. Doct. The occasions and beginnings of sinne to be prevented.

Vers.12. GOE not up to the mount, nor touch the border of it. God forbiddeth them so much as to touch the very border and bottome of the mount, that they should have no occasion to goe up. So Eve was forbidden to touch the tree, that shee should not be enticed to eat the fruit thereof, *Gen.*3. And the Israelites were charged to have no leaven in their houses, that they might the better abstain from the eating thereof. So our Saviour forbiddeth the wrath of the heart, and the lust of the eye, lest being tempted by such occasions, men should fall into greater sinnes: It is good therefore to cut off the occasion of sinne, and to set an hedge before, and to make markes and bounds in every action, which we should not exceed. Oleaster.

3. Doct. The giving of the law a figure of the comming of the holy Ghost.

Vers.16. THE third day there was thunder and lightnings. The giving of the law in mount Sinai, was a lively figure of the comming downe of the holy Ghost upon the Apostles. 1. As there the law was given the 50. day after the Passeover: so, Quinquagesimo die post passionem Domini, datus est spiritus sanctus, The fiftieth day after the passion of our Lord, who is the true Passeover, the holy Ghost was given. 2. The e law is ſaid to be written with the finger of God, and the Lord ſaith of the holy Ghoſt, By the finger of d I caſt out devils. 3. They which were with the Apoſtles, 120. Moſaica ætatis numero conſtituti: re 120. according to the number of Moſes yeares. Iſidor. 4. Hic altitudo cœnaculi, ibi cacumen montis, &c. here the upper roome, and here the top, or upper part of the hill, doe ſhew the height and depth of the pre- es delivered. 5. Here was thunder, there was the noiſe of a mightie wind: here fire appeared, and there e cloven tongues: here the mountaine trembled, and there the place where they were gathered toge- was moved: here was heard the ſound of a trumpet, and there they ſpake with divers tongues. Beda in vigil. Pentecoſt. 6. Yet this difference there was in theſe two apparitions: Here together with the was ſeene a thicke and darke cloud, but there bright ſhining flames of fire, like cloven tongues, ſhewing clearе light of the Goſpell, in reſpect of the cloudy darkneſſe of the Law. Simler. Here onely Moſes s ſuffered to goe up the hill, there all which were preſent received the holy Ghoſt: here the people mble and are afraid, but there they were emboldened by the Spirit, to preach the wonderfull works God.

4. Doct. By the preaching of the Word, we are joyned unto God by faith.

v.17. MOſes brought the people out of their tents. So Miniſtrorum officium eſt, It is the dutie of Mi- niſters by the preaching of the Goſpell, to draw men out of the tents of ſin, & to joyne them o God by faith. Lippom. As the Apoſtle ſaith, Faith is by hearing, and hearing by the Word, Rom. 10. 17.

5. Doct. Diſtinction of offices in the Church.

v.24. COme up thou, and Aaron with thee. The people ſtand below in the campe, but Moſes and Aaron aſcend up into the mount. This ſheweth the diſtinction of offices, and callings in the urch, betweene the Miniſters and the people, that none ſhould take upon them the office of teaching, delivering the high things of God, but they which are thereunto called: as the Apoſtle would have ery one to abide in the ſame vocation wherein he was called, 1 Cor. 7. 20. Marbach.

5. Places of Controverſie.

1. Cont. Angels carrie not up our prayers unto God, as Mediatours.

v.8. AND Moſes reported the words of the people unto the Lord. Toſtatus hereupon inferreth thus, that as Moſes carried up the peoples anſwer unto God, Sic Angeli coram Deo proponunt ora- ones noſtras, So the Angels propound before God, our prayers: quæſt. 3. in fine. Contra. 1. This followeth not, or Moſes was a meſſenger betweene God and his people, hee was commanded to propound unto them, hat the Lord had ſaid: ſo when it can be ſhewed in Scripture, that the Angels have the like charge from od to report our prayers, the argument will follow, elſe not. 2. If the Angels ſhould returne our prayers d ſayings unto God, as they doe the reſt of our doings: they do not as mediatours interpoſe themſelves, t onely as reporters returne, as they find in the world: and it is to this end, as Auguſtine ſaith, Vt ſuper Domini voluntatem conſulant, That they may know Gods pleaſure further therein: in Pſal. 67. No doubt y doe obſerve, who are faithfull, and devout in prayer, and who are otherwiſe: The devill obſerved , as the Lord ſaith, Haſt thou not conſidered my ſervant Iob, how none is like him in the earth, Iob. 1. 8. e did it with envie; the good Angels were witneſſes of his pietie with joy. So the Angels which ewed thorow the world, returne this anſwer: That all the world ſitteth ſtill, and is at reſt, Zachar. 1. 11. There was no devotion or exerciſe of godlineſſe, but all given to ſecuritie and careleſneſſe. In this man- r Angels may report as mens doings, ſo their ſayings unto God: but this maketh nothing at all for the vocation of Angels, which is by the Romaniſts hereby intended.

2. Cont. That man hath no free will unto good.

v.5. IF ye will heare my voyce indeed, and keepe my covenant, &c. From hence Lippoman would ga- ther, that man hath free will: ad quid enim ita loqueretur, &c. For to what end ſhould hee ſo ak, if it were not in the peoples power to heare, and keepe the covenant? Contra. 1. If this were in r power to keepe Gods covenant, which is to obſerve his law, and obey the commandements; to what d then came our bleſſed Saviour to performe the law for us, which wee in reſpect of the weakneſſe of eſh could not doe? 2. Therefore theſe precepts are propounded in Scripture to theſe two ends, that y mans drowſie nature ſhould be ſtirred up to labour unto perfection: and that finding himſelfe to come ſhort of the commandement, he might ſee his owne weakneſſe, and flee for ſuccour unto Chriſt, Therefore S. Paul ſaith, that the law is a Shool-maſter to bring us unto Chriſt, Gal. 3. 24.

3. Cont. No abſolute faith or credit to be given unto teachers, but as they agree with Scriptures.

v.9. LO I come unto thee in a thicke cloud, that the people may heare while I talke with thee. It was Moſes credit with the people, that they heard the Lord ſpeaking with him. And Moſes de- ſo further to be beleeved, than he had his warrant from God: Non alio jure fidem in Eccleſia obtinuit, quia Dei mandata pertulit: He by no other right obtained credit in the Church, but becauſe he brought commandements of God. Calvin. It is therefore great preſumption for thoſe which take upon them to bee the Paſtors and Doctors of the Church, to arrogate and aſſume more unto themſelves than did. As the Romaniſts doe hold, that we ought to receive all the decrees and conſtitutions of the Church,

Church, without any further diſcuſſing: We ought to take our faith, and all neceſſary things of our ſa[lvation] at the hands of our ſuperiours: Rhemiſt. Act.10.ſect.8. We muſt beleeve the Church, and truſt it in all [things] 1 Tim.3.ſect.9. Whereas the Apoſtles themſelves required not their doctrine otherwiſe to bee receiv[ed] then as it was conſonant to the Scriptures: for the Bereans are commended, for conferring thoſe thi[ngs] which they taught with the Scriptures, Act.17.11.

4. Cont. Perpetuall abſtinence from marriage, not required of Miniſters.

Verſ.15. Come not at your wives. Bellarmine out of this text would enforce the ſingle life of the Cler[gy] becauſe the people, being to appeare before the Lord, are commanded to abſtaine from [their] wives, Lib.1. de Clericis cap.19. Contra. 1. It followeth not, the people were commanded abſtinen[ce] for three dayes: Ergo, Miniſters all their life ſhould abſtaine: or, they had wives and came not at them [in] three dayes: therefore Miniſters muſt have no wives. 2. The practice of thoſe times was otherwiſe, [for] the Prieſts and Levites were married: if this example preſſed not them, it doth not enforce perpetu[all] ſingle life now. 3. Neither doth the argument follow: becauſe then there was in the uſe of marriage [by] the naturall iſſue a legall pollution, which made them uncleane untill the even, *Levit.*15.18. and therefo[re] ſuch abſtinence and forbearance was required: but ſuch uncleanneſſe now is taken away: as in like ma[n]ner, he that touched a dead corſe then was uncleane, and yet therein he ſinned not: there was then a kin[d] of legall uncleanneſſe, which was not ſinne. Simler. 4. But ſo much as is morall in this precept bindeth now: that to make our prayers more fervent, as by faſting, ſo by this kind of abſtinence for a time, is fit, agreeable to the Apoſtles doctrine, 1 *Cor.*7.5. But as it followeth not, it is good to faſt ſometime, to be mo[re] earneſt in prayer: therefore we ſhould alwayes faſt: ſo from abſtinence from the marriage bed, to conclud[e] perpetuall forbearance, is abſurd. Ferus, one of their owne writers, is more equall, who writeth thus: Non eſt malum matrimonium, ſed tamen acceſſuri ad Deum etiam à licitis temperare debent: Matrimonie is no evill, yet they which come unto God, ought to abſtaine even from things lawfull. Which kind of abſtinence by the Apoſtle required not onely of Miniſters, but of all in generall in the foreſaid place, 1 *Cor.*7.5.

5. Cont. Againſt the diſtinction of counſels and precepts.

Rupertus further hath this note upon this text: Ad ſanctificationem non ſatis eſt feciſſe præceptum, ni[ſi] adjicias & facere conſilium: To ſanctification it is not enough to fulfill the precept, unleſſe you adde [and] performe the counſels alſo: And in that place he ſheweth what a precept is, to abſtaine from things unlaw[ful], full, and what a counſell is, abſtinere à licitis, to abſtaine from things lawfull, *Lib.3. in Exod. cap.26 Contra.*1. Though the uſe of the wife were in it ſelfe lawfull: yet upon this prohibition it was unlawfull: therefore it was no counſell now, but a precept. 2. That diſtinction of precepts and counſels is not found[ed] nor conſonant with the Scriptures: as they call thoſe precepts, which are commanded of God, and whi[ch] to leave undone is ſinne: The counſels are not enjoyned, and to leave them undone is no ſinne: but [in] keeping of them there is greater reward. For whatſoever we doe, or can doe, it is but our dutie to doe, Luk. 17.10. and if we come ſhort in doing thoſe things which are commanded, it is not poſſible for any to d[o] more than is required. And ſeeing our Saviour biddeth us to be perfect, as his heavenly father is perfe[ct] and we are commanded to love the Lord with all our heart, and all our ſoule: then the counſels, wh[ich] they call of perfection, if they proceed from the love of God, are commanded alſo.

6. Morall obſervations.

1. Obſerv. We muſt be as ready to performe, as promiſe obedience.

Verſ.8. All that the Lord hath commanded, will wee doe. The people are ready to promiſe obedi[ence] and that without any limitation, to all that God commanded: but they ſoone forgat [their] promiſe, and they were afterward as ſlow to performe, as here they are ready to vow obedience: whi[ch] we learne, Nullius momenti eſſe ſubitum affectum, niſi accedat perſeverandi conſtantia: That a ſudden [affe]ction is of no moment, unleſſe conſtancie in perſevering be added. Calvin: to the ſame purpoſe Oleaſter in the parable, the ſonne that ſaid to his father when he was bid to worke in his vineyard, and made [an]ſwer hee would not, yet after repented, and went, is commended before him that gave faire words, [and] ſaid he would, but went not, *Matth.*21.29.

2. Obſerv. Due preparation muſt goe before the hearing of the word.

Verſ.10. Let them waſh their cloaths. Hereupon Origene thus noteth: Nemo poteſt audire verbum [Dei] ſanctificatus, id eſt, ſanctus corpore & mente: None can heare the word of God, unleſſe they be [well] ſanctified, that is, holy in minde and bodie. If any come with unwaſhen garments, that is, unprepared, [he] will be ſaid unto him, as in the parable, to him that had not his wedding garment: Friend, how camſt [thou] thou in hither? The word of God is not to be handled with uncleane hands, neither will enter into [unclean] hearts. B. Babinge.

3. Obſerv. Our ſanctification is not perfected all at once.

Verſ.10. Sanctifie them to day and to morrow. Non enim una die perficitur ſanctificatio, &c. For our ſan[ctifi]cation cannot be perfited in one day. We muſt labour and ſtudy for it all the dayes of our [life]. Ferus. As the Apoſtle compareth Chriſtians to men ſet in a race: So run, that ye may obtaine, 2 *Cor.*9.

ain vaine for a man to ſet forward in the beginning of his race, if hee hold not out to the end: ſo our ...ecration is not perfited all at once in the beginning: we muſt goe on ſtill, untill the Lord have per-...d his worke in us.

4. Obſerv. Againſt curioſitie in divine things.

...12. THou ſhalt ſet marks unto the people. Docet hic locus, ne in rebus divinis ſimus curioſi: This place ſheweth, that we ought not to be curious in the ſearching out of divine things. Ferus: and ...ew what an odious thing curioſitie is in matters forbidden, and that we ſhould be content with that ...h it pleaſeth God to vouchſafe to reveale unto us: B. Babington. As the holy Apoſtle ſaith, that no ...e preſume to underſtand above that, which is meet to underſtand: but that he underſtand according to ſo-...e, as God hath dealt to every one the meaſure of faith, Rom. 12.3.

5. Obſerv. The word of God had need often to be inculcate.

...21. GOe downe, charge the people. Such is our dulneſſe, that we had need to have the word of God often inculcate and beaten upon us: Men are marveilous apt to tranſgreſſe, and there-...e againe and againe they muſt bee admoniſhed by Moſes. B. Babingt. Therefore the Apoſtle ſaith: It ...ſeth me not to write the ſame things unto you, and for you it is a ſure thing, Philip. 3. 1. As here Moſes is ...anded to iterate and renew the ſame charge, that the people breake not their bounds.

CHAP. XX.

1. The method and Argument.

HIs Chapter ſetteth forth the promulgation of the morall law, with certaine effects that followed.

1. In the promulgation, firſt there is the preface, ſhewing who was the author and proclaimer of the law: God the Lord: what hee ſpake: all theſe words, verſ. 1. and what the Lord had done for his people, wherefore they ſhould be willing to heare and receive his law: he had brought them out of Egypt, verſ. 2.

Secondly, the Commandements follow, which concerne the worſhip of God in the ...t table containing foure Commandements: and our dutie toward our neighbours in the ſix laſt, to ...ſ.18. which make the ſecond table.

The firſt table preſcribeth both the internall worſhip of God, who is to be worſhipped, in the firſt com-...dement, *verſ.*3. and in what manner, ſpiritually in the heart & minde, not by any Idolatrie or Imagerie: ...re the matter of ſuch images and Idols is rehearſed, *verſ.*4. the abuſe forbidden, *verſ.*5. the reaſon ad-..., partly from a puniſhment threatned, *verſ.*5. partly from mercie promiſed, *verſ.*6.

The externall worſhip of God is preſcribed, in the reverent profeſſion of his name, which is not to bee ...in vaine: where there is to be conſidered firſt the prohibition, then the penaltie, in the third com-...ment, *verſ.*7.

...ſin the keeping of the Sabbath, in the fourth commandement: which conſiſteth of the conſtitu-...n thereof by an Antitheſis or oppoſite compariſon of the ſix dayes of labour, *verſ.*8,9. then of the pre-...ption, both in what manner, and by what perſons the Sabbath muſt be kept, verſ. 10. and the confir-...ation from the example of God himſelfe, *verſ.*12.

The ſecond table, commandeth the mutuall duties to be performed among men, and forbiddeth what-...ver contrarie thereunto: which are either the ſprigges and branches of vices committed, or the very ...t of corruption it ſelfe. The ſprigges are ſuch as concerne ſome certaine callings and perſons, as in the ...mandement, which preſcribeth the dutie toward our ſuperiours, with a promiſe of long life an-..., verſ. 12. or belong indifferently to all men in generall: and touch either their bodie and life in ...commandement, verſ. 13. their marriage and wife in the ſeventh, verſ. 14. their goods in the ..., *verſ.*15. their name and fame in the ninth, *verſ.*16. Then followeth the root of all, which is evill ...ſcence, in the tenth, verſ. 17. which conſiſteth of a particular enumeration, what things of our ...bours are not to be coveted.

...the ſecond part: the effects that followed are either matters of fact, or matters of precept: of the ..., 1. The feare of the people in ſtanding a farre off, verſ. 18. 2. Their requeſt to Moſes, that hee ...ſpeake unto them, verſ. 19. 3. Moſes comforting of the people, verſ. 20. 4. His drawing neere ...ud, *verſ.*21.

...e precepts are three: 1. to make no Image, with the reaſon thereof, they ſaw none while God talked ...em, *verſ.*22,23. 2. What Altar they ſhall make, either of earth, *verſ.*24. or unhewen ſtone, *v.*25. ...ey ſhall make no ſteps unto the Altar, and why, *verſ.*26.

2. The divers readings.

...5. Thou ſhalt not bow downe unto them. I.G.B.A.P. better than, thou ſhalt not worſhip them. S.L.V. I.G.B. ...ſignifieth to bow unto: and the conſtruction with the prepoſition ל labem, ſheweth a Dative caſe, Strong.

I.A.P.L. Strong, jealous. I. A. P. V. L. better, than a jealous God. S.B.G. for the word El here signifieth strong; for otherwise it should be set thus, kanah El, jealous God, not, El kanah, God jealous.

B.G.L. Vers.7. Will not hold him guiltlesse, or innocent. B.G.L.P. will not leave him unpunished. V.L. the sense is rather than the words: will not hold him cleane, or mundifie him. S.A. nakah signifieth both to cleanse, and to hold innocent: but the latter rather here.

I.V.A. Vers.10. In it thou shalt not doe any worke. L.B.G.S. in it, is not in the originall: as I.V.A.P. leave it out.

Vers.17. Thou shalt not utter a false testimonie, &c. I. thou shalt not speake. L. answere V.A. testifie a false testimonie. S.A. beare false witnesse. B.G. ghanah signifieth all these, to speake, to answer, to testifie: at first rather here.

3. The explanation of difficult questions.

Quest. I. Whether this be a Commandement, I am the Lord.

Vers.2. I am the Lord thy God. 1. It is the opinion of the Hebrewes that this should be the first Commandement: & they give this reason, because it was necessary that the people should first firmely and stedfastly beleeve, that the Lord, which spake unto them, was that God which brought them out of the land of Egypt, before they could be perswaded to yeeld obedience to his law: as they further shew by this similitude: Like as a King that should offer lawes and ordinances unto a Province and Country to be kept and observed, must first be received and acknowledged for King, before his lawes would find admittance: So the people were first to beleeve that hee was the God that delivered them, before they could resolve to receive his law. 2. But to this it may be answered: 1. That the people were already perswaded, and firmely beleeved, that the Lord was their God, which had delivered them from their enemies, and they had promised already to yeeld obedience to all Gods commandements, chap.19.7. and therefore it was not needfull to give them any speciall commandement to beleeve the Lord to bee their God. Paul. Burgens. addition.1. 2. But, although this answer giveth satisfaction in respect of the present condition of the Israelites, to whom the Lord had approved himselfe already, by many wonderfull workes to be their God: and therefore they needed not any speciall commandement in that behalfe: yet seeing the morall law was not given to that age present, or to that nation onely, but to all people in the world, which have not any such preparation or foundation of this first beleefe and perswasion of the true God, by such wonderfull signes and miracles: therefore further it must be added, that even this precept, to beleeve the true God, & to repose our whole trust in him, is contained even in the first commandement following: Thou shalt have no other Gods: for here we are commanded to acknowledge the Lord to bee the only true God, and so consequently to give him that honour and worship, which belongeth unto him. And so saith Cyprian: Quòd Deus solus colendus sit, &c. That God onely is to be worshipped, is shewed in Deuteronomie. Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God: and likewise in Exodus, Thou shalt have no strange gods before me. De exhortat. Martyrii, cap.2. 3. But that this is no commandement, it appeareth by this: because here is nothing forbidden or commanded, as in the rest: all the rest of the commandements are expressed by way of commanding: but this by way of affirming, I am the Lord. Tostat. And beside if it were a commandement, there should be more than tenne in all: therefore it is no precept, but inductivum ad cætera: a certaine inducement to the commandements following. Tostat. Oportuit omnia jus legislatoris sanciri, &c. First of all it was meet that the right and authoritie of the lawgiver should bee established, lest that which hee commanded should bee despised. Calvin. So Origene: His sermo non mandati est, sed quis est, qui mandat ostendit: This speech is no commandement, but sheweth who is the Commander.

Quest. II. Of the distinction and difference of the lawes of Moses in generall.

But before wee proceed in particular, to entreate of the morall law: first wee must consider of the lawes of Moses in generall, and of the difference of them. 1. The lawes which Moses delivered to Israel, were of three sorts, Morall, Judiciall, Ceremoniall. The first doe prescribe a perfect rule of righteousnesse, discerning things that are right and just from the contrarie, both toward God and men, both in externall and internall duties: requiring obedience under the paine of everlasting death. The ceremoniall concerned such rites and services, as belonged to the externall worship of God; prescribed unto that people, both to distinguish them from other nations in the world, and to be signes and figures unto them, of the spirituall graces of the new Testament, to bee fulfilled by the Messias. The judiciall lawes belonged to their civill state: which were such ordinances, as contained rules of equitie, for judging and deciding of civill controversies and questions, and decreed punishments for the transgressors against both the morall and ceremoniall lawes: So that these Judicials were the very bond of those other lawes; and kept the people in order and obedience. Vrsinus Catech. 2. These lawes doe thus differ. 1. The Morall are generall, grounded upon the law of nature, so are not the other: 2. They are perpetuall to endure for ever, so doe not the other: 3. The Morals require both externall and internall obedience: the other onely externall. The Morall were the principall, and other lawes were to give place to them: and they were the end, unto the which the other tended. Vrsin. 3. Yet these three, the Morall, Judiciall, and Ceremoniall, are not severally, but joyntly handled by Moses: so that among the Morals there are found some Ceremonials: and among the Judicials, both Morall and Ceremoniall lawes.

of the Moral law contained in the ten Commandements, was delivered by the Lords owne voice to the people, the reſt they received by Moſes from God. *Toſtat. queſt.*1.

Quest. III. Of the validity of the lawes, Morall, Ceremoniall, Iudiciall, which are abrogated, which are not.

Concerning the validity of theſe lawes: 1. The Ceremonials are utterly aboliſhed, ſo that there is now no place for them under the Goſpell: neither can they be revived without derogation to the Goſpell of Chriſt: as the Apoſtle ſaith; *If yee be circumciſed, Chriſt ſhall profit you nothing, Galath.*5.2. for when the body is come, the ſhadowes muſt be aboliſhed: but the ceremonies were ſhadowes, the body is Chriſt, *Coloſ.*2.17. Their Temple ſignified the Church of God, their holy place, heaven, their ſacrifices the paſſion of Chriſt: their expiations, the remiſſion of ſinnes: theſe things then being fully exhibited, and fulfilled in Chriſt, have now no more place in the Church. Ferus. Againe, the ceremonies ſerved only for that carnall people, which were as children, kept in bondage under the elements and rudiments of the world, *Galath.*4.3. But now we are no longer under tutors and governours, the time appointed of the Father is expired, but are ſet free and redeemed by Chriſt. Ferus. Another reaſon of the aboliſhing of them, is the nature of that people, to whom they were preſcribed, as a marke and cognizance to diſcerne them from other nations: but now this diſtinction being taken away and the wall of partition being broken downe, both Jew and Gentile being made all one in Chriſt, that alſo is aboliſhed, which diſcerned them from other people: for the cauſes being changed, for the which the law was made, there muſt needs follow an alteration of the law it ſelfe. Urſin.

2. The Judicials are neither aboliſhed, nor yet with ſuch neceſſity injoyned: the equity of them binding, but not the like ſtrict ſeverity: as is ſhewed before at large, in the generall queſtions prefixed before this chapter, whither I referre the Reader.

3. The Morall law remaineth full in force ſtill, and is not abrogated, Quoad obedientiam, in reſpect of obedience, which thereunto is ſtill required now under the Goſpell, Sed quoad maledictionem, but in reſpect of the curſe and malediction, which Chriſt hath taken away: So that it is moſt true, which our bleſſed Saviour ſaith, he came not to diſſolve the law, but to fulfill it, *Matth.*5. Hee hath fulfilled it, 1. In his owne perſon in keeping it: 2. In paying the puniſhment for us, which was due by the law to the tranſgreſſion thereof: 3. In enabling us by his grace to walke in obedience to the law. Urſin.

Quest. IV. Of the difference betweene the Morall and Evangelicall law.

Yet though the Morall law bee now in force, and bind us to obedience, as well as it did the Jewes, yet there is great difference betweene the law and the Goſpell: 1. In the knowledge and manifeſtation thereof: for to the Morall law, wee have ſome direction by the light of nature: but the knowledge of faith in Chriſt by the Goſpell is revealed by grace. 2. The law teacheth what we ſhould be: by faith and love in Chriſt, we are made that which the law preſcribeth, and the Goſpell effecteth in us. 3. The conditions are unlike: the law tieth the promiſe of eternall life, to the condition of fulfilling the law in our perſon: the Goſpell to the condition of faith, apprehending the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt. 4. The effects differ: the law worketh terrour, the Goſpell peace and comfort. Urſin. The law revealeth ſinne, the Goſpell giveth remiſſion of ſinnes. Ferus. So that the one is lex timoris, the law of feare, the other is lex amoris, the law of love: which alſo hath a threefold difference yet further. 1. Lex timoris facit obſervantes: the law of feare maketh the obſervers thereof ſervile, but the law of love maketh them free. The law of feare is not willingly kept, but by conſtraint; the law of love, voluntariò obſervatur, is willingly obſerved and kept. 3. The one is hard and heavy, the other eaſie and light. *Tom. opuſcul.*8.

Quest. V. Of the manifold uſe of the law in the fourefold ſtate of man.

Touching the uſe of the Morall law, it is to be conſidered, according to theſe foure ſtates of man, as he was in his creation, and ſtate of innocency, in his corrupt and decayed nature, as hee is reſtored by Chriſt, and as he ſhall be in the ſtate of glorification. 1. Man in his innocency received two benefits by the light of the law, which was graft in him by creation: that thereby hee was made conformable to the will of God, and ſo directed, that he ſhould not have ſwarved from the will of the Creator: and beſides thereby had aſſurance, ſo long as he walked in obedience, of certaine eternity, never to have taſted of corruption, or mutability in his ſtate, for he that keepeth the law ſhall live thereby. Urſin. 2. In the corrupt ſtate, the law ſerveth both to reſtraine the evill: and therefore the Apoſtle ſaith, that the law is given to a righteous man, but to the lawleſſe, and diſobedient, 1. *Tim.*1.9. as alſo to diſcover unto us our ſinnes, for by the law commeth the knowledge of ſinne, and therefore the Apoſtle ſaith, *Without the law ſinne is dead, Rom.*7.9. that is, it is not knowne to be ſinne. Ferus. 3. In man regenerate, it is a rule of righteouſneſſe, and a lanterne to their feet, as David ſaith. 2. It teacheth the true worſhip of God. 3. It aſſureth a man that walketh therein of his election, 2. *Pet.*1.10. If ye doe theſe things ye ſhall never fall. 4. It ſheweth what benefit wee have received by Chriſt, the renuing of that image wherein man was firſt created, *Coloſ.*3.10. 5. In the ſtate of glorification, the law ſhall have that uſe which it had before mans fall, to ſhew the conformity in thoſe glorified creatures, in their holy obedience with the bleſſed will of their glorious Creator. Urſin.

Quest. VI. Why it pleased God now and not before, to give his written law to the world.

IT followeth now to bee considered, why it pleased God to give now his law unto his people, seeing from the beginning of the world there was no written law, but as it was by the law of nature imprinted in their hearts. 1. God did not therefore now first give unto his people the Morall law written, as though he were either mutable, in changing his first determination, or that in processe of time, he had found out a more profitable way, than hee knew before, as some wickedly have objected: Sed quia superfluum fuit hoc fieri, stante adhuc lege naturæ: But because this was superfluous and needlesse to be done, the law of nature yet standing firme. By the light of nature before the flood, they discerned good from evill, just from unjust, and therefore the old world, that sinned against this law of nature, was justly punished: of this law printed in the heart, the Apostle speaketh, They shew the effect of the law written in their hearts, their conscience also bearing them witnesse, and their thoughts accusing one another, or excusing. Rom. 2. 15. Now then, when this law of nature began more and more to bee obscured, and iniquity to abound, the Lord thought it needfull to give unto the people a written law. Lippom. Ex collation. Patrum. 2. Another cause of giving the law was, Ne sibi homines aliquid defuisse quererentur, scriptum est in tabulis, quod in cordibus non legebant: Lest that men should complaine that somewhat was wanting, that was written in tables, which was not written in the hearts, August. in Psal. 57. Therefore to take away all excuse, and pretext of ignorance, the Lord gave his written law. 3. Another end of giving the law, was to prepare and make us ready for the Gospell: Ut te ad faciendum legem de tuo vires non habere monstraret, &c. To shew that thou hadst not strength of thy selfe to doe the law, and so being poore and beggerly, shouldest flee unto grace: August. likewise in Psal. 118. 4. Further, the law was given as a supply of the weakenesse, and ignorance of man: that whereas there was no certaine rule before, to know what was good, what was evill, but men according to their blind fansies and carnall imaginations, placed happinesse, some in one thing, some in another: the law was to correct their erroneous opinions, and to teach one constant and sure rule of truth and vertue. And further, such was their errour, that though in civill and politike matters, the wise among the Heathen, by the light of nature, and experience attained to some perfection, yet they were vtterly ignorant of the true knowledge and worship of God, which is set forth in the law. Tostat. quæst. 5. Further, because the law of nature was more and more obscured, the Lord would have his law written in tables of stone, that it might ever be kept and remembred, and be no more drowned in oblivion. Ferus. And though those tables of stone, wherein the law was written, are not now to be found, yet the copy of the same law is extant in the Scriptures, there to be seene and read, which shall continue to the end of the world. 6. Lastly, The Lord in giving this law to this people, therein sheweth his love to his people, committing unto them the greatest treasure in the world: as Moses saith, What nation is so great, that hath ordinances and lawes so righteous, as all this Law which I set before you this day? Deut. 4. 8.

Quest. VII. How the Lord spake all these words, and why.

Vers. 1. GOd spake all these words, saying. 1. Some thinke that God is said to speake, whereas it was an Angell, in respect of the opinion of the people, that thought Moses spake with God. Paul. Burgens. But it is before shewed, chap. 19. quest. 40 that it was God himselfe that spake these words, who nameth himselfe Jehovah, vers. 2. which name is not given to any Angell: yet this word also is said to have beene spoken by Angels, Hebr. 2. 2. because God did therein use the ministry of the Angels in framing of that audible voice, which was heard: So that the Angels speake not now, as in the person of God, as his messengers, as at other times, but here they attended only as Ministers: Longe aliter hic loquitur, quàm ad patres adhuc locutus est: the Lord speaketh farre otherwise here, than hee spake hitherto to the Fathers. Ferus. But to them hee spake by the ministry of Angels. This question also is well decided by Cajetane: You will aske (saith he) how God is said to speake, Cùm ista locutio fieret per Angelum, &c. this speech was framed by an Angell. The answer is ready, Quia ipse Dominus loquebatur in Angelo pulum. &c. Because the Lord himselfe spake in the Angell to the people, not as the King speaketh by an Embassador, or Interpreter, Sed ut præsens mens in Angelo, & formans verba hujus sermonis, magis quàm Angelus: But as present in the Angell, and so framing the words of his speech, rather than the Angell. So Cajetane. So that God spake as the Author and enditer, the Angell spake as the tongue or penne of God.

2. The Hebrewes have this opinion, that this was that great Angell, of such eminency, Ut sine ullâ formâ tiam Divinam, Angelus faciei nominetur, that setting the Divine essence aside, he is called the Angell of his presence, Isay 63. 9. Paul. Burgens. addition. 1. Nay this Angell of Gods presence, that heard them, when they cried in their troubles, and saved them, as there the Prophet saith, was none other than Jehovah himselfe, the Lord Christ, as S. Paul expoundeth, 1. Cor. 10. 9. Let us not tempt Christ, as some of them tempted him, and were destroyed of Serpents. And in this Angell was the very divine essence of God, as the Lord saith, Exod. 23. 21. My name is in him.

3. Burgens. Reason to prove, that it was an Angell, and not God himselfe that spake, because he saith in the third Commandement, Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vaine, in the third person, not in the first, as, Thou shalt not take my name in vaine, and so likewise in the fourth Commandment: Which sheweth (saith hee) that it was an Angell that spake, and not God: This reason is of no force, and may easily be answered. 1. The Lord useth the third person, because, although now the Lord as present in Majesty, spake by voice: yet this law was to bee delivered afterward, written in tables one which being a perpetuall monument unto the people, of the Lords will, was more fitly expreſſed in the third perſon: becauſe the Lord would no more in like manner as now, deliver the law with his owne mouth. 2. Beſide, in the firſt and ſecond Commandement, the Lord uſeth the firſt perſon, Thou ſhalt have no other Gods before mee, and I am the Lord thy God, a jealous God. 3. And further, it is obſerved to be an Hebraiſme, and an uſuall phraſe in Scripture, that the Lord ſpeaketh of himſelfe, Tanquam de aliquo tertio: As of ſome third perſon, as chap. 19.11. The Lord himſelfe ſaith to Moſes, The third day will the Lord come down. Lippom.

4. This further was admirable, that all the whole hoſt of Iſrael containing ſo many hundred thouſand, at once heare and underſtand the voice, wherein God ſpake unto them, as Moſes witneſſeth, Deut. 4. The Lord Iehovah ſpake unto you out of the middeſt of the fire, and you heard the voice of the words. I remember, that Auguſtine in a certaine homily, did geſſe there were about 100. thouſand, that were then preſent to heare him: but in the campe of Iſrael, there being 600000. men of warre above twenty, beſide the young men, old, women and ſtrangers, which might well make five times ſo many, toward 30. hundred thouſand, Tofatus and others conjecture; it was a wonderfull and ſtrange thing, that one voice ſhould be heard of them all: as Ioſephus ſaith, Omnes audiebant vocem ſublimi deſcendentem, ut nemo non intelligeret: All heard the voice that came downe from above, ſo that there was none, which did not underſtand: and as Cajetan ſaith, Proportionata erat, tam propinquis, quàm diſtantibus auditoribus: The voice was ſo proportioned, that it was heard, both neere, and further off. And therefore it is called, A great voice, Deut. 5.22.

5. And where it is ſaid, All theſe words, the meaning is, the ten Commandements only, to the 18. verſe, of this twenty chapter: for all the Judicials and Ceremonials following, were not uttered by the voice of the trumpet, but delivered to Moſes. Toſtat. And theſe words were ſpoken in this order here ſet downe: and as they were afterward graven in the two tables of ſtone: Moſes doth not ſet them downe together after the ſame manner, Deut. 5. which hee doth as an interpreter and expounder of the law.

Quest. VIII. Why it pleaſed God himſelfe to ſpeake to his people, in the giving of the law.

NOw it pleaſed God himſelfe, to pronounce this law in the hearing of the people, for theſe reaſons: 1. To win the more authority unto his Commandements, that they ſhould not contemne and deſpiſe them afterward. Ferus. As Moſes afterward rendreth this reaſon, verſ. 2. That his feare may bee before you that you ſinne not. Burgenſ. 2. That they might afterward give more credit unto Moſes, the Lord ſpeaking unto him in the hearing of the people: So the Lord himſelfe ſaith, Loe I come unto thee in a thicke cloud, that the people may heare whiles I talke with thee, and that they may beleeve thee for ever, chap. 19.9. That the people might know, that the Lord was their Lawgiver: that he and none other did preſcribe them lawes; and that to him, and none other they ſhould yeeld obedience. 4. The people hereby had experience of Gods mercy, that vouchſafed to ſpeake unto mortall men: as they themſelves confeſſe: Wee have ſeen this day, that God talketh with man, and he liveth, Deut. 5.24. Burgenſ.

Quest. IX. Of the diviſion of the Morall law.

NOw the Morall law is firſt divided according to the ſubject and matter into two tables: the firſt comprehending thoſe precepts, which concerne the worſhip of God, in the foure firſt Commandements: the ſecond, thoſe which command the duties to our neighbour. This diviſion is warranted by our Saviour, Matth. 22.37. dividing the law into two generall or great Commandements: Thou ſhalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, &c. This is the firſt, and the great Commandement, and the ſecond is like unto it, Thou ſhalt love thy neighbour as thy ſelfe. Simler. And the reaſon of this diviſion is: that by this diſtinction our duty toward God, before our duty toward our neighbour, the greatneſſe and eminencie of the one over the other ſhould be manifeſt, according to the Apoſtles rule: It is better to obey God, than men. Act. 4.19. And therefore our bleſſed Saviour calleth the firſt the great Commandement. Urſin. Hee then is deceived, who putteth five Commandements to the firſt table, making the fift Commandement, of honouring the parents, one of them. But beſide the former reaſon, that the precepts onely concerning our duty toward God, belong to the firſt table, S. Paul convinceth him: who calleth the fift Commandement, the firſt with promiſe, Epheſ. 6.2. meaning the firſt of the ſecond table: but in Ioſephus it ſhould be the laſt of the firſt table. Simler. Another reaſon of this diviſion of the tables, in ſetting the precepts firſt, which preſcribe our duty toward God, is, to teach us, that no morall or civill duties, as juſtice, chaſtity, ſobriety are pleaſing unto God, if they do not proceed from faith, and from an heart ſtanding in the true worſhip of God. And therefore thoſe glorious outward workes among the Heathen, juſtice, fortitude, temperance, were not true vertues before God, becauſe they proceeded not from the knowledge and feare of God.

Another diviſion of the law is into the ſeverall particular pārts, whereof it conſiſteth, that is, ten Commandements: therefore called ten words, Exod. 34. 28. and Deut. 4.13. which are ſo many, not becauſe God delighteth in that number, but becauſe of the ſumme and argument of the things therein contained, which are neceſſarily drawne to ſo many heads: nothing being either omitted, or ſuperfluouſly added. Vrſin.

The law further, in reſpect of the matter of the particular precepts, is divided thus: that generally the morall law is contained the worſhip of God, and the ſame, either immediate, or mediate. The immediate which directly concerneth God, is either internall, both, who is to bee worſhipped, preſcribed in the first Commandement: and after what manner, with spirituall worship, in the second: or externall, which is either private, in not prophaning Gods name, precept 3. or publike, in the sanctifying of the Sabbath, precept 4. The mediate service of God, which indirectly is referred to him, but directly and properly concerneth our neighbour, is likewise either externall, which consisteth either in speciall offices as of the mutuall duties betweene superiours and inferiours, precept 5. or generall toward all sorts of men as in the preserving of our neighbours life, precept 6. of his chastity, precept 7. of his goods, precept 8. the truth precept 9. The internall, is in the rectifying our very desires and inward affections toward our neighbours, precept 10. Vrsin. Which subdivision is very apt and fit: saving that hee maketh all the last but one great Commandement, the worship of God, whereas our Saviour divideth it into two: which division of necessity must be received.

Some concurring with Vrsinus in the subdivision of the first table, doe otherwise distribute the second in this manner: it commandeth either speciall duties of some certaine callings in the 5. or generall in the rest, and that either in respect of our neighbour in the 6, 7, 8, 9. or of God, who knoweth the heart, and the very inward concupiscence is forbidden in the 10. So Pelacherus, Pelargus.

Iunius in his Analysis somewhat differeth: the first table he subdivideth thus: that it prescribeth first the worship of God, who is to be worshipped, in the first, and after what manner, in the second. 2. The profession of this worship, in the third. 3. The meanes belonging to the worship of God, in the sanctifying of the Sabbath, and the religious exercises thereof. The second table he likewise divideth thus: into speciall duties, in the 5. common duties, in the 6, 7, 8, 9. and into the roote and spring of all, the concupiscence of the heart, in the 10.

Now of all these divisions, I have made choice to follow Vrsinus, and Pelacherus in the first, and Iunius in the second table: as is set downe before in the method and argument of the chapter.

Quest. X. Whether foure Commandements, or three only belong to the first table.

IT followeth, as we have seene the division of the whole law, and of the number of the precepts in generall, so to consider of the number of the particular commandements to be assigned unto each table. The opinion of the Romanists is, that there are but three Commandements to the first table, putting the two first into one, and seven to the second, dividing the last, Thou shalt not covet, into two. So Tostat. quæst. Ferus. with others: and of this opinion is Augustine, quæst. 71. in Exod.

Some other doe make five Commandements in each table, as Iosephus lib. 3. de Antiqu. cap. 6. But this opinion is confuted before. And beside, Iosephus reason is nothing: for he thinketh, that the two tables being written both within and without, that two Commandements and an halfe were written of a side: for the foure first Commandements will take up more roome and space in writing, than all the six of the second table.

This opinion is ascribed to Hesychius in his Commentary upon Leviticus: that rejecting the fourth Commandement of the Sabbath, yet he maketh foure in the first table, and six in the second: but if the fourth Commandement be excepted, there will bee but nine in all: for these Commandements, as they were delivered here by the Lord himselfe, are called the ten words, Exod. 32. 28.

The common and received opinion is, that foure Commandements, teaching our duty toward God, are to be referred to the first table, and six to the last. So Origen. hom. 8. in Exod. Nazianzen in Carmin. (?) hom. 49. in Matth. Oper. imperfect. Zonaras, tom. 1. Hieron. in cap. 6. ad Ephes. And Ambrose upon the place. Sulpitius Severus lib. 1. histor. sacra. Ex Simler. Vrsin. Procopius also holdeth this precept, Thou shalt make to thy selfe no graven image, to be the second. So also Rupertus lib. 3. cap. 32.

Now the reasons to strengthen this opinion against the first, which the Romanists follow, are these. 1. Because those precepts which differ in sense and matter, are divers, and not one: such are the first, Thou shalt have no other Gods. &c. and the second, Thou shalt make no graven image: for one may offend in the first, as they which worship the Sunne and Moone, and yet make no graven image: and some may transgresse in the second, and not in the first, as the Romanists themselves, which worship graven images, yet we will not thinke so hardly of them, that professedly they would make other Gods. So then the matter of these two Commandements being divers, as the first shewing, who, and none other is to be worshipped, the second in what manner; they must be two precepts, and not one. 2. The distinction which Augustine maketh is to be observed: the last Commandement of not coveting the neighbours house and wife, are joyned in one verse, as shewing but one Commandement: but these two are severed in two verses, which sheweth a division and distinction of the precepts; the matter also differing: for otherwise in the first Commandement there are divers verses, but the agreement in the matter sheweth that they all belong to one precept. 3. The last Commandement, which they divide into two, shall be proved afterward, when we come to that place, to be but one whole and entire Commandement: and this one reason shall serve in this place, because Moses repeating this last precept, Deut. 5. 21. doth put in the first place, Thou shalt covet thy neighbours wife, which is here placed in the second: so that if they were not all one Commandement, it would be uncertaine, which should goe before the other.

As for the reasons of the contrary opinion, they are of no value: Augustine would have but three precepts in the first table, to expresse the Trinity: but the beleefe of the Trinity is commanded in the first precept directly, and therefore need not bee infinuated in the number: Another reason is, because Augustine giveth three things unto God, fidelitatem, reverentiam, cultum: fidelity, reverence, worship. But though worship also includeth not reverence. Ferus maketh other three: the first precept requireth to worship God in heart, the second to confesse him with the mouth, the third to acknowledge him in our workes. All this being acknowledged, that this must bee yeelded unto God, yet another precept must of necessity goe before, as the foundation of the rest, that wee must acknowledge but one onely true God.

Quest. XI. Whether all Morall precepts, as of loving of God, and our neighbour, be reduced to the Decalogue.

Now followeth to bee considered, whether all Morall duties, may bee reduced unto these ten Commandements. 1. It will be objected, that they are not, because there is no mention made in the Decalogue of the love of God and our neighbour: therefore all Morall precepts are not thither referred. To this Thomas answereth, that these precepts are written in the heart by the law of nature, that God and our neighbour are to bee loved: and therefore they needed not to bee given in precept. Contra. By the same reason then, they needed not to be mentioned in Scripture at all, if they were so manifest by the law of nature: yea the grounds of all the Morall precepts, are printed in our nature, and yet the Lord thought necessary to write them in his law. 2. Burgensis answereth thus, that like as in speculative artes and sciences, they use to proceed from knowne and manifest conclusions and principles, to those which are more obscure: So the Lord propoundeth his law, in the easiest and plainest precepts, as in the second Commandement, it is easier to abstaine from idolatry, than from other kindes of superstition: and in the sixt, a man will abhorre murder, which cannot so soone decline all other wrongs and injuries: These precepts of loving God above all, and our neighbour as our selfe, because they were hard and difficult, this Lord would not propound them at the first to a rude and ignorant people, but reserved them till another time, when the people were growne more able and strong: as in that 40. yeere in the wilderneſſe; then Moses beginneth to explaine this law, and exhorteth them to feare and serve God. Sic Burgens. addit. 1. cap. 20.

Contra. 1. But this is cleane contrary, for generall precepts are more easily conceived, and condescended into, than particular: Aske an Idolater if hee love God, hee will not deny it: The Romanists, that worship Images, would thinke great scorne to bee asked that question, whether they love God: So an usurer, an usurer, an extortioner, in generall will confesse that they love their neighbour, yet doe erre in particulars. 2. Neither did Moses deferre these generall precepts so long: for in this chapter, vers. 20. he speaketh of the feare of God: and chap. 23. 25. of serving of God. 3. Burgensis hath another answer, that in the first Commandement, (which is indeed the second) Non pretermisit facere mentionem de dilectione Dei: He omitted not to make mention of the love of God: as vers. 6. Shewing mercy unto thousands in them that love me, &c. Contra. But this is no part of the precept: it is a promise made affirmatively and positively to those that love God: It is not set downe by way of bidding, and commanding, Thou shalt love God, &c. Wherefore I preferre here the answer of Tostatus, that these two generall precepts, though they are not put in these very words among the precepts, Thou shalt love God above all, and thy neighbour as thy selfe, yet they are reduced unto them: Non ut conclusiones ad principia, &c. not as conclusions are reduced to their principles and premisses, but as principles are referred to the conclusions, for these two are two knowne principles: Ex quibus inferuntur particulatim omnia precepta decalogi, out of the which are inferred in particular, all the precepts of the Decalogue. Tostat. quæst. 33. for a man can performe none of the foure first Commandements, but he must needs love God: he cannot take him to be the only God, shun idolatry, reverence his name, keepe his Sabbathes, if the love of God bee not in him: Neither can he observe the precepts of the second Table, as not to kill, steale, beare false witnesse, unlesse he love his neighbour. Therefore to these two, as the heads and grounds of the rest, doth our Saviour reduce all the Commandements, Matth. 22. 37, 38.

Quest. XII. Of generall rules to be observed in expounding the Commandements.

Now further, there are certaine generall rules, which must be observed in the exposition and interpretation of the law.

1. The Decalogue must be understood, according to the more ample and full declaration thereof, set downe in the rest of the Scriptures, in the writings of the Prophets and Apostles: as who are understood by name of parents in the fifth, how many wayes one may be said to kill, &c. Ursin. Pelarg.

2. The Decalogue must be taken to comprehend, as well internall, as externall duties, as our Saviour teacheth, Matth. 5. Ursin.

3. The end and scope of the precept, must be considered, if we will aright understand: as wherefore graven things are forbidden to be made, not to the end to worship them: and in the like.

4. The precepts of the second Table must give place to the precepts of the first, if the Commandements one and other, be compared in the same degree: as it were better not to honour our parents, than to honour God. But the great breaches of the second Table must not give way to the least in the first: as we must not suffer our brother to perish, rather than upon the Sabbath to breake the rest, to fetch him from some pit, or present danger. Ursin.

5. Every negative includeth an affirmative, and on the contrary, as thou shalt worship no other Gods; therefore it followeth, thou shalt worship the true God: thou shalt not kill, or take away thy brothers life, therefore thou art commanded to preserve it. So the affirmative is, thou shalt honour thy parents, where the negative is included, thou shalt not dishonour them. Ursin. Simler.

6. Where one kinde is forbidden by a Synecdoche, the rest of that sort also are prohibited: as in adultery, is comprehended all inlawfull lust, in murther, all unjust vexations and wrongs. So the generall includeth the particulars, one kinde drawes with it another: in the effects, we must understand the cause: in the relative, the correlative. Vt sæpe Similiter, as Augustine saith in the 7. precept, Vnum sexum pars totum intelligi voluit, He would have understood the whole by the part, quæst. 71. in Exod. 7. Augustine also hath another rule: Vbi honoratio exprimitur, vel ubi masculinum, &c. Where the honourable party is expressed, as the male, let the women also understand, that the precept concerneth her. As in the eight Commandement, the man is forbidden to play the adulterer, for the Hebrew word is put in the Masculine, but the woman also is included: she must not be an adulteresse. Augustine.

Quest. XIII. Why the Commandements are propounded negatively.

MOst of the Commandements are propounded negatively, for these reasons: 1. Because no forbidding evill to be done, is one more generall: for in his next lawfull vocation and calling in good time, person, and place must be considered. 2. Because the first worke of true repentance is to depart from evill, and therefore the Commandements are expressed with a negative, that we should there begin. Iunius Analys. 3. The law is thus commanded by way of prohibition, specially to bridle and restraine the evill, for the Apostle saith, The law is not given to a righteous man, but to the lawlesse and disobedient, 1. Tim. 1. 9. As firstly, the husbandman will seek to pluck up the weeds in his garden, before he will set good plants. Rupert. lib. 3. in Exod. cap. 21. 4. Præceptum hoc ideo in vetitum per modum comminationis cecinit, quod ita eos invenerit: therefore the Lord in giving this law, respected the present state of the people, as he found them, and frameth his law accordingly, in forbidding of sinne. Ferus. 5. Because a negative is more vehement, and urgeth more, and leaveth no evasion: as in the first Commandement, Thou shalt have no other God: If it had beene propounded affirmatively, thou shalt worship one God, the Canaanites might have kept this precept, and yet they worshipped other Gods beside. Ferus.

Quest. XIV. Of the speciall manner of accenting and writing, observed in the Decalogue more than in any part of the Scripture beside.

HEre it shall not be amisse, briefely to touch that singular observation of learned Iewes, concerning the manner of writing, accenting, and pronouncing the Decalogue, which is peculiar unto this Scripture, more than to any other beside: for whereas ordinarily, every word hath but one accent in the end: Every word in the Decalogue, and the preface thereunto, from verse 2. to verse 18. the 7. and 17. verses only excepted, have a double accent, one serving for the accenting and prolation of the word, the other shewing the conjunction and coherence of the matter: As to give heed of an example in the second verse: the first word anochi hath in the last syllable, above the head the accent siphra, and under munach: Iehovah, the second word hath only munach, under the last syllable, but it serveth instead of both above, and siphra, below: the third word, hath munach below, and zakeph the lesse above: the fourth darga, beneath, and makkaph on the side: The fifth hath in the third syllable, shebir, and kadmah: The sixth hath kadmah above, and merca beneath: the seventh hath tiphre beneath, and gersh above: the eighth hath beneath merca, and munach: the last word in the verse, hath rebiah above, and silluk beneath: And like may be observed in all the other verses; saving the three before excepted, the 7. 12. 17. The reason hereof is this, because these three verses have no dependance of the other: but the 2, 3, 4, 5, 6. containing the two first Commandements, have some similitude and coherence together: So have the 9, 10, 11. which all belong to the fourth Commandement: likewise, the 13, 14, 15, 16. containing the 6, 7, 8. Commandements, which all concerne the generall duties, to be performed to all sorts of men: so the 5. Commandement in the 12. verse prescribeth speciall duties toward our superiours. Iunius Analys.

Quest. XV. Why this preamble is set before, I am Iehovah thy God.

Vers. 2. I am Iehovah thy God. 1. This is the preface or preamble to the Commandements, as is before shewed, quæst. 1. which sheweth both what right the Lord had to injoyne lawes unto his people, and why they were bound to obey: it consisteth of three arguments, taken from the Majesty of God, he is Iehovah: from the grace of the covenant, thy God: and from the benefit of their deliverance out of Egypt. Iun. 2. Iehovah is a name taken from his essence: signifying that hee hath his being of himself, and that all things have their being from him. Elohim is a word shewing his power and omnipotency: that as this name being sometime given unto Angels, and great men in earth, sheweth a kinde of limited power according to their nature and place: so being given unto God, it insinuateth his absolute and unlimited power in heaven and in earth. Similar. 3. These two titles given unto God: Iehovah, Elohim, the one signifieth his nature, Iehovah, the other his excellence, Elohim, God. But Tostatus will have Iehovah to signifie his nature, and Iehovah his excellency: but he is deceived herein, because he followeth the Latine text, which translateth Iehovah, Dominus, Lord: whereas Iehovah doth not betoken his Lordship and dominion, but his eternall essence and being: in which sense hee calleth himselfe Ehyeh, Exod. 3. 14. Then like as men are described by two names, one of their nature, the other of their dignity, when we say, Iacobus Rex: King Iames: the one sheweth his naturall state and condition, the other his dignity: So the Lord here doth give himselfe two names, one expressing his nature, the other his power, negative and excellency. And in that he is called God, it is more than if any other attribute, as Iehovah Omnipotent, Omnisciens, Omnipotent, nay if all his attributes were given him together: for all these are comprehended in the name God. Quia aliquid de perfectionibus latentibus in illo pelago infinito, &c. For all those titles and epithets, are of those perfections, which lye hid in this great Sea, imported by the name. God. Tostat. qu. 2. 4. Hee is Tuus per specialem appropriationem: Thy God by speciall appropriation. Lyran. Hee is their speciall God. Deus specialiter accepit hanc gentem ad se: had specially taken this nation to himselfe. Deus specialiter ab his suscepernnt eum. Deum colendum: they specially took him to be their God to worship.

Quest. XVI. Why these words are not before mentioned.

Vse of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondmen. 1. Oleaster thinketh that these words were left out, because the Israelites in Egypt were put into houses with slaves and bondmen, and not with free men. But it is not likely that they were put into houses with slaves and bondmen, and not with free men. But did inhabite together and were not always in slaves keepe in prison like to slaves. Pharaoh is by some rephon compared unto a prison house, or house of bondmen, for as they used their slaves day by day to grinde in their mills, so vsed Pharaoh the forced Israelites. And as they shut them up in dungeons and prisons, Exod. 1. so the Israelites shut up all Egypt. Keepe in miserable bondage, ibid. 1. 13. So that all Egypt was as a prison house, or house of bondmen to them, ver. 2. This their deliverance out of Egypt they would not be remembred: for they were delivered from so cruell bondage: to which respect is called a redemption or ransome, Deut. 4. 20. Secondly, because such a great multitude were partakers of it. Thirdly, it was lately and yet fresh in their remembrance. Therefore to enforce the more. Tostat. quest. 2. Because in this their deliverance the Lord shewed his love to his people, and his great power in doing wonderfull workes in Egypt for their cause, as were never seene in the world before. Ver. 37. God in the meane time of their deliverance out of Egypt, because it was lately performed. For the Lord would have us remember those benefits which were neerest and new, rather than those which were more remote and worne out. As in Abrahams time he was called the most high God, Creator of heaven and earth, Gen. 14. 19. Afterward when he had revealed himselfe as the Father, he is named the God of Abraham, Isaak and Iacob, Exod. 3. 15. Then after the deliverance of Israel out of Egypt, the Lord is known by that. In the time of the Prophets and after, when Israel was redemption of the Babylon, the Lord stileth himselfe by memoriall of that benefit, as the Prophet Ieremy saith, Ier. 16. 14. Therefore behold the dayes come, saith the Lord, that it shall be no more said, the Lord liveth which brought the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt: but the Lord liveth, that brought the children of Israel out of the land of the North, and from all lands whither I had driven them. Ver. 15. And after our Saviour Christ was come, the Redeemer of mankinde, that he is called the Father of our Lord Iesus Christ. Lippom. 4. This reason taken from their corporall redemption, though it concerneth not us: yet we are more strongly bound to obedience, by our spirituall redemption purchased by our Lord and Saviour Christ Jesus: as Origene excellently noteth: Ergo dicit ad eos, qui Christum exisse de Ægypto, & de domo servitutis audierunt eum non dixisse tibi. Therefore it is said unto thee, which through Jesus Christ are come out of Egypt, and out of the house of bondage: thou shalt not have other Gods before me.

OF THE TEN COMMANDEMENTS IN PARTICVLAR.

Of the first Commandement.

1. Questions upon the first Commandement.

Quest. I. Whether it is better read strange Gods, or other Gods.

Thou shalt have no strange Gods. 1. Oleaster thinketh it better here to expound nohr etim, others: as it is taken, Iob 31. 10. Let other men bow down upon her: and then the meaning is this, that we acknowledge any other God beside the Lord that made heaven and earth. But seeing the word signifieth also strange: it is so better translated strange Gods; because there are no other Gods but the Lord: and in other places, in stead of acherim, another word is used, hamechar, strange: as Put away the strange Gods from among you, 1. Sam. 7. 3. 2. The Scripture here speaketh after men's opinion, not that there were indeed any Gods beside the Lord, but because they were so commonly taken in the world. Ian. 3. So they are called Gods, because they counted them so, which worshipped them: and strange, quia non sunt illi, qui eos dicebant: because they are not such, as ought to be worshipped. Tostat. quest. 3. 4. The words in the originall are: strange Gods shall not be to thee: which the Latine readeth, non habebis, thou shalt not have: which also is our English phrase: which signifieth, that thou shalt make no account or estimation of any other God, beside the Lord: Neminem existimabis Deum, thou shalt esteeme none to be God, but the Lord that created heaven and earth. Rupert. Habebis Deum: We have God, and none other in our minde, when wee acknowledge no God beside him: in our mouth, when our love is toward him: in our will, when we obey him. Marbach.

Quest. II. Why they are called strange Gods.

Strange Gods. 1. Some thinke they are called strange Gods, quia Deo vere impedirent, because they hinder, alienate and estrange us from obeying and serving of the true God. Pelican. And therefore Salomon thinketh that all kind of idolatry is here forbidden, whether it be with image, or without, because it estrangeth from God. But all imagery and idolatry is forbidden in the next Commandement. 2. Some thinke they are called strange Gods, because they are, aliени à verum naturæ, strange and not to be found in the nature of things: as when they make images of compounded and mixed shapes: as is pictured Sphinx Aenigma in Egypt with a mans body, and a Rammes head: there being no such creature. Tostat. Lyran. But this is too strict, and but one particular branch of idolatry: and the first prohibition of all kinde of graven images followeth afterward. 3. Therefore they are called strange, because they were worshipped among strange people: Oleaster: as Vatab. well translateth, Gas, away (saith Jakob) dii alieni (populi) the gods of strange people which word (people) must be supplied for Elohim, Gods, in the plurall; and hanechar, strange, in the singular, and so cannot agree in substantive and adjective. As in respect of the strange people that worshipped them, they are called strange Gods: so also in regard of that which was worshipped; because they are not that, which ought to be worshipped, they are called strange. Tostat. as before qu. 1.

Quest. III. Whether any kinde of externall Idolatry be forbidden in the first Commandement.

Whereas then there are two kindes of idolatry, one internall and spirituall in the mind, another externall in the adoration of some Image or Idoll: 1. Some thinke that all kinde of idolatry both internall and externall is here forbidden: as R. Salomon cited before: but then the next prohibition, Thou shalt make thee no graven image, should be superfluous. 2. Some make this distinction of idolatry: that one kinde, Cum professione colitur alius Deus: When professedly another God is worshipped: and this is the most grosse idolatry, and properly belongeth to this Commandement. There is another, when another God is not professedly worshipped; but the true God, after a false manner, which is forbidden in the second Commandement. Ursin. But the same matter or subject must belong unto the same precept: and all manner of Idols whatsoever, or similitudes of any thing made to worship, are in generall words forbidden in the second precept. 3. Therefore I preferre here their opinion, which think that the spirituall and internall worship of God is properly commanded here, and the contrary forbidden. Here idolatry is forbidden, which was committed without any images or Idols: as Varro teacheth how that the Romanes worshipped the goddesse Vesta without any image: only they set fire in the Temple of Vesta, for they held Vesta to be the fire. Tostat. So also Procopius saith, that the first Commandement condemneth such invisible powers: quas divinis honoribus nullis positis idolis prosequuntur: which they prosecute with divine honour, without any Idols. Hereunto subscribeth Calvin: Nec dubium est, quin ista verba complendatur interior Dei cultus, &c. There is no doubt, but the internall worship of God is comprehended in these words, seeing this precept differeth from the next, wherein externall idolatry is forbidden.

Quest. IV. Of the meaning of these words, Before me.

Vers. 3. Before my face. 1. Some doe understand it, as though the Lord should say, you shall preferre my Gods before me: make them superiours unto me, or set them above me: for so the preposition shal signifieth, super, above. But this were to give way unto their superstition, which received other inferiour Gods besides the Lord: whereas the Lord commandeth none to be acknowledged at all for God besides himselfe. 2. Cajetane thus understandeth, super facies: upon my face; tanquam tegens faciem Dei, covering the face of God. For when any of Gods divine properties, or attributes, as of wisdome, justice, providence are given unto any other, the Lords face is as it were covered, and his goodnesse obscured. But this may seeme to any man to be too curious. 3. Some interprete thus: against my face, that is, in derision of me, to provoke mine indignation: as if the wife should commit adultery, in spectatione mariti, while the husband looketh on: Piscat. But this sense onely sheweth the indignity, and injury committed against God herein, it comprehendeth not all. 4. Oleaster saith, mecum, with mee, that is, in my Temple: for it was not lawfull for them, no not in their hearts, nor privatly to acknowledge any other God. 5. The reading therefore is, before me, that is, in my presence: neither publikely, nor in the heart, for wheresoever he, there is the presence and face of God. Iun. The Chalde and Septuagint reade, praeter me: both in the same sense: but they doe not expresse the word in the originall. And further, this sense is included, that whereas they had now received the Lord to be their God, and he had manifested himselfe unto them, they could not, now as in the sight of God, admit of any other. The case of the Gentiles was otherwise: for though they worshipped other Gods, yet it was not coram facie Dei, quæ illis fuit incognita: before the face of God, which to them was unknowne. Calvin. And thus much in effect is declared after in vers. 23. Thou shalt not make with me Gods of gold, &c. Si me in Deum habetis, non potestis habere alios: you will have me for your God, you cannot have another.

Quest.

QUEST. V. What reasons ought chiefely to move us to acknowledge the Lord only to be our God.

Here may be added the reasons, which ought to move us to acknowledge the Lord Creator of heaven and earth to be our God: 1. The first is taken from his dignity and excellency, and great glory, which belongeth unto him. The Lord himselfe saith, Isai. 42. 8. My glory will I not give unto another. This honour therefore is of right due, peculiar and proper unto God, to be acknowledged to be the only Lord: therefore they rob God of his honour, that worship any other God. 2. The second reason is from the great benefits which we have received of the Lord: hee hath created us, and redeemed us, and given us all things needfull for our bodies and soules. 3. Because in baptisme wee have vowed obedience and service unto him, and to become his servants, and to renounce all other Gods whatsoever. 4. The Lord hath freed and delivered us from the miserable thraldome of sinne and Satan, which was more grievous than the captivity of Egypt and Babylon: and hath called us to his service, whose yoke is easie, and his burthen light. Hence is the fourth reason: Ex dominii diabolici gravitate: From the heavinesse of the Devils thraldome. The fift is, ex præmii suî muneris immensitate, from the infinite greatnesse of his reward, who hath not promised unto us an earthly Canaan, a land flowing with milke and honey, as to the Israelites, but the everlasting kingdome of heaven. Ex Thoma 2.2. quæst. 122. ar. 2, ad. 3.

2. Doctrines observed out of the first Commandement.

1. Doct. Of the particular contents of the first Commandement.

The contents of this Commandement, which prescribeth the true worship and acknowledgement of God, and forbiddeth the contrary, are by Moses himselfe, the best Interpreter of the law, reduced to these three heads: To love the Lord thy God, with all thy heart, with all thy soule, with all thy might, Deut. 6. Mente, affectu, viribus, with our minde, our affection, our strength: In every one of these three shall briefely be shewed, the duties, which are commanded, and the vices forbidden.
